The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32 CHICAGO, ILL., MAY 13, 1905. NO. 807

SPIRITS—THEIR JOURNEYS

Even While Connected With the Physical Body, They Traverse the Celestial Regions.

In some of the spiritual papers and publications I have occasionally noticed articles expressive of different writers' ideas relative to spirits journeying away, leaving the physical body in a state of repose. Recently when reading Hudson Tuttle's grand work, "Psychic Science," the article on "Hallucinations" brought to mind several instances of which I was cognizant in the mediumship of Justin Hulburd that were in that line. Some years ago his spirit leaving his physical body was of frequent occurrence. Thinking it may possibly be interesting to some of your readers I will relate some of which I have personal knowledge. Of course there will always be skeptics, no matter how positive the evidence doubting Thomas must express himself.

In February, 1848, I made my home in Morris, Ill. I soon made the acquaintance of a congenial spirit who in later years became known throughout the state as Hon Perry A. Armstrong. We became warm friends and have continued such to the present time. Disability contracted during the civil war compelled a change of climate. I never returned to make my home in Morris, but the friendship which had been cemented between Mr. Armstrong and myself was to endure for all time.

Scarcely a night passes that spirits do not come and converse with Justin, sometimes preventing sleep until near morning.

In May of last year a spirit appeared to him who gave the name of Armstrong, who said he knew me very well. I was sleeping in an adjoining room. He conversed with Justin for some time. In the morning Justin told me of the visitation, and described the spirit. I went to the library, got a book of which my friend Armstrong was the author, containing his portrait. I showed it to Justin who immediately exclaimed, "That is the man."

I immediately wrote to a mutual friend for particulars of his death. That friend replied under date of June 10, 1904: "Perry Armstrong is still alive. He has suffered from a cancer for several years. His friends would not be surprised if he passed away suddenly."

I immediately wrote friend Armstrong and received two letters from him during the summer. He came and materialized to Justin four times while still in the physical. His spirit passed away in December and has called to see us twice. Last night he came to Justin and said he had learned since going to spirit life that his spirit made those journeyings while in the body to prepare it for the life "over there."

While here last night, he made the request that I prepare this article for publication in The Progressive Thinker. He said: "In spirit life there is great interest felt in Dr. Peebles' book, Obsession, or Demonism of the Ages. It was going to revolutionize the Spiritual philosophy, and it was about time those fakers were broken up calling themselves Materializing Mediums. Where there is one genuine materializing medium, there are fifty frauds."

He did not believe any of those public materializing mediums were genuine. In company with other spirits he has visited a large number of them and found them to be frauds of the worst kind. He said: "It is about time they were broken up and sent to jail for receiving money under false pretenses."

At the home of W. W. Judson, Kansas City, Mo., one afternoon in the month of June, 1883, while the family was sitting on the front porch, Maggie, the servant maid, came to consult Mrs. Judson on some kitchen affair. Justin, who was present, saw a spirit follow and stand alongside of her while talking to Mrs. Judson. Justin described the spirit to her as being a man about sixty years of age, and had a peculiar way of holding his head.

She turned pale and placed her hand over her heart saying: "That is my father you have described. I hope he is not dead."

After lunch she went to her room, wrote to her sister asking if her father was well. In two days she received an answer to her letter in which her sister said: "Father is well as usual" Not long after that he passed from his physical body.

A merchant tailor in Kansas City, Mo., named C. B. Grabe, one day made a visit to our home. While sitting in an easy chair, he laid his head back and said: "I am tired." Just then Justin saw a beautiful female spirit standing by him, which he described. Mr. Grabe said: "I have a letter in my pocket now from that lady. She was one of my dearest friends in Philadelphia." He wrote to her asking if her health was as good as usual? He received an answer saying she was well as ever. Two weeks from that day she passed from her body, after which she appeared to him as a spirit.

In the summer of 1885, E. H. Davis, from Williamsburg, Long Island, was sojourning with us at our home in the mountains of Southern California. One day Justin was resting on his bed. He lay very quiet for some time and then seemed to awake. He said he had been to a place which seemed to be a good sized town and visited a house which he described. The plan of the house its furniture and ornaments (of which one was a large portrait of a young lady, which hung in the back parlor). Mr. Davis said it was an exact description of his father's home. The portrait was that of his sister, but Justin was mistaken in one thing: There never was a bed in the back parlor. He immediately wrote home. His mother replied they had received an unexpected visit from a relative and had been obliged to put a bed in the back parlor.

During a visit from Mr. Davis last summer, he told us this circumstance, and so interested his people that they investigated, and became Spiritualists. Mr. E. H. Davis is now a prominent resident of Mesa Grande, San Diego Co., Cal.

Dr. Thomas Jennings, of New York, would frequently place his hand upon Justin's head and will him to go to any place he wished. Justin would go, soon return, and report what he had seen, which was invariably identified. On one occasion he sent him to Philadelphia, to the home of Dr. VanAme. when he returned he described a lady whom he called Mrs. Chase. The name Chase Dr. Jennings did not remember. He wrote Dr. VanAme for a list of the guests present on that after on. Instead of Mrs. Chase the name of that lady was Case, the wife of Col. Case of Philadelphia.

While Justin was playing at R. M. Hooley's Comedy Theatre, Chicago, one morning at rehearsal, Mr. Hooley said: "Puss, I have just received a letter from Mr. Hart, in which he says he can't get here until next Sunday evening. He will leaveJersey City Saturday night for Chicago.

The following morning when Justin appeared at rehearsal on his way into the Theatre, he stopped at the box office where he found Mr. Hooley and the treasurer. He said: "Uncle Dick, last night I boarded a train, entered a sleeping car, and about the middle of the car I threw back a curtain, looked into the berth, and I saw Mr. and Mrs. Hart lying there. They will get here this evening."

Mr. Hooley said, "I don't see how that can be. Mr. Hart's letter says they won't get here until Sunday night."

Justin replied, "Uncle Dick, they are on their way now. You will see they will get here this evening.

Just then a messenger boy tapped on the window. Mr. Hooley opened it, when the boy said' "Here is a telegram for Richard M. Hooley." Mr. Hooley read thus: "Friend Dick, I will be in Chicago to-night Your friend, J. Hart."

Mr. Hooley turned around and said: "Puss, if you had lived a hundred years ago you would have been burned for a witch."

Mr. and Mrs. Hart arrived that evening sound and well.

Rehearsal was called next morning for Hart's new comedy. Mr. Hart said that evening to Mr. Hooley, "A strange thing happened last night in the sleeping car. While my wife and I were lying in the berth the curtain was thrown back, there stood little Justin who laughed at us. I said without thinking, 'Tell Dick Hooley I'll be there tomorrow evening.' It all seemed as real to me then, Dick, as it does now that I am talking to you."

Mr. Hooley laughed and said: "The little witch told me all about it this morning."

Mr. Hart said: That little creature is a strange being, and don't you forget it."

Mr. Hooley said: "He has played for me off and on for over twelve years, and I have seen and heard a gread deal of his antics."

Mr. White, the stage manager, says, "He's an uncanny being." They fuss and quarrel sometimes at rehearsal; at the same time, Mr. White holds a great love for little Justin.

Mr. Hart told Mr. Hooley he had cancelled his engagement at the Olympic Theatre on Broadway, N. Y., and that was why he was here to attend rehearsal. A question came up between him and the manager on which they did not agree; he cancelled his engagement and that night started for Chicago.

I will now relate two instances which strongly corroborate the claim that spirit can leave the physical body and journey wherever they will. As I could not vouch for their accuracy, I will let Dr. F. D. C. Meyer, who was most particularly interested and who verified them, state them in his own style:

"One evening in the year 1886, we were sitting chatting on various subjects, when the conversation turned on Spiritualism. I asked Justin Hulburd, medium, if his spirit could leave the body at will, or if he could send the spirit to any place, at any time, wherever he willed it? In reply he said he did not know, but he had known his spirit to leave the body and go visiting at different times. I then asked Justin if he would try to go to DesMoines, Ia., where I had a sister living at that time? He said he would. He became quiet and shut his eyes. In about ten minutes he spoke and said: "Your sister is packing her trunk; there is a lady there helping her whom I do not know. Your sister is going to move tomorrow. Your sister saw me and started to speak to me, when the other lady commenced talking and broke the conditions so I could not answer her.' He described the varrious things in the room. Next morning I wrote to my sister, telling her what Justin had told me.

"Four days from that evening I received a letter from my sister saying that she had moved to other rooms. She stated that on the evening before moving, while packing her trunk, a lady friend being present to help her, she saw the spirit of Justin Hulburd, and recognized it at once. She started to speak to him, when the lady friend asked her what she was talking about? With that the spirit vanished. She wished me to ask Justin if he remembered having been there. Our letters passed one another on the way. We both were astonished and delighted to know that the spirit of Justin had really visited my sister on that occasion.

"When Justin had related to me his visit to my sister, I requested him to try and go to Germany to my old home, where I was born. He said he would try. He became quiet as if asleep. In about fifteen minutes he spoke and said: 'I see a house;' and described my birth-place inside and outside better than I could have done it. He described the people who were living in the house at that time, whom I did not know. By writing I found the description to be true. While I was asking him a question he said: 'Wait a minute. I am attracted to another place.' In a minute or two he described a house which I recoguized at once. Then he described the rooms and a man who was sitting by a desk writing a letter. 'Well' he said, 'That letter is for you. It is in regard to some property. He has charge of your property; he is your guardian.' I told him it was true. He described that man so perfectly I recognized him at once. That letter turned out to be the final settlement of some property we had in Germany."

I would cite many more cases of Justin's spirit leaving his body, not only to go to places on the earth, but to the spirit spheres, but it would make the communication too long.

E. W. HULBURD.

Descanso, California.

The smiles of infants are said to be the first fruits of human reason.—H. N. Hudson.

Virtue itself offends when coupled with forbidding manners.—Bishop Middleton.

In such a world as ours the idle man is not so much a biped as a bivalve.—Horace Mann.

His face was the doubtful kind that wins the eye and not the mind.—Scott.

The most certain sign of being born with great qualities is to be born without envy.—Rochefoucauld.

I never think he is quite ready for another world who is altogether weary of this.—H. A. Hamilton.

Reason must be our last guide and judge in everything.—John Locke.

In such a world as ours the idle man is not so much a biped as a bivalve.—Horace Mann.

Genius always gives its best at first; prudence at last.—Layater.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Does the Ascended Spirit Ever Possess Any of the Animal Passions of Earth Life?—Evidence That They Do Presented by a Prominent Medium.

In The Progressive Thinker, No. 788, our Bro. Lyman C. Howe says that the animal passions and physical appetites do not pass the death line; hence, spirits never desire tobacco or whisky, etc.

At a circle held at the home of Mr. A. (as related to me by other members of the circle) I, while under unconscious control, told Mr. B. that he was smoking for a spirit man more than for himself, and though the spirit absorbed the aroma or strength of the tobacco, yet he was injuring himself and doing the spirit man no good.

I then described the spirit as almost a skeleton, and called him "Bones," saying that he was with Mr. B. on a coast vessel as a sailor, and was an inveterate user of tobacco, borrowing or begging it from everyone on board, Mr. B. himself, more than others, supplying his want. Having passed to spirit life he had attached himself to his old friend, and through him sought to satisfy his craving for tobacco.

Mr. B. recognized the spirit and promised to curtail the smoking, and thereby reform himself and spirit friend. "But," said he, "you was a sailor. Did you not use tobacco?"

"Yes," said the control; "all sailors do, but I as a spirit have outgrown the desire and would advise all users of the weed to break off while yet in the body."

"Could you not enjoy a good cigar now? I see that you, a spirit, could not smoke it," said Mr. B.

"Yes, I could cause my medium to smoke, the same as you are smoking for Mr. Bones, and though my medium has not used tobacco for many years, will do so in order to convince you, or prove my statements."

They had agreed to say nothing to me until after another circle. In the meantime, Mr. B. got a friend to make a vile cigar. He also bought a common one, and a very nice one, and brought them to the next circle.

Putting the vile one in front, he offered the control his choice. He, however, took all three, chose the best, put the others in my vest pocket and smoked the fine one (or I smoked it for him) to the stub. They all thought it would make me sick, but I knew nothing about it until the next morning, when, finding two cigars in my pocket, I asked who put them there and was told all about it.

While visiting friends in Evansville, Ind., I was asked to go to a seance held in a room over a saloon on the levee. I replied that we were not expected there, and as it was late we had better not go. As Mr. W. was acquainted, I yielded and passing through the saloon we went upstairs and found a number (mostly Germans) present, but waiting.

As we entered the room a lady said: "There, I told you to wait, and here they are." Being a stranger to all present, I did not understand, but the seance was at once opened with a song, and before the singing ceased I was under control. Personating a sailor I went to the chairman and complained that the steward had stopped my grog. I did not know the reason. Would the captain order him to issue it to me. He sent down stairs for a bottle of whisky and a glass. A common tumbler was brought which I held until it was full, and then drank it off and held the tumbler for more, which they refused to give.

After thanking the captain, the control changed and delivered a short lecture, stating that the whisky and the tobacco appetite adhered to the spirit, and it could be satisfied only through a medium on earth.

To me the full tumbler of whisky had no more effect than a glass of water, though Mr. W. thought it would make me very sick.

One evening as we sat down to supper in Mr. W.'s home, a lady medium present jumped up from the table and ran into an adjoining room in which was an alcove containing a bed. Mrs. W. asked me to see what was the matter. I found her on the bed doubled up as if with cramps. I asked if she would not have some hot drink. In reply, a man's voice said: "O, hell, give a feller some whisky." There being no liquor in the house, I sent for a pint of good rye, and poured two fingers in a common tumbler, asking if he would not have some sugar and hot water in it. "Damn it, I always took my whisky straight," said he, "but give a feller a drink." I poured another finger, refusing more. He drank it and then rolled off the bed, went in the other room and seated himself at the table, grabbed a piece of cold meat with one hand and a slice of bread with the other and commenced eating as though he had been starved. Mrs. W. asked if he would have some butter.

"Don't want any of your grease on mine."

"You'll have a cup of tea, I suppose?"

"Don't want any of your damned slop, but you might make a feller a cup of strong coffee," helping himself to more meat and bread, and stuffing it in her mouth.

The coffee was soon prepared and a cup placed beside her. He looked up at me (I was standing by her chair) and said: "I always put a little brandy in my coffee at home; put in some whisky." I got the bottle and poured in a very little, when quick as a flash he grabbed the bottle from my hand and drank every drop (a full pint in less than half an hour). He then turned to Mr. W. and said (while still eating): "Will, you ought to know me and know that I starved to death; but I've had a damned good square meal to-night and I'll pay your bill when you come where I live."

Asked where his home was, he said: "Part of the time in the big new church. You know I put lots of money in there to help build it, and now I want to get it out."

He drank his coffee, got up from the table and went to the back door. I stepped to the door and told him that he could not take the medium out doors. He said: "I used to trot her on my knee when she was a girl and would not hurt her for the world," and left.

She stood there for a minute or so and turned and said, "Why, you've all had supper!" Mrs. W. replied, "All but you and Mr. Young. There's a cup of tea on the range for you." She got the tea and we sat down to supper, she eating her supper the same as if nothing strange had occurred. I had requested that no one should say anything to her of what had happened.

The evening passed as usual. In the morning she said that she had slept well, but she did not know why she had not taken supper with the rest of us. At the table she was told all that had occurred, but it took the united evidence of all present to make her believe it.

Nothing belongs to the body. The passions, the appetites and desires all belong to the spirit, and all go with the spirit across "the death line." Therefore spirits (must) control mediums to gratify their own appetites and passions by proxy, because the means for such gratification "do not exist in the spiritual world."

Whisky and tobacco are not to be procured over there, and I think that the tobacco habit has a deeper hold on the spirit than any other, and is harder to outgrow, for many a drunkard commenced his downward course with a cigarette.

JAS. H. YOUNG.

Onset, Mass.

Education begins the gentleman, but reading, good company and reflection must finish him.—Locke.

Love that has nothing but beauty to keep it in good health, is short-lived and apt to have ague fits.—Erasmus.

The smiles of infants are said to be the first fruits of human reason.—H. N. Hudson.

Great results can not be achieved at once, and we must be satisfied to advance in life as we walk—step by step.—Smiles.

Give a boy address and accomplishments and you give him the mastery of palaces and fortunes where he goes.—Emerson.

SPIRITUALISM AND SCIENCE.

Hiding the Truth for Fear of Financial Loss.

During the third week of October last, the week of the National Association meeting in St. Louis, there was a traveling theatrical company stopped in the city of Winchester, Va., during the entire week. Two of the actors were a Mr. Wm. H. Vano and Minerva, his wife, whose part it was on the stage to be securely handcuffed with several pairs of handcuffs on hands, or wrists, and two pairs of hobbles securely locked on his feet, also, by the police and other authorities. He then had a sheet thrown over him and in four minutes he came out from under the sheet perfectly free, with the handcuffs and hobbles in his hands.

Another of his performances was to place his wife in a trunk and after having the trunk securely locked and fifty feet of rope tied around it, thus making it perfectly secure, by the police and other authorities, and after a sheet being thrown over them, in three minutes she was out of the trunk and he, Mr. Vano, was fastened secure in the trunk.

A full account of this was in the two daily papers published here in Winchester, the Item and the Star.

Seeing this publication in the papers, I went to see Mr. Vano, at his hotel, having a long talk with him. He assured me that they both were not only firm believers in Spiritualism, but were both highly developed mediums also, having the phases of automatic and independent writing, as well as that exhibited on the stage. And that they had no power at all within themselves to remove the hobbles, handcuffs and other things, but the entire performance was done by his powerful Indian controls.

I then asked him why it was that they could go into any bank in this city in the night time, and by means of his powerful Indian controls push back the bolts and throw open the doors to the vaults.

I then asked him why it was that they did not do these things in the name of Spiritual Science; when he assured me that by doing so people, being so much opposed to Spiritualism, would not attend the performances, while the clergy would fight against it, advising the people not to attend and the house would not be half full, while as it was, the Auditorium was completely packed and jammed to witness the performances.

Now, if such performances as these were done in the name of Spiritual Science they would have more influence in opening the eyes of the people to spiritual knowledge and truths than all the speakers now engaged in the work, for what the people want is something tangible to demonstrate spiritual truths and power, they not having the confidence in speakers without any evidence of facts.

But the most important fact of all, such spiritual demonstrations as these over matter would be the taking of them up and publishing by the secular papers, as this was done, and would be republished all over the country and put people to thinking and investigating in every direction, and this is what we want, for as it is, spiritual knowledge is only published in spiritual papers, and they are only read by Spiritualists.

Throw off the cloak of religion and advocate the philosophy as a science, pure and simple, which it is, and nothing else.

There is a great deal of humbuggery in this world? No end to it, but there is more humbuggery about religion than all other humbugs put together, and Gibbon, the celebrated historian, who had more opportunities of knowing than any other man living, never made a truer statement than that all religions were to the people equally true, to the philosopher equally false, and to the statesman equally useful.

That is, that not only each one of the 137 Christian sects, but each one also of the almost innumerable sects of the followers of Confucius, Buddha, Abraham, Mohammed and others believes his or her particular religion to be perfectly true. While the statesman makes use of them to collect money into the treasury of the state, and to fight for the state, making them believe that all of those who died true to the faith and the state, either Christ, Buddha or Mohammed, as the case might be, will receive them into their bosom and carry them into everlasting bliss, while the unfaithful, disloyal and cowardly will be burned by the Devil and his angels everlastingly in fires of brimstone.

Religion is certainly the great drawback to the development of progress and acceptance by the people of this grand and wonderful science. If it had not been for religion, it would have been accepted by the people and have spread over the entire civilized world as rapidly as the sciences of telegraphing and telephoning, especially the latter, which approaches nearest to it.

Our spiritual friends should know that this is not the age of preaching, which is a relic of a dark age fast passing away; but the age of printing and reading, and of every one judging for himself, and the power of the mind of man over matter.

J. I. HOLLINGSWORTH.

Winchester, Va.

AN INTERESTING SUBJECT.

Can New-Born Spirits Manifest or Control Media?

This is an important question and should be understood by all Spiritualists.

What is the condition of a spirit just born into the spirit world? We are told by teachers of the highest standing in the science of Spiritualism that the condition of new-born spirits varies according to their condition at the time of spirit birth. If it is one who has lived in the flesh till old age has thoroughly matured the spirit, and whose physical power has gradually lost its attractive power upon the spirits and the spirit is fully ripe for the severance of its connection with the flesh, it will organize itself as a spirit and become conscious in the course of a few hours. In such case it is like lying down to sleep at night and waking in the morning refreshed and with new life. But in such case, the most favorable birth possible, the spirit is infantile, and requires quiet and time to gather strength from spiritual food before it can exercise its faculties of body or mind to any considerable extent—for weeks at least. If the spirit is born by reason of violence from vigorous manhood, it requires more time for the spirit to be born, and to organize itself on the spiritual plane, and to regain consciousness and strength to exercise its faculties as a spirit.

I remember an incident that occurred when Maria was writing the first volume of "Principles of Nature" at Napa City, Cal. A murderer was executed at the jail near by who was in the prime of life, and immediately after the execution the body was taken to the cemetery for burial. The road to the cemetery was in plain view from our house for a half mile or so; and we saw the wagon with the body on its way to the burial ground. The teacher stopped dictating for our writing, and talked to us about the conditions of the spirit of that newly executed man at that time. He said, the nucleus of the spirit was moving along above the body and the spiritual and soul matter was coming out of the body and was strung along the road behind following the nucleus in a very chaotic and disturbed condition; and that while the spirit nucleus would attract to itself every particle of soul and spirit, yet, it would take considerable time to gather it all in and reform it in its proper place, and that the movement of the body and immediate burial would delay the completion of the spirit form for many hours and perhaps days. That it sometimes takes, in cases of violent deaths of those in the vigor of health and life, twenty-four hours and more for the spirit to be fully born. The attraction, in such case, between the soul and body is so great.

In such cases, he said, the spirit was unconscious sometimes for days, and did not acquire strength to act for much longer time. If a spirit has become emaciated and weakened by abuse and debauchery it may take months to acquire strength to do anything. The time required for a new-born spirit to move about in its new world, to think and act depends wholly upon its condition when born into that life; and in no case can it manifest itself to or through a medium in the flesh for many weeks.

It must be apparent to any one, that the new-born spirit must first acquire strength, which, it is reasonable to believe will take days, at least. Second, it must learn how to use its powers in the new world it has entered, which must take time according to its capacity. It has to learn how to travel and how to exert its powers to accomplish anything. It could not come back to earth till it has learned these things, except it is brought back by others. To influence one in the flesh requires much time and learning of the spirit of spiritual laws to influence and control gross matter. Therefore, the reasonableness of the above declaration.

Mediums often are told of the presence of newly-born spirits and what they say, etc. In such cases, we were taught, that they were represented by others, and what they said was like the mother talking for the child that could not talk itself. This often gives consolation to friends and mourners and justifies its practice.

In the discussion of the "Open Court," a lady (I forget the name and I am unable to find the article), claimed she was obsessed and therefore she knew it was true. This is the substance of her experience, viz: She was sick near Boston and a murderer was executed not far from her home, and at the very time of his execution she was attacked by his spirit. He pressed his knees into her stomach and choked her till she was black in the face and nearly killed, when three friendly spirits came to her rescue and tore him away from her and took him off with them. He threatened to kill her and would have done so had she not been rescued by those friendly spirits.

What a statement! What powerful evidence in view of the law just stated, of obsession! The woman was sick, and her heart probably stopped for a few beats and she felt suffocated and a contraction of the muscles in the chest, and her belief in evil spirits did the rest. It is a terrible thing to frighten sensitive people with such bugbears. There is but one redeeming feature in the whole story; that is, the good angels coming to her rescue. Her guardian was able to impress that vision on her mind and that took away the diseased conception of the evil spirit and she was relieved. Had she been instructed in the science of Spiritualism she would have known that no new-born spirit was capable of doing harm to any one.

Teachers of Spiritualism, if you would eradicate the vagaries from the minds of Spiritualists, and produce consistence and harmony in our ranks, teach the fundamental laws of the system, so that all phenomena may be squared with these. These laws are little to be doubted. Without understanding these laws, much phenomena are misunderstood and inharmony in our ranks and injury to the cause are the result.

Societies should not employ teachers who indulge in transcendentalism, incomprehensible and high-sounding nonsense. Employ only those who teach plain understandable common sense principles of Spiritualism, and then you will become educated in the science of Spiritualism and be benefited, and grow into a people respected, and be a power for good in the world.

Hammonton, N. J. A. J. KING.

The custom and fashion of to-day will be the awkwardness and outrage of to-morrow. So arbitrary are these transient laws.—Dumas.

MAY PROVE RESURRECTION.

Rev. S. Edward Young Touches on Possible New Evidences of Future Existence.

In his Easter sermon at the Second Presbyterian Church, Pastor S. Edward Young touched upon a new world of evidences for future existence, saying:

"Concerning possible new proofs of the resurrection, I know I venture upon dangerous ground; but I am held by the conviction that investigators are on the verge of demonstrating the existence of the soul after death by the scientific study of psychic phenomena. The word Spiritualism needs fumigation after such long association with knavery, superstition and semi-lunacy; but the central proposition of Spiritualism—that the spirits of the departed can and sometimes do communicate with the living—is beginning to command the respect of sober men and every year more and more cool-headed people approve of Gladstone's assertion that this line of investigation is the most important work that is being done in the world—by far the most important."

Alas that so many unsteady minds have over-believed Spiritualism and, being disappointed, have turned rank infidels. Nevertheless, the reports of the Society for Psychical Research, the incidents almost any group of friends can recall and the vast array of authenticated cases leave the old sneer of revisits from the dead less and less to say for itself.

The scientific investigations now published are my chief reason for expecting that some Easter morning the pulpits will thunder with fresh proofs corroborating the New Testament declarations concerning life after death. Communication between the spirits of the departed and the living has been accepted as a fact by at least one hundred of the foremost intellects of the past two or three generations, including Bulwer Lytton, Alfred Tennyson, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Queen Victoria, Napoleon Bonaparte, Abraham Lincoln, Victor Hugo, Thackeray, Bayard Taylor, Camille Flammarion, Whittier and scores more in every field of thought.—Pittsburg Leader.

Herbert Spencer on Rights of Women.

Herbert Spencer, one of the greatest, if not the greatest of modern philosophers, says:

"The rights of women must stand or fall with those of men. They are derived from the same authority, involved in the same axiom, demonstrated by the same argument. The law of equal freedom applies alike to both sexes. The idea that the rights of women are not equal to those of men is akin to the eastern dogma that women have no souls. Subordination of females to males reveals its descent from barbarism. As the usages of mankind vary so much, let us hear how it is that the sphere we assign woman is the true one; that the limits we have set to female activity are just the proper limits. Let us hear why, on this one point of our social policy, we are exactly right, whilst we are wrong on so many others.

The desire to command is essentially a barbarous desire. Whether seen in the ukase of a czar or in the order of an Eton bully to his rag, it is alike significant of brutality. 'You must not do as you will, but as I will,' is the basis of every mandate, whether used by a planter to his negro, or by a husband to his wife."

These statements, and this logic of Herbert Spencer, have never been, and never can be, upset.

THE SUNSET GATES.

I have often thought when sunset
Burned on the mountain crest,
And its strange, unearthly glory
Kindled along the west,
In a vision of wonderful splendor,
That the gates of heaven were ajar,
And thro' them I caught faint glimpses
Of the land where our loved ones are.

Behold! but is it but fancy?
The sunset gates swing wide,
And I see through their parted portals
The hills of the heaven side—
The hills that are crowned with sunshine
Of a day that never ends,
In a country where no grave is
And no one mourns lost friends.

I fancy I catch through the gateway
A glimpse of the golden street,
And an echo of wonderful music,
Mystic, low and sweet,
Comes on the winds of twilight,
From the country far away,
Where the dear remembered voices
Sing in God's choir to-day.

And see!—but a shadow hides it!
I thought that I saw a hand
That beckoned me to come over
To the beautiful summer land.
Oh, loved of mine, whom I miss so,
Are you there at the sunset gate,
To watch for me down the pathway
That leads home, soon or late?

The angels of dusk are closing
The gates to my longing eyes,
And no longer I see the city
On the hills of Paradise,
But love, like the soul, is deathless,
And some day—God knows when!
I shall pass through the sunset gateway
And find my own again.

—Eben E. Rexford.

IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Is the Catholic Church Sending Out Mediums to Bring Odium Upon Spiritualism by Deception and Trickery?

To the Editor:—An article in a recent number of The Progressive Thinker in reference to the Bambams at Lily Dale, reminds the writer that two summers ago while there he got into conversation with a certain Irish lady, said to be a medium for trumpet work, who is, or was, a Catholic.

The speaker was handing out some plain talk about the Roman Catholic church, when this lady said: "Oh, she doesn't know what she is talking about!" Then she proceeded to relate how a certain priest in a Catholic institution at Dayton, Ohio, had a class of twenty young people whom he was instructing or developing along mediumistic lines.

I have often wondered if this were true, and if so what was the object? And if these Bambams or others may be some of the graduates of his class, sent forth to cast odium upon Spiritualism.

W. O. PURVIS.

Will anyone for one day apply his strength to virtue, I have not seen the case when his strength is insufficient.—Confucius.

WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING?

A Proposition From G. Major Taber, a Prominent Member of the Southern California Academy of Sciences.

To the Editor:—To progress, we must think, and there is more in the above caption than the majority realize.

I have a proposition to make to the thinking readers of your progressive paper, and as I make no pretension to be a philanthropist, yet it is my desire to help spread the glad tidings of a positive hope for those who are asking, "After Death, What," and to aid those who have never investigated the facts of Spiritualism.

I ask, "whither are we drifting?" and after stating my position, I want The Progressive Thinker to reach a class of people who are non-subscribers, in the hope that they may become interested in the philosophy of its teachings. My proposition is this: We are drifting on our earth at the rate of 25,000 miles in 24 hours, and are whirling through space around the Sun at the rate of 68,000 miles per hour, and our whole system, including the Sun and all of the planets are traveling through space at the rate of 45,000 miles per hour, no one knows whither, and I will give the number of miles I have traveled on Earth's Celestial Railway, and the one who gives a correct answer first, I will pay for one copy of The Progressive Thinker, upon the following conditions:

The paper must be given to any one who will promise to read it through carefully, and then pass it on to another person under the same pledge, and so on until the paper is worn out.

It ought to reach at least 10 non-subscribers, and during the year this one copy will fall into the hands of at least 500 persons.

Each week the paper should be started on a new route, and if 100 of its readers would go and do likewise, in one year the paper would reach 50,000 non-subscribers, and out of that number several thousand new subscribers might be obtained. My proposition is as follows:

On the earth I have traveled 658,520,833 1-3 miles; in going around the sun, 42,988,240,000 miles; in passing through space, 28,448,100,000 miles; Total number of miles, 72,094,860,833 1-3.

How old am I in years and months? The editor will have my age, and my subscription will be paid as soon as I am notified.

Who will help to make up 100 of such subscriptions?

Send in your questions and make it instructive as well as interesting, as here is a chance to increase the number of subscribers at slight expense. Who will join my club?

Come, friends, get down to business, and give Brother Francis a chance to ride in a $2,500 automobile, and spend a few months in the winter in the "Land of Sunshine and Flowers," in order to increase his years of usefulness from 10 to 20 more years more, and which will enable him to give his readers the benefit of his long and valuable experience.

A word to the wise ought to be sufficient.

G. MAJOR TABER.

Los Angeles Cal.

IMMORTALITY.

The following beautiful poem was written by Joseph Jefferson while on a fishing trip with Grover Cleveland. It was read at the memorial services at the Players' Club:

Two caterpillars crawling on a leaf,
By some strange accident in contact came;
Their conversation, passing all belief,
Was the same argument, the very same
That has been "proed and conned" from man to man.
Yea, ever since this wondrous world began,
The ugly creatures, Deaf and Dumb and Blind,
Devoid of features that adorn mankind,
Were vain enough, in dull and wordy strife,
To speculate upon a future life
The first was optimistic, full of hope;
The second, quite dyspeptic, seemed to mope.
Said Number One, "I'm sure of our salvation."
Said Number Two, "I'm sure of our damnation;
Our ugly forms alone would seal our fates
And bar our entrance through the golden gates.
Suppose that death should take us unawares,
How could we climb the golden stairs?
If maidens shun us as they pass us by,
Would angels bid us welcome in the sky?
I wonder what great crimes we have committed,
That leave us so forlorn and so unpitied?
Perhaps we've been ungrateful, unforgiving?
'Tis plain to me that life's not worth the living."
"Come, come, cheer up," the jovial worm replied,
"Let's take a look upon the other side;
Suppose we cannot fly like moths and millers,
Are we to blame for being caterpillars?
Will that same God that doomed us crawl the earth
A prey to every bird that's given birth,
Forgive our captor as he eats and sings,
And damn poor us because we have no wings?
If we can't skim the air like owl or bat,
A worm will turn for a' that."
They argued through the summer, Autumn nigh,
The ugly things composed themselves to die.
And so, to make their funeral quite complete,
Each wrapped him in his little winding sheet.
The tangled web encompassed them full soon,
Each for his coffin made him a cocoon.
All through the chilling blast they lay
Dead to the world, aye, dead as human clay.
Lo, Spring comes forth with all her warmth and love;
She brings sweet justice from the realm above;
She breaks the chrysalis, she resurrects the dead;
Two butterflies ascend encircling her head.
And so this emblem shall forever be
A sign of immortality.

—Chicago Examiner.

He who always complains of the clouds receives little of life's sunshine and deserves less.—Anon.

All science rests on a basis of faith, for it assumes the permanence and uniformity of natural laws.—Tryon Edwards.

Spiritualism In the Religions of Japan.

SPIRIT RETURN EXISTS THE WORLD OVER. IT IS COSMOPOLITAN IN ITS MAKE-UP, AND SO KALEIDOSCOPIC IN ITS CHARACTERISTICS THAT IT DOESN'T SEEM POSSIBLE TO MAKE IT INTO A RELIGION, A SECT OR A CREED. SPIRIT RETURN IS SIMPLY THE OUTGROWTH OF NATURAL LAWS PERTAINING TO THE MATERIAL AND SPIRITUAL SIDES OF. EXISTENCE. IT IS NO MORE SACRED THAN THE LAW OF PLANETARY ATTRACTION; NO MORE SACRED THAN THE LAW OF SPECTROSCOPIC ANALYSIS; NO MORE SACRED THAN THE LAW OF GROWTH AND DECAY; IN FACT IT IS ONLY ON A PAR WITH OTHER LAWS THAT PERMIT THE ACCOMPLISHING OF CERTAIN RESULTS FOR THE GOOD OF MANKIND. IT IS SACRED IN THE SENSE THAT ALL TRUTH IN THE MANIFESTATION OF NATURE'S MATERIAL OR SPIRITUAL FORCES IS SACRED. THE FOLLOWING IN REFERENCE TO SPIRIT RETURN IN JAPAN WILL BE READ WITH GREAT INTEREST.

Japan has leapt forth to take part [as set forth in the Harbinger of Light, Australia] in international strife with surprising suddenness, and the result as yet has been creditable to the intellect of its people. The attempt by her so-called Christian antagonist to treat Japan as a barbarous and pagan country must fail when we compare results. It is true that Japan is not a Christian country, but side by side in a newspaper appeared announcements of the despatch of New Testaments to the Japanese army, and the sending of holy ikons to the Russians. The balance of evidence is in favor of the Japanese being on a moral plane equal to any European country, despite their so-called Paganism. The forms of religion which have obtained a hold of Japanese for many centuries are Shintoism and Buddhism. Confucianism is sometimes referred to, but may be passed over, as it is really a moral philosophy and not a form of religion.

About the seventh century, Buddhism was brought from China and Korea, and was accepted as the state religion. Thus Shintoism was for a time obscured, though both forms existed together and reacted on each other. There have been, and still are, various sects in both forms, and Ryobu is one which arose when the primitive Shintoism was in obscuration, apparently to utilize the Buddhist organization for the purpose of spirit evocation. Shinto is stated to be, in the simplest form of description, "the belief that the world of the living is directly governed by the world of the dead." Mitford gives some sermons preached by a priest of the Shingaku sect, which professes to amalgamate the three forms. For instance: "By blending together the principles of the Shinto, Buddhist, and other schools, we shall arrive at something near the true principle of things."

Spirits Communicate With the Japanese.

Mr. Lafcadio Hearn says that an educated Japanese spoke to him thus: "PERHAPS BY WESTERN PEOPLE IT IS THOUGHT THE DEAD NEVER RETURN. BUT WE CANNOT THINK SO; THERE ARE NO JAPANESE DEAD WHO DO NOT RETURN. THERE ARE NONE WHO DO NOT KNOW THE WAY. THEY ARE WITH US NOW." And he gives an episode in his experience as teacher of English: "I remember one day attempting to explain why we ought not to speak as if they were living parents. Perhaps my pupils suspected me of trying to meddle with their beliefs; for the Japanese never think of an ancestor as having become 'only a memory'—their dead are alive."

We will here see a parallel with the reverence for parents and ancestors so often referred to as a Chinese characteristic, but which had its god-making side also among the Greeks and Romans. In fact, all the millions of gods so flippantly spoken of by some as worshiped in Japan, amount in the last analysis to ancestor worship practiced for many centuries, and kept in full vigor by the constant communication with those who had passed on.

Mr. Hearn is a sympathetic observer, and he thus phrases the fact alluded to: "The august house of the Kami is not so much a temple as a ghost chamber or a haunted room; many of the lesser divinities being ghosts of great warriors, heroes, rulers, teachers, who lived thousands of years ago."

Pilgrims Who Were Entranced.

Mr. Percival Lowell gives some facts of personal observation. He is a good witness, and he thus shows his position as a skeptic: "But as some good souls will still persist in believing in spooks, in spite of the failure of the not over-incredulous Society for Psychical Research to find a single really trustworthy specimen, it may be well to lay this ghost by a funeral logical rite or two." One interesting episode was his meeting with three pilgrims to Ontake, who by the side of the mountain path took turns in being entranced, and having what he terms communion with the gods. The three successively were the entranced one, the evocator, and the reverent bystander, each in his turn. All the preliminary activity was displayed by the evocator, whose activity was later on transferred to the one intended to be entranced. Violent contortions were followed by trance, when the evocator began to ask questions as to their pilgrimage and other matters. After each had his turn, they proceeded on their pilgrimage, but Mr. Lowell saw them again twice the next day indulging in communion. He states that during the two days of their ascent and descent of this 10,000 feet mountain they ate nothing and drank but water.

A Young Mother and Her Spirit Child.

Mr Hearn states that Buddhist and Shinto priests practice evocation. Various ceremonies are gone through, and the priest repeats "I have come" frequently his voice changing gradually to that of the departed one. Then questions quickly asked will be answered, but the cry will be, "Hasten, hasten! for this my coming back is painful, and I have but a little time to stay!" And he remarks that to call back the dead is not good, as it makes their condition worse, having to take a lower place on their return to the under world; hence the practice is forbidden by law, but evaded on various pretexts. He gives a pathetic narrative of a young mother summoning the spirit of her child, and being informed that the child had obtained the knowledge of his mother's impending death, and was rewarded for his prayer to die in her stead by the privilege being granted. She became a holy nun, in special favor with several generations of children, and his personal knowledge was that, after her funeral, a deputation of children asked for subscriptions for a small childish tombstone in addition to one then set up. He subscribed, and remarked that they would now have nowhere to play. To which the nine-year-old girl replied: "We shall still play in the court of the temple. She is buried there. She will hear our playing, and be glad."

Pilgrimages to Holy Shrines.

Pilgrimages to holy shrines and temples are much in vogue in Japan, and many clubs exist among tradesmen and workmen, the subscriptions being devoted to the necessary expenses of a portion of the members while on pilgrimages. Foremost among the places to which these travelers make their way is the Mount Ontake, where the highest possible class of spirit communion is considered to take place. This is the possession by the gods which was achieved in the case of the three abstemious pilgrims already described. A few members of each club are periodically developed into the equivalent of our mediums, and the whole business is carried on with earnestness and practically in combination. Many of these people, both at home and on pilgrimage, practice austerities to subdue the body so as to facilitate the development of sensitiveness, and various ceremonies are performed to induce susceptibility to the spirit influences.

Baths, Diet and the Development of Mediumship.

Among other devices for inducing sensitiveness is the cold baths, preferably a shower under a waterfall. Four or five baths a day are reckoned as producing good results, and a still better effect may follow from the screwing up of one's courage to rise at 2 or 3 a. m., for a mid-sleep cold shower. The latter is supposed to have a wonderful effect on the development of a sensitive. This is combined with a spare and strictly vegetarian diet by the more ardent devotees, tobacco, saki, and even tea being strictly tabooed. Lowell met a man who had practiced these austerities for 43 years, and his reward came to him in the shape of a constantly increasing power to predict future events. It is noticeable that he had some difficulty in conveying to his American friend any description of sensations experienced, a difficulty which can be appreciated by any one who has endeavored to speak on psychical subjects to a smart skeptical person.

Description of a Sitting.

I will endeavor to summarize Mr. Lowell's description of a sitting. In a chamber which is newly purified, if not kept permanently pure as in temples, is set up a shrine of which the leading feature is the gohei, which occupies a position akin to that of the crucifix in a Roman Catholic church. The gohei is a piece of paper cut to a shape suggestive of a flash of lightning, and is supported on a wand. Various other articles are presented, including saucers of rice and salt and a cup of sake. The chamber is purified by charms and exorcisms, and all the participants retire to bathe, and return in special robes.

A full sitting is composed of eight persons, whom whom we will call the medium and the leader, four whose office is to ward off evil influences from the four quarters, a deputy leader and a recorder. The latter two are often dispensed with, and even on occasions the four warders, but, the ceremony is of course far less impressive. After various rites, determined by the number taking part, the gohei-wand is placed in the center, and the sitters change from sitting on their heels to the cross-legged attitude of the images of Buddha. Then the medium takes the gohei-wand, which, begins to quiver as does the medium, and soon a sudden throe announces possession. The leader reverently asks the name of the god who is in possession or control, and petitions are presented and questions are asked as occasion arises.

For some time after, the medium has to be treated for recovery, what we may call massage being used to counteract the unnatural rigidity of the body, the gohei-wand being so tightly held that it takes some minutes to loose the grasp. On one occasion, in Mr. Lowell's presence, a medium whose pulse stood at 84 deg. at commencement had it raised to 120 deg. at end of sitting. This one was much disappointed when he learned that he had not spoken in his trance, for he had hoped to speak in English (of which he knew nothing) as a test.

At another sitting, when the eight participants were all shop-keepers or tradesmen belonging to clubs, all ceremonies were duly performed, including the illustration by fire of nearly everything. When possession was reached, the leader put questions arranged for by Mr. Lowell as to friends in America, which he says were answered "with Delphic oracularity," a phrase which is itself extremely vague.

A sitting is generally arranged by the more devout people for the purpose of receiving thereby a name for a child, while the majority are satisfied with a priest fishing in a bowl wherein a number of names are put, the fishing-rod being the aforesaid gohei-wand.

Trance Communications or Sittings.

The old records of Japan, dating back 12 centuries, contain narratives of trance communications or possessions at the instance of Emperors and Empresses in which no trace of Buddhist names are to be found. How much farther back these practices extend is unknown, but it is clear that they were followed long before Buddhism was introduced to Japan, and with them were associated the trials or ordeals by boiling water, by walking on fire, and ascending ladders of sword blades, all of which were in full operation until recently.

This is all absolutely foreign to the original Buddhism, but the priests of that form of faith insist upon their prior claim of proprietorship in the practice, though it is clearly borrowed by them from the primitive faith of Shinto. A curious phase is presented in the Nichiren sect of Buddhism, a sect which arose in Japan about six centuries ago, and in which only women or children are possessed or entranced. The priest conducts the proceedings with an infinite amount of ceremonies, and the woman or girl becomes entranced in a quieter manner than is the case where men are god-possessed.

This use of an intermediary in the production of the trance state leads Mr. Lowell to discuss the apparent likeness to the operator and subject in hypnotism. But he finds clear difference between the two, though he is utterly against the spiritualistic view of the matter.

Curious Practices Among the Japanese

Not the least interesting of the personal experiences which he narrates is his visit to what he flippantly terms a Sunday school. He says he was allowed to introduce another foreigner, his own purity being only just sufficient to admit him. My own opinion of his being thus privileged is that it was due to his own stupendous impudence acting hypnotically on the priests. The idea appears to be to develop sensitives while young, and is almost exclusively by the practice of dancing and gymnastics in the way of somersaults and traveling about the room while hanging to the cornice. All these are stated to be symbolical. The dance imitates the dance of a certain goddess, the somersaults represent the revolution of things, and standing on one's head in the corner symbolizes possession by the spirit of a climbing plant. But it is matter for discussion whether calisthenics have not developed into the very pronounced gymnastics I have described, and the symbolism thereafter invented to give a psychological drill.

There is a very suggestive similarity in the physical phenomena recorded to those which occurred at Mora in Sweden, in the early part of the last century, and which were manifested almost exclusively through the mediumship of young boys and girls.

Good Effects of Spirit Communion.

It is to be noted that this practice of spirit communion is part of the daily life of the people, as the clubs alluded to have sittings while at home, the pilgrimages having an element of what Lowell calls "pious peripatetic picnic parties," with the higher communion obtainable at the shrines as a reward for their travel. Even the flippant Lowell is compelled to admit that this firm belief in spirit communion has a good effect on the daily lives and general conduct of the people, impressing upon the adults the need for kindness and love to the young, and upon the young the necessity for reverence and affection for their elders. There is a narrative of one Hamaguchi, a rich farmer. All the people of his locality were away on the seashore, leaving him with his grandson. From the height he saw signs of a tidal wave, and proceeded to set fire to his stacks in order to recall them, his grandson obediently assisting, though thinking that his grandfather had gone mad. The people hurried up to assist in quenching the fire, and were saved; Hamaguchi was ruined, but happy. When better times returned, a temple was erected in his honor, and he was worshiped while living and after.

Reincarnation—A Peculiar Case.

This communion with the departed has connections with the belief in re-birth which is prevalent in Japan, except among those educated in Western science and philosophy, with most of whom all religion other than ceremonial had disappeared. Hearn gives copies of several official documents which were drawn up to certify to the fact that a little boy who died at the age of six was re-born three years later in a family residing at no great distance. At the age of nine he stated facts of his previous life, which were verified by his being taken to the place where he had lived, when he identified houses and people, and pointed out alterations made since his time.

Mr. Hearn gives a narrative of the suicide of a young Buddhist priest who was pestered by the attentions of young women, and who protected his wavering virtue by death. To Mr. Hearn's suggestion that he sought death to escape sinning, an old priest replied: "Then he will have to face like temptations again and again, and all the sorrow of it, and all the pain of it, even for a thousand times a thousand times, until he shall have learned to master himself." Which is a very hard saying, but it is repeated in substance in some other quarters.

Dead Are Not Less Real Than the Living.

The phase of ancestor worship which comes into notice in the spirit communion so largely practiced is interwoven with the belief in pre-existence or re-birth to a very large extent. The bestowal of the Order of the Rising Sun on a deceased general, has its reasons in all these. The deceased soldier is sufficiently in connection with this plane of existence to be conscious of the act of gratitude for his labors, and the whole transaction will give its coloring to the character of the honored one when his time comes for another term of earth-life. Mr. Hearn thus expresses his view:

"To Japanese thought, the dead are not less real than the living. They take part in the daily life of the people, sharing the humblest sorrow and the humblest joys. They attend the family repasts, watch over the well-being of the household, assist and rejoice in the prosperity of their descendants. They are present at the public pageants, at all the sacred festivals of Shinto, at the military games, and at all the entertainments specially provided for them. And they are universally thought of as finding pleasure in the offerings made to them or the honors conferred upon them."

As far as it is possible to disentangle the original Shinto belief from the vast amount of later growth induced by the Buddhist and other Chinese teaching, it would appear to be that the departed still dwell in the world and rule it, by influencing the thoughts and actions of men and by directing the forces of nature. Spirit communion follows as one of the most desirable episodes for those in this life, as a means for obtaining guidance in various matters and as a form of worship. To this interblending of those in the seen and in the unseen may be attributed the readiness to part with life so often displayed, as well in the wife who ceremonially despatches herself to atone for wrong done to others by her husband, or the woman who commits suicide to liberate her son for military service, as it is in the heroism of the soldier or the deliberate ending of their life by the 47 Ronins after avenging their master's death.

Though thoroughly Shinto in character, these rites of spiritism are not practiced in all the sects; in fact, it is more a popular than a priestly institution at the present tme. There are shrines at Ise, whose sacredness in the eyes of the people is shown by the fact that when a skeptical Minister of the Crown intruded on a certain specially consecrated portion of the temple, he was assassinated by a pious government officer. The murderer was executed, but the mass of the people treated him as a martyr to the faith, and decorated his grave with flowers. One of these temples is stated to be dedicated not to the spirit of the Sun Goddess, but to her possessory spirit. The priests do not understand the fact, as they belong to a sect which does not practice evocation, but Mr. Lowell's conclusion is: "So completely was possession once an integral part of the Shinto faith that it erected these temples to the possessory spirits. Nothing could well testify more deeply to belief in their existence, and nothing seems to bring them home more closely to their devotees than this fashioning of an earthly pavilion for their temporary sojourn. Among all the strange details if this god-possession cult, this perhaps is the strangest—these temples to possessing spirits."

A lengthy discussion of the philosophy of hypnotism, suggestion, the lack of individuality in Japanese, and psychology in general, is concluded by these words: "This lands us at an unexpected conclusion, to wit, that these gods really are what they claim to be. In Shinto god-possession we are viewing the actual incarnation of the ancestral spirit of the race * * * If these his ancestors were gods in the past, gods they are that descend to embodiment to-day."

It may be regarded as a debatable point whether the word "gods" quite expresses the conception of the Japanese as to the position of all the spiritual beings with whom they hold converse. In many cases, it is friends who have passed on, and it is probable that the advanced entities to whom the term "gods" would justly apply are only to be evoked by the higher class of mediums in the temples and shrines. But it is evident that the centuries of Buddhism as a state religion have not sufficed to destroy the belief of earlier centuries in the naturalness of the communion with those who have passed on. And the Japanese remain one of the bravest, most intelligent, and most devotedly patriotic people of the world, which appears to be largely attributable to their firm assurance that the seen are guided by the unseen.

CANDIDLY

The World Has Never Seen the Like Before

Read This Offer:

Truly, the world has never seen the like before. Search the annals of history, ancient and modern; critically examine the history of Spiritualism; look here and there, in every nook and corner of the world, and you cannot find a parallel to the offer made in reference to these twelve remarkable Premium Books. They constitute a wonderfully valuable Spiritualistic and Occult library, and are furnished at a nominal sum. All are substantially bound and neatly printed, and those who purchase them are delighted with them. The last one to appear, "LETTERS FROM THE SPIRIT WORLD," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea, should be in every library. Read the following carefully:

We have now TWELVE magnificent Premium Books, and you can select from them as follows:

Any one of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price 25 cents. This is the price, remember, when you order only one book in connection with a yearly subscription. The paper, one year, and one Premium Book, $1.25.

Any two of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price 70 cents.

Any three of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.75.

Any six of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.05.

Any seven of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.

Any eight of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.65.

Any nine of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.90.

Any ten of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $3.10.

Any eleven of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $3.40.

Lastly, all of these TWELVE Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.75, something never before equalled in this country or Europe.

Bear in mind that every order for a Premium must be accompanied with a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker. We repeat that the world has never seen the like of it before.

OUR TWELVE REMARKABLE PREMIUM BOOKS FOR $3.75.

The following is the list of titles of the Twelve Premium Books:

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.

2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.

3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3. These three volumes have been prepared by J. R. Francis. They contain invaluable data.

4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.

5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.

6—The Next World Interviewed, by Mrs. S. G. Horn, a most remarkable medium.

7—The Occult Life of Jesus, by Alexander Smythe, a medium of rare gifts.

8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Translated by A. Farnese, a wonderful English medium.

9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science, by Hudson Tuttle.

10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

12—Letters from the Spirit World, written through the mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea.

Each Spiritualist should at once commencing forming a Spiritualist and Occult library.

When ordering a Premium Book, one or more, you must send in a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker.

MEDIUM'S RELIEF FUND.

Report From N. S. A. Home Office, Washington, D. C.

To the Editor:—It gives me pleasure to submit to you and to the readers of your valuable paper, the following report of money secured for the Mediums' Relief Fund of this Association, to the close of April. We have now but one month in which to raise the balance of the thousand dollars asked for from the Spiritualists at large—the necessary amount still wanting is about three hundred and fifty dollars, and we implore our generous and trusted friends not to let this work fall for lack of means to carry it on. Could Spiritualists from everywhere be in this office one month and read the many letters of appeal for help from and for worthy mediums who are destitute and deserving of aid, they would hasten to pour what money they could spare into our treasury for the continuance of this most worthy benefaction. It is pitiful that any well-authenticated case of need has to be denied, but it is impossible to aid all who deserve assistance from our fund. Not only regular pensioners should be added to the list but temporary aid is greatly needed by some of our mediums who are in financial straits sometime—we do all we can, but it is only by receiving financial aid from friends of the cause that the noble work can be carried on. Only last week an aged couple was placed on the list, worthy Spiritualists and mediums, who in times past had sacrificed much for the cause, now helpless, and but for the timely aid of the N. S. A. would have had to go to the public almshouse the first of May.

The sincere and heartfelt thanks of all connected with this work are extended to every donor to this Relief fund; the beautiful letters that come with many of the contributions are in themselves a blessing and an inspiration; one good old Spiritualist, 83 years of age, himself an inmate of a benevolent Home, sends one dollar from his pension, with words of love and benediction; an aged lady, also 83, and an inmate of "An Old Ladies' Home", sends all she has, a dollar, with a tenderly written blessing for all good mediums.

The amount previously reported on the thousand, was $431.55—since our last we have collected $213.66—which includes the sum of $71.60 sent by our missionary, E. W. Sprague—we have still to raise the balance by the first of June. Dear friends, please help us in this good work.

The following sums have been received since last statement: From Ladies' Aid of the chartered society of Wheeling, W. Va., benefit social, $20.40; A Friend, Hamburg, Iowa, $10; Edward Bremer, $10; Mrs. Hanson, benefit seance, $8; Ladies' Aid, Springfield, Mass., $5; J. L. Taylor, $5; Society of Divine Truth, Louisville, Ky., $5; seance by G. W. Way, $5; Carl E. Shultz, $5; C. B. I., $5; Jacob Hey, $5; Friend in Westfield, $5; W. K., $5; Henry Brunhaus, $3.85; J. W. Emsley, $3; Dr. E. Paige, $3; Mrs. H. Brunhaus, $2.50; People's Church, Louisville, collected $2; Titusville, Pa., society collected $2; H. A. Kellogg, $2; James Lynch, $2; Mrs. A. M. Lewis, $2; G. H. Clark, $1; Lily M. Thiebaud, $1; Chas. Holland, $1; Wm. Laplain, $1; Mrs. B. T. Ollinger, $1; Friend in McKeesport, $1; Mrs. E. R. Beck, $1; Mary Chapman, $1; N. Freeman, $1; J. O. McGrath, $1; Mrs. A. Conrad, $1; J. H. Morris, $1; Mrs. Alice A. R. Kibbe, $1; Mr. J. Humphrey, $1; A Friend at Hoosic Falls, $1; Mary A. Koch, $1; inmemory of Eliza D. Hale—Mrs. Z. A. M. Allen, $1; Mrs. E. Baker, $1; Philip Lamneck, $1; Eliza Gill, $1; H. Hubbard, $1; J. Peterson, $1; Cash from Brookville, $1; A. B. Cox, $1; Lizzie A. Whittle, $1; John Lynch, $1; Cash, Wheeling, W. Va., 25 cents.

The $70.60 sent by Missionary Sprague is as follows: Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, $11; Mr. Hahn, $10; Mr. Delysle, $5; Mrs. Paul, $2; Mrs. U. Pindle, $2; Mr. Luke Lane, $2; Sarah J. Stark, $2; Collection at San Diego, $17.55; special collection, $1.55; Helen A. Stark, $1; Mrs. Egan, $1; Thos Fitzsimmons, $1; Mrs. Riley, $1; Mrs. Elizabeth Lowe Watson, $1; Mrs. B. Grant Taylor, $1; E. W. Briggs, $1; Unknown, $1; Mr. Sexton, $1; Buttercup—Gillispe—$1; Sarah Scott, $1; G. Gunnison, $1; Mr. Ringley, $1; Mr. Shaw, $1; Mr. Hemsley, $1; Mrs. Barber, $1; Mr. Dexter, 50 cents; Mrs. E. A. Damon, 50 cents; Mrs. Flint, 50 cents; Mrs. L. M. Little, 50 cents; Mrs. Howell, 25 cents; H. A. Starks, 25 cents.

As before stated our grateful appreciation is extended to all donors and we earnestly ask all who have not as yet contributed to the Relief Fund, to send their donations and blessings to this office at once.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.
600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C.

"Right Generation the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth." By Dr. M. E. Conger. An appeal to reason and man's highest aspirations. A plea for justice and equality in all the relations of life between men and women. Cloth. 75 cents; leatherette. 50 cents.

"Social Upbuilding, including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennoblement of Humanity." By E. D. Babbitt, LL. D., M. D. This comprises the last part of Human Culture and Cure. Paper cover, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated. $1.25.

ANNIVERSARY.

The First Spiritualist Church of Allegheny, Pa.

We desire to call your attention to the good work that is being carried on at the First Spiritualist Church of Allegheny. On Sunday, April 2, we celebrated the Fifty-Seventh Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, with an all-day service, opening with a conference at 10:30. Subject for discussion, "Spiritualism?" The conference lasted until noon.

At 2:30 the service was again opened by the singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee." The Rev. Day spoke upon "Spiritualism and its worth," dating back from the time of the rappings at the home of the Fox family. Mr. Chas. Morrow and Mrs. Mary Hatton, of England followed with spirit messages, all of which were fully recognized and gave much comfort to those receiving the messages.

Mrs. Brown, daughter of Sister Hatton, rendered some beautiful selections of music.

The church was nicely decorated with cut flowers, potted plants, and palms. The president of the society, Brother Fetzer, seemed to be inspired and didn't leave a stone unturned in making the Fifty-Seventh Anniversary one of the greatest ever held in our church.

Sister Brockmore, the president of The Ladies' Aid, and Brother Fry, were early at their posts and promptly arranged the decorations. At 6:30 a circle was held, Sister Pratt, treasurer of the church, having charge of the circle, assisted by other mediums. Sister Pratt's invocation in the opening of the circle brought harmony and touched the hearts of all present. At 7:45, Rev. Day, pastor, entered upon the rostrum and opened the evening service by the reading of a scripture lesson and offering an invocation. The choir then rendered a selection, and the subjects for the evening lecture was taken from the audience. Each subject was handled to the entire satisfaction of the audience. Brother Day followed his lecture with spirit messages of the most convincing character, and all went away satisfied. In all it was a great day for Spiritualism.

The pastor announced that the services would be continued on Easter Sunday, April 23, at which time Rev. Francis would be present and address the audience from the subject of the Easter Light and Its Relation to Spiritualism. Brother Francis delivered a touching discourse, and made many friends for himself as well as for the cause of truth.

At the close of the lecture, the pastor followed with spirit messages and the reading of articles, all of which was again recognized. It was then announced that there was an evangelist in the audience from Washington, D. C. Brother Day extended the brother an invitation to make a few remarks. The gentleman arose to his feet and said he did not care to say anything, but would offer the pastor a proposition, as follows: "I have noticed your reading of articles and the recognition given to each of the readings. Now the proposition I have to offer is this: If you will read the watch I have in my pocket and give me the details connected with the watch I will think more favorably of Spiritualism, and will render a solo entitled 'My Mother in Heaven.'"

Mr. Day said at once, "I will accept your challenge. Come forward to the platform and give us your solo and the guides will read your watch with every detail." Brother Day's guides read the watch without a hitch, giving every detail, much to the delight of the audience. Dr. Day is doing much good work for the cause in this city. His wife is also developing into fine mediumship. At their home circle they have received at three different times a baptism of flowers. The last sitting, April 22, they received sweet peas, when there was not a flower of that kind in the house. Their circle is private, only the three sitting together, Mr. and Mrs. Day and Sister Pratt, treasurer of the church of which Brother Day is the pastor. God grant that the angel world may continue to shower these blessings upon our dear pastor, and that he may be spared to feed many of the hungry and starving from the store-house of knowledge.

F. W. PRICHARD.

INDUCE

Your Neighbor to Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Now is the time to extend the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. It will contain Occult and Spiritualistic news with which every one should be familiar. No other paper published on this earth contains such a vast amount of matter so well adapted to enrich the mind. Send in a subscription now.

"The New Life." By Leroy Berrier. Eminently suggestive along the lines of "new thought." Excellent in tone and tendencies. Price, cloth, $1.

"New Testament Stories Comically Illustrated. Drawings by Watson Heston. With Critical and Humorous Comments upon the Texts." Heston's drawings are incomparable, and excruciatingly funny. Price in boards, $1. Cloth, $1.50.

"Cosmian Hymn Book." A collection of original and selected hymns, for liberal and ethical societies, for schools and the home; compiled by L. K. Washburn. This volume meets a public want. It comprises 258 choice selections of poetry and music, embodying the highest moral sentiment, and free from all sectarianism. Price 50 cents. lives. Price, by mail, $1.

WOMANLY BEAUTY

Of Form and Feature—The Cultivation and Preservation of Personal Beauty Based upon Health and Hygiene.

By twenty well-known physicans and specialists. With 80 half-tone and other illustrations. Edited by Albert Turner. A handsome volume, 256 pages, bound in cloth and gold.

In this volume the editor has brought together the teachings of those who have made a study of special features of the subject, and the result is a work that is unique and practical, not filled with a medley of receipts and formulas, so often found in books on beauty.

Fully illustrated with pictures that mean something to the reader, not of so-called "beauties," closing with chapters of "Hints in Beauty Culture" and "Hints in Health Culture," which, if followed, would alone be worth many times the price of the volume in securing health and good form, which is possible to all. Price $1.

MORTAL LIMITATIONS.

BY CHARLES DAWBARN.

The scientist turns all his energies to the discovery and classification of facts. But when he has done his utmost he only gets hold of a piece of a fact. No matter what may be his genius and skill, he can deal with no more of a fact than he can himself sense. He may invent wondrous instruments by which to see, hear and feel more than his grandfather, but, all the same, he can not escape the limitations of his sense. And, sooner or later, he is compelled to admit that he himself, and everything in the universe he can see, hear or touch, is a great deal broader and deeper than his sense or his instrument can grasp.

It is an everyday phrase to call man a cosmic speck, but, in solemn truth he is only a very small piece of a speck, so far at least as the man we know who is ... ing himself scratching the surface of the planet. Every student is aware of his own limitations, usually declines to learn the lesHe knows, if you ask him, that ything of which he can conceive is in motion;—that no atom, or ion, or electron is so small that it goes to sleep in a baby incubator, and then keeps still while it grows a little bigger. He knows that when he senses anything it is because he and it are rushing about, and never getting tired. And thus when particles of atmosphere jolt against the particles of his ear drum at the rate of a few thousand jolts in a second, a lot of other particles inside him take part in the dance, and presently the man tells you he hears, and what he thinks about it. What started those particles of atmosphere, and keeps them going is quite another question to be studied later. But, as a matter of fact, we note that man is listening and thinking as the result of certain movements that make him say he hears.

Similar movements, if increased to a few millions of times in a second out in the ether make the same man say he sees, and once again as the result he says he thinks. In passing we just note the interesting fact that a man can neither see nor hear without thinking. Thus thought is itself as much the effect of this motion as any part of the process, and is limited to the vibrations he can sense.

Though man is thus limited in his perception of the cosmic vibrations of the universe, these vibrations are themselves necessarily continuous, and do their own mighty work, although silent to the consciousness of man the mortal. So the all important fact in mortal life is not its fulness and scope, but its limitations.

Intellectual development and culture are all within the few vibrations man, the mortal, can sense, and if he tries to go outside he soon gets into trouble. Energy, that is to say "motion," is cosmic. Every speck in the universe is necessarily in continuous movement, though man, the mortal, can neither perceive nor sense it. And if he even tries to sense it he gets into trouble and danger. For instance, it happens that one day he discovered a vibratory movement just outside his normal limit, and, like a child with a new toy, he proceeds to play with it. He calls it the X-Ray, and finds he can use it to see right through certain kinds of solid matter. He proceeds to harness it, and put it to work, if only to cure his diseases. But he presently discovers that such energy is destructive to his body. It burns him into malignant sores that won't heal, but does it so quietly that he does not know he has been injured for weeks after his experiments have been almost forgotten. To-day the experienced physician like Edison, and every trained physician, has acknowledged that X-Ray is too dangerous to meddle with. It proves the reality of vibrations he cannot sense, save to his deadly injury. He can make instruments that will prove the fact itself, but the operator will presently lose his hands or his eyes if he continues to experiment in such realms of Cosmos.

There is nothing, so far, the scientist can discover save the movement of the universal unit at a speed which is fearfully dangerous to the mortal. In another direction he learns the same lesson, but this time from a physical standpoint. The scientific curiosity of a woman results in another discovery, also just outside mortal limit of sensation, save at the certainty of much suffering and even death. Everybody knows the tale how Madam Curie proceeded to uncover the secret lying encysted in pitch blend. From tons of that mineral she stripped the outside covering, itself as harmless as any plaything of childhood. The process was slow and costly, but at last she captured a few grains of Cosmic Essence, which she called "radium."

Every thinker in the world was startled as never before, for he learned that the universe is based upon an energy which knows no exhaustion. But when he wanted to examine this wonderful substance he found that to even handle it was destruction to his mortal form. A thousandth part of a grain would scorch him, and burn unhealing sores, let him handle it carefully as he would, simply because it was embodied energy at work outside his sense limits. There may be, perhaps, but a pound or two of this "radium" existing as primal essence of this little planet home of man, but every speck scatters its forces with a result now known as "radio activity," in which diluted form man can at least face his own limitations.

Radium is teaching a tremendous lesson to the mortal, for if there be in existence materialized energy which needs no fuel, he is facing the eternal fact of immortality. If the present writer's claim that every unit of Cosmos must be a compound of intelligence, substance and energy, apply also to this Cosmic essence—as it must—then he is face to face with all the Divinity he can sense or imagine. And his very first kindergarten lesson teaches him that to approach too closely to this Great First Cause is destruction to his mortal form. But all the same it stands to-day as the foundation fact of the universe.

This is not an essay on radium or any other of the hidden forces of Cosmos, but an attempt to discern the meaning and lesson of this proved fact to man, the mortal. From the physical side investigation seems barred. Ask the student of matter to investigate the properties of radium and he will reply "too dangerous. The student is certain to be crippled or burned." Manhood is thus facing vibrations of units which, being outside his sense limit, are destructive to his form. But, all the same, it can be handled mentally so far as our present brain development will permit.

The scientist had figured out the probable life limit of the sun, and his planets. It was a mere matter of the exhaustion of his energy. Some day his supply would be all used up, and then there would be another Cosmic funeral. But as radium is capable of transmutation into helium, and as helium is found in the sun, as sworn to by the spectroscope, its energy may, for all we know, last indefinitely. So the calculations of the scientist are all upset.

And as the sun is perpetually distributing his property among his children, they each catch a grain or two of helium-radium as it is being hurled out into space. But the sun is a poor marksman. It is true some of his evolved energies do hit his planets, and become for them light, heat, magnetism, electricity, etc., but for the most part they are squandered in space, and do no good to anyone we can perceive. But in this fact lies embedded a whole philosophy which is the object of this article.

Take a mass of red-hot iron and you discern, as you walk around it, that it is scattering its heat (energy) in every direction. And Prof. Langley's Bolometer, that measures the heat of a candle at a hundred yards, tells you the same tale. Every unit in existence is radiating its own essence right out into space in every direction. It is not a hit-or-miss process, for everything is hit, and everything is missed in this eternal output. A speck gives out the energy of a speck, and a sun gives out the energy of a sun.

There are just two points to be specially noted and held in mind right here. The first is, that since every speck is in motion, its energy is thrown out in every direction around it, whether it be embodied in a giant sun, or remain a mere microscopic speck. The other fact to be noted is that only a very small portion of this energy can by any chance reach any other speck, planet or sun.

So much is clear, but it gives us a peep into what might be called Cosmic Geography. Let us remember again and again that a speck, or a unit, is and must be a compound of energy, intelligence and substance. Necessarily intelligence is the prime factor in whatever may be contact of one speck with another, so we see that when the scientist talks of an ether-filled space he is equally proclaiming the truth of a universal intelligence.

So much is the wondrous truth emphasized by the present peep into space beyond our sense limits, which we call X-Ray, radium, and several other names. We see that everything exhibits intelligence to its own limit of exhalation, and to the limit of reception by another speck. But we see also that it is death, or organic destruction, for mortal form to come into contact with vibrations above or below the outreach of man's normal sense.

But if it be a universal truth that the sun is perpetually hurling these higher vibrations, as well as the lower, out into the great ethereal space—if his radium and X-Rays are perpetually bombarding infinity, it is natural for the student to inquire how his own form, and every other, escapes injury by these deadly vibrations.

We must here note that there is no change of raw material in the universe. The only variation is in its rate of motion. Radium will have, like everything else, a compound unit. Just intelligence, energy, substance, for the student will perceive the three comprise everything he can conceive in God or man, or microbe. So a slight change of proportion, or of rate of motion gives its variety to the universe. Man has already noted and applied this fact in studying his own form, and its surroundings, and specially including his own sense organs. The truth may be said to be scientifically appreciated today, except that the fact of the compound universal three, the intelligence, energy and substance in every unit has long been taught only by the present writer, so far as he knows, in many published articles.

Keeping this in mind, we are ready for another thought. There can be no absolute limit in the rate of vibration of these units. We now recognize it from what we call its beginning or zero, on the one side, and on the other "radium" is probably exhibiting the present scientific limit of unit motion. From the movement of a possible one beat in a second up to countless millions and trillions is the A, B, C truth of our learned men of to-day. It rests with the philosopher to study its meaning and learn its lesson.

Man, the mortal, as we have said, can sense but few of these vibrations without destruction of his organism. The whole realm between the vibrations of sound and those of sight is to him almost an impossible field of phenomena. And beyond the radium we presently enter another realm where Nature seems to begin all over again, but a celestial octave or two higher. We thus have the fact of the emission of all rays by our sun, from .01 to radium as a demonstrated fact. The planet and the man catch what they can absorb of this mighty output. The rest goes out and out, possibly returning in one vast divine orbit. But if the sun is thus casting out its own life forces, it is still composed of units, and each unit is—to the extent of its own power—doing precisely the same as the whole molecular mass. And this is the life history of every unit, whether in sun, in man, or in microbe.

Man is a microcosm of the universal whole. He, too, is a blending of independent units, each perpetually radiating its own individuality, yet remaining "personal" because either of radium, or some radio-active substance, that can apparently give out indefinitely without destruction of form.

We are receiving proofs to-day that man is thus emitting these finer rays, casting them out into his own sphere, precisely as the sun does. Photos are taken, we are told, by the use of these emanations from the human form. Yet further, French scientists are claiming to have discovered, and to be using what they call N-Rays. They are even telling us of the special rays of passion, such as hate, love, etc., and even depicting their colors. It is thus demonstrated that man, like the sun, is perpetually sending forth the essences of his own personality.

We can go a step further than this, for we find that everything, large or small, is a "form" only to our sense limitations. It is a PRESENCE, far beyond its apparent form limitations or boundaries. The speck of lodestone is a speck only to our senses. But it outreaches to other specks and influences them at distances far beyond its form limit. So we assert, and claim as proved, that limitations are the effect of our sense limits, but we see that Nature knows nothing of any such dividing line as the form by which we swear. Man is perpetually influencing and being influenced by what we may call his outer manhood or PRESENCE. Herein lies the mystery of heredity.

Let us now apply this law of "universal emanation," if I may so call it, as we watch the coming together and blending of units into what is a "form," according to our sense limitation. The unit had its form center, but in reality that unit was a PRESENCE outreaching into infinity, but with no definite boundary of which we can conceive. We have a right to assume that the sun PRESENCE would be far more outreaching than man PRESENCE, or unit PRESENCE. We know that the intelligence, energy and substance in that unit outreach, attract, and blend more or less intimately with other like minded units. It is thus the molecule is born. But that molecule is composed not only of all the forms of its units, but also of all their emanations. That molecule has our sense limitations outline, by which we measure, test and analyze it, but it also unites and blends the several outreaching unit Presences into a new molecular PRESENCE. The sun is thus composed of unit forms and presences, outreaching into molecular forms and presences. The form of the sun, as of everything else, is just so much of its PRESENCE as our senses can grasp. If we could grasp more of the PRESENCE the form would change its shape to our enlarged sense conception.

Our direct present object is to watch the effect of this law of "outreaching presence" upon the molecular unit form we call man. It is obvious that to spirit sense more of PRESENCE will be perceived, and by so much what mortals call the human form will be enlarged to them. There would still be left an outstretching presence, but more of it would be visible to them as what we call human form. The shape of man-form will always be a matter of sense limitations. Enlarge the scope of the perception and you change the form as a matter of course. This is a most interesting and important truth, but, all the same, it is not the truth we are seeking, but only approaching it.

Let us note that the law of attraction of forms necessarily includes attraction of the entire PRESENCE of each and every unit, of whose ultimate shape we can have no present conception. A child is born into earth life. Let us now study that child. He has a form which we call human. He has also, as we have seen, an outstretching PRESENCE. His form to our eye limitation is fixed, but to the less limited eye of a spirit, especially an advanced spirit, that form will be very different, as it will include much more of the PRESENCE, into which that child is really built up. That is the first factor in our attempted study of the new-born man child. He has human form, but is really much more, which we call PRESENCE, and can only conceive as limitless. So much of this "presence" as we can grasp has become "form" to us, but the rest is all there, notwithstanding our limitations.

Scientists who weigh and measure and analyze forms know nothing of this outreaching presence, so their estimate of that babe is founded only upon so much of his form as their senses can grasp. They will tell you, first, that his form is human in the general. Next they will show you resemblances they call "racial," manifested to them as special colors and shapes. But that racial form includes also certain "family" limitations, distinct from that of other families. Yet further, it usually bears a more or less striking resemblance to the individual form from which it was an apparent outburst in outline and color. So much is obvious, but when we realize how little of the "presence" is congealed into form by our sense limitations we perceive that (a) spirit eye, by seeing more, or at least a different portion of the presence, will discern a form which will be sense limited into a shape very different from the form we mortals sense. (b) They will also be dealing with a different portion of the entire "presence," and therefore with a different manifestation of selfhood. Hence the advanced spirit must have a personality very different from that of the mortal, since it is built up out of a different portion of the presence.

Since conception is the outburst of an entire presence, a life history commences which includes far more than the form we sense. When we speak of heredity we mean much more than similarity of fingers, and toes, and other physical features of the new form. Follow out that form a little further into its "presence" and it begins to exhibit qualities that appertain to a larger form center. There may be sight, hearing, touch, but they become clairvoyance, clairaudience, intutition, etc., because working further into "presence" than our mortal limitations. Consciousness itself is always an output of far more of "presence" than is contained within our sense limit, and is therefore always cramped and confined in expression by the dense mortal form. Heredity implies the resemblance of an entire "presence" to the entire "presence" of its creator. But what mortals perceive and study as heredity is only so much of the "presence" as resembles the limited personality of the selfhood from which it sprang. Suppose the immediate ancestor of the child we are watching to have had a form expression, physical and mental, that we sense as music. That really pertains to his entire presence, and we catch only so much of it as his and our sense limitations permit. It is obvious that there cannot be in our limited form expression more than a portion of what the whole "presence" would express, but it would be of the same quality. For instance, the whole could not express love, and a mere portion of the "presence" express hate. There would simply be more love in the whole, and less love in the part. So in every phase of character which is manifested in mortal life we have but an imperfect expression of what the whole "presence" would be, if we could but sense it. This seems as obvious truth, but in reality earth life tells a very different tale. If the unlovely characters everywhere around us each represent a whole "presence" then indeed there must be both greater devils as well as greater angels in the individual "presence" than is manifest in form personality. This demands most careful examination.

It is obvious that heredity is founded on the law of attraction. The unit that bursts into molecular expression is under impulse and energy from the parent "presence" from which it springs forth. It will, of course, attract units and molecules like itself, or as nearly so as possible. In fact, no two units in the universe are exactly alike, therefore no two molecular blendings will be exactly alike. The blendings of substance, energy and intelligence seem capable of infinite variety. If no two units are exactly alike neither will any two molecular forms exhibit the same characteristics. There is, however, a difference between unit expression and form expression.

If we conceive of a perfect whole it could not be broken up into perfect fragments, for perfection is not divisible. And if no two molecular aggregations are exactly alike, then it is certain that in a part there must be either a surplus or a lack of some principle or characteristic of the whole. In other words, whereas in the whole there may be a supposed perfection, yet in each part there would be a positive imperfection. Nothing but the whole can represent the whole. When we apply this truth to the study of heredity we perceive as a truth the fact that "parent presence" is writing itself on that "child presence" as a whole, with a result that could not be repeated in "form" life, for form is only a fragment, and perhaps a very small fragment of the entire "presence."

We can conceive of Cosmos as a vast "whole presence" which could only be fully represented by another Cosmic presence." That is, of course, an impossibility, for there can be only one Cosmos. Cosmos cannot be expressed in form, for it includes the formless, universal "presence." So from no form can we get more than a conception of the Cosmic whole. It takes the whole to express the whole. But we now see that if the whole child cannot be expressed by its fragment "form" then everything we call "heredity" as expressed in form, is just an imperfect representation of the whole child "presence." And, alas! we all know that form is shaped and misshaped until it is usually but a miserable expression of "presence" fulness.

Since no two "presences" will be alike, any more than any two forms are alike, one "presence" may be musical or mathematical to a much greater expression than another. We think of that as imperfection, but we should remember that only the Cosmic whole can be perfect. So the form or fragment of any one "presence" will have more or less music or mathematics than its apparent proportion should demand. Less music and more mathematics might easily seem to us as discord, or more music and less mathematics might to us imply a weakened mentality. But, nevertheless, if we could see or realize the whole of any one "presence" it would bear a true resemblance in music, mathematics and every other quality to its forbear. Yet every "presence" is imperfect in its relation to the Cosmic whole, and every form is imperfect in its relation to the entire "presence" of which it is a part.

Here we face a great truth in nature. Cosmos is a whole, but has myriad form expressions. A "presence," although it is but a fragment of Cosmos, is yet a whole "presence," and can, like Cosmos, have several, perhaps many form expressions. In other words, the child form we have been watching may more or less resemble its ancestor. It will, at best, present only a distorted resemblance to our sense, for its form is but a very limited portion of its whole.

If there be "form sense" with its limitations, there is, and must be "presence sense" with its fulness. "Form" is a certain portion of "presence" perceptible to other like portions of "presence." Outside our mortal form there may be—we may from analogy say ARE—other forms, which are part of the same "presence," but with sense limitations that can only realize forms like themselves. The whole "presence" is composed of intelligence, energy and substance in eternal vibration, from zero to the inconceivable. The little portion we know and sense is limited to the dimension of our sense. Probably the next, and nearest fragment of our entire "presence" is, in its turn, just as limited. Its music and mathematics will be as limited as ours, but also very different expressions, and perhaps not include our mortal sense limitations.

So we now see heredity is an expression of certain qualities through a form, which to our limitations, expresses a resemblance to ancestral qualities. It may run only to fingers, toes and features—it may have organic resemblance, so far as we can trace—or it may exhibit mental similarity in, say, music or mathematics. When there is any such expression we talk of "heredity," but more often we cannot trace it all because the form is itself too imperfect an expression of the whole "presence." Heredity will thus tell the tale to our sense limitations of certain form resemblances which at best are very partial emanations from our whole "presence."

This stupendous fact of the limitation of form presents full explanation of the various cases of multiplex personality which have recently so perplexed the student of human nature. Just a little more or less of the whole "presence" added to, or taken from form, and we perceive what is now called a new personality. There thus appears two, or perhaps a dozen manifestations of the same mortal we have long known and studied. Our Mollie Fanchers, Miss Beauchamps, Rev. Hannas, and last, but not least, Mary Barnes, and myriad other such human phenomena, come, we now see, under the law that limits our sense perception of form to just a very small portion of the "presence" that belongs to every eternal unit, and therefore to every molecular collection of such units, which we then call "form."

If the reader has now made careful study of "presence" and its relation to form he will recognize that it explains far more than multiple personality. It gives us the key to the mysteries of heredity, which are mysteries only because of our sense limitation of "form." When we have once grasped the truth and actual existence of the vast "presence," of which form is but a wee fragment, we see that heredity, as seen in form, is only a very imperfect manifestation of the relation of every molecular group to its primal unit, which at some remote period, commenced to attract and gather other units like minded to itself. Such seems to the present writer to be the great lesson which he has tried to express and teach under the heading of "Mortal Limitations."

Yet further it seems possible that the fact that this vast "presence" of which form is only a small part, may give a real scientific basis to what is known as pre-existence, by the student of theosophy. We have seen that "presence" outstretching as it were in front of form may give us new form appearances according to our sense limits. But if that be so, there may be, perhaps must be "presence" just as much behind form, as in front of it, with the same quality of manifesting form only according to the sense limitation of the observer. For the one great element of "presence" is that it always manifests form to the utmost sense limit of the observer, and no further. We have seen that an advanced intelligence sees a form as our personality that is founded on more of the "presence" than mortals grasp. But that same advanced intelligence may, thus sense form behind our present form life, as well as in front of it. Death destroys nothing. It only manifests another expression of "presence." It is a great kaleidoscope, with the same material exhibiting ever changing forms.

So I repeat this study of "mortal limitations" may not prove, but it certainly suggests that the experience of the eternal unit may have commenced long before what we now sense as mortal form. Every form is really mortal form, for it changes or disappears just as sense limits change. And every "presence" is, so far as we can sense, unlimited. Therefore "form" as a partial manifestation of "presence" does to that extent seem to support—almost to prove—the doctrine of pre-existence. But that is so suggestive a theme that it demands a separate study.

(The End.)

San Leandro, Cal.

Spiritism and Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's Theories in Regard to It. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey. Demonstrates futility and inadequacy of Hudson's explanations of spiritual phenomena. Price 25 cents.

Leaves From the Diary of a Spiritualist Medium

An Interesting and Instructive Narrative from the Pen of that Talented Lady and Excellent Medium, Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vermont.

(Continued from No. 806.)

February 24.—When I came up to my room last night I did not sit down to write in my diary as I usually do, for I could not free myself from the impression I had had all the afternoon that someone was coming, but the idea seemed absurd, for it was quite late in the evening and the roads were drifted full. Just as Aunt Sue was putting the cat down cellar, and Uncle Ike was winding the clock, there came a rap at the door and Uncle Ike admitted a man who was much muffled with scarfs, and a good deal out of breath from the exertion of walking over, around and through snowdrifts, not to mention climbing a steep hill. A little later Uncle Ike presented himself at my door and with the rather vague remark, "You'll find him in the settin' room," he handed me a folded paper and departed. I opened the paper and read, "Saul desires a private interview with the Witch of Endor," and it was signed, "Saul, alias H. Cameron Parson"—the minister who is soon to vacate his pulpit in the brick church! I could hardly believe my senses, I was so surprised. It was only a year ago this very man preached a rousing sermon against Spiritualism.

"You are not offended with me for calling you the Witch of Endor, are you?" inquired Mr. Parson, as soon as we had exchanged greetings.

"Certainly not," I said. "I consider that you paid me quite a compliment. The Woman of Endor, according to the only account we have of her, was a fine medium. She gave Saul a truthful message from the spirit he wanted to hear from, and then she obeyed the law laid down by Christ a long time afterward and gave her enemy food and drink and rendered to him good for evil."

"I never thought of that before," said Mr. Parson, with some surprise.

"Begging your pardon, sir, I think there are many things in the Bible that you have failed to get the true significance from."

"Very likely," he said gloomily, "but I am not as much interested in the Bible to-night as I am in myself. I am all out of fix with the Bible, myself, my church, my religion—everything. A year ago I was perfectly satisfied with the world. Yes, a year ago I was perfectly satisfied with my religion and thought it all anyone need ask for, but it failed me utterly in my hour of trial. I thought I knew God, but now I hope that the God I have talked so flippantly about is only a morbid conception of some old heathen's brain, for if the Ruler of this universe is the terrible being I once so complacently thought him to be, then—" Mr. Parson paused and laughed bitterly, then he exclaimed, "Mrs. Drury, if you can do anything to help me, in the name of all you hold dear and sacred, do it!"

As I looked upon the boyish face before me, so sad and troubled, I became conscious of the presence of a sweet-faced elderly woman and it seemed to me as if the young man was my son, and my soul went out to him in motherly love and pity. I took a chair beside him and saw a young girl come and lay a white hand upon his shoulder, a young girl with brown curls thrown back from a white forehead, her cheeks were rosy and dimpled, her lips red and smiling, and her brown eyes looked with unutterable tenderness upon the bowed figure of the young minister. Her lips framed but one word, "Bertie." At the mention of that name Mr. Parson caught my hand in a vise-like grip, and exclaimed, "My God, it is—it is—"

"It is Alice and she calls you Bertie," I said.

He broke into passionate sobbing. What I said to him I cannot recall, but later he said to me, "God bless you, Mrs. Drury, for what you have done for me to-night. You have brought me hope and comfort, you have given me positive proof that my beloved Alice, my betrothed wife, is not lost to me if she did die without confessing Christ and was unbaptized. You have brought to me the knowledge that my mother still loves me and is near me in my loneliness, and it does not seem to me that I ever can be quite as wretched again. No one but my mother and Alice ever called me Bertie, and I am sure no one in this state knows what the letter H in my name stands for. I thought I would tell you this to encourage you in your work. Whatever comes into my life later, I know now I shall not be bound by church creeds. Whatever light comes to me I shall give others the benefit of and do the best a worm of the dust like myself can do to get all the knowledge of the hereafter possible."

"You are not a worm of the dust," I said; "you are a son of God. Stop insulting your Father and throw away your worm theory and everything else that is wrong, and stand up erect and assert your divinity and let your life testify to it."

One more led from total darkness into the light of morning? I think so. God grant that the morning may break into a perfect day. To-morrow if the roads are not too badly drifted, I go to be the guest of Mrs. Blind of Blindville.

March 5.—I am back home again and it seems good to be here. If I needed a change, I got it. I arrived at Mrs. Blind's in season for dinner and was introduced to her family consisting of her mother-in-law, Mrs. Glum, a son Max, aged twenty, and twin daughters, Lenore and Vivian, aged sixteen. After dinner Mrs. Blind took me to her room and poured out her troubles like a flood. Mrs. Glum fretted from morning until night and no one was ever known to please her. She was exacting, critical and suspicious and insisted upon bestowing advice upon everyone, and the fact she knew nothing about the matter in question never discouraged her in the least.

"You don't know anything about it," said Mrs. Blind, tearfully. "I try to be patient, but that woman is enough to try the patience of an angel, but I can stand her nagging better than some other things I have to bear."

She then told me with many tears and sobs that her son had several times recently been brought home intoxicated, and all her tears and prayers and arguments had only seemed to make him worse. I saw Mrs. Blind was very fond of her handsome boy, and I sympathized with her deeply and told her so.

"Do not feel either anxious or discouraged," I said, "for I see a beautiful light just before me, and I am sure all will be well.

"Oh, dear," groaned the mother, "I do hope so. It does seem to me that I have more trouble than anyone else ever had unless it was Job."

"The reason why it seems so is because you know your own troubles so much better than anyone's else. There can nothing befall you in the nature of trouble that is not more or less common to humanity—we are all one great family."

"Perhaps so," she said doubtfully, "but not every mother has prayed for her children and sacrificed herself as I have for mine. I am sure I have talked to them enough so they ought to know how to conduct themselves. I have done everything for my girls, but they are just as ungrateful as they can be. Lenore goes about looking and acting as if she had lost her last friend and refuses to go anywhere or see anyone if she can help it, and does not take any interest in anything but religion. She is very religious and lately has hardly spoken except to quote Bible or poetry."

"What sort of poetry does she quote?" I asked.

"Oh, something pathetic, something about heaven and dying. I am dreadfully worried about her, but she does not try me as her sister does. Vivian wants to be going somewhere all the time. I don't believe that girl would stay at home five minutes if she did not have to. She is just like her grandmother and nothing ever pleases her. They say she is real agreeable away from home, and I am sure I am glad, for she is a terror here. Why that girl will throw herself about and scream and rave until I actually think of the devils Christ cast out, and fear lest there may be such a thing as a person being controlled by evil spirits now. One day I told her this and the idea seemed to strike her fancy, and she has acted worse ever since."

I sat in silent thought for some time and then I said, "Mrs. Blind, there is a deep-seated cause for all these troubles, and if we can discover the cause and remove it the troubles will soon cease. It is natural for everyone to be happy—your religion to the contrary. We have a legitimate right to happiness, and young persons usually recognize it and are happy, and if your children are not there has been and is mismanagement somewhere. I do not see my way clearly at the present moment but I know I shall. You have many spirit friends about you who understand the situation here and are anxious to help you, and I know they can and will give me all the information I need. I do not promise that you shall jump from the hell you are in into the joys of heaven, but I do promise you that you will gain it step by step if you will follow the guiding light."

"I will follow at any cost to myself," said Mrs. Blind, firmly.

"Then," said I, "put from you all anxiety and know that you have this moment entered the path leading to peace and strength and happiness realized. I have one request to make of you. Do not mention your trials in the presence of your children, or betray any anxiety lest something unpleasant should arise, and do not take any apparent notice of their shortcomings; let them do what they will."

Later in the day I was left alone with Mrs. Glum and listened to a pathetic recital of her trials.

"Abigail is so fussin' and particular that I never could do anything to suit her," said Mrs. Glum. "I was brought up to work, and I want to work and do something besides makin' blue cats and dogs on pieces of yeller silk," and she poked contemptuously at some silk patchwork on a chair beside her. "It looks to me like a wicked waste of time and I don't think much on't. This settin around all fixed up, tryin' to look fashionable is what I despise. Abigail said the other day she wished I'd mind my own business, but I can't mind what I haint got. If she'd let me wash dishes an' mend clothes and sort pertaters, I'd mind my business, for I'd have the business an' the mind to 'tend it."

I found Mrs. Blind and told her such portions of the conversation as I thought best.

"Give your mother-in-law suitable clothing and let her go into the kitchen and do the work she is longing to do," I said. "When a person who is inclined to meddle and criticise has nothing else to do you may be sure she will make it her business and attend to it faithfully. The remedy is hard work."

"But if I do as you tell me," said Mrs. Blind, my neighbors over here will tell all over the village that I am making my poor old mother do my drudgery for me, and what will people say?"

(To be continued.)

Good News for Asthma Sufferers.

We are glad to announce that the Kola Plant, recently discovered on the Congo River, West Africa, has proved itself a sure cure for Asthma, as claimed at the time. We have received the testimony of ministers of the gospel, doctors, business men and farmers, all speaking of the marvelous curative power of this new discovery.

Mrs. L. D. York, of Henderson, Me., writes, thanks be to my God and the Kola Compound I am now completely cured of Asthma after many years of suffering. Hon. L. G. Clute, of Manchester, Iowa, writes, was permanently cured of Asthma after eighteen years' severe suffering and want other sufferers to know that the Kola Compound did it. Mr. E. B. Hume, 1345 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., a widely known traveler writes was cured after physicians and everything else failed and I tried all so called remedies known. Mrs. Sadie Montgomery, Lapel, Ind., writes, I could not lie down or walk fast for several years, but the Kola Compound cured me, although every other remedy failed.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1161 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound Free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

"The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional." This book, by the well known Father Chiniquy, reveals the degrading, impure influences and results of the Romish confessional, as proved by the sad experience of many wrecked

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

A $1. Package FREE TO TRY If You Have PILES

Send your name today and get by return mail my new 3-fold Treatment which is curing thousands.

To every person answering this advertisement at once I will send—Free to try— my complete new three-fold absorption cure for Piles, Ulcer, Fissure, Prolapse, Tumors, Constipation and all rectal troubles. If you are fully satisfied with the benefit received, send me one dollar. If not, send nothing; you decide after a thorough trial. I am curing even cases of 30 and 40 years' standing; as well as all the earlier stages. Act now and save yourself perhaps untold suffering. My three-fold treatment cures to stay cured because it is constitutional as well as local, and I want you to try it at my expense. One dollar is little to pay if cured. My valuable new Pile Book, (in colors) comes free with the approval treatment, all in plain package. Send no money—only your name—to Dr. Van Vleck Co., X022 Majestic Building, Jackson, Mich. Write today.

PUBLICATIONS OF

Hudson Tuttle.

Library of Spiritual Literature.

STUDIES IN THE OUTLYING FIELDS OF PSYCHIC SCIENCE.

This work essays to utilize and explain the vast array of facts in its field of research by referring them to a common cause, and from them arise to the laws and conditions of Man's spiritual being. Third edition. Price 75 cents.

LIFE IN TWO SPHERES.

In this story the scenes are laid on earth, and in the spirit world, presenting the spiritual philosophy and the real life of spiritual beings. All questions which arise on that subject are answered. Price, 50 cents.

HERESY, OR LED TO THE LIGHT.

A thrilling psychological story of evangelization and free thought. It is to Protestantism what "The Secrets of the Convent" is to Catholicism. Price, 30 cents.

ANGELL PRIZE CONTEST RECITATIONS.

For humane education, with plan of the Angell Prize Oratorical Contests. By Emma Rood Tuttle. Price, 25 cents. All books sent postpaid. Address HUDSON TUTTLE, Publisher, Berlin Heights, Ohio.

The Arcana of Spiritualism

A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker are already acquainted with character of this book. It is intended by its assisting, inspiring spirit-authors to furnish a compendium to the student of psychic laws and manifestations. It has been more than thirty years in preparing and contains all that has been received by me through inspiration and research during that time on the subjects it treats. Few questions will arise in the minds of investigators that are not answered in its pages. Price, $1.25 postpaid.

Address all orders to HUDSON TUTTLE, Berlin Heights, Ohio.

ASPHODEL BLOOMS, AND Other Offerings, BY EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storyettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems." That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended." Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest:"

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet. * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

Price $1.00. For sale by HUDSON TUTTLE, Berlin Heights, Ohio.

Three Journeys Around the World —OR— Travels in the Pacific Islands,

New Zealand, Australia, Ceylon, India, and other Oriental countries. By J. M. Peebles, A. M., M. D., Ph. D. In this splendid large book Dr. Peebles has concentrated a vast amount of valuable information. It is exceedingly entertaining and readable, and Spiritualism as he found it everywhere in his travels receives due attention, making the book of special value and interest to Spiritualists 454 large pages, finely bound, at the price of $1.50.

—THE— Christs of the Past and Present. By MOSES HULL,

A comparison of the Christ-work or Mediumship of Biblical Messiahs and the conditions they required, with similar manifestations in Modern Spiritualism. This is a good work to study for arguments with which to meet the very common orthodox question, "Why do you always require conditions for your spiritual manifestations?" Cloth bound, 35 cents; paper 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street,

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year	$1 00
Six Months	50cts
Thirteen Weeks	25cts
Single Copy	5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE:

☞ At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1905.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Any person donating one dollar to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., will, if desired, receive one set of spiritual tracts and one copy of "Violets," a booklet of choice spiritual poems. One contributing two dollars to the fund will also receive a copy of "Leaves of Truth," a cloth-bound book of instructive spiritual matter.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.
600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C.

A Misunderstanding of the Text.

The Christian world has misunderstood Genesis, according to the Dean, quite as a negro preacher did the text on "Evil doers."

A great many good hits have been made because of absolute ignorance of the matter in hand. The pith of most sermons comes from an amusing unconsciousness of the true meaning of the Bible texts. Talmage, the great, made his name by the open mouthed credulity with which he received, and volubility with which he expounded the Bible, and DeWitt, the little, follows—far behind—the footsteps of his sire.

The following sermon by a negro preacher in Texas, in manner and style resembles Talmage's best efforts, the all-believing misunderstanding of the text being redeemed by the shrewdness of application. It reads like a Talmagean sermon transposed into negro dialect:

"My tex' dis ebening' am from Jerimiah or Keziriah, I disremember which, but anyhow hit says, 'Beware ob ebil dores.' Now, what do de 'spired writer mean by ebil dores? What am an ebil dore? Why, an ebil dore am de side dore dat leads into the saloon on Sunday, when de front dore am locked an' the blin's pulled down. Dat's what an ebil dore am, an' dat's what de Salmist declars you mus' all beware ob. So you see my bredderen de sacred writer, he knowed all 'bout it.

"It is de ebil dore dat no p'liceman neber kin see, but dar's one above dat do see hit, kase he kin see both sides ob ebery dore, both in de dark an' in de light, an' he's keepin' tally on all dat enters derein. De ebil dore opens to let in a sober man airly in de mornin', but when he comes out he brings a smell ob whisky wid him strong 'nuff to knock down a meetin' house. De man may be tol'bly decent when he enters, but when de ebil dore opens to let him out, what is he fit for den? He can't see straight, he can't walk straight, an' he can't stan' straight. No, he can't; he's only fit for treason, statagems, boils, measles an' murder. De good in him hab all gone fast to sleep, an' de world, de flesh an' de debil had taken him prisoner, an' dey hab full control ob him. When he 'rives home an' enters his own dore, he plays de debil full swing. He kicks ober de table, smashes de dishes, breaks his wife's nose an' heart too, at one blow, an' when he's run all de chil'en out, he runs de house to suit hisself.

"But my belubbed bredderen, de ebil dores won't hurt ye if you obey de tex' an' beware ob dem; don't neber go near dem, but try an' get all de ebil dores shet up, neber agin to open.

"If thar be ebil dores so thar be good, though my tex' speaks not ob dem. De church dore am a good dore. Git inside, my belubbed and shet dat dore an' shet de debil out in de col'. God am dis side of dat dore; he am, belubbed, an' you am safe by de blood ob Jesus, right hear behind this dore."

The Evidence of a Broad Mind.

"College atmosphere of the average institution of learning of to-day is unfavorable to the origin and development of ministerial aspirations. Religion is practically ignored in the curriculum. The scientific spirit of the day, so strongly represented in the college, is not consistent with the religious spirit prevailing in the churches."

Thus from the pen of President W. R. Harper, of the University of Chicago. It was he who was subject to a recent surgical operation for cancer, during which his great classes in the University were on their knees praying to God to make the operation a success. And so hope we all. And more earnestly when we see everywhere the evidences of his broad mind, not hampered by creed.

"Success, and How to Win It." A lecture and course of twenty-four success lessons by Dr. B. F. Austin, B. A., D. D. The titles of some of the lectures are as follows: Self Helps; Financial Success; Ideals; Economy; Planning; Attraction; Courtesy; Kindness and Tact; Angelic Help. Price 25 cts.

That Terrible Divorce Question.

The clergy seem greatly hungered at this time for a uniform divorce law. They want Congress to usurp the prerogatives belonging exclusively to the states, and pass an act making only adultery the cause for divorce. It matters not how grave the wrong inflicted on a marital partner; if the opposite has not been unfaithful in his or her marriage vow, there is no redress, if the ideals of these malcontents can be carried into practice. They so loathe adultery they would minister to it more faithfully, by prohibiting the party guilty of the offense from marrying again.

And why do the Christian clergy take this position? "Because," say they, "the Master, the dear Jesus, made that offense the only cause for separation."

Jesus said no such thing. He did not suggest a divorce for adultery. Matt. 5:32, he is reported to have said:

"Whoever shall put away his wife, save for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery; and whoever marrieth her that is divorced committeth adultery." Fornication and adultery are different offenses. The man putting away his wife for committing the first offense, causes her to commit the second.

In Mark 10:3, Jesus is represented as inquiring what provision Moses had made for putting away a wife. The Pharisees informed him that Moses permitted a man to write a bill of divorcement. Then Jesus, verse 9. "What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder."

Where the proof that God has joined the inebriate, the assassin, the renegade, the low, vile and vulgar, with the noble, the true, refined and worthy, or who have become such? Bring the evidence of such joining in God's own hand-write, and then we will consider the matter.

Modern law, laws not founded on the barbarism of 5,000 years ago, nor devised by monks in their cloisters during the Middle Ages, have provided very good codes on the subject of divorce. The state of New York has made adultery the only cause for separation, so that offense is encouraged by law, and parties gladly avail themselves of the statutory offense to bring themselves within its provisions. It should have been entitled, an act to encourage adultery," as should any act, even if passed by Congress, restricting divorce to that cause alone.

We read in a fashionable journal the other day, the statement made by a lady, that her husband was in the habit of using his knife in passing food to his mouth. She claimed she had done her best to break up the uncouth habit; but he insisted he thought it as gross to pitch his food into his month as to shovel it. and he persisted in vulgarly shoveling it in. She wanted to know of the lady editor what she could do in the premises. To which the fair editress replied: "Get a divorce by all means. I would not live for a minute with such a barbarian."

That is what a fashionable editor of a popular journal would make a cause for divorce. Another would compel parties to take liquids from the side of a spoon, and break up the home if that recent habit is not strictly observed.

The Progressive Thinker does not trouble itself to know what Moses thought on the divorce question, and cares as little for the opinions of fashion editors. It is content to leave the subject where modern legislation has placed it.

Give the priesthood control and one-tenth of our incomes would be given to the church, for the benefit of the clergy, Every saint's day would be a sacred day, when labor would not be tolerated. Every person would be compelled by law to attend church on Sunday; no marriage could be solemnized unless by a priest; and the whole government would be run in the interest of sectarianism, to the prejudice of those who take no stock in its sacerdotal claims.

Religious Revivals and Their Source.

Says I. T. Lloyd, discoursing on religious revivals:

"Revivals can be satisfactorily accounted for without introducing God into them. They are perfectly human in every particular. They are managed on strictly business principles, and along purely scientific lines. Nothing is left to chance. The first requirement is the presence of a crowd; the next a suitable man to move the crowd; and third a band of capable helpers to deal with the individuals moved. The crowd supplies an atmosphere of excitement in which it is easy for a skillful manipulator to play upon the emotions of the people before him. A successful revivalist is a consummate actor. However sincerely and firmly he may believe in the reality of the supernatural, it is by natural means alone he produces his effects."

We would add to Mr. Lloyd's presentation of facts, as given above, the operator should be a good hypnotist. The better qualified in that direction the greater his success. To make the effect permanent the subject should only associate with those who have been successfully operated upon; he should only move in their circle; should read no books telling how the art is successfully practiced; should attend church regularly each week, so as to get a new dose, and be instructed all the time "it is the spirit of God acting on him." With all these precautions, mingling with the world and learning its ways, he is liable to come out from under the hypnotic influence, backslide, say churchmen, and become a natural man again.

This subtle influence, operated in an earlier age, the law relating to it not being understood, was the junior member in the firm of Father, Son & Holy Ghost. It was he who produced that great excitement on the day of Pentecost, narrated in the Acts, chapter 2. That the apostles practiced the art we have positive proof, see Acts 3:4: "And Peter, fastening his eyes on him with John, said, 'Look on us.'" Then a congenital cripple, by suggestion only, was cured, who stood up and walked.

Here were the successful hypnotists, who had just been practicing their arts, as narrated in the preceding chapter, and the doings were credited to the Holy Ghost, as was this cure by the apostles.

This is a point telling us who was the Holy Ghost we do not remember to have seen before.

"Origin of Life, or Where Man Comes From." "The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter Through Organic Processes, or How the Spirit Body Grows." By Michael Faraday. Prince 10 cents.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull. Price 10 cents.

Important Discussion

That Will Agitate Spiritualism From Center to Circumference.

SPIRITUALISM IS MOVING ON THE WORLD OVER. IN JAPAN IT IS IN THE ASCENDENCY UNDER VARIOUS NAMES. IN CHINA, EVEN, IT IS EXERTING ITS INFLUENCE. IN THIS COUNTRY, PRESENTED IN VARIOUS COLORS, AND CONSIDERED UNDER DIFFERENT NAMES, IT IS MAKING PROGRESS AS NEVER BEFORE.

NOTWITHSTANDING FRAUD HERE AND THERE BESETS THE PATHWAY OF MANY INVESTIGATORS, YET IN THE END THE TRUTH TRIUMPHS.

QUESTIONS ONCE IN A MEASURE TABOOED ARE NOW OPENLY CONSIDERED, AND TO BE A CANDID, CONSCIENTIOUS GENTLE FRAUD-HUNTER AMONG THE VARIOUS TRICKSTERS AND ROTTEN ADVENTURERS THAT INFLICT OUR RANKS IS CONSIDERED MERITORIOUS, AND THE FAKES EVERYWHERE ARE TREMBLLING IN THE ANTICIPATION OF EXPOSURE.

A FEW YEARS AGO, WHEN A FEW MISERABLE, ROTTEN FAKES WERE EXPOSED AT LILY DALE, AND DRIVEN FROM THE GROUNDS, MANY SPIRITUALISTS PROTESTED, AND FOR A TIME THE "FRAUD CRY" WAS HUSHED, ONLY TO BE KEPT SMOULDERING, TO BREAK OUT AGAIN WITH THE BOGUS MANIFESTATIONS OF THE BAMBAMS LAST SEASON.

AT THE PRESENT TIME THERE IS A CRISIS PENDING, AND A DISCUSSION IS TO BE INAUGURATED AGAIN FOR A BRIEF SEASON TO CONSIDER A QUESTION THAT WILL AGITATE SPIRITUALISM FROM CENTER TO CIRCUMFERENCE.

THE TIME HAS COME FOR ACTION, RESOLUTE ACTION, AND IT MAY BE WELL TO TAKE AN INVENTORY OF THE STOCK OF ARTIFICIAL "SPIRIT" TOGGERY ON HAND, TOGGERY THAT SOMETIMES SENDS FORTH A DISAGREEABLE ODOR FROM LONG USE IN THE PRESENTATION OF SO-CALLED MATERIALIZATIONS. SPIRITUALISM CAN ONLY ADVANCE ALONG THE LINES OF EXACT TRUTH. WHEN ON THE LINES OF ERROR, FALSEHOOD AND TRICKERY, THEN IT RETROGRADES, THEN IT DARKENS, THEN IT LOSES ITS SPIRITUALITY. SO LOOK OUT NEXT WEEK FOR A SPECIAL DISCUSSION OF GREAT AND VITAL IMPORTANCE BETWEEN MASTER MINDS OF OUR CAUSE.

THE PSYCHIC CIRCLE.

The Great Work to Be Accomplished Through Its Influence.

Dr. Alexander Caird and wife are well known by the editor of The Progressive Thinker. The Doctor is an exceptionally careful, critical, conscientious worker in the ranks of Spiritualism, and is an up-to-date man in every particular, analyzing with painstaking care and skill every phase of this modern movement. His wife, a splendid medium, stands by his side, and the combined forces of the two will be instrumental in doing a great work through the instrumentality of the Psychic Circle.

PSYCHIC CIRCLE.

In a recent issue of The Progressive Thinker, reference was made to a psychic circle formed in Lynn, Mass., under the direction of Dr. Alexander Caird and wife. Many letters have been received asking for particulars, to which we respond in this manner.

THE SUGGESTIONS AND DIRECTIONS FOR THIS CIRCLE CAME FROM WISE AND CLEAR-SIGHTED MINDS ON THE SPIRIT SIDE OF LIFE. THE GREAT POSSIBILITIES OF A CIRCLE IN WHICH THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE AT THE SAME TIME, CONCENTRATE THEIR MINDS ON THE SAME OBJECTS, MUST BE OBVIOUS TO ALL.

If we believe in the potency of thought, we can but believe that such a thought wave permeating the psychic lives of so many in different parts of the world must be productive of spiritual good.

The object of this movement is not for the advancement of the cause in any one place, or with any particular people, nor solely for the good of the members alone, but for the workers, the press, the spirit friends, and the upbuilding of the cause in general. We believe that much good will be accomplished; that those possessing the gift of mediumship will receive help and spiritual strength by placing themselves in the psychic wave engendered by this means. We hope every reader of this paper will send their name and become a member of this circle; no matter whether you are a Spiritualist or not, join us, add the power of your thought to ours and receive a blessing with us.

The hour of the circle is from 9 to 10, every Friday evening.

Rules for Circle.

Please sit in silence as far as it is possible for at least twenty minutes within the specified hour. If unable to sit alone concentrate your mind and thoughts on the objects and work of the circle.

First. Send a loving and heartfelt greeting to all members of the circle.

Second. Search your souls to learn if you have lived your very highest since the last circle. Have I been kind, patient and helpful to all with whom I have come in contact?

Third. Ask your spirit friends and the circle guides to draw near and assist you in the development of your highest soul powers and your mediumistic gifts.

Fourth. Send out a helpful thought to all speakers, mediums and workers; and to the press, that the divine plan may be more generally applied.

While we wish it distinctly understood that admission to this circle is absolutely free of cost to all, there is quite a little expense incurred in the purchase of books, printing circulars, etc., and each one joining should consider that matter. It also seems desirable to occasionally send notices and explanations to those desiring to join. Brother Francis has very generously offered the columns of The Progressive Thinker for that purpose. He realizes the great possibilities of such a circle, properly conducted, and he will open a psychic column in his paper in which will be published the time, objects, rules, any changes that may occur, growth of the circle, correspondence concerning it, AND IN RETURN FOR THIS KINDNESS IT IS CONFIDENTLY EXPECTED THAT ALL MEMBERS WILL BECOME SUBSCRIBERS TO THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. The paper is worth many times the price of subscription, for the many readable and instructive articles it contains each week and it being the official organ of the circle, members will be brought into closer touch with each other by perusing its pages.

Send name and address for membership in circle to Lynn, Mass. MRS. A. A. AVERILL.

A NATIONAL SPIRITUALIST TEMPLE.

Out of the nebulae of the thought of years at last has come into being a star of such magnitude as to warrant the attention of the advancing thinker throughout the country.

A National Temple for the teaching of the philosophy and the demonstration of the phenomena of Spiritualism is to be built in Washington, D. C., and the work is well started on its way, not financially but organically.

Incorporation papers are filed and constitution and by-laws drawn up and accepted; charter members, forty-two.

Something of these facts have come to the notice of the readers of The Progressive Thinker, but of its real importance little has been said. The project is a large one, but out of the fullness it will be carried into effect. The design has not been diagrammed, but as it has come inspirationally to view, the Temple will be arranged with large and small auditoriums, six seance rooms, parlor, dining-room and kitchen, also committee and cloak rooms, with all appliances and fittings necessary for a complete and commodious building, adapted to the uses of, and in keeping with the importance of, a center of the highest type of that which is called religion.

"And when will this be built," do you ask?

When we shall grasp the fact that it is surely needed and the power of thought is so concentrated upon it as to make it strongly magnetic enough to bring within a practical radius the funds necessary for its construction.

The halcyon days of a higher Spiritualism are approaching. In the spirit realms of this planet vast preparations are being made for a fuller, stronger and more complete demonstration of the relation and powers of the different states of being which will necessitate more correct methods among the dwellers here, and better appliances for such demonstration; a fact which co-ordinates the work on both sides and requires preparation for. As a center the capital of our nation is of importance, and increasingly so. It will be the operating center of an advance movement that is coming in Spiritualism per se; and to make ready for the stupendous work the temple will be built. it is a part of the movement already in its initiative and will be a demonstration of it, so its incorporators have undertaken the task of introducing the early features by forming the nucleus of a fund which shall come into being for the great work.

The organization is tied to no other, to no society or association; it stands dignifiedly alone, to be conducted with great care and to maintain the trust with a zeal qualified by integrity and prudence. Whether the membership be large or small, its annotations must be correctly made. The interest of the fund will be safe—guarded in every possible way so that all bequests and all contributions will be held sacred to the purposes for which they are devised. The organization is provided with a legal adviser whose place will always be filled and who, like all other of the officers, gives services free, no provision being thought necessary for compensation, as the whole work is a labor of love and gladly given to so great a cause.

Through the Spiritualist papers we shall keep in touch with the friends all over the country, and over the world, too, for the matter is really an international one, and we shall be ready at any time to accept and invest funds, receive and care for legacies, and intend to do everything in our power to increase interest in the work and to add to the fund from month to month by our industry and faithfulness.

The Temple is to be built; the earth is to yield of its fullness for it, and the powers of the air will bring substance to it; it is a feature of the new era and will stamp the era as nothing else has done, so come with us to the furtherance of the grand plan and you will ever be glad when from your ether homes you behold what you have helped to build for the good of humanity and the upbuilding of Truth, for the interest of the sum and substance of all sciences and the demonstration of that to which we all look with so much anticipation or anxiety, the life that lies in the future.

Any information will be gladly given by the undersigned at any time. MRS. M. A. CONGDON.
Corresponding Secretary.
1402 L street N. W., Washington, D. C.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

"Child Culture, According to the Laws of Physiological Psychology and Mental Suggestion." By Newton N. Riddell. A most excellent work for all who have the care or training of children. Price 65 cents.

"Love—Sex—Immortality." By Dr. W. P. Phelon. Price 25 cents.

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Campmeetings and Other Spiritualistic Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

"The Majesty of Calmness, or Individual Problems and Possibilities." By Wm. George Jordan. Another valuable little work. Price 30 cents.

Courtesy of temper, when it is used to veil churlishness of deed, is but a knight's girdle around the breast of a base clown.—Walter Scott.

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism. A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood, lecturer upon physical, physiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the molecular or spiritual hypothesis of nature. Scholarly, masterly, trenchant. Price 25 cents.

Give up no science entirely, for science is but one.—Seneca.

Present fears are less than horrible imaginings.—Shakspeare.

Let the Heathen Alone.

No doubt the sympathetic feeling that animates many who give of their means to carry "the gospel to the heathen" is commendable, although we may regard it as induced by a false theology labeled orthodox.

These sympathetic adherents of orthodox dogmas concerning human beings and their destiny, will be shocked when they read the words of Professor Starr, of the University of Chicago, who is thus reported in the Record-Herald:

Does John D. Rockefeller, in giving money to foreign missions, send woe and trouble to the heathen? A professor of the University of Chicago, so richly benefitted by the master of oil, offers an unqualified "yes."

Philanthropists who give their money to mission boards for the purpose of converting heathen nations are malicious meddlers, according to Professor Frederick Starr, the celebrated anthropologist, and every dollar of their misplaced cash sinks the barbarians lower and lower because of the contact with so-called Anglo-Saxon civilization.

Disregarding the sentiment of Mr. Rockefeller and the university divinity school which trains the missionaries. Professor Starr declared in a lecture to students yesterday that foreign religious work was a huge mistake, and that even cannibals would be far better off without its influence.

Professor Starr told the students that the religious rites of the heathen were more tolerant than the Christian religion, which he termed too "intolerant," thereby working injury to the normal state of primitive peoples. Fancy drinks, rum, shoes, stiff shirts and alarm clocks he named as the only benefits Anglo-Saxon interference had given to heathen nations and those he declared "the ridiculous monuments of our meddling."

"There is not a barbarous race in the world that we have not tried to enlighten and convert," said the professor. "There is hardly to be found a population so small that we have not carried the torch of learning to it—never failing to bring back the cash.

"We wish to convert these barbarous peoples. Therefore our religion, which is an intolerant religion, holding that there is nothing but everlasting damnation for those who do not happen to have heard of it, sends its missionaries to foreign shores.

"It is all a mistake. An African living in Africa, after an African fashion is likely to be a better man than he would be after the Anglo-Saxon introduced his religion, his surface civilization and his rum.

"We think we are the chosen of God. It is my belief that the real worth of the different races is one and the same. But because we think we are in the lead we teach the heathen a great number of new drinks, for which they probably were pining.

"We are the most meddlesome race that ever existed. We meddle at home, we meddle abroad and we meddle everywhere, and it is the almighty dollar that is the reason for our meddling. That is the watchword of the Anglo-Saxons. Our missionary work is simply meddling.

"We send our merchants and literally force the products of our so-called civilization on nations that do not want them, and do not need them. The real reason for this is our everlasting greed. We pretend to be so sorry that the nations of the world are so barbarous, so we send merchants to introduce our wares—for the good of the heathen, of course."

An Objection Answered.

Recently the writer attended a lecture by a Syrian, on his country. He had been educated at Harvard and sent out as a missionary. He gave an interesting account of his sensations and thoughts the first winter he stayed in this country, when ice began to form and snow to fall. He had never seen anything like it before, and in a letter to his mother he attempted to describe it. But at the beginning he met with difficulties almost insurmountable. He could think of no words in the Syrian language for ice and snow, or to give an idea of the intense cold.

In a round-about way he told his mother that the water became at certain seasons of the year, hard as stone, yet remained clear as glass. One could walk all over the surface, and people put irons on their sandals and went flying over the rivers and lakes. When the water was thus hard, men sawed it into blocks and stored it away in houses for the next summer, when it was used to cool the heat of the too warm days. When it was doing this it became water just as at first. Rain sometimes became hard in the clouds and fell in balls that broke the windows, or again it fell in white flakes like feathers, covering the ground and glittering like diamonds on the trees.

Before the water became hard, most of the trees dropped their leaves and remained bare as though dead, until spring.

When his mother read this letter, he said her grief was great, and she immediately wrote him: "My dear son, come home at once. Your letter shows that your mind is affected, and if you stay you will become a hopeless lunatic and irrepressible liar."

Inadvertently, what a fine answer this is to the objection so frequently made against spirit communications because they do not accurately describe the world in which they live. Had this missionary returned as a spirit from some portion of the spirit world, and attempted to describe its supernal beauties, he would have been met with similar yet far greater difficulties. For the spiritual things he would attempt to describe have no earthly name and only by symbols and comparisons could he hope to convey partial and distorted ideas.

Attention Spiritualists of Ohio!

The last Convention of the Ohio Spiritualists Association, held at Columbus, May 1904, selected Dayton, O., to hold next meeting, but owing to the inability of the society there to entertain the Convention, the Official Board of the Association was compelled to make a change and accepted the offer of the Ashtabula Society, therefore the next Ohio Spiritualists Association Convention will convene at Ashtabula, Ohio, May 26, 27 and 28, 1905. All Societies have been notified by the Secretary, and are earnestly requested to send their delegates and assist in the transaction of the business of the Association, and make this meeting a grand success to our glorious cause. Good speakers and message-bearers will be in attendance. Do not forget the dates, May 26, 27 and 28. All Spiritualists of Ohio come to Ashtabula.

C. A. SOLLINGER,
Groveland, O. Secretary O. S. A.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth, $1.50.

The most certain sign of being born with great qualities is to be born without envy.—Rochefoucauld.

Wise or Silly, Which?

Rev. John Daniels, pastor of the Mission Tabernacle, at Galesburg, recently discoursed on Spiritualism, and declared that 99 per cent of it is humbug, and the rest is of the devil.

That is a grand discovery by the doubtless learned and worthy Christian preacher. He must know where of he speaks else he would not be so positive in his assertion. All the millions of ardent believers in the truths of Spiritualism the wide world over, are victims of humbugery, his statement true! It is wonderful what a mass of knowledge that brain of Rev. Daniels possesses. And it is astonishing how many victims there are to the great delusion.

Rev. Daniels fortified his position and made points, when he declared:

"Spiritualists have no common doctrine; they do not recognize the Bible, looking upon it as any other book. The mediums are purely hypnotists, and do much harm to weak people."

The dear cleric should weep when he casts his eye about him and sees how this humbug faith has entered all the churches, and is weekly preached in some form in probably 50,000 Christian pulpits.

And worse than all, these Spiritualists find their teachings inculcated throughout that book labeled Bible, though many do not feel that fact adds any value to the knowledge they have derived direct from spirit communion.

If proved that Spiritualism is a humbug; that mediums are imposters; that there is no communion between the mortal and the immortal, then we venture the assertion, there is no proof of an immortal life. The assertion, however strongly made, or numerously believed, that the Bible is a revelation from heaven, has not been and cannot be proved. It came to us through Catholic hands, and it was the bloody Inquisition with its torture chamber that compelled its reception as the Word of God. It was kept out of the hands of the people so long as possible, that the priests might tell of the revelation, while others were reconstructing it to make it sustain their church creed.

And as to the hypnotism of mediums, we insist most earnestly the victims of church creeds give the strongest evidence possible that they are under hypnotic influence from the strongly magnetic and chicken-fed priests.

APPRECIATIVE WORDS.

Letter From the Veteran Rolla Stubbs.

To the Editor:—I consider The Progressive Thinker the best Spiritualist paper printed. It is full of instructive reading and thought from the best writers.

The cause of Spiritualism here is progressing nicely. We hold meetings every Sunday at 2:30 p. m., in our temple.

For a number of years before The Progressive Thinker started, we read the Religio-Philosophical Journal and the Banner of Light, both $3 a year; when The Progressive Thinker came out at $1 a year, all said that a Spiritualist paper could not live at those prices, but it has lived, and instead of being four pages like the first year, it has gained in size to an eight-page journal, brimful of good reading matter. One who fails to read The Progressive Thinker is missing the good things of this life, and can not keep posted in the progress of Spiritualism.

In the last forty years I have seen Spiritualism rise and fall. At two or three different periods, it would seem to rise and go to the front as a religion for a time, and then die out; but at present it is coming before the world as it never did before. The secular papers throughout the land give us an account of the meetings and the work, without so much ridicule as they gave thirty or forty years ago.

Modern Spiritualism has come to stay. It has been the false teachings and trickery under the cloak of Spiritualism that have kept it back. It has been scorned and ridiculed by the church-going people as a free-love religion, before the people properly understood its work and philosophy.

When the church or any religious society discards Spiritualism out of its Bible or religion, it has nothing to build on, as spirit is the life principle. There is no religion more beautiful than the one which teaches that our loved ones in spirit life come back to earth and manifest and make themselves known to their friends. It is a blessed knowledge to know such is true. ROLLA STUBBS.

Long Lake, Minn.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Some Reasons Why It Should Be Conferred.

Woman suffrage is going to be one of the great issues of the day and must be met and settled right. The women are capable in every respect to exercise the right of suffrage, more so in fact, than many of the men to the manor born, or the foreigners who come here and are entitled to vote in five years after taking out their naturalization papers at the call and behest of the political boss of his election district.

With women voting it would tend to make cleaner politics; it would tend to minimize the influence of the ward heelers and hangers on of the party in power; it would cause politicians to bring out men for office with cleaner and better records in order to appeal to the votes of the women, who would be sure to look into their capabilities and inquire into their antecedents in a more thorough and effective way than most men do. This, of itself, is alone worth conferring the right of suffrage to women.

Indeed, anything which will tend to make our politics and candidates abler, cleaner, better, cannot be instituted any too soon; and one of the best measures to help it along will be woman suffrage. —Dover (N. J.) Index.

INDUCE

Your Neighbor to Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Now is the time to extend the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. It will contain Occult and Spiritualistic news with which every one should be familiar. No other paper published on this earth contains such a vast amount of matter so well adapted to enrich the mind. Send in a subscription now.

"Koradine. By Alice B. Stockham and Lida Holt Talbot." In the form of an entertaining story, it contains lessons which every girl should know. Price, cloth, $1.

"Religious and Theological Works of Thomas Paine," contains his celebrated "Age of Reason," and a number of letters and discourses on religious and theological subjects. Cloth binding, 230 pages. Price $1.

Self-conceit is the enemy of progress. —Bion.

Death has no longer a sting and the grave is but the cradle of victory.

An Interesting, Impressive and Instructive Lecture, Containing an Important Forecast of the Destiny of Nations, Given Under Spirit Influence.

JAPAN AND RUSSIA.

Is It True That the War Is Due to Planetary Influences?

A Discourse Through Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond.

The subject this morning, "Is the War Between Japan and Russia Due to Planetary Influences," is suggested by two things: That the Japanese as a people are believers in astrology, and that the Russians as a people, while adopting a Christian form of religion, are, nevertheless, personally pervaded very largely by the Northern Mythology.

There is a legend, that "when out of the mouth of the Great Dragon the Dog Star is released, then shall the Orient arise, then shall it be redeemed."

In this sense the Great Dragon refers to the northern constellations, including Ursa Major, and it is supposed by the believers in this legend that the Dog Star has been held in abeyance for a "thousand years" because of these mighty northern powers. They are called "Rishis" or rulers of the northern planets in the Orient. The Magians, when only three stars in the constellation of Ursa Major were visible, held that the Earth was in the shadow, and afterward, when others became visible the light came forth.

In Japan it was believed that the mouth of the "Dragon" held in its thrall not only the Chinese empire, but India, and that when Japan should be released a new country would appear.

Whether this tradition is historical or mythological you may judge. But it is certain, astrological or mythological scenes are not falsehoods, but are symbols of truth. Usually traditions that have their foundations in the hearts and beliefs of a nation are traditions of spiritual value.

Astrology, of course, is to-day not an exact science. There has been a time when astrology and inspiration went hand in hand, and the astronomy of the ancients bore an astrological significance, and was accompanied by great spiritual perception.

The Chinese for many hundred years have held this Oriental knowledge in close keeping and like the ancient Egyptians have held the tables of the astronomes in their sacred archives; when fully revealed these will show that the Chinese understood the present system of astronomy long before Copernicus revealed it to the western and more barbarous nations.

All important movements or changes in the world are in cycles, and these cycles are indicated by the conditions of nations. Nations do not owe their conditions fully to the cycles, but the cycles are indications of that which will transpire; just as the Messianic cycle in the Hebraic and Egyptian records signifies the larger performance in the heavens, and this solar system passing around the great central light which, of course, was a larger cycle. But the Messianic cycle of a "thousand years" in Oriental phraseology is simply a symbol, it does not mean ten hundred years, but it means the largest number conceivable, consisting of ten and two of the smaller cycles, and ten and five (the twenty-five thousand years) of the larger cycle.

It is time now for the great fulfillment (according to the Northern and Eastern Mythologies), as Sirius has emerged from the mouth of the Dragon, for the great change to occur in the restoration of the exact magnetic pole, time for the reaction to begin that was expected to take place in the Orient. This has been predicted by us in our propheeies concerning the "Glacial Period" which will soon be precipitated upon the earth; in fact you are in the midst of the heraldings of that glacial period now. The storms, deluges, volcanoes, earthquakes and wars are indications of the commencement of the glacial period. The great belt of ice that prevents the approach to the North pole and the great cap of ice that holds the South pole in its keeping will find release upon either side of the earth and produce the glacial cataclysm. Meanwhile the nations keep pace with and correspond in their unfoldment to those cycles or periods.

The nations of the Orient, for many hundred years, indeed for thousands of years, held in abeyance have continually retrograded and, as far as your history gives any knowledge, have been isolated from all the onward march of civilization, are now, astrologically, in the ascending scale, in the awakening time. The great re-birth, of which Horus in India and the Buddhistic reaction in China and Japan was the symbol, is due to-day. Formerly the believers in the gods in Japan held that out of the mouth of Dragon this small kingdom would be set free; that it would be held in abeyance for the thousand year cycle, which really meant the larger number of 2,500 years. After this release this "Flower of all Lands," this fair "Lily of the East" would rise in her might, and would minister unto the "Mother Celestial," the Chinese empire, and would set her feet again upon a solid basis of life and advancement. All the immured treasures of knowledge which would come forth is to be found in the sacred writings both of China and Japan.

Japan is more alive to the prophecies of the Magians. She holds as sacred knowledge the traditions that at the very beginning of her war with China was the beginning of her "release." This is why she went to battle. This is why she was certain of success. This is why, having emerged from the mouth of the Great Dragon, her planetary influences are now in the ascendant and she is sure of victory over Russia.

Many people are not impressed with these traditions, but, as said before, there is always a foundation of truth in every myth or tradition, because mythology holds, usually in the form of symbolism, the inspiration and truths of a nation. Everything is "mythological," and therefore, a "superstition," of course, that is not in accordance with your particular belief. The time will come when the knowledge and great spiritual impulses of the Christian nations will pass from the realm of history into the realm of tradition or mythology. Then, whatever shall be the name of the new civilization that shall appear upon the Earth, there will not be the discredit given to your traditions that is given by Christians to the Oriental nations. These traditions that have come out of the North, the more northern mythology, form the basis, the undercurrent of the spiritual impulse of this Anglo-Saxon race. Thor, Odin and Friega are but symbols of the powers that have borne forward these northern nations to meet the southern nations.

The resurrection of the Orient is two-fold; it is not only by the astrological signs that lead to western Europe and the western continent and the mingling of southern Europe with the North, but it has a deeper significance; it comes to you to-day when you are living—you do not know the privilege of it—, you are living exactly in the great turning point of the cycles, when the Orient is to be redeemed. It was not the redemption of the Orient when Great Britain conquered India. It was not the redemption of the East when, for the purpose of acquisition and the benefit of her exchequer, she has held India in thrall for more than a hundred years. There probably never was a greater piece of iniquity than the formation of the Great East India Company. India has been ruled by that company for nearly a hundred years. Now the cycle is changing. You are in the midst of it. The Orient is rising to vindicate Japan, to release China and to set the light in the New India. This is the meaning of the astrological signs as read by the Japanese and Chinese astrologers. It means: For a time the "Celestial Mother," as China is called, must hold her peace, must listen to the "Child." It is the coming forth again of the child-life. Like the Horus of Egypt, veiled in the mystery of Isis.

Horus is born; it is named Japan, and with that name, and the impetus that is behind it, is included this great other change that is going on among the planets. The great perihelion of the planets a few years ago was one of indications of that which is occurring to-day, and that which has suddenly changed the actual position of the magnetic poles several degrees indicates the approaching cataclysm, or culmination of the cycle.

Meanwhile, the spiritual forces of the universe are at work. The nations that have been slumbering are coming to life. Peoples that have been dominant and nations that have been ruling with arbitrary power are receding. The decadence of the supremacy of Great Britain is but a question of a little time, indeed is already here. Russia as an empire will cease, and the great new Republic of the North will come forth to join hands with the great sister Republic of the Orient. Across the "Bridge of Sighs," which is Siberia, across the terrible crucifixion and perseeution of patriots, across the sleepy Mongolian Empire, across all those outlying districts that have been held as partially neutral, held by the Chinese, across that which is the battle-ground now of the two nations, this wonderful bridge is being formed; it is formed in Russia by the tears and groans and prayers of patriot exiles; it is formed by the imprisonment and murder of thousands of those who dared to speak a word for freedom; it is formed in the Orient of all inaction, of all despotism, of all the hoarded wealth of learning that China has buried for thousands of years; it is formed by the flowering out, distinctively, of this new child-nation that is to set up the new nation of the East, as a lily, with its live, wonderful new government. So this Star and the Lily, which is the symbol of the new life, will also be the symbol of the new nation. Japan is a flowery kingdom, it is a kingdom of blossoms. The lilies or lotus flowers are the symbols of its new life. It upsprings as does the lotus. Its existence, as is the lotus, is by the great mystery of the Primal Mother, by the over-brooding of the Primal Father, symboled by the sun, which in the Orient is worshiped everywhere.

The symbol of the Dog Star, which is the symbol of the rising and the setting of its life's tide, and symbol of all those southern constellations that form the Great Dragon, all are symbols of that which now is appearing.

If you only knew, if the Western mind could fully understand, if you could appreciate the lore and learning of the kabalistic and magian literature and symbolism that is held in those wonderful Oriental minds, in the wonderful treasures of Chinese learning, you would marvel at your own crudity, a crudity that also has its inspiration, which is impelling the western nations to fulfillments that are old in the Orient. While they are entering upon a new cycle, which is the cycle next beyond yours. Commerce, this struggle for material power, this infantile aggressiveness, all this is past in the Orient.

We think as a nation there is not in the world, or in the conception of man a more peaceable people than the Japanese. A people peaceable in their homes, in their communities, in their societies, in their dealings with one another and with strangers. There is no more peaceable beast in the world than the lion, he does not go out to spring upon his enemies, he does not seek to quarrel; if he is hungry he must have food, if he is at bay then he shows his strength. The Lion of the East is aroused, and that which has been for a long time considered dead reveals itself as having been only slumbering. Not only is China being aroused, but China has been the great slumbering barrier between the West and the Orient. When China has heard this Oriental awakening, who shall protect you from China? We answer, Japan! Japan!

The great new empire will not be the over-running of the West, especially America by the "little brown men," by the "Yellow Peril," but by the formation of the great new Orient.

Japan is not only the salvation of China, but the salvation of the rest of the world from China. This is what we see in the Oriental stars; this is what we understand by the great struggle. Meanwhile, she is the Nemesis of Russia. There is no other nation that has been so aggressive, so encroaching, so determined, so cruel. What Great Britain did in India, Russia hoped to do in her outlet to the Orient. But Russia will not do it, and that is because her despotism is more infamous, and her retribution is more imminent, more certain. Great Britain has responded to the call for wider freedom, for broader laws. Ever since the Magna Charta of King John there has been a studying and heeding of the demands for better laws. Just as soon as there is a riot, Parliament knows something must be done. But riots in Russia produce added cruelties, and a Sabbath desecration by the murder of hundreds of peaceable citizens brings its own swift retribution. And the Orient is the instrument for that retribution because the time was ripe for the Orient to come forth.

We do not like war, but we dislike more than war the despotism that produces it. We did not like the war that was caused by the southern slave-holders, but we disliked slavery more. We do not like the despotism of Mammon, but we would very much dislike a war or revolution to overthrow it. We do not like "strikes," we do not like "lock-outs," we do not like any of the things that show that somewhere the oppressor's hand is strong and cruel. Japan is the retribution for Siberia, for all the surveillance, the punishments and the slaughter of the innocent by Russia.

The Star of the North will shine upon, redeem and release Russia such time as its feeble monarch is freed from the influence of his military dukes and advisers. Great Britain had no release until she was free from her dukes, until the Upper House of Parliament was made powerless by the great Lower House, until Cobden, Bright, Gladstone, and a half dozen men of the people made her understand her true position among the nations.

Russia is receiving her lesson at the hands of the smallest nation almost in the world, and the nation that is the most peaceably inclined until aroused. But the great recurrent cycle of Oriental rebirth was the time for the new India, and the new China, and the new Japan to be born. This is the time for Japan to illustrate her power. When this history is read in the distant future it will read as a romance and seem quite impossible, that this small nation should rise out of the East and go forth to make war upon one of the strongest empires of the world; should have set aside and conquered the ancient Mother China, and should set up the great light of the new Orient in such a wonderful manner. Albeit, Japan does not seek for war-like prowess, has no wish, like the Yankee nation, to seize the whole world just to show that she can. Nothing of that, there is none of that spirit. It is simply inevitable, it is simply that there is a power that threatens destruction, greater destruction to the Orient, and Japan must check it.

You may have read in the Good Book once about the Boanerges, the "Sons of Thunder." No one knows exactly the origin or application of the word. But it means a certain number of people on the earth that are always ready: ready to take up the standard of right, ready to bear the cross, ready to bear whatever is necessary to defend a principle or a law. To those to whom Jesus addressed it, he meant that they belonged to that order of men, to that class of people that are ever ready and alert; that are not to be caught napping; that when the emergency comes are there. You have them in the life-saving stations; you have them in those who rescue people from the flames. They do not make the storm, they do not create the fire, but when it is there they are ready. So this great, wonderful torrent that sweeps over the earth, that today has its focal point in the far East, is that which calls upon the people who are ready. The Russians are not ready, they must be forced, conscription must take place, they must be compelled to be ready to go forward. The Japanese are ready, one life, a hundred, a hundred thousand, a million if there is need, theirs is to win the victory.

Now when this is applied to moral force, when it becomes a readiness, an impetus for moral endeavor, these Angel forces that are abroad in the world become the leaders, the Teachers of Truth, become those who are willing to suffer martyrdom, those who are ready to take their places in any phase of the conflict. William Lloyd Garrison did not want war for the suppression of slavery, but as he said, "I see that is God's way," he had to consent to his son going to the war. He was a non-resistant, but God is not always a non-resistant.

Jesus and Buddha, and the lives that have illustrated the divine victory, have given the possibility of man. But when the Boanerges are called to the front, when the Angels of war are called to conflict, it means that this is a stage of the earth's history. Just as the volcano, as the earthquake, the deluge and the glacial period mean the same thing.

We are going to have peace; there is coming a baptism of peace after awhile in the Orient. Great Britain will be driven out, Russia will be driven out, all Europe will be driven out, and there will be, as said before, a new Orient. We are not sure but what the Yankees will be driven out of the Philippine Islands—we hope so, for they have no business there, when they had fulfilled their war with Spain they should have made a bow and come home. They did not, and they never have had a thought of being driven out. But the truth is, "like causes produce like effects."

You have given a tardy self-government to Cuba, you have muddled things a great deal in Santo Domingo. What you are doing in the Philippine Islands no one is thinking about, because all thought is centered upon this war in the Orient; but whatever you have sown, that shall ye reap, every nation does, and every people and every human being. Nothing is surer than that Russia is reaping the harvest of her despotism. Indicated by her stars, indicated by her own moral condition, indicated by the feebleness of her rulers: It is the reaction, and, of course, it comes to all nations the same as it once came to Greece, Rome and Egypt.

If anything proves that successive embodiments must be true, it is because nations will not learn from the history of any other nation. No more than men learn from the downfall of those who speculate on the boards of trade and stock exchanges. Ninety-nine in every hundred fail; only one in a hundred approximates success, only one in a thousand succeeds any better, and only one in several millions becomes a Rockefeller, to be scorned at last by a convocation of Congregational ministers! That is scorn enough for anybody.

Let us look to it then, if our stars point to that kind of a nemesis according to our interpretation, for along with each pathway of the planets is the accompanying other light. Now planets do have physical influence very greatly over this Earth. You are held in your mutual places physically by action and reaction upon each other. The disturbing of the tides and various things may occur because of this or that or the other position of the different planets, but the worlds are peopled as well as the interstellar spaces; it is that law of intelligence that moves the universe, not merely the law of things. When Mars flashes his light upon the earth, or Jupiter is seeking to woo in the heavens the beautiful planet Venus, it is not the stars that are influencing human lives, but their messengers.

Mars is the nemesis of the Earth. How do you know but what the leader of the Japanese armies is a messenger from Mars? How do you know but what the retribution that comes because of these conditions of corruption and injustice is in the hands of these mighty messengers who do the work assigned them, and that the intermediate spiritual intelligences, those who have passed from earth, and that the mighty congress of nations that bends above might have sent word, or possibly have decreed that injustice must cease before peace can exist?

These spiritual congresses of nations do not sit supinely waiting for peace, are not singing songs along the banks of paradise waiting for this little quarrel or that little quarrel to be over; but with mighty power and great urgency are uplifting the hands of those who seek for liberty and the justice of the people. And the day and the hour is almost here when this great reactionary tide will sweep over your own land. We hope it will not mean war. If all the ministers of all the churches would refuse to take the tribute that Mammon pays as the price of salvation, then there would not need to be any war, the Prince of Peace would have already come, and you would sit down in your temples of worship knowing that the starving children upon the streets, that the men and women who toil for their daily bread are not oppressed by that which you are doing in receiving the bribe-money from the professed Christians who follow after Mammon.

The time will come when out of the shadow of this Eastern war will spring two new nations: The new republic of Russia, which will practicalize many of the ideals of Count Tolstoi; a new Japan that will realize many of the old ideals that you have missed. Then a new Australasia that will not only set the example of being the best governed colony in the world, but will set the fashion to Great Britain of being the best Republic. The time will come when America, swept through and through by this great reaction that is to come, will refuse to take the tribute money that Cesar offers, that Mammon offers, but will protect the humblest of these lives, and the humblest of these nations of the earth.

DEAFNESS AND CATARRH CURED

BY NO METHOD UNTIL "ACTINA" WAS DISCOVERED.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dept. 242C, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

$3 a Day Sure Send us your address and we will show you how to make $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully, remember we guarantee a clear profit of $3 for every day's work absolutely sure. Write at once. ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 867, Detroit, Mich.

I Turned Out $301.27 worth of plating in two weeks, writes M. L. Smith of Pa. (used small outfit). Mrs. Geo. F. Crawford writes, made $7.00 first day. J. J. B. Mills, a farmer, writes, can easily make $5.00 day plating. Thos. Parker, school teacher 21 years, writes, "I made $9.00 profit one day, $2.25 another." Plating business easily learned. We teach you Free—No Experience Required. Everybody has tableware, watches, jewelry and metal goods to be plated with Gold, Silver, Nickel and Tin plating. Heavy Plate—latest process. No toy or humbug. Outfits all sizes. Everything guaranteed. LET US START YOU. Write today for Agents' and Offer. Address F. Gray & Co. Plating Works, Cincinnati, O.

CANCER CURED WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS. Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

NOTICE! The Woolley Sanatorium, the only institution in the United States where the Opium, Cocaine and Whisky habits can be cured without exposure, and with so much ease for the patient. Only 30 days' time required. Describe your case and I will write you an opinion as to what I can accomplish for you. Ask your family physician to investigate. Dr. B. M. Woolley, 106 N. Pryor Street, Atlanta, Ga.

807

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

In the World Celestial

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized all through trance medium, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness.

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

President Bowles of the National Liberal League, says: "It is one of the choicest pieces of literature of this marvelous age of books."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1. For sale at this office.

A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

By Lilian Whiting.

Author of "The World Beautiful," "Kate Field," "After Her Death," "From Dreamland Sent," etc. With portrait. 16mo. Cloth, gilt. Price $1.25. The writer of this "Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning" has thrown the book into five chapters, with sub-titles as follows:

LIVING WITH VISIONS. "Summer Snow of Apple Blossoms;" Music-Flow of Pindar; Friends in the Unseen.

LOVES OF THE POETS. The Prefigured Friend; Vita Nouva; "One Day, My Siren."

IN THAT NEW WORLD. Plea and Poetry; In Casa Guidi; Florentine Days; Walter Savage Landor.

ART AND ITALY. Individuality of Character; The Clasped Hands; Kate Field's Records; Mrs. Browning's Death.

LILIES OF FLORENCE. Poetic Rank; Spiritual Laws; Modern Scientific Thought; The Consideration of Genius.

For Sale at this office.

In Tune with the Infinite

By Ralph Waldo Trine.

Within yourself lies the cause of whatever enters into your life. To come into the full realization of your own awakened interior powers, is to be able to condition your life in exact accord with what you would have it.—From Title-Page.

CONTENTS—I. Prelude; II. The Supreme Fact of the Universe; III. The Supreme Fact of Human Life; IV. Fullness of Life—Bodily Health and Vigor; V. The Secret, Power and Effect of Love; VI. Wisdom and Interior Illumination; VII. The Realization of Perfect Peace; VIII. Coming into fullness of power; IX. Plenty of All Things—The Law of Prosperity; X. How Men Have Become Prophets, Seers, Sages, and Saviors; XI. The Basic Principle of All Religions—The Universal Religion; XII. Entering Now into the Realization of the Highest Riches. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $1.25.

WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT.

Analyzed From a Strictly Scientific Standpoint.

I have been greatly interested in and edified by the discussion of this problem of the ages, in The Progressive Thinker. And while much light has been thrown upon the subject, it seems to me some of the basic principles underlying this dictum of England's great poet-philosopher have not been made prominent.

In our emancipation from the dualism of the past we should be careful lest our mental pendulum swing off to the extreme of monistic materialism. Idealistic or spiritualistic monism, it seems to me furnished the golden mean platform on which we can stand and successfully solve the problem.

We should remember that, strictly speaking, there is nothing either supernatural or infranatural. John Stuart Mill says: "Nature means the sum of all phenomena, together with the causes which produce them; including not only all that happens, but all that is capable of happening."

Looking at the subject from this Mono-psycho-cosmical standpoint, we must not forget that man is a most integral part of nature. Dr. Bushnell in his great work, "Nature and the Supernatural," proved to the satisfaction of himself and many others that only man, decarnate intelligences and God, were supernatural. But exact science has carried all progressive thinkers beyond this position

Haeckel says, "Our monism might as accurately be called Spiritualism as Materialism."

Man is a part of nature in precisely the same sense that a molecule or a mountain, an atom or an angel, a plant or a planet, an electron or an elephant, is though occupying a different plane from these or any other entities or manifestations of life. Being a part of nature he is subject to the same laws, mutations, changes, evolutions, devolutions and cataclysms that characterize the other manifestations of life in the universe about him.

There is a "periodic decay and rebirth" of all cosmic bodies and of everything, so far as we know, in the universe Haeckel, Spencer, Darwin, and other scientific expounders of the great law of evolution have abundantly proven this.

Man is as much a product of evolution as anything else in nature is, creationism to the contrary notwithstanding. This being true, what we call evil is not a unique phenomenon characteristic of the human race alone. In some form or other it is a great fact running through all nature, all life and all time. Indeed, it is a part of the very condition of nature itself.

Instead of evil, however, it should be called maladjustment, imperfect correlation, as of the microcosm with the macrocosm, or lack of harmony between a life entity and its environment. Such definitions as these are certainly more in harmony with the generally cepted results of modern science.

This lack of harmony resulting in a clash of nature's forces, we behold in the birth, growth, death and re-birth of worlds. We see it in the earthquakes, volcanoes and tornadoes of so-called inanimate nature about us. And all these activities do but adumbrate the constant struggle for life ever noticeable throughout both the vegetable and animal kingdoms. Struggle with a seemingly inimical environment resulting in the survival of the strongest or the fleetest, or the fittest, is everywhere seen.

Prof. Metchinkopf, in his work, "The Natural of Man," has fully elaborated and illustrated this law by a wealth of facts drawn both from the lower kingdom of animate nature and from man himself. Man's inability, through lack of knowledge, to perfectly adjust his physical system to its complete physical environment, results in bodily suffering, disease and generally premature death—in short, physical evil—to use the old term. Disease is but a Cyclone in the human system. Likewise his inability from lack of knowledge, to perfectly adjust his mental activities to the mental world about him results in evil intellectual, financial, social and moral—sin, if you please, against man and God.

John Fiske in his "Cosmic Philosophy" says, "From the scientific point of view, sin is a wilful violation of a law of nature, or, to speak in terms of the theory of evolution, it is a course of thought or action, wilfully pursued, which tends to throw the individual out of balance with his environment, and thus to detract from his physical or moral completeness of life." Anthropomorphism says, "Sin is an offence against a personal Deity, consisting in a disobedient transgression of some one of his revealed edicts, and calling for punishment either in the present or in the future life, unless reparation be made by repentance or sacrifice.

A careful study of these definitions, the first in the light of the well-established laws of scientific evolution, and the last in the light of the dominating dualistic theology of the churches, reveals the great superiority of the former over the latter in point of exactness and conformity to known facts.

In all kingdoms of nature a constant or periodic clash of forces, resulting in a struggle, is the necessary condition to evolution from the lower to the higher, from the homogeneous to the heterogeneous, from the simple to the complex, from the grosser, more materialistic to the higher and more refined manifestations of spiritualistic phenomena. Without this struggle there could be no advancement. Without it man would never have emerged from animality to humanity. By means of it the higher forms of psychical power are now being evolved, such as clairvoyance, psychometry, telepathy, magnetic healing, levitation, prophecy, etc. Knowledge is the universal key to progress. This is obtained through struggle. It costs us struggle. And the environment against which we struggle seems to us evil. But it is not. It is the absolutely necessary condition to our progress.

All so-called sin is therefore incidental to our development. Philosophically it is the temporary domination of the higher by the lower, as a necessary prerequisite to the permanent domination of the lower by the higher. Everything in the universe is good in its place, each under each, serving the higher and being served by the lower. Our supreme aim should be, not happiness but complete, continuous harmonization with our physical and mental environments. Life in its fullness and happiness necessarily but incidentally, will be the natural result, in proportion as we obtain this end. Pope was right scientifically, and philosophically, though one hundred and fifty years ahead of his day.

S. J. BROWNSON, M. D.

Elkins, Ark.

SAYS SPIRITUALIST WILL IS NOT VOID.

Justice Braley Moves, as Matter of Law, That Belief in That System Does Not Vitiate Capacity of Joseph Hamblett of Lowell.

Lowell, April 21, 1905.—Justice Braley of the Supreme Court to-day allowed the will of the late Joseph Hamblett of Lowell, in favor of his wife, Susan L. Hamblett, carried up on appeal from the Probate Court by relatives of the deceased. The will was contested principally on the ground of undue influence, and testimony was introduced tending to show that the influence of a Spiritualistic medium was a determining factor. Judge Braley ruled that as a matter of law a belief in Spiritualism did not vitiate the testator's capacity, and he did not find evidence of a controlling influence of this kind.—Boston (Mass.) Herald.

PHENOMENAL.

Remarkable Manifestations on the Body of a Little Girl.

Mrs. L. M. Garber—Dear Sister and Co-Worker:—I received my Progressive Thinker to-day and find a short article in it entitled, "Wanted Information." I will say in regard to the same that I think the parties referred to are relatives of my husband; his father was a Primitive Baptist minister, Anson Richardson, and he had a grand-daughter who from the time she was six months old until she was three, had flowers, figures, printed and written letters, and names on her body, arms and face, which were plainly seen at times; at other times more dimly.

As some of the statements in the article by E. W. Hull are incorrect, I will give you what I know to be the facts in the case, and I think some one else will write Mr. Hull, who made the inquiry. My father-in-law came to Keokuk county, Iowa, in 1844, which you see is twice the number of years given in Mr. Hull's article. He had a family of fifteen children, eight of which grew to manhood and womanhood; six are still living. He also preached and always refused to accept pay for his services.

Another incorrect statement is in regard to the age of the young lady, for such she is now, being past 21 years of age. I do not know that the spirits said when they quit making the letters that they would begin again, in eight years, but I do know that they never have.

The mother of the child received instructions how to bathe and care for the child's skin, but the letters did not come as stated in Hull's article, just after a bath, but would come at any time. After the first ones were seen, it she began fretting, which she would generally do when the letters were being made (although she would never cry out as though it was hurting, her very much) her mother would begin looking to see what she could find, and almost always she would see something.

As they lived close to our home until the child was seven months old, I saw a number of the things that were made. Once I saw a name given, one letter at a time, until the whole name of an aunt of the child, who was dead, was spelled out. Another time I was dressing the babe and saw on one of her shoulders a place that was unusually red, and while I was looking at it there came out in white a large printed B. It did not fade out gradually, but looked as if it was removed as one would wipe the figures off a slate, it went so quickly, and in a few seconds I saw a written D in the place where the B had been. Although I saw a number of the letters and figures, my husband never was fortunate in getting an opportunity to see a single thing.

After she grew old enough to talk, she told us the spirits scratched awful hard when they made the letters. She was also a natural clairvoyant up to five or six years of age, but at the present time doesn't seem to have any mediumistic gifts, nor would she sit to develop them. I would like to know if you have the knowledge where Mr. Hull got his information about this medium.

Your for the truth,

MRS. ANNIE RICHARDSON.

Hayesville, Iowa.

"The Constitution of Man." By Elizabeth Towne. Gives a clear and practical presentation of advanced mental science and embodies many new and original ideas, and the fullest teaching extant as to the nature, control and direction of desire. Price 50c.

"Spirit Echoes." By Mattie E. Hull. This pretty volume contains fifty-seven of the author's latest and choicest poems. Neatly bound in cloth, and with portrait of the author. Price 75 cents.

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland. Interesting, instructive and helpful; Spiritually uplifting. Cloth bound; price $1.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly, with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

ALL THE HONEST MEDIUMS IN CHICAGO RECEIVE THE CORDIAL ENDORSEMENT OF THE ILLINOIS STATE SPIRITUALIST ASSOCIATION, WHETHER ORDAINED OR NOT. AS THERE ARE NUMEROUS FRAUDS IN THE CITY, IT WOULD BE WELL FOR ALL CAMP OFFICIALS TO BE EXCEEDINGLY CAREFUL AND WRITE TO DR. GEO. B. WARNE, 4203 EVANS AVENUE, FOR INFORMATION, IF THEY DESIRE ANY PARTICULARS. SUMMER CAMP-MEETINGS, WHEN PURE IN SOCIAL CONDITIONS, ELEVATED IN MENTAL AND SPIRITUAL TONE AND CONDUCTED ON STRICTLY BUSINESS METHODS ARE POWERFUL AIDS IN SPREADING THE TRUTHS OF SPIRITUALISM. IT MUST NOT BE FORGOTTEN THAT THEY ARE ALSO THE HARVEST TIME FOR THE FAKIRS, BECAUSE THEY COME TO THE RALLYING CENTERS FOR NUMBERS OF PEOPLE, MANY OF WHOM ARE HUNGERING FOR PHENOMENA ALL THE REST OF THE YEAR AND READY THERE TO PART WITH THEIR MONEY WITHOUT PRUDENCE. SPIRITUALISTS AND THE PUBLIC AT LARGE LOOK TO EVERY ONE OF OUR CAMP OFFICIAL BOARDS TO PROMOTE DECENCY, ELIMINATE TRICKERY AND RECOGNIZE ONLY HONEST MEDIUMS. THEY SHOULD PROTECT THE NOVICE AND THE GULLIBLE FROM IMPOSITION AND ROBBERY. THEY ARE LARGELY EDUCATORS OF THE PUBLIC. CAUTION, CANDOR, COURAGE AND DISCERNMENT ARE REQUIRED BY THESE OFFICERS.

Mrs. Throndsen of Louisville, Ky., was ordained as a minister by the State Association of Indiana.

President Hassman writes: "The entertainment of the North Star Spiritual Union was held Saturday, April 29, in Perl's hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, with a large attendance. The opening address was ably delivered by Dr. P. M. Esser, after which the musical program started, which was fine. Recitations were given by Hassman, Jr., Edy, Jr., Long, Jr., and Mr. Long gave a fine sketch, 'The Tramp With His Little Girl.' Mr. Bauman gave a 'Song of the Sea,' after which all went to the grand supper given by the society. Fish pond and donkey games were also there. The well-known test medium, Mrs. Rennau, spoke a few words upon Spiritualism; so did President Hassman, ending with a little hop. Best thanks to those who gave the society a helping hand. The Sunday meeting was well attended; lecture by Dr. P. M. Esser and tests by Mrs. Renau. The Progressive Thinker was not forgotten, and was bought largely."

L. Agnese Moulton, president of the Leadville (Col.) society, writes: "We have just had a spiritual feast here at this spiritual altitude of ten thousand feet above sea level. E. W. Sprague and wife, missionaries for the N. S. A., stopped off enroute East, and gave us four lectures, followed with tests by Mrs. Sprague. Through Mr. Sprague's eloquent appeal and the prestige of belonging to the N. S. A., our 'Occult Society,' which is chartered under the laws of our state, decided to charter also with the N. S. A. The meetings netted $38.55 for the N. S. A., and $8.25 contributed for the Mediums' Fund. Brother and Sister Sprague expressed themselves as well pleased with their short stay in this 'city of the clouds,' and left an impression with our people that they were the right parties for their work. We trust that other workers that are endorsed by the N. S. A., going through Colorado, will correspond with the president of the Leadville Occult Society, and arrange to stop off here."

The Peoria (Ill.) Star says: "A believer in Spiritualism discovered at a recent seance that the Japanese and Russian soldiers and sailors who have passed over are still fighting their battles. However, if the Russians don't make a better showing in the spirit land than they have on earth, it won't take the Japs very long to settle the question."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

An item from A. W. Bracken, of San Francisco, Cal., was through some mistake of the type made to appear as if coming from Los Angeles, thus conveying a wrong impression.

Oscar F. Evertz writes from St. Louis, Mo.: "The Carondelet Progressive Spiritualist Society is now holding regular public meetings at Judd's Hall, 7801 S. Broadway, every Sunday at 8 p m. This little society has some noble workers, among them being Mrs. Elizabeth Burgher who officiates as medium and lecturer, assisted by Mrs. J. M. Pierce and Mrs. C. W. Judd, a well known clairvoyant and test medium. The officers of the society are as follows: G. M. Nunemacher, president; Mrs. Sarah Green and C. Umberhein, vice-presidents; J. M. Pierce, secretary and treasurer. Public circles are held every Monday at 8 p. m., at the residence of J. M. Pierce, 8302 Van Buren street, to which the public and members of the society are admitted without charge. Mrs. Burger holds developing and test circles at her home, 8309 Water street, Tuesday afternoons at 2:30. The officers and members of this society are working hard against great odds and should receive the support and co-operation of local Spiritualists and the general public as well."

Dr. A. B. Spinney has opened his new sanitarium at Belding, Mich., and already the institution has a number of patients. In an interview with the Doctor this week, he stated that he expected to keep his sanitarium open at Reed City for a time at least, where he has an able corps of experienced nurses caring for a number of patients. The Belding sanitarium is in the suburbs of the city and "quiet reigns supreme"— a feature very essential where the sick are to be treated and cared for.

Mrs. M. Miller writes from Rochester, Indiana: "The meetings held in our city by Will V. Nicum of Dayton, Ohio, were well attended, and very profitable. Had Spiritualism more exponents of the Nicum stamp it would rapidly increase adherents. His lectures are a direct appeal to the spirit within to ascend loftier heights, and no one can listen to the message he has for the world without having felt a spiritual blessing. So completely did he win his Rochester audiences, that it was the expression of each any every one, 'Let us have him again.'"

N. H. Eddy writes: "Prof. W. M. Lockwood has been serving the First Spiritual Society in Buffalo, N. Y., at the Temple, Prospect and Jersey street, during April, and has done most excellent and efficient work. He had good audiences. His private class was very interesting and well attended. He has given good satisfaction in his labors for our society."

Forty members of the Spiritualist society at Decatur, Ill., spent a very pleasant evening in the S. of V. hall on South Water street at the social given by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Spiritualist Scientists Society. The affair was preceded with a supper. A short program followed and later in the evening the younger members present spent the evening in dancing.

The Spiritual Alliance Society, which meets every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at Vincennes Hall, 3514 Vincennes avenue, corner Cottage Grove avenue and 35th street, is gaining ground, and has a splendid new home. Mr. Fraser will assist Mrs. May Elmo, and a good meeting can be expected. The next social and dance will be held Saturday May 13. You are invited.

The First Spiritualist Association of Wheeling, W. Va., met at Odd Fellows' Hall, Sunday, April 23, Rev. G. W. Way, pastor and medium, under spirit control, lectured and gave spiritual messages from those who have passed through so-called death to their relatives and friends in the audience.

Mrs. Dobson-Barker writes from San Jose, Cal.: "The First Spiritual Union met at Eagle's Hall, 40 N. First street, Sunday, 11 a. m., April, 23, conference being well attended. After a few remarks by the president, Mr. Joseph Murry, short addresses were given by Tillie Gunderson, Merle Munts, Prof. Cotton and J. Harker, the last calling the attention of the Spiritualists to the observance of Easter Sunday, saying it meant more to Spiritualism than to any other religion, as the arising of Christ is the first spiritual demonstration of which we have any knowledge; also that the word tomb typifies the spiritual birth. General inquiring after the sick, and sending them good thoughts, the meeting closed with singing. A special meeting of the board met at 6:30 p. m. to arrange for speakers and test mediums for the coming month. In the evening at 7:30, meeting opened with piano selection by Madam Ferbos. Mrs. H. L. Bigelow gave the beautiful poem, 'Roll the Stone of Self Away,' which furnished the subject of discourse by Mrs. N. P. Fox, who addressed an appreciative audience. After congregational singing, the meeting was dismissed with benediction by Mrs. Fox."

Merle L. Munts of San Jose, Cal., at the 57th anniversary meeting there, gave a detailed account of how she became a Spiritualist. In concluding she said: "I do not like to speak of fraud at this church where only grand and beautiful things should be said; nevertheless, I will try to quote a few lines: 'There is no fraud in Spiritualism, as many say, for Spiritualism is the truth and nothing else. There is no fraud in Spiritualism, it is the fraud done to Spiritualism.' As a proof to those skeptics who may be present, I will relate what happened at a circle in which I sat, so as to show or make known that a higher power does exist. We were nine in number and we all sat around a small table, each putting one hand on it. We at once heard distinct raps, and when one of the ladies present asked if the spirits would rap when we had our hands off, we heard three distinct raps. We removed our hands, and we heard the raps distnctly. We then moved back our chairs and the table commenced to move around, and bowed to several in the room. Remember, we did not have our hands on the table. Does this not prove that a higher power does exist? Thus by slow degrees I became a Spiritualist, till now I love this grand and beautiful truth."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Mrs. Alla McHenry is now located in Excelsior Springs, Mo., at the Saratoga hotel and will be pleased to meet all who are interested in occult science. Demonstrations of spirit power, test circles and inspirational lectures on any subject given at hotel parlors or private homes by appointment. Instruction in psychology and all lines of spiritual science. Special instruction as to how to be beautiful, healthy and happy.

E. W. Sprague and wife, the N. S. A. missionaries, may be addressed during the month of May, at Rochester, Ind.; after that mail will reach them at their home, 618 Newland avenue, Jamestown, N. Y. Mail will be forwarded to them from Rochester, Ind.

Geo. B. Ferris writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "Mrs. Marian Carpenter of Detroit, has just closed a successful engagement with the New Thought Spiritual Society of this city. Her lectures were well received and her messages all recognized. She comes to us again next Autumn, probably during October."

J. D Williamson writes from Kansas City, Mo.: "Mrs. Williamson and myself have just returned from a twelve weeks' tour of Kansas, stopping at Osawatomie, Ottawa, Hutchinson, Wichita and again at Ottawa. We made a very successful trip, and convinced a number of skeptics. We arrived here Sunday, April 30, and are being entertained by Mrs. Carrie L. Bean (Mrs. Williamson's mother) who is one of the leading mental mediums and lecturers of Kansas City, Mo.—having been in the Spiritualistic work in this city for more than five years, and formerly served the Spiritual Society of Lincoln, Neb. She is the leading teacher of Occult Science, and has brought many skeptics into the truth of Spiritualism. Your valuable paper has been read by me for some time and is one of the best published. May it live long and continue to do good work."

The Oklahoman says: "The members of the organization meet every Sunday evening at the Ripy hall, corner Second and Broadway, for the purpose of teaching their philosophy and religion, and the investigation of psychic phenomena and kindred subjects. Spiritualism demonstrates to you the fact of a life beyond the grave (through the various phases of mediumship), and that actual communication with the spirit plane of life has been established. After our services you will receive accurate descriptions of your loved ones in spirit life, with messages and names, as they are given to our mediums who are honorable and highly respected residents of the city. Investigate this; it is of the utmost importance to you."

D. G. Hill writes: "A large and appreciative audience greeted the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society at its hall, Sunday, April 30. The afternoon service was conducted in the usual way by short talks and messages by different mediums, and for the evening the talented speaker, Dr. Daniel S. Hagar, held the close attention of the large audience during his discourse, which, by the way, was his first lecture from a Spiritualist rostrum, and merited and received the hearty applause of his listeners. He was followed by Sister Sarah Thomas, the very capable worker who spoke from the subject of the Doctor's lecture in an entertaining way. The message bearers, Sisters Nora E. Hill and Sister Bloom, gave very convincing proof of the return of spirits, which was well received. The speaker for Sunday evening, May 14, will be the Hon. Ex-Judge W. L. Snell, who holds a warm place in the hearts of the people who know him. Services each Sunday afternoon and evening at 3 and 8 p. m., at O'Donnell College hall, So. Paulina street, between Washington blvd. and Park avenue. All cordially invited."

The Minonk, Ill., News says that John Rhodewald, a highly respected citizen of that place, had an experience Sunday night that he will never forget, if he lives to be a hundred years old. He is the fireman at the new coal shaft, but since they have been working at the old shaft he has to go down there three or four times a night to look after the fire under the boilers, and to see that things are all right around the works. Sunday night between 12 and 1 o'clock he went down to the old shaft. Everything was still as death as Mr. Rhodewald approached and he was nearly startled out of his wits by seeing a shadowy form enter the engine room and start the engine to going. This was kept up for some time and Mr. Rhodewald says his hair raised on end and the cold sweat stood out on his forehead. He says the man was the exact image of the old engineer, William Jackson, who died a year or two ago. Mr. Rhodewald is a truthful man and the citizens are unable to explain his vision."

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "One of the principal features of the meetings of the Rising Sun Mission on the last Sunday of each month, is the conference. Everyone present takes a deep interest and the services are always enjoyable, from the fact that each one has the privilege of giving his or her experience, as was done on Sunday afternoon, April 30. The remarks by Brother Dr. Hagar were very interesting, as were the remarks and tests of Brother Thompson and Sister Weaver and Sister Coombs. Quite a few strangers added their mite in the way of experiences. In the evening we had the pleasure of hearing our Sister Martha Price, formerly of Boston. Her subject was the Lord's Prayer. Prior to her lecture, our president read the one hundred and forty-third Psalm, which led up to the discussion, she handling her subject in a very able manner and to the edification of all. She awoke in the hearts of her hearers the necessity of prayer, and the proper understanding and interpretation of the Lord's Prayer. Our choir rendered some very fine selections during the services, which was appreciated by all. We cordially welcome strangers to our services which are held every Sunday afternoon at 3 and evening at 8, at Mission Hall, Peoples' Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt streets. Our speaker for Sunday evening, May 14, will be Dr. J. H. Randall."

Owosso—Charles Seidler is a retired farmer who recently sold a piece of property for $1,400 and placed the proceeds in the M. L. Stewart & Co. bank. Now Seidler had long known Charles D. Stewart, the head of the bank, and believed him perfectly safe and sound. On the night of Friday, April 14, Seidler dreamed that the Stewart bank had "busted," and on Saturday morning he told about his dream at the breakfast table. He laughed about it at first, but within an hour he had become thoughtful over his dream. About 9 o'clock he drove up to the bank and drew his total deposits and about two hours later notice of the bank's suspension was posted up. Mr. Seidler believes in dreams now.

A. J. Chapman, who was killed in Battle Creek, while coupling cars, had a presentiment of his coming death. "Boys," said Chapman a few hours before the fatality, "I believe I ought not to go to work today." All the morning it has seemed to me something was going to happen—I was going to be hurt or something." Before the next morning Chapman was dying at Nichols' hospital. Mrs. Chapman, who is here from Marshall to claim the body, says her husband has had a presentiment of death for the past week, and the last words he said to her were: "Little woman, I am going to try and get another job without so much danger, and where I can be at home with you more." Singular as it may seem, there were no evidences of serious injury at first. There were no bones broken and no flesh mutilated. When found, Chapman stood a few feet from his car, lantern in hand and told a workman, "I slipped while making that coupling and I guess I am done for." At Nichols' hospital he became unconscious and died within a few hours.

Geo. C. Dunbar writes from New Hampshire: "as the old year has almost expired for which my subscription was paid to, I am now sending you one dollar for a renewal. It is the only paper that I take that comes regularly. I wish to thank you for it. I do not know as there is any particular part in the paper I like any more than others, unless it is Brother Tuttle's answers to questions. The paper from start to finish is brim full of good things, and I do not see how you can do it for any such price. You are doing a noble work, and God bless you."

Georgia Gladys Cooley will lecture for the Psychical Research Society of Rockford, Ill., May 7, 9, 12, 14; also at Genoa, Ill., Wednesday evening, May 10.

Maggie Henry writes: "On Sunday, April 30, at the Universal Occult Society, as usual we had a very interesting meeting. In place of the lecture, our speaker, F. M. Stoller, or rather his guides, answered philosophical questions asked by those in the audience seeking light and knowledge pertaining to Spiritualism and spirit return and how to unfold the powers that are within each and every one of us. Many interesting questions were asked and very instructive answers were given Our audience through not very large, was intellectual. Strangers are especially invited to attend our meetings. Many psychometric readings were given by the Professor at the close of speaking."

The will of the late J. T. Crumbaugh, a rich banker of Leroy, Ill., provides for an endowment of $200,000 for a church for Spiritualism in that village. It also makes provision for a free library for the village, with an endowment of $50,000. The will was probated May 6. Mr. Crumbaugh died at the age of 87, leaving no children. Five brothers and sisters are given $1,000 each and his wife is left a nominal sum, but the great bulk of the estate, which may aggregate $300,000, will go to Spiritualism and to carry on a school in the interest of this belief.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Mrs. Dr. Caird, the well known medium, is visiting friends in Akron and Toledo, Ohio, during this month. She will visit Chicago about June 1, and will be pleased to meet old friends there.

Spiritualist Mass-Meeting.

A union meeting of the Spiritualists of Massachusetts was held in Cadet Hall, Friday, May 5, under the auspices of the Lynn Spiritualists Association. Large delegations were present from nearly every organized society in the state, and were entertained by the Lynn society.

The afternoon meeting was opened with an invocation by Mrs. Dr. Chase, after which President Alex Caird, who was in charge of the exercises throughout the day, stated the object of the meeting to be to try to devise some plan whereby the societies of this state may be formed into some kind of an organization, under which more and better work for the cause may be accomplished than under the existing conditions.

It seemed to be the unanimous opinion of the delegates present, that it was desirable to form an organization composed of the chartered societies of this state, to work under the same rules as prevail in some of the western states at the present time, its business being conducted by delegates from the societies connected with it. Dr. Caird was appointed chairman of a committee of five to formulate and put into operation some plan towards bringing about the desired result. Among those who took part in the discussion following President Caird's address, were Mr. I. F. Symonds and Mrs. Minnie M. Soule of the Banner of Light, Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, Mrs. Byrnes, Mr. Fuller, Mrs. Pye, Mrs. Belcher, Mr. Wells, Dr. Hale, Mrs. Pettengill, Mrs. Cunningham, Mrs. Scott and others. About 200 were served with supper, which was followed by a concert with Miss Alison Low, Miss Eva Manning, Miss Gertrude Chesley, Mr. James Singer, Master Joseph Cuffe and Master Charles Popp, vocal soloists; H. C. Chase, pianist; W. H. Atherly, cornetist, A. E. Meader, dramatic reader. Mrs. Soule opened the evening service with an invocation, followed by messages. Address by Mrs. A. J. Pettengill, and messages by Mrs. S. C. Cunningham. At nine o'clock, which is Psychic Circle hour, a short time was devoted to silent thought concentration, thus bringing to a close the most successful meeting of its kind ever held in massachusetts. A. A. AVERILL.

Lynn, Mass.

MOTHER.

Some Beautiful Words of That Sacred name.

The word mother is the most sacred of all names, and motherhood is the closest of all human ties. Oh, Mother! when you nestle your little one to your loving breast and look into the eyes that reflect the mother-love shining from your own, do you not sometimes think with an involuntary shudder of the sorrow and grief it would be were the child to be taken from you? Or, still worse, if your tender care were removed from the helpless infant? While this thought is still with you, extend it to the bird-mother, for she surely has for her offspring the same tender love that you have for yours; she has the same affection, the same willingness to face danger to protect what is to all mothers dearer than life itself. Oh, human mother, will you again wear for a personal adornment a plume taken from the dead body of a bird-mother, the plume that is the emblem of her married life as the golden circlet is of your own, the plume that was taken from her bleeding body because her motherhood was so strong that she was willing to give up life itself rather than abandon her helpless infants! Whenever you are tempted in the future to wear a Heron's plume, think for a moment of your own motherhood, and spare the bird-mother and her little ones.—The Character Builder.

"The Present Age and Inner Life: Ancient and Modern Mysteries Classified and explained." By Andrew Jackson Davis. We have a few copies of this work by the celebrated seer. Cloth, $1.10.

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, May 14, 1905, S. E. 58: "Is Spiritualism True?

Gem of Thought:—

"As brothers, commune together and enjoy the serenity of a pure and noble life."—Wisdom of the Ages.

For information concerning The Progressive Lyceum, authorized lesson sheet of the National Spiritualists Association, address John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

REVIEW OF PASSING EVENTS.

The Dean of Westminster Tells How The Bible Was Written.

The Dean gave a sermon, for the purpose, he says, "of suggesting some thoughts in regard to the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, which may possibly be helpful to two classes of minds, which are alike perplexed by the conflict between modern knowledge and traditional views of the Bible." One of these classes is the scientists, the other those who have unquestionably received the book as infallible inspiration. "It is no ordinary task," he says, "the preacher has before him to reconcile the apparent conflictions," in which statement no one will disagree with him. He says: "The Book has not changed. We have changed. Much new light has been given to us by God in regard to our own constitution and the constitution of the world in which we live; and in this new light, which is shining all around us, and which comes to all of us at least in scattered rays here and there, we read the Bible differently. Our whole conception of the method of its inspiration has been altered. A great deal which our forefathers took literally we can not take literally to-day. The first chapter of Genesis no longer means to us that the world was made in six days. The second chapter of Genesis no longer means to us that God molded clay into a human figure and breathed upon it, or that he took a rib from Adam and made Eve. These are allegories or parables to us, but they still proclaim their original spiritual lessons. All this is untouched by modern discovery; it is the underlying spiritual truth, taught in the form of what was at first literally believed, but for us, is a parable. And so, again, we believe that God made man out of dust, not by molding clay, but through a long process of development which followed a course which he had marked out, and in every step of which he was working his will."

Here is the vital issue which the Dean seems to ignore, and evades by befogging the subject. The Bible has been claimed to be an infallible guide, given by God to mankind, because man is a fallen being and by his own powers cannot arrive at moral truth. If it is not such a guide, it is valueless. If for its understanding, two thousand years had to pass, and man by other means advanced to its interpretation, and thereby prove that all those who read it previously were in error, of what greater value is truth thus discovered, because afterwards found in the Bible? If the story of the creation and fall, "are allegories and parables," and as revealed by science—not by the Bible—"God made man * * through a long process of development," what becomes of the Christian scheme of salvation? This was built on these "allegories." The fall of man taught by Christians made the salvation through Christ necessary. Had the allegories not been received at literal, there would have been no Christian plan of redemption, for it would not have been demanded.

The Dean does not see the dilemma in which he places himself, and to make his meaning plain returns near the close of his sermon to reaffirm his position even more positively:

"For example, what man of sense will think that there was a first and second and third day, evening and morning, without any sun, moon or stars? And who would be so silly as to imagine that God, after the fashion of a human gardener, had planted a garden in Eden toward the East, and set in it a tree of life, that could be seen and felt, so that one who ate of its fruit with his bodily teeth should acquire life; and again, that one should partake of good and evil by eating what he took from a tree of such a character?"

True, no "man of sense," will believe this childish cosmogony, yet this same chapter of "allegories," forms the foundation of the Dean's theology. Take this away—prove that man never fell and what is the need of the Dean and the host of preachers, laboring to save souls—never lost?

According to him, the progress of mankind has been by means outside of the Bible. Man could not understand the Bible until "developed" by knowledge. Thus "developed," he finds that the Bible has been misunderstood. On its "allegories" and "parables," a system of religion has been reared, and for 2,000 years, preferment and honors in this life, and happiness in the next, made to depend on its acceptance. What countless martyrs have died in vain torture, by those who have made this world a hell, to gain God's favor in the next!

After thus giving a knock-out blow in the solar-plexus of his faith, the childish innocence of his conclusion is a charming example of his bewilderment.

We have not lost our faith. We move fearlessly forward toward the growing light of a larger day; confident that the Bible will always prove its own inherent power; that its further study will reveal its deeper truths; that as the human element in its composition is more clearly ascertained its divine element will be more intelligibly recognized; remembering always that it claims an authority over the human spirit such as no other book can claim, and that by our use of it, or our neglect of it, we shall be judged in the day when God calls us to our account.

Of what authority is the Bible over the human spirit, if that spirit must first gain knowledge elsewhere for its understanding, and has the granted right to throw out whole chapters, and interpret it at its pleasure?

The highest authority in the Anglican church has attempted to hedge against the issue which has already come, and unconscious that he has surrendered the citadel to the enemy, he bravely declares "We have not lost our faith. We move fearlessly forward," as a boy whistles on a long road to keep his courage up, and prevent himself yielding to the goblins of panic and starting on a break-neck run.

HUDSON TUTTLE,
Editor-at-Large N. S. A.

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

A Prominent Medium Passed to Spirit Life.

Mrs. Emily Coverdale entered into rest at 4312 Langley avenue in the early morning of Wednesday, May 3, 1905, after many months of illness for whose outcome only a fatal termination was possible. She was born in Quebec, Canada, October 15, 1830, the daughter and only child of Mr. and Mrs. Reed. After her marriage to Reuben Coverdale their home was Milwaukee, Wis., for twenty years; then Clinton, Ill., for seventeen years, whence they removed to Chicago in 1882. Her husband preceded her to the land of souls in 1893, and with six of the children of their union awaited her coming. Albert L. Coverdale and Mrs. Lily Vance of Chicago, and Harry Coverdale of Los Angeles, together with eight grandchildren, are the surviving members of her immediate family.

Her personal interest in Spiritualism centered in the mental and inspirational manifestations rather than in the physical phases, but she was tolerant of all she believed to be genuine. During thirty-five years of her life she gave private readings in an unpretentious way, having a large circle of personal admirers, and through her organism counsel and comfort was divinely sent to unnumbered human hearts. She gave generously for one of her means to strangers and friends, while she carried to great degree the sorrows, misfortunes and financial burdens of her own flesh and blood. Her life was a daily sacrifice for others. Her going adds another one to the list of Chicago's faithful mediums who have been mustered out from mortal duties and serves to recall to local workers the names of Mrs. Pirnie, Mrs. Warne, Mrs. Dobson, Mrs. Cutter and other translated ones. The funeral address was given by Dr. Warne, president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, on Thursday afternoon. The music was directed by Mrs. Isa Cleveland and Miss Goldie McCoy. Mrs. Rushmore contributed original and fitting lines to the memory of her friend of thirty years' acquaintance, while the peaceful sleeper rested amid a wealth of floral offerings truly typical of the beauty of the life just ended on the mortal plane. Burial followed at Oakwoods Cemetery just as nature was mingling with the dew of human eyes the tear drops of a passing shower. We have lost a mother in Israel from the ranks of Spiritualism.

A Friendly Criticism of the Spiritualist League.

To the Editor:—When the Chicago Spiritualist League was organized last year the inference was given out that the league was to be a sort of bureau or clearing house, as it were; a place or gathering where discussion and exchange of ideas for the best furtherance of the cause of Spiritualism, and elimination of tricksters and frauds from the ranks. This program was at first, in a measure at least, carried out or adherred to, and did, I believe, do a great deal of good, especially in frightening the fraudulent and immoral tricksters pretending to be Spiritualists, as a cloak for fraud.

I am an earnest inevestigator, and have attended the league meetings quite regularly, and found them very interesting when debating was allowed; but now the meetings have settled down to an ordinary test meeting, with so many mediums on the programme that no one is allowed time enough to do justice to themselves and the cause.

At the last league meeting there were so many mediums (6) on the program that the speaker for the evening was so limited in time that he was not permitted to give the full discourse, being obliged, as he said, to leave out many of her personal experiences along the line of obsession, Dr. Wickland and wife, having, as he stated, devoted many years of study and research to this work. As I followed with much interest the discussions in the Open Court, on Obsession, I was very disappointed that the speaker could not be allowed sufficient time to give his interesting experiences.

From what I have heard of the work being done by Dr. Wickland and his wife in advancing the truth and philosophy of Spiritualism, I believe that if we had more of such workers the time would soon arrive when we would no longer need to blush at being called Spiritualists, as, sad to say, is now often the case.

It seems a pity that there is no place where free discussion and debating is encouraged, where we could bring our friends for instruction, and where we all could come together to learn, each from the others' experience. We certainly all feel the need of more knowledge regarding our duties and responsibilities as truth seekers. Tests we can get at any Sunday meeting.

As the league is now run, it appeals to a stranger more as an advertising bureau for mediums, the way they are pestered with card peddlers on leaving the hall. I have had many so-called tests at various meetings but few that I have been able to recognize.

What would the earnest investigators do without the priceless Progressive Thinker, with its many gems of truth?

Wishing you continued prosperity in your good work, sincerely,

JANE STEFFENSON.

A NOBLE NAME.

Through the years of toil and change,
Through sunshine, joys and tears,
My path has reached God's open range
That leads to brighter spheres.

The struggle for wealth and fame,
For sordid greed and gold,
With a worldly aim to win a name,
For the toilsome days of old.

I've come at last to truly see
There is a wiser, better way;
To feel my heart-throbs once more free
Under love's gentle sway.

I will gather up the threads of Truth,
And weave them a golden strand,
Like my rosy youth, so full of ruth,
The morning breezes fanned.

Stainless and pure are the roses fair,
Empearled in the morning's dew,
Like children's faces free from care,
Reflecting God's heavenly blue.

O beautiful days of the long ago,
O summer days that gleam and shine,
How fondly dear, but we loved them so,
Now held in memory's shrine.

Nor wealth, nor power, nor gain,
Nor aught the world can know,
Can compare with the gift of a noble name,
That love can alone bestow.

BISHOP A. BEALS.

Summerland, Cal.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth, $1.

OUR TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Am Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

And lastly, our latest premium book "Letters From the Spirit World," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea.

All these TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.75 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family,—an achievement only accomplished by the Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

THE CO-RO-NA MEDICATOR

MAILED ON FIVE DAY'S TRIAL

FREE

Cures Catarrh, Head Colds, Headache, Partial Deafness and immediately relieves Hay Fever and Asthma.

Never take medicine in the stomach to kill germs of Catarrh in the head. Nothing but air can reach their hiding places, and the Co-ro-na kill them on the spot.

SPECIAL OFFER.

For a short time I will mail my new Co-ro-na Medicator with medicine for one year's treatment to any person naming The Progressive Thinker on five day's trial free. If it gives you perfect satisfaction, send me $1 (half price), if not, return it at the expired time which will only cost you 3 cents postage and you will not owe me a penny, or if you enclose $1, I will include free for the asking, 30 days' treatment of my Australian Life Tablets for Rheumatism and Kidney trouble.

They destroy the Uric Acid poison in the plasma of the blood.

Address, E. J. WORST,
8 Elmore Blk., ASHLAND, OHIO.

Building of Vital Power

Deep Breathing and a Complete System for Strengthening the Heart, Lungs, Stomach, and all the Great Vital Organs. Profusely Illustrated.

Every man, woman and child needs great vitality, for that means strong internal organs. It means the possession of that strength which is absolutely essential to the acquirement and retainment of superb health. This book tells you how to increase the vital powers of all the important organs. It is plain and concise. If you care not specially for muscles, but want to feel at all times exhilarated with superabundant health, secure this book and follow the plain directions contained therein.

Bernarr Macfadden, editor of Physical Culture, is the author. Price $1.10 postpaid.

OUR NEW

Physical Culture Cook Book

Preface and first chapters by Bernarr Macfadden. The remaining chapters compiled under Mr. Macfadden's direction. Bill of fare for one week of foods.

No one can afford to be without this book. Any one who tries some of the special recipes will discover that proper preparation increases the palatability of food. Learn how and what to cook in order to build and retain the highest degree of normal health by following the recipes of this cook book.

This is not a strictly vegetarian cook book. Bound in cloth. Postpaid $1.

WHAT SHALL WE EAT?

The Food Question from the Standpoint of Health, Strength and Economy.

Containing numerous tables, showing the constituent elements of over three hundred food products and their relations, cost and nutritious values, time of digestion, etc., indicating best foods for all classes and conditions. By Alfred Andrews. 120 pp. Price, leatherette, 50 cents; cloth binding, 75 cents.

To many people there is no question of greater importance than the one asked in the title of this book, and no more satisfactory effort to answer it has been made than is to be found between the covers of this practical volume. It opens with a consideration of the purposes for which we eat, and how food material is converted to our needs, and is used in sustaining life.

A very important feature of the work is found in the numerous tables given, showing the results of some 1,500 analyses of food products to determine the constituent elements, comparative food values, time required for digestion, etc.

"The Attainment of Womaly Beauty of Form and Features. The Cultivation of Personal Beauty, Based on Hygiene and Health Culture. By twenty physicians and specialists. Edited by Albert Turner." Of especial interest and value. Price $1.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

A. M.: Q. What is meant by the "Word?"

A. Perhaps no one theme suggested by the Bible has been more wrangled over than the "Word," the "Logos," and this has been understood to mean the word of God, or the Bible. This interpretation came from a want of knowledge of the antecedents of the term and its meaning. When language began to be written, first by signs, pictures, and monograms, and afterwards brief sentences, because the priests, who alone held the secret, could read them, the masses thought these scripts had life, a soul of their own, and as potent for good or evil, as the beings they represented. The name and the being were confounded, and the knowledge which enabled a person to write or speak the name was believed to confer power to invoke the God it represented, and to dictate what he should or should not do.

Among almost all savage people, it is sacrilege to speak the name of chiefs, for they fear an evil influence will be thereby gained. For if man can control the gods by knowing their names, the evil gods could make endless trouble if they knew the names of men. In some tribes this belief is so dominant, that when a chief dies, not only is his name never spoken, but every word suggestive in the language is also dropped, and hence such deaths produce a radical change in the dialect.

The Jews were devout believers in the "incommunicable name of God." The Christians had their Christogram, I. H. S., letters with divine meaning. Older yet, the Egyptian Book of the Dead, is filled with brief sentences used in incantation to evoke the gods and compel them to serve the master who held the key-word. All the necromancy, magic, etc., is founded on this belief that by a combination of words pronounced with certain tone and inflection the gods may be controlled. The lingering remnant is seen in the passwords and secret societies. Having the word the door of the lodge room opens, as having the greater word opens the gate of power and of heaven. The gods are obedient to him who has the word, for the word is stronger than they. The name of Christ, a text or the whole Bible exorcised the devil. A text from the Koran, as a word written on paper or engraved on a gem, is a talisman, driving away evil influences and warding off danger.

Starting from this misconception of ignorance the myths of the "word," the "Logos," grew until the beginning was lost sight of, completely covered over with speculations. The "Divine Word" became the second person of the trinity. This was differently interpreted as the divine Reason remaining in the the bosom of the father, and as the same sent forth to the world. The latter was platonic, the former theological. The discussion of the subject is not clear, and the matter remained in a fog, for no mind unravel its profound mysteries, for no one traced the idea backward to its origin.

Philo, a Jewish philosopher of Alexandria (A. D. 40) with the attenuation of thought which covers its imbecility with distinctions, made two forms of the Logos, that which was inherent in God, and that which emanates from God. St. John states the doctrine that this Logos was personified in Jesus Christ through whom the father assumed human form, and gave salvation to the world. As the written word reveals thought, so Christ the embodied word revealed the Father.

There has been endless discussion on this subject, and a great number of volumes written, which are among the least read and most befogged of theological literature.

As interpreted by theologians, the cryptogram which Lord Bacon is supposed to have inwrought into Shakspeare's writings, is a transparency in comparison. From the sacredness attached to a talismanc word, or the initial letters cut on an amulet, it was easy to take all that was supposed to have been written by God, as holy and sacred, and call it the Word of God. To this volume the old belief was transferred, of its inviolable honor. It was the revelation of the Divine Logos to Man, and as such must be infallible.

It is thus seen how the seeds planted by ignorance grew, and when some degree of learning was brought to the discussion it was subsidized by prevailing ideas and not allowed to go back to the time when the word was regarded as a personality with an active spirit. Hence the more these theologians discussed, the wider they were from the truth.

J. C. N. A.: Q. Paul, A. J. Davis, Swedenborg, and others talk of leaving their bodies and visiting distant localities. We have a story of a party of spiritual scientists visiting Mars, accomplishing the journey in a few hours. Is it possible for a spirit to leave the mortal body and return to it again?

A. The spirit in profound trance acts almost independent of the physical body, but it never entirely leaves it. The connection has been compared to a "Silver Cord," which when severed, is death, and there can be, under no circumstances a return of the spirit. I have not understood Mr. Davis as absolutely holding to this statement. The slightest knowledge of spiritual laws will show that a spirit cannot revive a dead body. The independence of the spirit in clairvoyance or trance leads to the inference that it has escaped physical fetters, just as it readily accepts purely subjective impressions for objective realities, and believes when the images of localities are impressed that it has visited them.

As for the "journey to Mars," it will not bear criticism. The "spiritual scientists" saw that some sensational astronomers have dreamed, and a greater share of what it is said they saw, would be impossible to materialize on that planet. If Mars is inhabited, it must be by living beings quite different from those on this earth. The length of seasons, the extreme vicissitudes, the difference in gravity, the tenuity of the atmosphere, would prevent a being like man from living there. If these "spiritual travelers tell the truth, then astronomers know nothing about the physical condition of the planets.

A great deal of attention has been of late given to Mars, and wildest speculations as to the condition of its surface, inhabitants, etc., widely published, and those calling themselves astronomers have advertised themselves by giving to the press the most startling.

When it is considered that by the highest power of the telscope yet made, the "moons" of Mars, which are six and seven miles in diameter, appear only as points of light, difficult to see under the most favorable circumstances, the folly of asserting that works of art may be seen, is apparent.

When Mars and the Earth happen to be on the same side of the sun at the nearest point they approach within 35,000,000 miles to nearly twice that number, but when on opposite sides of the sun they may be more than 240,000,000 miles distant. It takes this planet nearly two of our years to go around the sun, and to do this it has to move at an average velocity of over 550,000 miles a day. Suppose a company of "spiritual scientists" should mount a car after breakfast, intending to lunch at noon in a Marsian cafe, would they steer direct for the planet, or where it will be six hours later. As the speed of Mars is variable, this would be a fine mathematical problem.

Imagination is an entertaining faculty, but we should accept its dreams for what they are, and not for reality. It must be remembered that spiritual beings do not leave this quality of the mind with the body, but rather it is intensified, and they can romance with as startling headlines, as earthly writers.

STRANGE HAPPENINGS.

Ghosts Revive This Family Intended Dinner.—Also Burn Servant Without Use of Fire and Topple Bottles Off Cupboard's High Shelf.

A strange story of a bewitched farmhouse comes from Binbrook, a village on the Lincolnshire wolds, England. The house, which is known as the Walk farm, is tenanted by a famous Lincolnshire ram breeder, William Drakes, and is occupied by his foreman, a man named White. The foreman and his wife, according to a correspondent of the Sheffield Telegraph, tell weird tales—of a dead hare which detached itself from a hook outside the house, ran about, and went back to the hook again; of plants in pots on the window sill which mysteriously tilt on one side and then resume their former position, and of brooms which came dancing across the middle of the floor while the family were at dinner.

No Fire; She Burns.

Then one day the clothes of the servant started to burn, although she positively affirmed that she was nowhere near a fire at the time. The girl was so severely injured that she had to receive medical attention. The "witch," in whose existence the neighbors are firmly convinced, is said to have commenced her visitations by breaking the legs of a number of fowls at different times.

Mr. White has given correspondents an account of the most recent extraordinary occurrences. His story was corroborated by his wife, children, mother, and servants. When Mrs. White saw bottles toppling over one by one and falling from a shelf to break on the tiled floor she called her husband and servants, and they also watched the completion of the astonishing spectacle.

Shove Bottles Off Shelves.

Two dozen bottles leisurely went to destruction in this way. Some of them contained paint and others oil. In the dairy three strings of home-made sausages were hung on a line, but refused to remain there and after being hung for the third time they fell and broke in small pieces. A dozen large dinner plates moved from a high shelf and were deposited in a large earthenware dish. A dish of milk set for cream overturned, and a large pot of cream ready for the churn performed a similar feat. When the family were having tea, water poured into the kitchen from under the storehouse door until the floor was completely flooded. Investigation showed that a large flat-bottomed tub had emptied itself. Offers to "lay the witch" have been received from all over the country, and Mr. White has accepted that of John Dunn of Grimsby.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

HIS MOTHER'S FACE.

It Frequently Appeared Before Him.

A convert at one of Dr. Torrey's meetings was a young American who is a ship's steward, and has been a sailor for fourteen years. He had been attending the meetings for fully ten days, and worker after worker had dealt with him, but to no avail. Finally on Saturday night, as they were singing "Tell Mother I'll Be There," he broke down and confessed Christ. When speaking of his decision the following day he said: "You will scarcely believe me when I tell you how frequently my mother's face appears before me while at sea, although I only remember her as seen in a photograph, for she died when I was seven months old. When they sang 'Tell Mother I'll Be There,' it broke me all up, and I yielded myself to God, and now I am trusting him to keep me." He expects to shortly sail for South America.—Evening Express, Cardiff, Wales.

"The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms and Ceremonies for the Use of Liberals." Price 25 cents.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

A GLIMPSE OF SPIRIT LIFE.

And a Breath of Spirit Atmosphere.

When I was very young I found myself wondering about life, death and this great universe. Those old, old questions constantly recurring to my mind: "What are we here for?" and "After we die, What?"

I went to Sunday-school and heard about Heaven and Hell, but it all seemed vague to me, and I longed to know the truth, to solve for myself the great problem of life, "If a man die shall he live again?"

Lowell says, "Many loved Truth and lavished life's best oil, amid the dust of books to find her." And that is what I did. I read all the books that I could find that I thought would help me—the works of eminent philosophers and scientists, and the standard works on Spiritualism. But after all I seemed to lack something to fully satisfy me, for I was indeed a skeptic. And I said, "I wish God would give me a special revelation," and, dear readers, it came.

One day my hand was controlled by an invisible power, and I involuntarily became a writing medium.

My mother took my hand and wrote that she had never left me, but that she had always been near, guiding and helping me. She told me about the spirit world and her beautiful home.

I said, "Mother, tell me, have you ever seen Jesus?"

She replied, "No. He is far above me, but He sends his love down to me and to you."

My father also came and wrote beautiful words of love and cheer to my sister and me. He told us of his life and work in that beautiful land. He said he was more alive than when on earth in his old physical body; and that his spiritual body was just as real and tangible to him there as his material form was during his life on earth. He said he was studying the lessons of life with a great spiritual teacher, who lived in Texas when on earth. He said there were great colleges and institutions of learning in spirit life, and that all spirits were busy.

I said, "Pa, have you ever found any Hell, any lake of fire and brimstone?"

He answered, "No, I have been in spirit life a long time but have never seen nor heard of any such place. God loves his children and would not hurt a hair of their heads, but He does punish for sin." He said it was true that, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man, what God hath in store for us."

I was very sensitive to spirit influence and my mediumship developed rapidly, and in many different phases, and for a time I almost walked and talked with my dear friends. I could sense their conditions and feelings. When they spoke of love and their great happiness, a perfect flood of light and love would pour over me.

One day, I sat alone in my sitting-room, conscious of my friends around me, and then a strange sensation came over me, my physical senses seemed to close, and then I was standing in a beautiful place, and there right before me sat my mother, and by her side stood my baby, my little Herbert, looking so sweet in his little white dress; and at my left stood my dear old father, and I looked at them all and then down at myself, for I was indeed myself, in a real body, but not my physical one; and then I breathed in the glorious love atmosphere. Oh! It was so beautiful! it permeated my whole being, and my soul was filled, and I said, "O, mother, it is all love here!"

She smiled, and I said, "Mother, I know it is God's love."

Oh, if I could only describe it, but no, I never can. St. Pierre says, "The terms for describing nature are not yet invented," and so it is with this wonderful life to which we are all hurrying. Human language is inadequate, words are too weak and meaningless to describe its beauties. I can only say the atmosphere was full of life and love. But I said, "Mother, I must go back," and then my senses returned and I was once more in my little home on earth, and everything seemed dark and cold and crude.

O, I don't need to read any more to find Truth. Those sweet moments with my dear ones, and those soul-thrilling glimpses of spirit life have taught me more than all the books I ever read.

In one of my conversations with my father I said, "Have you ever seen God?" and he replied, "No, He is only felt in Nature;" and when I stood there in that beautiful place, breathing that glorious atmosphere, my father's meaning was all very clear to me; I did not see God, but I felt His Infinite Presence, and I can understand Paul when he said:

"O, death, where is thy sting? O, grave, where is thy victory?"

If everyone could know God's great love he would never more sin, and then "When the perfect man is come
Earth and Heaven shall be his home;
In alternate periods he
In them both shall seem and be.
Heaven by night and earth by day
Shall behold his wonder-way."

EMMA GLOVER BROOKS.

"Don't Do It."

It was a great pleasure to read your "Don't Do It," in the editorial, where you call attention to I. Cor. 7:36.

Fourteen years ago, when I began investigating the phenomena of Spiritualism, the bible was a great help to me in discovering the motive for the manifestation, and I marked many of its passages, among which being I. Cor., 7:36 to 39. Afterward I was visiting my father, who, while not a church member, was a believer in the orthodox rendition of the bible, and of course, thought I was going astray. I called his attention to the passages referred to—read them to him in fact—and he disputed they were in there. I handed him the book and he asked me where I got it? I told him it was one I had had ever since I was a school-girl. He told me he believed I had had one printed to order and would not accept the facts until he took down his own bible and found the passage referred to.

Perhaps when I say the bible was a great help to me in discovering the motive for the phenomena, I should explain.

I had experimented with phenomena enough to know that the knowledge and power possessed by those who have once been in mortal life were unlimited, so when I took up my bible again which I had lain aside as being of no more use to me—by the advice of a spirit relative—I soon had the key to all its mysteries and all its inconsistencies were easily accounted for.

But as I have touched upon the subject in a previous article to The Progressive Thinker, perhaps it is not necessary to refer further to the subject now, lest I make repetitions, though to accomplish the desired end one must account for the discrepancies in the bible on logical reasoning.

When people learn that what they suppose is inspiration from God is produced by our spirit friends, and that they are often giving us our own beliefs, and that it is not their purpose to tell us how much they know nor how much power over nature's forces they possess, then we can reconcile all inconsistencies.

MRS. A. B. COOPER.

Indianapolis, Ind.

THE SOUL OF THINGS.

An Analysis of an Important Question.

Here we find ourselves with an earthly body; within it is an active force. These bodies wear out and eventually moulder in the ground, and its material goes back to mingle with the material from which it sprung. Let us leave it there to see what becomes of the force that actuated intelligent motion while earth-life lasted. Experience and sufficient proof have established the fact that an indwelling or surrounding spirit or etherealized spirit body has been the instrument through which the above mentioned force was carried, which actuated the physical body. Call this spirit body the spirit, if you please, ought we not to have a name for that intelligent force that actuated said spirit? We may call it soul life force, eternal actinism, or any other name, to distinguish it from the etherealized spirit body (or spirit). The spirit body is but matter, and the intelligent force that actuates it must of necessity be of a still higher material.

Modern Spiritualism may not have taught us all of the wanderings of the ego of man, in one half century; and the spirit body may have to pass away similarly to our earth bodies, while the indwelling force passes on, clothed in still more etherealized form.

Experience and proof have also established the fact that as the spirit advances, its habiliments and general appearance changes in a similar manner, as either education or degradation changes the form and features of man on earth; but with all these minor changes the earthly form in time is laid aside, and so undoubtedly our spirit bodies will be; or, in other words, that a death of the spirit body, analogous to the physical body, is but a parallel action of everything in the universe, with the exception of the soul of things.

In the childhood of the world, and in our own childhood, all earthly things and beings were the only tangible things known; all beyond that was mystery. The philosophy and knowledge of certain ancient schools was either buried or confounded, and the word "witchery" marked on all things not taught within the pale of the schools and sanctuaries.

Intuition and the spirit of progress urged man into fields beyond prescribed forms. He stumbled often and was overtaken by disappointments, while at every stage the teachings instilled in the child's plastic brain of the "mysteries of godliness" would haunt like a ghost of the past, and bar further investigation for awhile. Eventually the spirit world that had linked hand with man, unknowingly to him, for ages, renewed its efforts, and the spirits were made manifest, their faces and forms seen, and their words sounded in many tongues, till the experience of thousands were related, and a literal understanding about the spirit and the spirit world was arrived at. The philosophies of old were brought to light and compared with the result of modern investigations. The world looked up toward the spiritual, which gave the spirit world the opportunity anxiously awaited for ages.

We find also a counterpart of soul existence in the vegetable matter. Its soul, essence, actinism, or whatever name it may bear, is never lost, though often manifested in different forms, according to its indwelling forces, climatic conditions and environments. Now if man as an individual ego has ever priorly existed, as he naturally must have, will our philosophers insist that he had exactly the same form, the same opportunities, and his aspirations and earlier environments admitted of present possibilities? The clothing or form is not the man! the spirit body is not an acting principle, but an instrument or vehicle like our own, through which to manifest. Now what will we name this central force? Will we name it spirit within spirit, or will we call it soul? Thus far only force has been mentioned, but behind every force there is a power that impels and compels all things into action. Dormancy to a considerable degree is the prevailing tendency of the lower strata, or of uncivilized man, but as intellect grows, his aspiration grows in an increasing ratio, until man becomes what the world terms wise; then, and not till then, does he actually see how much there is yet to learn.

It must be the very essence or soul within man which forces this aspiration, for the spirit body, which is but etherealized matter, is but like the cosmic dust of our planet, which diffuses and reflects the sun's rays and makes his light possible and bearable.

C. J. JOHNSON.

Pocatello, Idaho.

A SPIRIT APPEARS.

Subordinate Notified of Death by Ghostly Visitation.

Chester, Pa.—That there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamed of in his philosophy is the experience of Charles K. Melville, managing editor of the Morning Republican. Until recently he filled the chair of city editor of the morning paper, but during the illness of Victor H. Klett, the managing editor, he performed the duties of that desk.

After sending the last edition to press a morning or two ago he left for his home on Madison street, which he reached at 4 o'clock in the morning. Just as he was removing his clothes, preparatory to going to bed, a shadowy figure came before his eyes.

Thinking it but the vague creation of a weary brain he was about to turn out the gas light, when the figure of Mr. Klett appeared at the foot of the bed, lingered a moment, then vanished.

"Klett is dead," said Mr. Melville, as the specter disappeared.

When he reached the office at noon the next day Mr. Melville was not at all surprised to find a bulletin announcing the death of the late chief, with the further fact that he had passed away at 4 o'clock.

A few days before this incident William Moore, a young man, died at the Croser hospital. Just before he died he rose upon his bed. His face lighted with a smile, and, exclaiming, "Why, there's mother," he passed away. His mother died thirteen years ago.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.

THINKS FOR HIMSELF.

A Letter From an Old Spiritualist.

It did my soul good to see the article in The Progressive Thinker of December 17, contributed by that advanced thinker, A. H. Nicholas. I need not say it is a "stunner," and meets my approbation. I have made the same statements—when arguing with my Christian friends,—about the teachings of their bible, and their God, and when the paper came to hand I could not refrain from reading the article to them, to show that I was not the only fool or lunatic—from their standpoint—in the world. As long as I have the power of speech I will use it to the best of my ability to counterbalance the evil effects of the pernicious teachings of the Christian churches and Christian bible.

It will take five hundred years by the most advanced and liberal minds of the times to destroy the baneful influences that eighteen centuries of Christian rule have fastened upon the human intellect.

The whole number of The Progressive Thinker containing this article is bristling with diamond points of truth from advanced minds of the galaxy of your contributors, which cannot fail of finding lodgment in all students of the occult, who have been freed from the superstition and bigotry of old theology. This one number is worth more than a year's subscription of the paper, and so all along through the year, every month there is one number or more that flashes out diamond thoughts from the pens of advanced minds from all over the civilized world. You deserve and no doubt have, the best wishes and assistance from the advanced spirits over the divide, as well as the spirits in the mortal. How any one that pretends to be a Spiritualist can afford to be without The Progressive Thinker passes my comprehension. The amount of reading matter you spread before your readers each week cannot be digested in the short space of seven days (always enough left over for a lunch).

Mrs. Clara Watson's contributions are very fine, and I hope she may be induced to "put in her oar" very often. She speaks to the point and is not afraid to call things by their right names. No hypocrisy there. Many Spiritualists want to affix or prefix somo of the obsolete Christian doctrines, sayings or beliefs to Spiritualism, in order to make it more palatable to the taste of a few "milk-and water" Spiritualists, and curry favor with the bigots in the church.

I, for one, believe in asserting what we absolutely know to be a truth beyond the possibility of a doubt, in regard to spiritual communion. Others can satisfy themselves of the truth of it, if they will take the time and trouble to investigate.

I have been a Spiritualist for more than forty years. I never lose a chance to investigate or learn all I can in regard to spirit communion. I am nearing the seventy-fourth mile-post, and consequently have but a short time to stay on this side the divide—and I want to say right here, as long as I do stay, I want every number of The Progressive Thinker.

It seems Dr. Lyman Abbott stirred up a big hornet's nest in his criticism of the bible. What a bad fix to be in, to be declared outside the "pale of Christianity." But this is nothing to be compared to what our good pious Christian puritan forefathers inflicted on those who did not worship their God at Plymouth Rock, in 1625, and Boston, 1640—a free dance at the end of a rope, on thin air—a very effectual quietus to the culprits.

May you long be spared to batter the citadel of bigotry and superstition, is the wish of your friends on both sides of the divide. Yours for progression, humanity and Spiritualism.

O. M. AMBLER.

Stowe, Vermont.

M. F. Hammond Going to Mexico.

Brother Will J. Erwood, president of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association, took my place for the Progressive Spiritualist Church the last Sunday in April, speaking to large and enthusiastic audiences. He is always good. He was in this city last October, and again in March last, speaking on those occasions at the convention of the Indiana State Association. He has endeared himself to the Spiritualists here, as he does to all the people he meets. He is a most entertaining speaker, and the best of all, he has no use for fakes, and like all honest advocates of our cause, he would drive them from our ranks. He goes to St. Louis for a time to occupy the place of that other advocate of reform in our ranks, Brother Grimshaw, who is at present in England.

I finished my work in this city last Sunday, and will start on May 15 for Jalisco, State of Chiapas, Mexico, where all are Spiritualists, even to the Governor of the State, and President Diaz, the world-renowned president of the Mexican Republic. With the permission of the editor of The Progressive Thinker, I will send a letter occasionally to tell the state of our cause in that land where one can have all the fruits of the temperate and semi-temperate zones every day of the year.

My stay in Indianapolis has been very pleasing, and the Progressive Spiritualist Church is true to its name; its members are most hospitable, and I bespeak for the speaker who follows me, a home that will be such as is not found with all societies. I leave them without a speaker engaged, and would say that any speaker with open dates could most likely make engagements if they opened correspondence immediately, if they write to their most affable secretary, Mrs. O. S. Crane, 232 Sheldon street. But any speaker coming here must be progressive, and up-to-date, as the Spiritualists here have heard the best and can not listen to any other.

The grand old Progressive Thinker is taken by many, and often I hear the remark, "I can hardly wait from week to week to receive my Thinker."

M. F. HAMMOND.

Indianapolis, Ind.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

"Handy Electrical Dictionary." A practical handbook of reference, containing definitions of every used electrical term or phrase. Price $1.

"Death Defeated; or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young." By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D. Price $1. 10 cents.

BOOKS FOR ALL SPIRITUALISTS TO PERUSE.

The Aristocracy of Health. A Study of Physical Culture, and Our Favorite Poisons. A masterly work on the subject, by the gifted writer, Mrs. Mary Foote Henderson. Price, $1.50.

The Bible. New and Revised Edition. By John Remsburg. Price $1.25.

The Candle From Under the Bushel, or Thirteen Hundred and Six Questions to the Clergy. Nuts that are hard for them to crack. An interesting book. By Wm. Heart. Price 40 cents.

The Constitution of Man. By Elizabeth Towne. Price 50 cents.

The Crisis. By Thomas Paine. Price, 25 cents.

The Demonism of the Ages. Spirit Obsessions so Common in Spiritism, Oriental and Occidental Occultism. By Dr. J. M. Peebles. Cloth bound. Price $1; postage, 19 cents.

The Descent of Man. By Charles Darwin. Price, 75 cents.

The Development of Spirit—After Transition. The origin of religions, and their influence upon the mental development of the human race. By the late M. Faraday. Price 10 cents.

The Discovered Country. A very spiritual book, given through the mediumship of the late Carlyle Petersilea. Price $1.

The Divine Pedigree of Man, or the Testimony of Evolution and Psychology to the Fatherhood of God. By Dr. Thomson J. Hudson. Price $1.50.

The Dream Child. Reads like an inspiration. Treating clearly upon the laws of affinity, love and the attendant pain and sorrow invariably experienced therewith. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

The Fairy Land of Science. This beautiful book fills a niche in the hearts of the young people. Lyceum library literature. By Arabella B. Buckley. Price 50.

The God Idea of the Ancients, or Sex in Religion. A sensible, logical statement of opinion, but not of a revolutionary or sensational nature. A good book all through. By Eliza Burt Gamble. Price $2.25.

The Greatest Thing Ever Known. A dainty, helpful book. By Ralph Waldo Trine. Price 35 cents.

The Great Psychological Crime, which claims that subjective mediumship is injurious, is edited by Florence Huntley, author of "The Dream Child" and "Harmonies of Evolution." Price $2.

The Idea of God. By Dr. Paul Carus. Fourth edition. 32 pages. "An effort to purify our 'Idea of God' that it may be greater, sublimer, and more awe-inspiring to future generations than it has ever been yet."—Literary World, London. Paper cover, 15 cents.

The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism. A Menace to American Civilization. A trenchant and masterly treatise. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price, 25 cents.

The Kingship of Self-Control. Full of most helpful ideas, and bound in white covers with pretty floral design. By William George Jordan. Price 30 cents.

The Life of Jesus. By Ernest Renan. Translated from the original French. Price, cloth, gilt top, 75 cents.

The Life Radiant. For every one in every walk of life. By Lilian Whiting. Cloth binding. Price, $1.

The Living Decalogue. From Sinai to Zion. By W. J. Colville. Price 50 cents.

The Lover's World. A Wheel of Life. Treating on the subjects of love, marriage and parenthood. By Dr. Alice B. Stockham. "The Lover's World, garnered sheaves from the wisdom of books and life's experiences, is now returned to the heart of humanity." Price, silk cloth, $2.25.

The Majesty of Calmness. By William George Jordan. Price 30 cts.

The Missing Link of Modern Spiritualism. A most valuable book, giving a history of early Spiritualism. Written by Leah Fox Underhill of the Fox Sisters. Reduced to $1.

The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature. Demonstrates the continuity of life and our environment of spiritual influences. Free from all theories of superstition. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price 25 cents.

The Mystic Thesaurus. By W. F. Whitehead. Leatherette, Price, $1.

The New Life. By Leroy Berrier. Price 50 cents.

The Other Side of Death. Scientifically examined and carefully described by C. W. Leadbeater. Price, $1.50.

The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional. This is a most valuable book. It comes from an ex-priest, whose character is above reproach. By Father Chiniquy. Price $1.

The Prophets of Israel. Popular sketches from Old Testament History, than which no branch of science, in the last generation, has undergone a more profound revolution. By Carl Heinrich Cornell. Price 25c.

The Relations of Science to the Phenomena of Life. Ideas of life scientifically expressed in contradistinction from the old theories. By Spirit Professor M. Faraday. Price 10 cents.

The Relation Science Holds to Natural Philosophy. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price 15 cents.

The Romance of Jude. A story of the time of Christ, given through the mediumship of Mrs. Longley. Cloth bound. Price, 50 cents.

The Soul. Its Nature, Relations and Expression in the Human Embodiments. This is clearly a book on re-embodiment, or the principles of reincarnation. By the guides of Cora L. V. Richmond. Price $1.

The Soul of Things. These three volumes are among the most popular works ever written in explanation of the Spiritual philosophy. By William and Elizabeth M. F. Denton. Price $1.50 each; postage 15 cts.

The Soul's Song of Triumph. A prose poem by Harrison D. Barrett. Price 10 cents.

The Spiritual Alps, and How We Ascend Them. A few thoughts on "How to reach that altitude where spirit is supreme and all things are subject to it." By Moses Hull. Price, cloth, 40 cents; paper, 25 cents.

The Principles of Light and Color. Including The Harmonic Laws of the Universe, The Etherio Atomic Philosophy of Force, Chromo Chemistry, Chromo Therapeutics, and The General Philosophy of Fine Forces, Together with Numerous Discoveries and Practical Applications. Illustrated by more than two hundred engravings and four-colored plates. By E. D. Babbitt, M. D. Price $5.

The Spiritual Birth, or Death, and Its To-Morrow. The Spiritualistic idea of Death, heaven and hell. A logical statement, proven both by facts and the Bible. By Moses Hull. Price 10 cents.

The Religion of Spiritualism, Its Phenomena and Philosophy. This work was written by that noble modern savior and grand man—Rev. Samuel Watson. A marvelous work. Price $1.

The Spiritual Significance. By Lilian Whiting. This book is all that the name implies—a spiritual book. Price $1.

The Spiritual Wreath. A new collection of words and music for the choir, the congregation and the social circle. Containing 64 pages. By S. W. Tucker, author of many musical publications. Price 15 cents.

The Story Hour. For Children and Youth. A book of short stories, written expressly to interest and instruct the young. A good work for Lyceums. By Susan H. Wixon. Price $1.

The Sunday Question. A historical and critical review, with replies to an objector. Its motto: All time too sacred to do wrong; no time too sacred to do good. Price 15 cents.

The Talmud. Selections from the contents of that ancient book, its commentaries, teachings, poetry and legends. Also sketches of the men who made and commented upon it. By H. Polang. Price, cloth, $1.

The To-Morrow of Death, or the Future Life According to Science. Is just what it purports to be—what the title indicates—in every chapter. By Louis Figuier. Price, cloth, $1.50.

The Unknown. By the scientific writer, Camille Flammarion. Price, $2.

The Widow's Mite and Other Psychological Phenomena. A new book of 538 pages by I. K. Funk. A most remarkable and valuable book. Price $2.

The World Beautiful. Series One, Two and Three. Choice volumes of restful and educational reading, uniting the ideal and the real in this life. By Lillian Whiting. Price, each volume, $1.

The World's Sixteen Saviors, or Christianity Before Christ. A key to all the sacred mysteries of the present religions and their Oriental formation. By Kersey Graves. Price $1.50; postage 10 cents.

Three Journeys Around the World. By the renowned lecturer and traveler, Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price, $1.50.

Three Jubilee Lectures. By Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price 35 cents.

Thomas Paine's Examination of the Prophecies. A consideration of the passages in the New Testament, quoted from the Old and called Prophecies concerning Jesus Christ. Price, 15 cents.

Truths of Spiritualism. This book narrates many of the striking experiences of its author as a lecturer and test medium in the earlier days of Spiritualism. By E. V. Wilson. Price $1.

Twentieth Century Guide to Palmistry. By the Zanzigs. A good book for all those interested in this study. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 25c.

Two In One. A compendium of Biblical Spiritualism. A combination of "The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" into one volume. By Moses Hull. Price $1.

Uncooked Foods and How to Live on Them. By Mr and Mrs. Eugene Christian. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.

Unknown Life of Christ. By Nicholas Notovitch, the discoverer of the manuscript. Cloth. Price $1.

Vaccination a Curse. By Dr. J. M. Peebles. Treating on a subject of vital importance to every one. Price, $1.25.

Life in the Spirit Realms.

A Series of Letters From Spirit Carlyle Petersilea, Through the Mediumship of His Wife, Mrs. Amelia Petersilea.

Letter Number Eleven.

The earthly bodies of Carlyle Petersilea and Abby A. Judson were both cremated. Mrs. H. W. Hildreth writing to The Progressive Thinker, would like to know what Abby A. Judson now thinks of cremation, also, how it affects the spirit body?

Now, I want to be very confidential with the readers of The Progressive Thinker, and tell them every little thing just as it happens; and then they may judge for themselves whether there is any truth in my mediumship or not. I was sitting, sewing very busily, and not at the time thinking of spirits at all. In fact, I was thinking deeply of a person in the mortal form who was causing me a great deal of unhappiness, when, all at once, my darling husband's spirit came to me and said: "Put down your sewing, dear, I want to write." I immediately laid my sewing aside.

"Will you write," I asked sorrowfully, about the one who is causing me so much unhappiness?"

"No, no;" he replied. "Not about that; but I want to answer a question that a lady has asked through The Progressive Thinker."

"I would much rather you should answer my question," I said.

"No," he replied, "It will be better that I answer the lady's question."

I did not know what lady he referred to, so he compelled me to get a back number of The Progressive Thinker and look it up; and he said it was Mrs. Hildreth's question about cremation. She would like to know how cremation affects the spirit of the one who is cremated; also, if a spirit can gain anything from the material body it has left?

Abby Judson is not here at this present time, and it is Carlyle Petersilea who is now controlling his wife.

Mrs. Hildreth: My dear lady, my earthly body was cremated, as was also that of Abby A. Judson. After my spirit was out of my body, my material body was no more to me than a decayed tooth would be to you after it had been extracted. A badly smelling, decayed tooth, is rather a disgusting object, and should be either thrown away with other garbage, burned or buried; otherwise the diseased germs from it are liable to find their way to the sound teeth of others or the one from whom it has extracted.

The material body is constantly throwing off effete matter while the spirit still inhales it, and the farther we can get away from such matter the better. Nothing can be more abhorrent or disgusting. Filth and garbage of all kinds should be utterly destroyed by fire, and the human body, after the spirit has left it, is a mass of bloated, decaying filth. The spirit who has left it; after looking upon it once turns away in disgust, and never desires to look upon it again. When once the cord is broken that holds the spirit to the body, the spirit has no further use for that body.

To bury human bodies is very unCleanly, and most unhealthy to those who are still living within material bodies. All such bodies should be burned—that is, cremated—utterly destroyed by fire, and nothing is more delightful to the spirit than to know that such filth as it may have left behind in the form of a body is utterly purified and scattered by fire.

O, if we could but make you all understand that no one should ever cling to or feel the slightest affection for a dead body. Cremate it as soon as possible. Do not bury it.

Now I shall write to you of the feelings of my own dear wife; and no wife could have loved a husband more than she loved me, and as I hope still loves me.

She says to herself, and it is a great comfort to me also—"I do not have to think of my darling as being away off, buried up in the cold, damp ground. No; all there is left of his material body is here, sealed up in an urn. It is very small, not weighing over two or three pounds; and oh, how glad I am that all that is left of me materially has become pure and clean, and nothing left which can infect or poison any who are still inhabiting material bodies.

This is my answer to Mrs. Hildreth's question; and Abby Judson's would be the same. All spiritual beings who love purity and cleanliness would make the same reply.

Then, again, if all were cremated, no one would be buried alive as is sometimes the case. It would be far better for one who was in a trance to be burned alive than buried alive; but great precaution should always be taken that none could meet with either fate. Be sure that the spirits of your loved ones have really departed from the body before they are either buried or cremated.

* * * * * * * * *

There are some things that seem a little odd to me since coming to this life. All broken threads, or what appeared to be broken, are taken up here—as though in order to make a beautiful pattern some threads had to be dropped for awhile and then taken up once more to perfect the pattern. I have renewed, or taken up all my former acquaintances that were once upon the earthly plane. All our hopes and aims that were relinquished, as we thought, forever, are once more carried forward, now, with the certain knowledge that we shall bring them to pass.

On earth we all looked forward to old age and death, and one by one our aspirations and hopes dropped away from us. Here, old age and death are left forever behind and fright us no more. All that is required now is patience and perseverance.

How many on earth start out with high hopes and ambitions. One may meet them a few years afterward and find them dejected and unhappy. If one were to ask them why they were so, they would say that their hopes had all been blasted and their ambitions were dead. Mothers will weepingly tell of the death of their little ones. Fathers will dejectedly say their sons are no more on whom their hopes rested. Disconsolate widows stretch forth their arms and cry out for their departed husbands: "O, my husband! Where are you?—Oh, where?" And husbands sit lonely and dejected mourning for their wives.

Peace, be still! The threads will all be taken up again, even to the most casual acquaintance.

It seems strangely odd to me sometimes, and when we meet we talk of the old times on earth—and how we straighten out all our former misunderstandings.

My poor wife now sits sorrowfully, asking me some questions; and as all who have lost near and dear ones ask the same questions, I think it will not be amiss to answer her questions, for in answering hers at the same time, answers thousands upon thousands of other bereaved ones.

She says: "Dear Carlyle, if I have to remain on earth ten, fifteen, or even, perhaps, twenty years longer, how shall I ever be able to overtake you and be joined to you as formerly? I fear, my dear, that you will get so far ahead of me that I can never overtake you."

Now, my reply is this: "My dear wife, if I could thus selfishly leave you, and go on into glorious fields of happiness without you, I should not be worthy of your love. When those who truly love each other, and promise to be true to each other through time and eternity, marry and join themselves together for time and eternity, nothing can separate them; the union is of the spirit and soul, and the death of the material body cannot affect the spirit and soul union. No soul union can ever be severed. When those on the earthly plane marry simply for material consideration, not taking the spirit nor the soul into consideration at all, such an union may, and nearly always does, fall apart when one or the other departs the earth life. Perhaps the one left behind, on the earthly plane, in the course of a year or two marries again. Now if one could do so it is positive evidence that the first union was not of the soul, for if it had been, to marry another would be equivalent to polygamy.

And now permit me to tell the world, that there can be but one true union, and that union must be of the soul; and if such a union is not consummated on the earthly plane, it surely will be here in the realm of the soul.

My own dear wife and I are soulmated—we are counterparts of each other. Neither she nor I can possibly unite ourselves to others, no matter who may say to the contrary; and when I say this of ourselves, I say it to all others. Hand in hand we went while on the earthly plane; hand in hand we go together now. Soul responds to soul and spirit to spirit. I have not the slightest desire to leave my wife and go on into glory without her. Never, no never! It would be utterly impossible. The cord, or soul union between us, can never be broken. The heights of heaven would be the depths of hell to me without her.

But some of you may say: "How is it, professor, that you are running a spiritual conservatory of music?"

Well, I run an earthly conservatory of music; but that did not separate me from my wife; in fact, it was one thing that cemented our union. You must all understand that the husband and wife do not take the same positions, neither here nor on the earthly plane. While I managed a conservatory of music, she managed the home; and that is the way it will be here in the spirit world if we still desire to go on as before. At any rate, I shall still go on with my teaching, as I formerly did, and make my home with my wife until she lays aside her material form, then we may conclude to travel among the celestial worlds for awhile.

Now it is not my wife who is writing this message, but myself, and I know whereof I write.

Before I left my material body my wife and I talked of taking a trip around the world, and I was exceedingly pleased with the idea and fully intended to carry out our plan. Now, all I have to say is this, and I tell you truly:—I will carry out that plan with my wife as sure as that I exist, and every wish of her heart shall be fulfilled.

We may have to wait until she joins me here. Well, "learn to labor and to wait." If she waits, so must I. But we can still work together as one, just as we always did. Hand in hand we go. Since coming here I have learned that there is a great purpose to be subserved. She must remain on the earthly plane a while longer that I may continue my work through her; and, presently, the soul sun shall burst forth in all its glory.

I have given the lower world a truthful account of all my doings thus far, and now my spirit is growing very strong. Of course, like a new-born babe, I could not be very strong at first; but I have been here now nearly two years, and I am waxing very powerful, and am bringing a great many others to my aid. Many of you say that a spirit takes up its life just where it laid it down when on earth, and this is so, but it is one grand remove higher. Of course, all must see that this is so. A conservatory of music in the spheres must be one remove higher than one on earth, and so of all other things. I took up my life just where I laid it down on earth. I had a large conservatory of music, elocution, languages and art, and as soon as I regained my spiritual strength, after the dissolution from the material— I took up my life here just at that point. I joined my forces with my old partner, Dr. Eben Tourgee, and started in again, one remove higher—that is our conservatory is larger, grander, higher, more beautiful and perfect, and our energies, together with our music, the same. We are attracting thousands of our old friends to us, as well as the old masters who love to visit us.

(To be continued.)

A SUGGESTION

To Place Statues of Thomas Paine and Col. Robert G. Ingersoll in Public Places.

To the Editor:—Would it not be fitting and proper to make an organized effort to honor the memory of Thomas Paine and Robert G. Ingersoll, by placing a 14-foot bronze statue of them at the National Capital; also a statue of each of them at the capital of every state in the Union?

It seems to me an organization might be effected at Chicago or New York City for the purpose of taking up this grand work. After the statues are modeled and the casts are made, any number of statues can be cast at a very reasonable expense, not much more than the cost of the bronze and labor. Men and women should be selected for this work, who believe that every human being is entitled to perfect freedom and equal rights, with every other human being, free to read and think for themselves, on any and all subjects. The organization could select the right man or woman at the capital of every state in the Union, to solicit fund to place these statues as near as possible to the capital of that state. No doubt a large number of these statues could be sold to societies for public parks, and to adorn other public places, in all parts of the United States. If this plan could be carried out, I am sure it would be a wonderful inspiration to present and future generations to read the writings of those grand men.

WM. B. [illegible]

Mendota, Mo.

The Progressive Thinker.

A Paper that Never Falters, Never Pauses in Its Effort for the Greatest Good to the Cause of Spiritualism, Science, Morality, Higher Thought, and a Better Life. Never Lacking for Life and the Dissemination of Most Important Mind-Food.

Give Us the Truth, the Whole Truth, and Nothing but the Truth

Spiritualist Meetings.

It is important when a meeting is suspended, that notice be given us, so that inquirers may not be mislead. We want new notices of all meetings being held here in public halls at the present time.

First German Spiritualist Society on the West Side. Meetings every Sunday at 3 p. m. in Garselman's Hall, corner Ashland avenue and W. 13th street.

The North Star Spiritual Union holds services at Perl's Hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, every Sunday at 7:30 p. m. Mrs. Johanna Roennaw, test medium.

Central Spiritual Church holds services each Sunday afternoon at 2:30, at Fasking's hall, 30th and Archer avenue. Conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Howes.

The Light of Truth Church will hold services in Hopkins' Hall 528 W 63rd street, near Stewart avenue. Conference at 3 p. m. Lecture at 7:45. Messages at each service. Midweek meeting Thursday 3 p. m. Mrs. Jeffery Burland, pastor.

The Englewood Spiritual Union is now located at McDermott's Hall, 6603 South Halsted street. Meetings every Sunday evening at 7:30. Ladies' Auxiliary every Thursday afternoon at 2:30.

Chicago Spiritual Alliance Church, in Vincennes Hall, 35th and Cottage Grove avenue. Mrs. May Elmo, pastor, assisted by Hugh S. Fraser. All welcome. Services at 3 and 8 p. m.

Spiritual Church of All Souls, in Hope Hall, No. 220 Western avenue, between Jackson and Van Buren, Sunday evenings at 7:30, conducted by Mrs. R. Squire.

The Kenwood Spiritual Church will hold services every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at Kenwood Hall, Nos. 4308-10 Cottage Grove avenue. Good speakers and music. Mrs. Grace E. Aitken, pastor and test medium. Come and bring your friends.

The Progressive Society holds services every Sunday at 183 East North avenue, corner Burling, at 3 and 8 p. m. Good speakers, tests and messages at every session. Mrs. Hilbert, pastor.

The Church of the Psychic Forces holds services at Wilcox Hall, corner Champlain avenue and 43d street, every Sunday. Conference at 3 p. m. Lecture at 8 p. m. The hall number is 361-363 East 43d street. Conducted by Mrs. Isa Cleveland.

Church of the Spiritual Truth holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7:30 at 962 Milwaukee avenue, near North Paulina street. Mrs. J. DeLong, pastor.

Spiritual Science Society meets every Sunday from 2 to 10 p. m., at Arlington Hall, N. W. corner of 31st street and Indiana avenue. Admission to afternoon meetings, free; evening service, 15 cents. Mrs. Dixon and her daughter, the child wonder, will always be in attendance. Others will assist. These meetings will be continued all summer. Dr. Beverly, president, No. 44 East 31st street.

A Spiritualist Temple has been opened by Mrs. Schwann, at 523 Belmont avenue. Services held every Sunday and Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. Tests and music at every service.

The Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature will hold Sunday evening services at 1565 Milwaukee avenue, corner Western avenue. Mrs. M. Schumacher, pastor.

The Universal Occult Society meets every Sunday at America Hall, 77 East 31st street, at 3 and 8 p. m. R. Gilray, pastor. Evangelist F. M. Stoller will preside at all meetings during the absence of Brother Gilray.

Lake View Spiritual Union holds Sunday afternoon meetings at 3 p. m., at Wells Hall, No. 1629 North Clark street, corner Fletcher, conducted by Dr. and Mrs. Carl A. Wickland. All cordially invited. Residence 616 Wells street.

Church of the Soul, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, pastor, meets every Sunday in room 309 Masonic Temple. Service 11 a. m. Sunday-school 10 a. m. Superintendent of Sunday-school, Mrs. S. J. Ashton. Pastor's address, 3802 Ridge avenue, Rogers Park. Day at home, Friday.

Meetings every Sunday at 10:45 a. m. at hall 210, Masonic Temple, under the auspices of Walter DeVoe, the well-known lecturer. Miss Cora M. Nafe, soloist.

The Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission holds regular services every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at the People's Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt streets. The Rising Sun Lyceum meets at 2 p. m.

The German-English Society Bund der Wahrheit No. 18, holds services every Sunday evening at 7:30 in Brandt's Hall, 152 E. North avenue, between Halsted and Clybourn; and every Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock sharp, at the National, formerly Garfield Turner Hall. Mr. Frank Joseph, medium.

Church of the Soul Communion holds meetings every Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock and Sundays at 8 p. m., at 207 Lincoln avenue, between Garfield and Webster avenues. Lecture, messages and tests. R. S. Ray, pastor.

The Hyde Park Occult Society holds regular Sunday evening services, 7:45 o'clock, at 319 E. 55th street, between Kimbark and Monroe avenues. Jackson Park cars pass the door. The best talent available will be secured for all meetings. To spread the truth is the object of this society. Address all communications to Miss Eva L. Stewart, corresponding secretary, 543 E 55th street. Entrance to hall, 319 E. 55th street.

The Band of Harmony, auxiliary to the Church of the Soul, meets at Room 512 Masonic Temple, every first and third Thursday of the month. Afternoon session, 3 o'clock; evening session, 7:30. Everyone attending is requested to furnish refreshments for 6:15 supper. Coffee tickets 10 cents.

The Chicago Spiritualists' League holds its meetings the first Tuesday evening of each month, at Kimball Hall, 243 Wabash avenue. Dr. Geo. B. Warne, president; O. E. Kropp, 5481 Kimbark avenue, secretary. The League wishes every Spiritualist society of the city to send in the names of all their mediums, stating their particular phase of mediumship. Address all communications to the secretary.

The Spiritual Association of Sixty-ninth street and Wentworth avenue, meets every Sunday at Alberta Hall, 6922. Hon. D. Gilmour will address the meeting at 7:30 p. m. Conference at 2:30 p. m.

The Society of Spiritual Unity holds meetings every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue, under the direction of Mrs. Nellie Kusserow.

The Golden Rule Spiritualist Society will hold meetings every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at O'Donnell College Bldg., South Paulina street, between Washington Boulevard and Park avenue. All cordially invited.

Temple Light and Truth, 370 Wabansia avenue, near Robey street and North avenue. Sunday-school 10:30 a. m. Lectures and spirit messages given at 3 and 8 p. m., by Mrs. T. Loli, pastor, every Sunday, in German and English.

The Christian Occult Church, United Brotherhood Hall, 3245 State street. Every Sunday evening at 7:30. Test messages given by good mediums. Good speakers in attendance.

R. S. RAY. Psychic and Natural Clairvoyant Readings by mail, $1.00. 207 Lincoln ave., Chicago, Illinois.

READINGS BY MAIL:—Lock of hair, $1.00, and stamp. Mrs. R. Newman, 710 13th st., S. E., Washington, D. C.

Annie Lord Chamberlain's Card.

Dear friends, you can greatly help me care for my blind sister, Jennie L. Webb, one of the earliest mediums now in the form, by writing a letter to a spirit friend. Send it to me with $1, and I will try and get reply by independent writing or whispers. Address Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, Milford Mass.

Free Psychic Diagnosis.

J. A. Marvin, Psycho-Medical and Magnetic Healer, Sterling, Ill., cures asthma, bronchial troubles, goiter, paralysis, rheumatism, brain, spinal, stomach, liver, kidney and female troubles, where others have failed. For diagnosis send name, age, married or single, with lock of hair (no symptoms), and six cents in stamps.

TRUMPETS.

The infallible fibre trumpet is insulated top and bottom; shell, enamel, cardinal color finish, $1.50. Guaranteed, better than metal or any other material; very light in weight; absolutely tangible with spirit forces; warranted perfect or money refunded; cases with handles, $1.50. Booklet for all kinds of development, 12 cts, sent on receipt of price.

JAS. NEWTON, 423 Dorr St., Toledo, O.

PLEASE READ THIS.

If sick write me; I will give you a free examination and surely cure you. I cure when all others fail. Nervous exhaustion and lost vigor of both sexes successfully treated. Great success with diseases of children. Write in own handwriting, giving name, age, sex, weight, leading symptom, and five 2-cent stamps, and receive a correct diagnosis, worth dollars to you. For children send lock of hair.

FRANCES E. LOUCKS,
35 Warren St., Stoneham, Mass.

TO THE SICK.

I extend my Brotherly hand and earnestly request that each and every reader of this paper write for my Free BOOKLETS, on Cures by NATURE'S FORCES. I have cured thousands in all parts of the United States, and nearly every port and entry in the world. I have good news for 30 days only, to all sick people—whether rich or poor. Write me immediately as this opportunity may never come to you again.

Address DR. H. ROGERS, V. D.,
Union City, Mich., U. S. A.

FRED. P. EVANS,

The Noted Psychic for Independent Slate Writing and Clairvoyance,

Has recently left New York, and is now located at 1112 Eddy St., San Francisco, Cal. Send stamp for circular on Mediumship.

Vrilia Heights.

A Summer Resort,

On the NORTH SHORE OF GENEVA LAKE, for PROGRESSIVE PEOPLE. under the direction of DR. ALICE B. STOCKHAM, the well known author of TOKOLOGY and KAREZZA.

COURSES OF LECTURES

on Philosophy and Ideals are given. Recreation is also an attractive feature, that includes athletics, dancing, swimming, boating, games and sports.

ARTS AND CRAFTS,

Including clay modeling, photography, and tool work, under the direction of La Verne Francois Wheeler, gives practical advantages and joy to children of all ages. Terms, reasonable. For particulars address, A. B. STOCKHAM.
70 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

UNCOOKED FOODS

And How to Live on Them—With Recipes for Wholesome Preparation.

Proper combinations and menus, with the reason uncooked food is best for the promotion of health, strength and Vitality. By Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Christian. Illustrated.

The only complete work on the subject that has been published, and will do very much to solve the question of how to live for health, strength and happiness.

It will simplify methods of living—help to settle the servant question and the financial problems as well as point the way for many to perfect health. Price $1.

"Poems of Progress." By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily

"Mediumship and Its Development, and How to Mesmerize to Assist Development." By W. H. Bach. Especially useful to learners who seek to know and utilize the laws of mediumship and development, and avoid errors. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents.

"Voltaire's Romances." Translated from the French. With numerous illustrations. These lighter works of the brilliant Frenchman, an invincible enemy of the Catholic church, are worthy of wide reading. Wit, philosophy and romance are combined, with the skill of a master mind. Price $1.50.

"Wedding Chimes." By Delpha Pearl Hughes. A tasty, beautiful and appropriate wedding souvenir. Contains marriage ceremony, marriage certificate, etc., with choice matter in poetry and prose. Specially designed for the use of the Spiritualist and Liberal ministry. Price 75 cents.

"The Kingship of Self-Control." By Wm. George Jordan. It treats of the crimes of the tongue, the Red Tape duty, the supreme charity of the world, the revelation of reserve power, etc. Price 30 cents.

"An Infamous Dynamite Roman Catholic Conspiracy Detected and Exposed." "Romanism Exposed." Two pamphlets by Rev. J. G. White, author of Startling Facts. Price 10 cents each, or two for 15 cents.

ANDREW B. SPINNEY, M. D
Who has had
Forty Years' Experience in the Study and Practice of Medicine, Two Years Prof. in a Medical College, Ten Years IN SANITARIUM WORK,
and is a Natural Clairvoyant. He never fails in diagnosis. He has given special attention to eye, ear, throat and lung troubles, also all forms of nervous diseases of both sexes. Never fails to cure piles. If you would like an opinion of your case FREE, write just how you feel with your own hand and hold the letter in your hand five minutes. Enclose stamp for reply.
Address, ANDREW D. SPINNEY, M. D.
Prop. Reed City Sanitarium, Reed City, Mich.

DR. J. S. LOUCKS

Is one of the oldest and most successful Spiritual and Magnetic Physicians. His cures are marvelous; his examinations are free to all who send him name, age, sex, and lock of hair, and 6 cents in stamps. He doesn't ask for leading symptoms. He treats nervous exhaustion of both sexes with wonderful success, at reduced prices. A trial will convince you. His practice extends all over the land. He cures you in your own home.
Address, J. S. LOUCKS, M. D.,
Lock Box 1203 Stoneham, Mass.

Academy of Higher Sciences

And College of Fine Forces,

Teaches new and wonderful methods of cure. "Fast becoming of world-wide fame."—H. Tuttle Light, Color, Electricity, Magnetism, Mind, Baths. Its beautiful Diploma confers title, "D. M." Doctor of Magnetics: can be gained at College or at one's home. Books and instruments furnished. Send stamp for catalogue to
E. D. BABBITT, M. D.,
62 East Ave., Rochester, N. Y.

AN ASTONISHING OFFER

Send three two-cent stamps, lock of hair, age, name and the leading symptom, and your disease will be diagnosed free by spirit power.

Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker,

230 North Sixth St.
San Jose, Cal.

A Wonderful Spectacle. Restores Lost Vision. Write for Illustrated Circular showing styles and prices and photo of Spirit Yarma, who developed this Clairvoyant power in me. I can adjust my Melted Pebble Lens Spectacle as perfectly to your eyes at your own home and send by mail, as if you were in my office. Thousands will testify.
H. F. POOLE,
48 Evanston Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mr. Poole:—Your spectacles are perfect. I can say perfection. I shall recommend them to my friends. Ever your friend. E. B. Robertson, Los Angeles, Cal.

Mediumship and Adeptship.

To unfold your psychic powers is only a matter of science and science is only a matter of knowing how! My System of Development is an Eye-opener! It develops your in less time and at less cost than the unpopular incubator methods. No trances, no controls, unless you want them. No obsessions; all dangers removed.
Send stamped addressed envelope for my booklet, (25c. to be enclosed for psychic delineation), and reduced terms. Address 1285 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston, Mass.

Books of Mysteries and Revelations.

Clairvoyance. Cloth, 150 pages, by J. C. F. Grumbine. Teaches how to read the future, practice telepathy, penetrate the veil between the seen and the unseen, converse with spirits, know the mysteries. It is a revelation. The only practical book of its kind ever published. Lilian Whiting, Henry Wood, Mind, Light, all adepts endorse it. Price reduced from $2.00, $1.50.

Auras and Colors.—How to read the atmosphere of persons and understand the appearance of halos, auras and nimbus. Contains a color dictionary. Paper, price 50 cents.

Death and Afterwards, by an Adept. A profound study from actual facts of life beyond the grave. Cloth, price 75 cents.

Realization. How to become well, successful, prosperous. A wonderfully helpful book for beginners. Paper, price 10 cents.

Psychometry. Teaches how to get at the soul of things. Paper, price 50 cents.

The New Philosophy, luminously set forth so that anyone can realize God. Cloth, price 75 cents.

☞ Send $2.25 for a large crystal for crystal reading. Address J. C. F. Grumbine, 1285 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, Mass.

The Devil and the Adventists.

An Adventist attack upon Spiritualism repulsed. By Moses Hull. Price, 10 cents.

Force and Matter By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.

Series one, two and three. By Lilian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

THE LIFE RADIANT.

BY LILLIAN WHITING.—In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration. Price, cloth, $1.00.

A Very Interesting Book for Aff.

Philosophy of Spiritual Intercourse. This work contains a graphic account of the very wonderful spiritual developments at the house of Rev. Dr. Phelps, Stratford, Conn., and similar cases in all parts of the country. This volume is the first from the author directly upon the subject of Spiritualism, and has stood the test of many years. Cloth, 80c.; postage 10c.

AFTER HER DEATH.

The Story of a Summer. By Lilian Whiting. Pervaded with pure and beautiful spirituality of thought. Instructive and helpful to all who love and seek the higher and finer ways of spiritual experience. Price, $1.00.

What All the World's a-Seeking.

RALPH WALDO TRINE.

Each is building his world from within; thought is the builder; for thoughts are forces,—subtle, vital, irresistible, omnipotent,—and according as used do they bring power or impotence, peace or pain, success or failure.—From Title-page.

The above books are beautifully bound in gray-green raised cloth, stamped in deep old-green and gold, with gilt top. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

FROM INDIA TO THE PLANET MARS.

A MOST REMARKABLE WORK.

Fascinating, Interesting and Instructive.

By Th. Flournoy, Professor of Psychology in the University of Geneva. "This is an account of the experiments with the 'Geneva Medium,' Helene Smith. In her trances she lives the dual existence of an Indian princess and of an inhabitant of the planet Mars. Professor Flournoy and his fellow scientists have for more than five years experimented with these astounding physical phenomena."

This is a work of thrilling interest. It has excited great attention in this country and in Europe. Price $1.50.

LIST OF CAMP-MEETINGS.

Send in Your Dates and Name of Secretary at Once.

Interest in the various Spiritualist camp-meetings has commenced, and secretaries of the same should report at once to this office, so that proper announcement as to dates can be made.

MT. PLEASANT PARK, CLINTON, IA.

The twenty-third annual camp-meeting at Mt. Pleasant Park, opens July 30 and closes August 27. The very best talent has been secured for the season, and Opening Day promises to be a red letter day in the history of the camp. Programs and information given to all who write to Mrs. M. B. Anderson, secretary, Clarksville, Mo.

ONSET CAMP.

Onset camp commences its twenty-ninth annual meeting, July 23, and closes August 27. Onset is one of the most beautiful seashore resorts in the world, and is in close proximity to other noted summer resorts. It is connected by a bridge with Point Independence, and close at hand lies Monument Beach, and beyond Gray Gables, formerly the summer home of Ex-President Cleveland, and at the head of the bay is located "Crow's Nest," owned by Joseph Jefferson.

The water supply, introduced by the Onset Water Company from Sandy Lake, could not be purer or better.

No summer resort is better supplied with well-regulated hotels, with rooms and board at reasonable rates. Also rooms can be obtained at cottages, and meals at either hotels or restaurants in close proximity.

Letters addressed to the proprietors of the following hotels, Onset, Mass., will be promptly answered, giving full statement with regard to prices of rooms and board: Hotel Onset, Glen Cove Hotel, Glen Echo Hotel, Union Villa, Washburn House, Bullock's, Hotel Marcy, Highland House, and Mrs. Ronald's.

CHESTERFIELD, CAMP.

The official board met at Camp Chesterfield, April 9, to perfect arrangements for the coming camp session, beginning July 15 and ending August 27. The grounds are in fine condition and we want to make this the best camp ever held here. We have secured the very best talent and will have them well advertised. The programmes will be ready for distribution in a month. Mrs. Lydia Jessup, secretary, Anderson, Ind.

SUNAPEE LAKE CAMP, N. H.

Sunapee Lake Spiritualist Camp-meeting Association will hold its 28th annual meeting at Blodgett's Landing, N. H., commencing July 30 and closing August 27. We have a good list of speakers and test mediums. Address all letters to Thomas Burpee, Sutton, N. H., or the secretary, Lorenza Worthen, Hillsboro Br., N. H.

VICKSBURG, CAMP.

Vicksburg camp, Mich., opens July 30 and closes August 20. For full particulars address Mrs. Jeannette Fraser, Vicksburg, Mich.

MINERAL PARK CAMP, CAL.

The Spiritualists of Southern California have engaged Mineral Park, the camp grounds in the Arroyo Seco, just below Garvanza, for their annual camp-meeting, from June 25 to July 25. Many improvements are to be made at the park, and fourteen cottages will be erected. Mrs. Nettie Howell is the head of the executive committee. Address her for programmes.

NEW ERA CAMP-MEETING.

The New Era camp-meeting begins July 9, and continues over four Sundays. We will have with us during the meeting those grand workers, Harry J. Moore, Mrs. McCoy, Mrs. Ella Royal Williams, sure, and hope other good workers will also attend from all parts of the compass. We expect many of the lecturers and mediums from the coast (and we have many good ones) to attend during the meeting. Everybody come and help make this coming camp-meeting a grand and glorious one. The hotel will be under the management of the president, and everything possible will be done for the comfort and welfare of the guests. Camp ground is only 22 miles from the great Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland, Oregon. Address Rev. G. C. Love, president, 354 College street, Portland, Oregon.

UNITY CAMP, SAUGUS CENTRE, MASS.

The season's work at Unity Camp, Saugus Center, will open on Sunday, June 4 and continue every Sunday until the last of September. These meetings will be fully up to standard of former seasons, with many added improvements. One of the most important items is the fact that visitors can come direct from Boston to the camp without change of cars, which will be a decided improvement over the old method of changes and many times long waiting. Cars will leave Scollay Square every half hour, for Saugus, by way of Cliftondale.

There will be some slight changes in the time of services. The conference will be at 11 as usual, and all speakers and mediums are cordially invited to assist in this service and make it what its name implies, a conference.

The next service will be at 2, song service at 4:30, concert and entertainment at 5 and regular service at 6. By this programme those wishing to stay to the last service will have ample time to reach their homes in good season.

A strong effort will be made to have better car service to Lynn than in the past. The officials promise that as many extra cars as may be needed shall be furnished to accommodate visitors to the camp.

The concert and entertainment which will precede the evening service is an innovation which we think will be appreciated, being conducted on the same lines as those in Cadet Hall, Lynn, which are proving very popular.

Some of the finest talent procurable will assist at these concerts. A study of the program will convince you that the speakers engaged will be worth coming a long distance to hear. Gas will be introduced into the kitchen to be used for cooking purposes, and the seating capacity of the restaurant enlarged, so that all who wish to remain through the day will have no difficulty in being served well and promptly. All seekers for truth and pleasure combined are cordially invited to visit Unity Camp.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations, of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. A very remarkable book. Large, octavo, 500 pages. Price, $1.75.

MY EXPERIENCES.

Demonstrating Spiritualism to Be a Grand Truth.

My baby Ralph was born the 27th of May, 1894, and died at 6 p. m. He lived only 13 hours. On Tuesday, June 5, 1894, just after dinner he appeared to me.

On Thursday, July 11, 1895, at night about 8 o'clock, he came again, but this time he was in his coffin, and there was a light about him and the coffin at the side of the bed where I was lying down. Two days later I got word that one of my nieces had died. The first time Ralph appeared to me, two months later, I was taken so sick that my husband had to be sent for; he was away at work.

May 11, 1895, a very close friend of mine died. I have seen her three or four times since, in the same year that she died, but she always appeared in her coffin, just as she was when I last looked at her.

In May, 1902, it was a cloudy day and was raining. I was out doors wringing some clothes out of the water they had been soaking in. I was just a little way from the well box, when there appeared a bright light between the well box and me, and I raised my head to see whether the sun had come out or not, but no, it was just as cloudy as ever and raining, too.

On November 22, 1903, I went out to my father's to attend a prayer-meeting, and after it was over, I was standing just about a foot or two in the house, from the door, when there appeared nothing but the blue sky over my head, and I felt like I was lifted off of the floor.

On October 4, 1904 my baby Guy was born, and when he was three days old I heard a voice at the foot of my bed, where I was lying, telling me to name him Guy, and I so named him. That was on Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock. I wasn't afraid, but I had a happy feeling at the time.

On October 10, 1904, when Guy was six days old, on the ceiling there appeared a square hole with a light shining through it, and there appeared some red roses in the hole in the east side. I was awake. It was in the morning just after the children had gone to school, and the other two were outdoor playing. It was just west of my bed, and you must remember the ceiling is all lathed and there is no hole of any kind in the ceiling. My bed is set in the northeast corner of the front room, with the head to the north. When I saw the light and roses, I felt like I was lifted off of the bed, but I could feel and see my body lying on the bed.

MRS. WM. T. LAMBERT.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to the higher life, April 16, Mr. C. Nelson Wood of Stoneham, Mass. He was a patriot who sacrificed his health for his country in 1861-65. During his years of patient suffering, his wife has been his constant companion and nurse, having been separated but a few days for over twenty years. Mrs. M. S. Wood was one of our earliest speakers, and is remembered for her brilliant, earnest work. Both being conscientious Spiritualists, his preparations for transition were written in 1900. In compliance with his request, the services were simple, and his form was cremated, while his soul, still grows in knowledge, and aids in thought the loving and loved ones, who travel on to join him.

C. FANNIE ALLYN.

Passed to higher life, on Wednesday, April 19, Samuel W. Marx, president of the Bible Spiritual Society of Portland, Oregon. While walking along the street, he suddenly fell to the sidewalk, and when assistance reached him, he said, "Take me where I can rest." He was carried into a building near where he fell and in a few moments his spirit took its flight. Mr. Marx had many warm friends in Portland and his sudden flight to the realm of spirit cast a gloom over those with whom he was earnestly working in trying to better the conditions of humanity. The Bible Spiritual Society loses an earnest worker from its ranks. His wife is a medium, earnest and true, and the sympathies of those who know her best is hers in the hour of need. Rev. G. C. Love conducted the funeral services on Sunday, April 23, from Holman's undertaking parlors.

COR.

J. P. Ford of 404 Kaweah street, Hanford, Cal., passed to spirit life, April 24, aged 79. He was a firm believer in the truths of Spiritualism. He saw his parents as they came to take him to their home in the beautiful beyond.

MRS. MARY J. FORD.

"Spiritual Fire Crackers, Bible Chestnuts and Political Pin Points." By J. S. Harrington. A pamphlet containing 70 pages of racy reading. Price 25 cents.

"After Her Death. The Story of a Summer." By Lilian Whiting. No mind that loves spiritual thought can fail to be fed and delighted with this book. Beautiful spiritual thought, combining advanced ideas on the finer and ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading the mind onward into the purer atmosphere of exalted spiritual truth. A book for the higher life. Price, cloth, $1.

The new song-book, "The Golden Echoes," by S. W. Tucker, has found its way into many homes, and its beautiful songs have cheered many sorrowing hearts, which they are sure to do when heard and sung. They should be heard in every home in the land. Price, 15 cents; $1.50 per dozen.

"Harmonics of Evolution. The Philosophy of Individual life, Based Upon Natural Science, as Taught by Modern Masters of the Law." By Florence Huntley.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32 CHICAGO, ILL., MAY 20, 1905. NO. 808

FRAUDS AND CAMP-MEETINGS.

How Shall We Separate the Sheep From the Goats?

Much has been said lately regarding the alleged encouragement of frauds at the camp-meetings. One writer, more noted for forcefulness than accuracy, went so far as to charge that at one time the board of managers of the Clinton, Iowa, Camp made a practice of inviting known frauds to their grounds for the sake of revenue. The only reply that need be made to that charge is to name some of those who were members of the board at the time specified. When I name Alonzo Thompson, Hiram Eddy, Stella A. Fisk, N. G. Omstead and Geo. B. Warne, no one who is acquainted with either will require any further evidence of the absurdity of the allegation.

Few of those who criticise the officials for not excluding all tricksters from the camp grounds realize the perplexities and difficulties which beset them in the effort to render exact justice to all, or the amount of time and nerve-racking labor spent by the management in the quiet investigation of charges and complaints in order to exclude as far as possible, improper characters, while giving the fullest protection to those who deserve it.

No Spiritualist needs be told that every medium has his partisans as well as his enemies, and as no careful official regards his argument as infallible he must needs proceed with the utmost caution in deciding the genuineness or otherwise of any particular case.

Take, for instance, the case of Winans, whose exposure at Hot Springs seems so thorough and complete. Near twenty years ago I satisfied myself by certain careful tests that while Winans is undoubtedly a fine medium in some of his phases, his "materializations" were all—so far as my experience went—merely impersonations by himself. On being taxed with deception he assured me in all apparent candor that as he was always entranced during the cabinet seance he knew nothing as to how the phenomena were produced. (No wigs, beards and masks had been found in his possession at that time).

Last summer he spent a couple of weeks at the Clinton Camp. Some of his sitters pronounced him a fraud; others just as emphatically declared that they had received the most convincing tests of his mediumship. Here the usual dilemma was presented. Who was to be the judge between the contenders? Mindful of its responsibility, the management had resolved to call him to account when he evidently suspected that something was afoot and suddenly left the camp.

The saddest thing about such cases as Winans' is, the different effect upon such estimable, intelligent and earnest investigators as Mr. and Mrs. Boving, people who would be a real power for good in our ranks. I earnestly, I may say, prayerfully, trust that those good people have already realized in their own being too much of this glorious truth to be set back a single step by their late disheartening experience.

But to return to the question. How shall we—to quote the editor of The Progressive Thinker—"eliminate trickery and recognize only honest mediums" at our camp-meetings? There is not a camp-meeting association in the country whose officers would knowingly encourage fraud; to intimate such a thing is a gross insult—a reckless libel. They recognize the importance of protecting their guests from imposition and trickery; but they also realize their duty to protect mediums, without whom there would be no camp-meetings.

The question, and the whole question, is how to determine who are honest and who are not. Is there any infallible rule to govern all cases? Can a reliable list of honest and dishonest mediums be made out by any one? A list that will meet the approbation of even a majority of Spiritualists and investigators? Will The Progressive Thinker or the president of the Illinois State Association make out and publish a list of honest mediums for the guidance and protection of investigators? Or, on the other hand, will they publish a list of the frauds, and thus inferentially endorse all others as genuine?

Mark, I am not criticising in the slightest degree the words of The Progressive Thinker, in trying to rid our ranks of these pernicious tricksters. The necessity for such work seems to me of paramount importance, and deserves the support of all true Spiritualists. As the chief officer of one of the leading camps I am simply trying to make clear the difficulties that beset us in the effort to keep our gatherings free from the taint of fraud.

If it were possible to prepare and publish a list of absolutely reliable mediums the matter would be greatly simplified. That there are mediums who are as true as truth, we all know, but who would be brave enough to publish such a list and thus inferentially designate all others frauds? If the editor of a Spiritualist paper, with his great facilities for obtaining information, is unable to make such a catalogue, why should those with far less opportunity be expected to draw the line with perfect exactness?

Mediums are human beings with the same faults and frailties that beset other people, and should be dealt with—except with more consideration—exactly as we deal with other classes. A few people are absolutely and strictly honest in all their dealings. A large number are honest or dishonest according to the degree of incentives and temptations which confront them, while a few, again, are devoted almost entirely to fraudulent pursuits and practices. It is precisely so with those who profess mediumship. A few would die rather than be guilty of deception. Many give the genuine when they can and supplement with make-believe when they want to make out a case. A few are out-and-out frauds with no genuine mediumship whatever.

In business we would all prefer to trade entirely with the strictly honest but, perforce, must deal more or less with those less conscientious, keeping a sharp watch on them meanwhile. The out-and-out frauds we avoid altogether, and sometimes imprison them. It seems to me that it is precisely thus we should deal with mediums. Cherish as beyond rubies those who are strictly genuine. Watch closely and encourage to better things the weak and wavering, and banish completely the unmitigated fraud.

It has always been the policy of the M. V. S. A. to extend the utmost hospitality to mediums for all phases of phenomena. And that will continue to be [illegible]. That its hospitality has been violated in the past is doubtless true. That tricksters may attempt to do so in the future is quite likely, but the public may rest assured that the management will use every reasonable precaution to insure only genuine phenomena upon our camp grounds.

W. F. PECK,
President M. V. S. A.

THE JUDGMENT DAY.

Thoughts Suggested by a Funeral Discourse.

Thoughts suggested by remarks made over the remains of a dear Aunt, at the funeral services by one looked upon as an educated minister of the Gospel of God.

"She lies asleep, the sleep of the dead, until God sounds the trumpet which awaketh the dead, and the dead shall arise from their sleep upon the Judgment Day."

Did he understand the great far-off meaning of the words which he spoke to those who mourned the departure of a dear one from their midst, and the result of his words upon those in the earthly body, if what he said was true?

Let us reason on these thoughts, and see if they are true, what is really the effect of this reasoning, that they sleep until the Judgment Day.

If this condition really does exist, there are no inhabitants in heaven, or what is called hell, because God has not yet judged man according to his deeds, for as yet He has not sounded the trumpet which is to awaken them upon the Judgment Day.

Heaven is barren of human life, if this condition really exists.

Hell is not filled with the suffering ones of error.

The devil is left alone in the bottomless pit, the fires of hell are burning only to be endured by him.

There are as yet no persons to sing praises, or play on golden harps to their God, for He alone is in heaven, waiting for the right time to come or the right condition on this little earth (which is only one of the numberless worlds which have been created) before He awakens them (the so-called dead) from their sleep.

There are no angel friends to help us carry our earthly burdens.

There are no guardian angels, of which so much is sung and written, and which sustains so many bereaved ones, if these conditions really exist.

Those who passed the change called death, one thousand years ago, and those who passed from the material body yesterday, are both in the same spiritual condition, if the trumpet should sound on the morrow.

I thank God there is a religion which teaches us differently from that.

There are no dead. Those dear ones who pass away from our mortal vision, do NOT sleep the sleep of the dead, but they live in the spiritual world and are all the time gathering wisdom and understanding of the spirit and earnestly seeking in every possible way to benefit those dear ones they have left for a brief season on earth. I say they have left us, but I mean they are not visible to the masses, for their vision is not developed spiritually.

They do come back to their own, and teach of the things of the spirit, if they can find the right condition which will enable them to do so.

Truly, we are like those over whose earthly vision cataracts have formed, we are unable to behold things clearly if at all, but death gently lifts the veil, then we can behold all things in the clear light of the spiritual sight.

I thank God that the Aunt who has left us, may return to her devoted and noble son, who now walks alone upon the journey of life.

She will help him over the rugged pathway, for I cannot believe she sleeps until the Judgment Day, when her fond mother's heart still yearns to be with him during the dark and lonely hours that are before him.

Through the laws of mediumship and the revelation of the spirit, the stone has been rolled away from the door of the sepulchre; we behold the garments which have been lain aside, but the spirit has departed and goeth before us, but the angel of the Lord hath spoken unto us and commanded us that we go and tell the disciples that Christ has risen.

If he lives we shall live and will appear to them as He did on their way to Jerusalem.

He did not sleep until the Judgment Day.

We, too, shall not sleep, but enter at once upon the duties for which we are best fitted.

"Sweep up the debris of decaying faiths;
Sweep down the cobwebs of worn-out beliefs,
And throw your soul wide open to the light
Of reason and knowledge. Tune your ear
To all the worldless music of the stars,
And to the voice of Nature, and your heart
Shall turn to truth and goodness as the plant
Turns to the sun. A thousand unseen hands
Reach down to help you to their peace-crowned heights,
And all the forces of the firmament
Shall fortify your strength. Be not afraid
To thrust aside half-truths and grasp the whole."

Norwich, Conn. L. M. COBB.

A GENEROUS BEQUEST.

It Was Made by the Late J. T. Crumbaugh, of LeRoy, Ill.

The will of the late J. T. Crumbaugh, of LeRoy, Ill., was probated on the 6th inst. It bequeaths property valued at $150,000, the income from which is to be used in founding and maintaining a public library, and also a Spiritual church in LeRoy, Ill. The property consists of productive farm lands, the net income from which will easily reach $5,000 per annum.

But this bequest is not available during the life of the widow who is seventy years old, unless she so desires.

The will of Mr. Crumbaugh was made some four years ago under the inspiration and direction of his friends on the other shore, just as the Leland Stanford, Jr., University was founded under the direction of the spirit of the only child of Senator Stanford. These magnificent bequests are some of the fruits of Spiritualism that will increase in benefits to the human race as the ages go by.

S. H. WEST.

LeRoy, Ill.

The Power of Thought.

Flashing Scintillations From the Philosophic Pen of Henry Morrison Tefft.

"Everything is infectious in this world good and bad."

"Society exists by chemical affinity, and not otherwise."

"We do not live under a government of law, but of public opinion."

The earth is the thought of God embodied. The castle, the cathedral, the picture, the statue, is the thought of man given form. There is nothing strange about this principle,—the expressions are common; but when we come to speak of the embodiment of a feeling, a desire, and an intense emotion, so that it takes form and can be seen, we hesitate, deny, and cannot understand and yet some day this may be the settled belief of science and philosophy. It is claimed that thought can mold the form, beautify the face, and tint a flower. The desire to see developed the eye, and the necessity for hearing developed the ear.

Every thought, belief or act on the moral side of life, however erroneous and false, that expresses a man's true convictions and comes from the best impulses of his heart must be to his advantage and growth. There is no other way of arriving at truth except through following the guidance of the soul. From what source does the mind of man draw its knowledge? Somewhere there must be an unfailing supply, for out of it cometh his wisdom.

Truth gushes forth spontaneously like water from a fountain. It is not manufactured; laws are not made; all that man does is to discover these principles for he finds them ready for use at his hand. "The thought is sensed from the unlimited, primitive substance of intelligence. In the eternal thought substance all future happenings are known now. Telepathy, prophecy, clairvoyance, psychometry and other soul-powers unfold without will, purpose or effort."

What is right morally, what is true scientifically must in the end triumph, else humanity is a lie and all reasoning is naught. Truth has been beheaded, burned at the stake, tortured upon the rack, hung upon the gallows, made to bear false testimony, but never killed. When a great moral question comes before the people it takes years of discussion and argument before a final agreement, but when the public mind becomes crystallized and firmly fixed it is all dominant and powerful.

The smallest obstruction changes the current of the stream. There are points in the lives of men and nations, and in the course of a great political, social and moral movement, when the most trivial circumstance or a mere incident, or some startling event tips the scales for or against, and hopes are blasted or fruition won, a cause is gained or a battle lost.

The writing of a letter prevented Henry Clay from being elected president of the United States, and some think the same was true of General Hancock.

The words, "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion," unwittingly uttered by a clergyman at a gathering in New York City defeated James G. Blaine in the presidential race of 1884 and placed Grover Cleveland in the executive chair instead.

A moment of time, sometimes, calls into activities all the pent-up feelings, the smothered indignation, the outraged moral sentiment of a community, state or nation that has been long slumbering in the hearts of the people. A single spark is sufficient to put a whole city in conflagration. The firing upon Fort Sumter sounded the death knell of slavery. The blowing up of the Maine precipitated the Spanish-American war, and wrested from Spain, Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines, and opened them up to wider possibilities and greater progress.

There are times when error seems to triumph, when wickedness is in the ascendant,—but this is an illusion,—falsehood is always on the road to detection. A meteor sweeping across the heavens, lights up for a moment the whole firmament, but its brilliancy soon disappears. In the crucible of time all questions, principles and characters at length become clarified.

John Huss was excommunicated by the Roman Catholic church and then burned at the stake. Now it is said that a petition has been made to the Holy Synod of the Greek church asking that he be canonized. It is the people that canonize men and not the church, cardinals or popes. They only add the seal to the verdict of public opinion.

The public is made up of single individuals. Public sentiment is the aggregate of individual sentiment. It is like putting together infinitesimal particles of matter until you have a large body. What one man thinks or believes is not of much account but what a million of men believe becomes an important matter. One man alone is weak, but ten thousand men together, bent on one common object, become an uncontrollable force. A man standing alone and in a crowd is entirely a different creature. The same harangue that would not move a person in the least alone, in a crowd might excite him to the most desperate deeds as well as to the most benevolent acts.

When great objects are to be obtained people are gathered together in large assemblages. It matters not whether it is for a political, moral or religious purpose,—whether for peace or war. The dedication of churches is often made the occasion of gathering large congregations, for the purpose of raising money to pay off the church debt,—when, under the excitement of the hour and the fervid eloquence of some pulpit orator—the most miserly of men give freely of their substance.

In heated political campaigns, brass bands, torchlight processions, and all the ingenious methods politicians possess are brought into operation, to move and excite the multitude, knowing that the party who makes the most noise, not the party who makes the best arguments, will be most likely to succeed.

During the war of the Rebellion, war meetings were held all over the country, when thousands of men became so wrought up under the patriotic appeals of eloquent speakers as to risk their lives in the service of their country, who, if approached singly and alone at their homes could not have been induced to take the step.

The more ignorant and superstitious people are the more easily they can be moved. It matters not on what lines you desire them to be led. The same power that would arouse them to works of revenge, robbery and murder, would, when differently applied, direct them in the ways of charity, benevolence and religion.

The more cultivated and educated people become the less liable they are to be moved by any sudden impulse or emotion. This accounts for the fact that those large religious revivals that in the early history of the country used to sweep over whole communities, bringing hundreds into the church in a very brief space of time,—are every year becoming of less frequent occurrence. Men of culture and refinement are not so easily moved by excitement or swayed by passion. But the power that mind has over mind, and mind over matter is something wonderful to contemplate.

None so strong as not to be influenced. The judgment and action of great and deliberative bodies of men are often shaped and controlled by influences entirely outside of themselves.

Mr. Blaine in his "Twenty Years in Congress," speaking of the nomination of Mr. Lincoln for the presidency at Chicago in 1860 says: "In a final analysis of the causes and forces which nominated Mr. Lincoln, great weight must be given to the influence which came from the place where the convention was held, and from the sympathy and pressure of the surrounding crowd. Illinois Republicans, from Cairo to the Wisconsin line, were present in uncounted thousands. The power of the mob in controlling public opinion is immeasurable. In monarchical governments it has dethroned kings, and in republics it dictates candidates. Had the conditions been changed and the national convention of the Republicans assembled at Albany, it is scarcely to be doubted that Mr. Seward would have been nominated. It is quite certain that Mr. Lincoln would not have been nominated."

No one event ever had more meaning to the people of the United States than the nomination of Abraham Lincoln. He was a divinely appointed instrument in the hand of God for leading us triumphantly through the bloody war of the Rebellion and striking the shackles off of four million of people.

Henry Watterson in a lecture once said, "Where did Shakspeare get his genius? Where did Mozart get his music? Whose hand smote the lyre of the Scottish ploughman and stayed the life of the German priest? God, God and God alone; and as surely as these men were raised up by God, inspired by God, so was Abraham Lincoln, and a thousand years hence no story, no tragedy, no epic poem will be filled with greater wonder, or be followed by mankind with deeper feeling than that which tells of his life and death."

Yet so trifling a matter as a change of place where the convention was held would have defeated him. Some one has said of Garfield that he once claimed "that a roof of a certain house was so absolutely a watershed that the flutter of a bird's wing would be sufficient to decide whether a particular rain drop should make its way into the Gulf of St. Lawrence or into the Gulf of Mexico."

On what slender threads hang the destinies of individuals and nations. So unstable are the moods of men, so changeable and uncertain are the courses of states and nations that to the casual observer the whole world appears to be run by chance, but the eye of the scholar, whose search for knowledge has broadened his vision, sees in all this apparent chaos of matters, one grand concert of action, and agencies. According to his vision there has been from the earliest dawn of time one goal to which all things have been tending. That each generation of men, each period of time has paved the way for the one that succeeded it.

"The centuries are all lineal children of one another." But as yet there is nothing permanent in sight. The world is in a state of great unrest, socially, politically and religiously. There is no settled condition of thought. We have no form of government, no system of philosophy, science or religion that can be called stable.

Henry George says, "Though we may not speak it openly, the general faith in republican institutions is, when they have reached their fullest development, narrowing and weakening." "In the presence of the infinite problem of life," says David Starr Jordan, "science is dumb, * * * The poet sings of what he feels, but Science speaks only of what we know. * * * Science knows no ultimate rules. * * * All that man knows must be stated in terms of his experience."

From whatever point we view man's existence here, the lights and shades in the picture quite balance each other. Every known force, power or principle has its antagonist. The war of contrarieties is continually going on. The visible and invisible forces around us are always at work building up and tearing down. Society, like nature never stands still. To control and utilize the forces of nature and to harmonize the conflicting elements that enter in and make up the political and social life of a people is what the world has ever been trying to do.

"Every institution of human society," says one writer, "is on the defensive, changing or resisting tendencies to change. * * * Property also, the earth and its treasures once admitted to be the inheritance of the fortunate ones * * * was first modified, then challenged, then claimed as being the inheritance of the people, * * * Socialism, communism, nihilism, anarchism are only specific and unusual forms of a new feeling which has spread throughout the world, * * * Commerce, the greatest of civilizers, * * * To pagan nations it carries benefits tempered with vices, * * * Civilization is no doubt to the race a blessing; to the individual it may be a calamity. To whole classes and nations it may be a calamity. No progress is possible that does not involve destruction. * * * We are entering upon an epoch in the development of free institutions which is inevitable, but full of peril to every interest of mankind. Darwin and Spencer, Carlyle and Ruskin, Emerson and Wendell Phillips, Turgenieff and Tolstoi have not been talking about progress, struggle, human rights, the power of the people, the oppression of the few and the wrongs of the many, without having an audience larger than they knew. As servants know what is going on behind closed doors and read the secrets of every household, so do even the uneducated know by subtle instinct what their betters are thinking; * * * Rulers, ecclesiastics, captains of industry, and political economists will mistake the facts if they omit to notice the operation of certain impulses of sentiment now working with strange power in the minds of the majority. * * * * Whether it be a disease or a sign of vigorous life, there is a world fever of democracy new in history."

Norwich, N. Y. HENRY MORRISON TEFFT.

Slander is the revenge of a coward and dissimulation his defense.—Johnson.

Who plays for more than he can lose with pleasure makes his heart.—Herbert.

Few men are so clever as to know all the mischief they do.—Rochefoucauld.

"AN ENTIRELY NEW VIEW."

Mrs. Lois Waisbroker Trying to Place the World on the Right Track.

Just received The Progressive Thinker of April 22, and there are so many things in it of which I would like to say a word, I hardly know where to commence, but finally conclude to take the article with the above heading.

Friend Doane is right as to the obsession of ideas, and to my mind there is no greater obsession than that of the idea that Christianity is to possess and rule the world, or as expressed through one hypnotized medium: "Jesus Christ is the legitimate ruler of this planet." I wish Spiritualists were wholly free from this obsession, but I never read one of our papers but I find evidence that they are not.

Even my old friend, C. W. Stewart, says Spiritualism was "The foundation of Christianity." Brother Stewart ought to know that the fact of communication between the two worlds of existence is the "foundation of every religion, but Spiritualism proper, Spiritualism as developed today was not the "foundation of primitive Christianity," and why belittle it by saying so?

When I say Spiritualism I do not mean Spiritualists, for they, we, are the result of an existing system which rests largely upon the obsessing power of the Christian idea.

The following incident occurring at a camp-meeting in Washington, will help to illustrate what I mean:

During the noon recess a lady had gathered around her quite a number of people who were listening to her radical remarks. During a pause an old gentleman said: "If Jesus was here I believe he would sanction every word you say."

"I do not care whether he would or not; I am one person and he another," was her quick reply.

That woman had become free from every phase of Christian obsession. Christianity is the aggressive religion.

"Jesus shall reign wherever the sun Doth his successive journeys run,"

is the language of its every movement. The war between Russia and Japan is due to that claim. The Czar in connection with the spirits of his obsessed ancestors is working to get control of all of Eastern Asia—this as the representative of Jesus; but it is said of those on the other shore who desired the suppression of chattel slavery, that they wanted a leader and the Southerners sent them John Brown.

There are other leaders who have been over, both from this country and Europe, leaders who are educating the crushed millions on the other shore, crushed out of this life to prevent the unseating of Czars, Emperors, etc.; all these are being educated above the plane of revenge, but their purpose is to overturn all institutions, all systems that make the people victims; all such will throw their influence against Russia's Christian assumption.

Obsessed, yes, and the Greek and Catholic hierarchies on the spirit side of life, particularly the Catholic; and such spirits obsess mediums to practice fraud. All things are double, have two phases. In obsessions we have that of the idea on which powerful organizations are built, and that of the individual. A poor soul who had committed an awful crime sent me word through a medium that he was obsessed. I had been impressed with the same idea.

While wondering why this spirit, of whom I had known nothing in the earth life, should come to me, I found Dred Scott standing beside me. "I brought him," he says. "I remembered what you had done for me, and we gather up those we can reach and educate them." I had not heard from Dred for ten years and I asked why he had stayed away so long. "Oh, I have been busy and you did not need me," was his reply. I have not heard from him since.

Your word of warning, friend Francis, about Catholics colonizing the United States, is timely if it would only be heeded, but the obsessing idea of the masses that we are all right, that there is no danger, prevents proper protection from the worst of foes. But in your note headed "Two Soul-savers Equal to One Man," I felt when I read it, like asking, are our "Rev." Spiritualist speakers who travel on half-fare any bigger?

I never see that title applied to one of our workers but I feel humbled and ashamed that Spiritualist speakers should so dishonor Spiritualism as to place themselves on a level with Christian ministers. I am as poor as a "church mouse," but no amount of money would tempt me to that.

When "Observer" says "The world's reformers are making unsatisfactory progress, because their efforts are directed largely against effects instead of causes," he tells what is lamentably true, but in order to a better heredity, woman must have better conditions than man has yet furnished, and that is why I demanded unqualified freedom for woman as woman, and that all the institutions of society be adjusted to such freedom.

Hudson Tuttle's reply to the question as to the reliability of spirit communication is quite right, in that it throws us back upon our own responsibility and thus aids our reasoning powers. I have said that all things are double; in the human these two inseparable and eternal factors or forces are called male and female, and in the Universal Life the two factors have been called Father—Mother—God. They are certainly that "in which we live and move and have our being."

In the mental world we have two methods of reasoning, the deductive in which we take our stand by truth and reason out to facts. This is sometimes called intuition. The other method is taking facts and following up to their cause. This is called the inductive method.

The first taken alone leads to superstitions, to religious bigotry; the other depended upon alone leads to materialism.

Some of my Theosophical friends wonder that I cannot accept Theosophy, but I have said to them: "I am looking for a higher truth than has yet been born upon this planet, and the mingling of the magnetisms of the Orient and the Occident will bring it."

I believe I have found it; not so much perhaps, as to the fact stated as to their application. The bible declares:

"He that overcometh shall inherit all things," and the other religions give the same in substance. Overcometh what? In the little booklet I call "The Secret of Life," is the explanation—one that fully warrants the premise, and makes re-generation as natural as generation.

Now, friends, do not write and ask me for an explanation, unless you send at least $1.00, and then I will send that and "Woman's Source of Power;" these will be worth more than many dollars when the conditions for the realization of what they teach can be had.

LOIS WAISBROOKER.

Home, Washington.

THE MULTIMILLIONAIRE.

Do you think because of riches, in the great eternal plan,
That you'll be much more respected than the "Rags-Old-Iron-Man?"
Do you think to hoodwink Nature and old Justice where you go?
Do you think the dear St. Peter will not send you down below?

Do you think the gates will open when your visage there appears?
And your presence up in heaven will a signal be for cheers?
Do you think the loving angels will be glad to meet you there,
With your greed still clinging to you, in those "Mansions bright and fair?"

Do you think that God will vacate that old crumbling golden throne,
And lay down His crown and scepter at your feet, to be your own?
Do you think that you can purchase all those twinkling little stars,
And control the silver moonlight just the way you can the cars?

Do you think the power of motion in the universe will pause,
When you take your place in heaven with your heel upon the laws?
Do you think all things will kowtow to your spirit when you die,
When you stand before your record with your dollars all laid by?

Do you think because you have it, that your wealth will pull you through,
And no matter how you get it, it will bring all things to you?
Do you think that gold in heaven is the medium of exchange?
Do you think that that old heaven you will buy and rearrange?

There's a voice within the silence, there's an echo from the deep,
And it plainly tells the story: "As ye sow, so shall ye reap."
There's a whisper in the breezes; there's a murmur in the sea,
"All thy virtues and thy vices, will sometime return to thee."

DR. T. WILKINS.

Notes for Reflection.

Peter the Great has been quoted as saying: "It was well to learn the art of war from the enemy." This saying should be well pondered by the powers involved in war at the present time.

Then, again, Napoleon became great. He had tact, art and ambition to spare. He was vain and his visions of military glory were almost boundless.

History is made for those coming after to learn from and profit by, but alas! the most important lessons are not heeded. Napoleon adroitly assailed Alexandria and with his tact and policy informed the Arab population that he had come to protect religion, restore their rights and punish the usurpers, etc., but his dream of Oriental conquest was somewhat dispelled by contact with a British warship. Still he pressed on, grew more cruel in his despoliation and plunder, but ended his first war period pretty much to his desire. The second period, though opened with Great Britain, involved many nations. Napoleon covered his name with glory. He became not only Emperor of France, the Pope crowning the new sovereign, but he was later also crowned sovereign of Northern Italy. The iron crown of Charlemagne which had quietly reposed a thousand years, was brought forward and Napoleon placed it upon his own head with the words, "God has given it to me, beware of touching it." But, his power waned, his glory vanished, he reached his Waterloo and had a sad ending of his proud career, as an exile.

Now it seems there is a repetition of each thing in progress now, somewhat changed as to forms and pursuits, but still the same spirit is manifested in ambitious advances to despoil, etc.

MRS. M. KLEIN.

Van Wert, Ohio.

MOST REMARKABLE.

Spirit Return Without a Particle of Doubt.

While in Oklahoma on business last March, I learned from responsible parties that one Mr. Parrott, on his death bed requested to be buried in a certain cemetery near the road; but he was, contrary to his expressed wish, placed back in a woods. Several months after this a Mr. Star, a neighbor of Mr. Parrott, while plowing in a field, saw some one coming across the same. He looked so much like Mr. Parrott, that he waited for him to come up. The form proved to be Mr. Parrott, and Mr. Star asked, "What do you want, Mr. Parrott?"

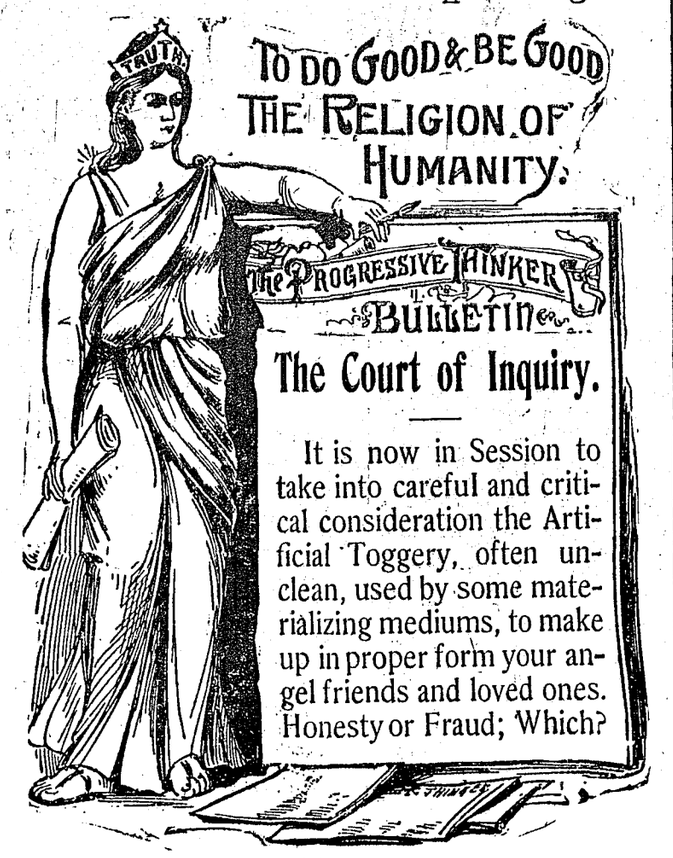
Mr. Parrott replied, "I want you to have my body moved to that cemetery." This so dumfounded Mr. Star, that he dropped his head for an answer, and when he looked up, Mr. Parrott was gone.

When Mr. Star went to the house, his wife asked him who the man was that came to him in the field. So there was no imagination on the part of Mr. Star in that deal.

Several weeks later Mr. Parrott came to Mr. Star again, and insisted that he have his body moved to that cemetery. Mr. Star asked him why he had come to him to have that done, instead of going to his own folks, and he answered that he knew Mr. Star to be an honest man and if he could get his promise, he knew it would be done. So Mr. Star promised, and did the work.

My brother gave me this story while on the road to the railroad station. He pointed out the cemetery and grave where Mr. Star placed Mr. Parrott's body.

I am not positive about having the names correct in the above, but I can find out; also give the address, and any one doubting the story can write Mr. Star and get particulars.



W. P. BRITTAIN,
Martinsburg, Va. (Investigator.)

The temple of fame stands upon the grave; the flame upon its altars is kindled from the ashes of the dead.—Hazlitt.

Faith is letting down our nets into the transparent deeps, at the divine command, not knowing what we shall take.—Faber.

Care is no cure, but rather a corrosive for things that are not to be remedied.—Shakspeare.

Court of Inquiry.

Crisis Pending in the Ranks of Spiritualism.

THERE HAS AT LAST COME A VERY SERIOUS CRISIS IN THE RANKS OF SPIRITUALISM.

MANY MATERIALIZING MEDIUMS, EMBOLDENED BY THEIR SUCCESS IN THE USE OF ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY IN THEIR SEANCES, HAVE AT LAST FORCED AN UNPLEASANT CONDITION OF AFFAIRS INTO THE RANKS OF SPIRITUALISM.

EVER SINCE THE DAVENPORT BROTHERS TRAVELED THROUGH THE UNITED STATES WITH THEIR MYSTERIOUS CABINET FEATS, MYSTIFYING THE PEOPLE, LEGERDEMAIN, CONFEDERATES, ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY, DRESSES ILLUMINATED WITH PHOSPHORUS, FALSE WHISKERS, WIGS, CHEESE CLOTH, FEATHERS, AND EVEN KNIVES HAVE BEEN BROUGHT INTO REQUISITION TO HELP THE MEDIUM OR SPIRIT IN WHAT IS EVIDENTLY A WORK OF DECEPTION OF THE DARKEST KIND.

THIS ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY IS OFTEN UNCLEAN, AND REVEALS UNDER THE MICROSCOPE, MICROBES WHOSE ONLY PLACE IN THE ECONOMY OF NATURE IS IN THE FILTH OUTSIDE OF THE RANKS OF PURE SPIRITUALISM.

ALL THESE ROTTEN TRICKSTERS HAVE GOTTEN IN THEIR PESTIFEROUS WORK UNTIL EMBOLDENED BY THEIR SUCCESS IN THEIR DECEPTIVE METHODS, THEY HAVE ACTUALLY NAUSEATED THOUSANDS OF HONEST SPIRITUALISTS, AND DRIVEN THEM INTO THE VARIOUS LIBERAL CULTS AND CREEDS THAT HAVE ASSUMED GREAT PROMINENCE IN VARIOUS PARTS OF THE COUNTRY.

COMMENCING WITH THE EXPOSURE OF MRS. GRIFFEN, IN MILWAUKEE, WIS., OVER TWO YEARS AGO, DRESSED IN A HOME-MADE INDIAN COSTUME, WITH A HEADGEAR ORNAMENTED WITH FEATHERS, TO REPRESENT AN INDIAN CHIEFTAIN, THERE HAS BEEN A DOZEN OR MORE EXPOSURES, AND IN EVERY CASE THE "SPIRIT" PROVED TO BE THE MEDIUM DRESSED IN GROSS MATERIAL, OFTEN DIRTY, AND ESPECIALLY PREPARED FOR THE OCCASION BY MORTAL HANDS INTENT ON DECEIVING.

EVEN ELSIE REYNOLDS, THE GREAT LEADER OF A CERTAIN GANG WHO USE ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY IN DECEIVING THE PEOPIE, WHEN EXPOSED IN LOS ANGELES, CAL., HAD ON A MASK AND GOGGLES, WITH HER SKIRT ROLLED UP, REPRESENTING HERSELF AS THE SPIRIT OF "AUNT BETSEY."

SUCH BEING THE CASE MR. DUNN HAS SOME FOUNDATION FOR HIS STATEMENT THAT ALL MATERIALIZING MEDIUMS ARE GUILTY OF PRACTICING THE SAME DECEPTION, HENCE THIS COURT OF INQUIRY HAS BEEN CALLED, WITH THE OBJECT IN VIEW TO ARRIVE AT THE REAL FACTS IN THE CASE.

Judge Dunn in Defense of Mr. C. E. Winans.

In the issue of The Progressive Thinker of March 25, 1905, large prominence is given to a detailed statement of alleged irregularities in the demonstration of the materializing phase of spirit power, indulged in, as is claimed, by one of the oldest, most trusted and best accredited mediums in the ranks of the workers and demonstrators of physical phenomena of Modern Spiritualism, Mr. C. E. Winans of Edinburg, Ind.

The articles consist of statements made by Mr. F. C. Boving and Dr. E. H. Eastman, concerning the alleged facts, comments thereon by the President of the Illinois State Spiritual Association and Vice-President of the N. S. A., Dr. Geo. B. Warne, and concluded by rather caustic editorial matter ostensibly by the editor of The Progressive Thinker.

Of course, the significance of the editorial matter and comments of Dr. Warne must depend largely upon the force of the alleged facts, for their standing. I have no desire to enter the arena of polemics, or to measure a lance with any one, but in the interest of candid inquiry, fair play and a square deal, and at the risk of being classed with defenders of fakes and frauds, I am impelled to continue my inquiries and search after more light and fuller knowledge of the wonderful phenomena that have come into our life, so to speak, in these later days.

It seems from the alleged facts, that last summer Mr. Winans was at the camp at Clinton, Iowa, where he has been for many years, and was engaged in demonstrating the alleged fact of spirit return to the campers through his development as a materializing medium.

That at that camp and as a witness at his seances was Mr. F. C. Boving of Hot Springs, Ark.

That so well pleased and so thoroughly convinced of the truth and genuineness of the demonstrations there witnessed was this Boving, that he exacted a solemn promise from Mr. Winans to visit him at his home in Hot Springs, in the near future, for the purpose of demonstration of spirit power to the people of the vicinage.

It seems then that in the month of December last, Mr. Winans, in fulfillment of that promise, visited Hot Springs and was met with open arms by Mr. Boving and taken to his hospitable home, but unfortunately Mr. Winans was there stricken with severe illness and lay close to the spirit side of life for some months, during which time Mr. Boving and Dr. Eastman and others were most kind and aided and assisted him financially by advancing him funds and sending stated amounts home to his wife, furnishing him medical and other attendance, doing what any well-intentioned good Samaritan would do under like circumstances, of course being disappointed in not being able to exhibit the phenomena to the people all this time.

But after much delay Mr. Winans was sufficiently recovered in his bodily health to permit of an attempt at demonstrations from the spirit side of life. Accordingly a seance was arranged for at the home of this good Samaritan Boving, at which was present a few friends, including the good Dr. Eastman and the colored nurse.

During this seance it was discovered, as is stated, that the manifesting spirit was arrayed in borrowed plumage; that is, in materials of the earth earthy; not all recently materialized, but apparently shop goods, such as the vulgar multitude might purchase at any second-hand store in Hot Springs—wigs, false hair, whiskers, masks, etc.—and that when this discovery was silently made, the medium and his guides seemed to sense the dissatisfaction occasioned thereby in the sensitive souls of Boving et al., and the manifestations ceased, the seance coming to a rather abrupt ending on account of claimed bad conditions.

The next day Mr. Winans was called to account by these searchers after TRUTH—Boving, Eastman & Co.—openly accused of being a fraud and a fake, and ordered to produce the borrowed plumage in which he had been endeavoring to represent spirits from the beyond, which he accordingly did under a threat of immediate arrest and incarceration (but under what charge is not told). Then we are told, without further investigation or endeavor to ascertain the meaning of the presence of these so-called false articles, this sick man was ruthlessly thrust from the door of this good Samaritan Boving into the inhospitable streets of Hot Springs, penniless, forlorn and disgraced; his trunks and belongings sent post haste to the railroad station, and the hands, and probably feet, of these good, kindly Spiritualists, Boving and Eastman, were washed clean of this gigantic fraud, fake and false medium, Winans.

But the poor colored nurse who had cared for him during his illness was touched by his infirmity and necessities, and kindly harbored him and gave his weary stricken body a resting place for the night in her humble home, and she, too, had witnessed the great fraud, but was not convinced of its reality, or if she was, it failed to make such an impression as to obliterate those feelings of kindness for a fellow being in distress, that seemed so easily blotted out in the Boving and Eastman sort of Spiritualists.

The next move was that Mr. Winans was forced to come out of his place of hiding, so said, in order that he might be identified by his good friend Boving at the bank, so that he might obtain the needed funds upon a draft sent him for transportation home; but we are told his trunks and belongings were still kept attached to secure the payment of the moneys so kindly (?) advanced, as well as for medical services so kindly bestowed during his illness, and which we are told will be released upon payment of the sum of $100—a bargain sale price, so said,

Verily, the "way of the transgressor is hard."

I have no desire to enter into any prolonged discussion of the extremely kind manner in which this poor sick man was treated; and the extremely large amount of spiritual fellowship displayed by these good Samaritans, Boving and Eastman, in dealing with the situation, but a perusal of the articles by them, as well as the comments by Dr. Warne, and also the caustic editorial, would seem to show that each and all of them ring true and clear in the chime of brotherly love and spirituality, and we humble searchers after light and truth may well take courage and keep on in our course and search; being assured thereby that our cause is a living one and its beacons are brightly burning and exemplifying our creedal corner stone, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them."

But as an investigator for over ten years, and one who will always be an investigator, who never expects to be aught else, who will never claim to know it all, much less to be able to measure, determine and define the limits and the power of the Spirit forces, I am in search earnestly of knowledge, and after carefully reading and digesting as well as I am able to this series of condemnatory articles, I am constrained to ask loudly, "What constituted this so-called FRAUD? In what manner was any fraud disclosed? How was any fraud or deceit perpetrated? I am at a loss to discover the fraud from the facts stated, EVEN ADMITTING THEM ALL to be true, and I challenge the right of any one to pass judgment of fraudulent practice upon the evidence found in the statement of facts by these good Samaritans, Boving and Eastman.

IT MAY BE THAT I AM WRITING MYSELF DOWN AS A FOOL OR AS A DEFENDER OF FRAUDS AND FAKES, but at the risk of losing caste in that regard I will say: Come now and let us reason together a bit.

I will speak from personal experience from personal observation, from the testimony of other credible witnesses, and from the printed pages of scientific researchers as well.

1st. As to the medium, Winans himself, all Spiritualists who have encountered the demonstrators of physical phenomena, especially the phase called materialization, within the last ten years, have at some time been found sitting in the seance room where this medium has been used as the instrument of Spirit forces to demonstrate the continuity of life and the possibility of spirit communion, and to all such I appeal for confirmation when I assert that he never yet opened a seance without in the first instance insisting that all skeptics as well as believers who had not attended his seances should make a careful and minute examination of his cabinet for the purpose of guarding against confederacy; should place himself in such test conditions as seemed to be sufficient to guard against conscious impersonation, and finally informed the sitters that in seances presided over by his spiritual guides there were three forms of manifestation usually presented, to-wit:

Materialization proper, transfiguration, and impersonation. In the last two, where the forces being unable owing to conditions not understood to form a spirit body or counterpart of human form through which the spirit could manifest, they would use the personal organism of the medium, take him from the cabinet and dress him as they chose, or use his form without extra habiliments and manifest through that organism without his being at all conscious thereof.

Now, the first form of manifestation above spoken of is of course the one really most desirable, for in it there should be nothing of an earthy nature, and in that form only could the spirit be able to demonstrate its integrity by the process of dematerialization in presence of the sitters, and which by the way is to my mind the only true method of distinguishing the transfiguration or impersonation from the materialization.

It is the two last named forms of manifestation which give rise to the apparent committal of fraud and deceit by the medium, and this form is seemingly the one upon which our good Hot Springs Samaritan friends base their charge of fraud. They rest it entirely upon the fact that the manifesting spirit was arrayed in some articles of apparel which were not materialized for the occasion, but were ready-made and hand-me-downs, so to speak, wigs, whiskers, etc., and perhaps robes, and also upon the further corroboratory fact that certain like articles were afterwards found to be in possession of the medium, and were concealed from easy search, but which under pressure of threatened arrest the medium discovered to them, which articles they claimed had been used in disguises and simulations of departed friends, by the so-called manifesting spirits.

It would seem that they entirely overlooked the announcement made by the guide of medium Winans at the outset of the seance that they might expect just such a show as they found, in certain contingencies, which doubtless arose and made it necessary.

AN EXTRAORDINARY STATEMENT.

NOW TO MY MIND THERE IS NO SORT OF DOUBT THAT ALL OF THE MATERIAL THINGS WERE FOUND JUST AS STATED, AND THAT THEY WERE CONCEALED FROM THE EYES OF ANY PAUL PRY WHO MIGHT BE FOUND WANDERING IN FORBIDDEN PASTURES AND EXAMINING NOOKS AND CORNERS WHERE HE HAD NO BUSINESS.

AND THERE IS NO DOUBT, EITHER, THAT THESE SAME SO-CALLED OR SIMILAR EARTHLY PARAPHERNALIA WERE USED BY THE GUIDES AND CONTROLS OF MEDIUM WINANS AT THAT SEANCE, AND HAVE BEEN USED IN EVERY SEANCE WHERE HE HAS BEEN MADE USE OF AS THE INSTRUMENT OF SPIRIT FORCE, AND ALSO THAT SIMILAR PARAPHERNALIA IS USED BY OTHER MEDIUMS DEMONSTRATING SPIRIT FORCE THROUGH THIS PHASE CALLED MATERIALIZATION; at least my experience leads me to that conclusion, and I think the experience of every other investigator will upon a thoughtful consideration of what was seen lead to the same conclusion.

But the crucial question which determines the true from the false demonstration is:

WAS WINANS CONSCIOUS?

Was the medium at the time of the manifestation of so-called spirit presence, in possession of his normal faculties so as to be conscious of the fact that his own person and this borrowed plumage or accessories was being used, and also used for the purpose of DECEIVING the sitters?

If this question shall be answered in the affirmative, then the charge of fraud and simulation is well founded and there can be no punishment too severe to visit upon the head of the offender.

But if the medium was at the time deprived of his normal faculties in any manner whatever, either by being entranced, controlled, insane or otherwise, so that he did not have a conscious knowledge of the situation and was not aware that his organism and raiment were being used to deceive and defraud the sitters, or was being used at all for the purpose of spirit manifestation, then, according to all rules governing the commission of offences, the medium can not rightfully be pronounced guilty of perpetration of a fraud or deceit, and our friends, including Dr. Warne the commentator and Bro. Francis, the editor, have apparently done a wrong to this old-time medium, Winans.

The medium himself, and all materializing mediums claim, and it would seem to be well founded, that they are never conscious of any manifestations that occur after they enter the cabinet, being fully entranced and therefore unable to sense the things that occur. How that is, of course I am not able to fully determine, but will rely upon their word as honest people, and as all investigators are compelled to do until the contrary fully appears.

To some investigators, as to the writer, the manifestation by the transformation, or use of the physical organism of the medium in an UNCONSCIOUS CONDITION, is one of the most sure and satisfactory evidences of spirit control and spirit power, and when accompanied by intelligent communication affords the best evidence of spirit presence.

But right here is where it is difficult for a new investigator to discover the seemingly real from the sham, and is the place where the cry of fraud is often improperly and apparently in the present case raised.

TO ILLUSTRATE.

Some years ago this same medium was giving demonstrations of spirit power through his instrumentality in the city of St. Paul, Minn., at the home of a private citizen and apparent friend, when THE SAME SORT OF PARAPHERNALIA WAS FOUND IN HIS POSSESSION by some of the family upon making search through his unlocked trunk. At once the same effect was produced, though not in so strong degree as was evidenced at Hot Springs. The medium was invited to vacate, and with the same threats of arrest, but with the alternative of acknowledging himself a fraud. He declined the alternative and quietly departed, but did not cease his work.

ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY A GREAT AID TO THE MEDIUM.

In talking some years afterwards with a gifted Psychic whose mediumship has always been unquestioned, she related the circumstance and informed me that she was one of the sitters who discovered the fraud, and she then assured me that since that occurrence, she having become further spiritually unfolded and developed in her clairaudience and clairvoyant powers as well as her inspirational and trance states, she had become convinced that a great wrong was at that time ignorantly done to the medium Winans, for, as she asserted, she had found from experience and contact with the spirit world through her own mediumship that FURNISHING CERTAIN EARTHLY MADE ACCESSORIES, SUCH AS ROBES, WIGS, etc., etc., for use by the spirit forces in the transformation and impersonation of the medium, was a GREAT AID TO THEM, and prevented the unnecessary use of spirit power and force in materializing the same class of matters and things so necessary in this class of demonstration, and in fact ANY demonstration in a materializing seance; and I was then informed by her, and it seemed then to me, as it does now, to be reasonable, that where such accessories are used by the manifesting power UNCONSCIOUSLY by the medium while his organism was being used or otherwise, that there was and could be no legitimate ground for a charge of fraud.

I have personally attended many seances for materializing given through the instrumentalities of some of the best known media in the work, some of whom are now on the brighter side of life, and I am certain that in no seance I have attended was there EVER LACKING THE USE OF PURELY EARTHLY MATERIALS in demonstrating spirit power and spirit presence, and at the same time the evidence was seemingly conclusive that the medium was entirely unconscious of the means used in demonstration.

To understand the difficulties lying in the path of the investigator and how possibly we may be deceived, take the case related by Professor Crookes, the inventor of the Crookes Tube, whereby the ray called the Roentgen Ray is made useful, and to whom all Spiritualists point with pride as one who has brought to bear the true scientific method of investigation in things spiritual, and who after such investigation became and is thoroughly convinced of spirit communion and the persistence of life after the shock called death. He investigated the phase known as materialization, having the young child medium, Miss Florence Cook, as a member of his own family for some months, thereby being able to thoroughly study as became a true scientist this phase in all its various ramifications. He is on record in the little book called Researches in Spiritualism, London edition, at page 110, as follows:

"I have the most absolute certainty that Miss Cook (the medium) and Katie (the manifesting spirit) are two separate individuals, so far as their bodies are concerned, several little marks on Miss Cook's face are absent on Katie's. Miss Cook's hair is so dark a brown as almost to appear black; a lock of Katie's hair, which is now before me, and which she allowed me to cut off from her luxuriant tresses, having first traced it up to the scalp and satisfied myself that it actually grew there, is a rich golden auburn. One evening I timed Katie's pulse. It beat steadily at 75, whilst Miss Cook's pulse a little time after was going at its usual rate of 99. On applying my ear to Katie's chest I could hear a heart beating rhythmically inside and pulsating even more steadily than did Miss Cook's heart when she allowed me to try a similar experiment after the seance. Tested in the same way, Katie's lungs were found to be sounder than the medium's, for at the time I tried the experiment Miss Cook was under medical treatment for a severe cold."

One would suppose after reading this account, as well as the others found in this little book, that the scientific world would have accepted the conclusions drawn by the eminent professor, but not so; the fellows of the Academy laughed him out of court, so to speak, and in some instances refused to receive and file his reports, on the ground that they were of no value whatever. He, however, persisted in claiming their verity, and does so to this day.

But now we find some of the best informed people upon this subject, among them, if I mistake not, is included our editor at large, Mr. Hudson Tuttle, doubting the integrity and genuineness of this seance so graphically described by Professor Crookes, upon the ground that if the hair cut from the manifesting spirit's head was really materialized hair, it would not have remained INTACT, but would have dematerialized, returned to its original elements when the spirit body of the Spirit-Katie was so resolved, as it was at close of seance.

But Professor Crookes relates facts, and our doubting friends proceed upon theory, and I must confess the theory seems to me to be more plausible than the claimed facts, and is another evidence that in these matters one must, as did the Doubting Thomas, see and feel for himself.

I am not able to decide between these thinkers and investigators except so far as to say for myself, that if this hair cut by the professor was real, natural hair and not materialized for the occasion by spirit power, as the professor thinks it was and declares, it must have been provided in some manner otner than by a process then employed, and unless the medium was unconscious of its use at the time, she was liable to a charge of fraud and simulation, as well as Mr. Winans; and yet no one would be so wanting in confidence in the young medium, Miss Cook, or the professor, as to charge that she was CONSCIOUS of the use of false materjal in the manifestation, even if it could be shown (as is claimed in the case under consideration), that she had such properties in possession during her normal condition.

Myself and many others to my knowledge have sat in seances operated by the guides of the late Mrs. Buchanan, and have witnessed the presentation of the most beautiful flowers brought into the room without the aid of human hands, apparently through the solid walls of the apartment, and yet they were earthly material entirely.

With many others I have witnessed the presentation of most beautiful pictures, perfect likenesses of our arisen friends, painted through the powers of the gifted Bangs sisters, without the aid of human hands other than to furnish the canvass stretcher upon which the picture was impressed.

I and many others have sat at the seances of Mrs. Isa Wilson Kaynor and have received messages written, printed, impressed, and carved, upon slates, by spirit power, without the aid of human hands, except to furnish the material slates and sometimes the pencils.

Myself and many others have sat in seances presided over by the guide of the medium now under fire, Mr. Winans, in various states of the Union, and have seen beautiful flowers plucked from the very atmosphere above us by pure spirit power and presented to the sitters, myself among the number, and they were material, not materialized on the spot, but were evidently brought there from outlying gardens and hothouses, of which the medium was entirely and absolutely apparently unconscious.

The same scenes have been witnessed thousands of times by all who have endeavored to make full investigations fairly and honestly of the power of the spirit forces. These instances are given to show that the spirit world does not hesitate to make use of earthly materials when necessary for proper demonstrations, sometimes by the knowledge and consent of the medium, and sometimes without such knowledge.

Now Mr. Winans has been before the public as a medium demonstrating the truths of Spiritualism for, I am informed, over twenty-five years, certainly to my own personal knowledge nearly ten years; he has been arrested and threatened with arrest; been hauled before courts; been thrown into jails; but if I am rightfully informed has never been convicted of the commission of (conscious) fraud or deceit.

He has been persecuted and maligned by people who have not been able to account for the manifestations that occur at his seances on natural or non-spiritual grounds, yet he hesitates not to appear before the uneducated, skeptical, hostile public and permit his guides to make use of his organism to give such exhibitions of the power of the spirit world as seems best to them, he being at all times apparently unconscious of the occurrence. He enters his cabinet and goes to sleep, as it were, under the control of his guides, and what takes place is without his conscious volition.

So far as I have been able to observe at his later seances attended by myself it has seemed to me that his guides did most of the manifestations, and that his organism was used in transformation and impersonation to a greater degree than in my earlier experiences with him; this perhaps may be due to the fact that his bodily powers which form the magnetic force, humanly speaking, so apparently necessary to blend with the spirit force in producing the manifestations, may be by reason of age or infirmity, waning; so that sometimes the material necessary is not forthcoming for true materialization, and accessories are used. It is very probable that owing to his illness such was the case at Hot Springs.

So it would seem to me, after consideration of the whole matter, that, admitting that Mr. Winans actually had in his conscious possession all of the material things which these brethren of Hot Springs claim he produced to them, and that they were used by his guides at the seance in question, and were so palpable as to be discerned by them, yet if the medium at the time of the manifestation was UNCONSCIOUS of their use, as before stated, such facts do not cause me to join in the charge made against him by the Hot Springs friends, by Dr. Warne or by the gifted editor of The Progressive Thinker, to the effect that he has WILFULLY DECEIVED and DEFRAUDED those who had a right to expect better things.

I DO NOT ASSERT THAT HE IS GUILTLESS, but merely that, understanding as I do the philosophy of the materializing phase of spirit force, the evidence submitted falls far short of convincing proof as should be forthcoming before our old friend should be branded to the world as fakir and fraud.

I am aware that this letter will probably be the occasion of charging me with being an apologist for fraud, a condoner of fakirism in the name of Spiritualism; and may also be the occasion of charging the writer with being a defender of this particular medium, Winans.

Yet for all that, I am ready at all times to meet such charges, and think they can be refuted with all ease.

Have not our public men been too ready to condemn our mediums upon too little proofs? Have those who have so glibly cried fraud as respects some of our oldest mediums not been a trifle hasty in their actions? Have they not given heed to the cry of some few people who, not understanding the laws governing the manifestations, have been led to denounce what they did not understand? And has not this very question that I have sought to discuss here to-wit, the unconsciousness of the medium, been set aside, and has it not always been assumed that the medium was conscious of the surroundings and therefore guilty of wilful deceit?

Is there not danger that in the desire to weed out fraud and deceit from the midst of us, we run into the other extreme and evince too little of calm judgment, and too much of the quick action which generally, as does all ill-digested matter, work injury to some one?

Our cause is too sacred to be tampered with, but until we can say we POSITIVELY KNOW the laws that govern the spirit world in manifesting its presence physically and psychically, ought we not to be very careful in passing judgment? I find myself in position frequently, when witnessing phenomena of the physical character, of one who is willing to say: I don't understand that sort of manifestation; it may be all right, but it is new to me. And I feel better towards myself in that position than if I rushed along with a hue and cry of "stop thief." The simulator and the fakir in our midst will soon run their course and meet their end, if let alone, especially when it is so difficult to stop them by force.

I personally am well satisfied from my own observation that the mediums who have been denounced the most in the Spiritual press as frauds, to-wit, Mrs. Mabel Aber Jackman, Mrs. Elsie Reynolds, and now Mr. C. E. Winans, are endowed with rare psychic powers, and are capable of the highest and most satisfactory demonstration of spirit return and presence, and yet I am fearful that in saying so in this place I RUN A GREAT RISK of losing caste with many of my friends in public and private life, spiritually speaking.

Our gifted mediums, the Bangs sisters, have been accused of monstrous frauds, threatened with arrest, and I do not know but have been arrested, and yet their well wishers and sponsors are legion in our ranks.

So, Bro. Francis, let us have peace in our ranks, and try and see if we can not arrive at conclusions from solid testimony, and if we find what is suspected as a fraud has existed, let us see if we can not harmonize it with what some other good brother will declare is truth; and if we find a difference of opinion let us refrain from giving cry publicly to our individual thought, fearing we may do an irreparable wrong to some sensitive who is but an instrument in the hands of the spirit world.

ANDREW C. DUNN.

Winnebago City, Minn.

The Court of Inquiry.

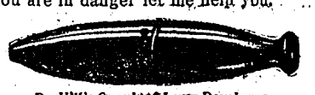
The Court of Inquiry will convene only in case of a Crisis in the Ranks of Spiritualism. There seems to be a Crisis now prevailing in our ranks, and the Court of Inquiry is instituted for the purpose of arriving at Facts involved in that Crisis, arising from the use of artificial paraphernalia, in which your spirit friends are supposed to appear. Andrew C. Dunn, a prominent Lawyer, leads off in the discussion.

MUSIC HYPNOTIZES HEARERS.

Curious Effect of Opera Melodies Played on a Harp.

Peoria, Ill., May 10.—Rosetti, a French harpist, a modern Svengali, worked a hypnotic spell Sunday evening, in which seven local Germans, adepts in music, were wafted to an unnatural sleep by his wonderful playing of his instrument. Herman Sanders, tenor, and Herman Bauer, zitherist, prominent residents, were among those who fell under Rosetti's spell. He played an Italian opera and the music fell from his finger tips so deftly that it fairly entranced his hearers.

Finally the old man left his instrument and went to his quarters. He awakened six hours afterwards and said he had traveled in a wonderful country of music and flowers. His subjects awakened at the same time and marveled over the strange circumstance. To-day Rosetti returned to Sanders for his harp and said he had almost forgotten where he had been Sunday night. Rosetti is 68 years old. He has been in America fifteen years and thirty-eight years ago was arrested in Paris for playing the "Marseillaise" on the street.—Chicago Chronicle.



Consumption

Cured by New

LUNG DEVELOPER

I Cured Myself—I Will Gladly Send Anyone My Discovery to Try FREE. Write Me,

If you have catarrh, bronchitis, a cough, lingering cold, or any other of the deadly symptoms of consumption, or if there is a record of consumption in your family history, write for my new Ozonized Lung Developer. I saved myself from a lingering death. I am saving others even worse off than I was. If you are in danger let me help you.

Dr. Hill's Ozonized Lung Developer.

By the invention of my Ozonized Lung Developer, I am able not only to build new cell tissue by systematic exercise of the lungs, but also to send Ozonized Oxygen into the innermost cells. The effect is immediate—the pulse is quickened, the nerves strengthened, the appetite increased. The result is truly marvelous.

If you have the hacking cough, or any of the throat or lung weaknesses that are the sure signs of Tuberculosis, don't delay. Send your name at once to Dr. J. Lawrence Hill, X020 Majestic Bldg., Jackson, Mich. He will send you immediately his new Ozonized Lung Developer, together with his New Rational System of treatment, which quickly rebuilds the wasted tissues of the body. This complete treatment—price $2.50—is sent free on approval. Test it thoroughly, then if satisfied with the help received, send me $2.50. If not, keep your money. You decide. My splendid book (in colors) on pulmonary diseases, sent free. Write me today.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 500 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

CANDIDLY

The World Has Never Seen the Like Before

Read This Offer:

Truly, the world has never seen the like before. Search the annals of history, ancient and modern; critically examine the history of Spiritualism; look here and there, in every nook and corner of the world, and you cannot find a parallel to the offer made in reference to these twelve remarkable Premium Books. They constitute a wonderfully valuable Spiritualistic and Occult library, and are furnished at a nominal sum. All are substantially bound and neatly printed, and those who purchase them are delighted with them. The last one to appear, "LETTERS FROM THE SPIRIT WORLD," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea, should be in every library. Read the following carefully:

We have now TWELVE magnificent Premium Books, and you can select from them as follows:

Any one of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price 25 cents. This is the price, remember, when you order only one book in connection with a yearly subscription. The paper, one year, and one Premium Book, $1.25.

Any two of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price 70 cents.

Any three of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.75.

Any six of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.05.

Any seven of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.

Any eight of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.65.

Any nine of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.90.

Any ten of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $3.10.

Any eleven of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $3.40.

Lastly, all of these TWELVE Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.75, something never before equalled in this country or Europe.

Bear in mind that every order for a Premium must be accompanied with a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker. We repeat that the world has never seen the like of it before.

OUR TWELVE REMARKABLE PREMIUM BOOKS FOR $3.75.

The following is the list of titles of the Twelve Premium Books:

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.

2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.

3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3. These three volumes have been prepared by J. R. Francis. They contain invaluable data.

4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.

5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.

6—The Next World Interviewed, by Mrs. S. G. Horn, a most remarkable medium.

7—The Occult Life of Jesus, by Alexander Smythe, a medium of rare gifts.

8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Translated by A. Farnese, a wonderful English medium.

9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science, by Hudson Tuttle.

10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

12—Letters from the Spirit World, written through the mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea.

Each Spiritualist should at once commencing forming a Spiritualist and Occult library.

When ordering a Premium Book, one or more, you must send in a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker.

WOMANLY BEAUTY

Of Form and Feature—The Cultivation and Preservation of Personal Beauty Based upon Health and Hygiene.

By twenty well-known physicans and specialists. With 80 half-tone and other illustrations. Edited by Albert Turner. A handsome volume, 256 pages, bound in cloth and gold.

In this volume the editor has brought together the teachings of those who have made a study of special features of the subject, and the result is a work that is unique and practical, not filled with a medley of receipts and formulas, so often found in books on beauty.

Fully illustrated with pictures that mean something to the reader, not of so-called "beauties," closing with chapters of "Hints in Beauty Culture" and "Hints in Health Culture," which, if followed, would alone be worth many times the price of the volume in securing health and good form, which is possible to all. Price $1.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

THE COURT OF INQUIRY.

Shall We Cultivate Honesty In Mediumship?

The above question is before the Spiritualists of this country. A large and growing class wants Spiritualism undefiled with artificial toggery, illuminated dresses, and subtle trickery and legerdemain. Another class objects to having mediums exposed who dress themselves in dirty cheese-cloth and other paraphernalia for the purpose of representing themselves as spirits. The breach between the two classes is widening. The Progressive Thinker represents the former class, which will only accept a pure, angelic and undefiled Spiritualism, always insisting on absolute honesty. The necessity of cleaning house comes from all parts of the United States. Moses Hull, now in the extreme West, writes of Portland, Ore.: "The Spiritualists are, or have been nearly faked out of existence. Some who were the best Spiritualists in Portland when I was here a dozen years ago never go near the meetings now, simply because of frauds. Spiritualists have sustained frauds for fear that in driving them out they might 'root up the wheat also.'"

THE PRESIDENT OF THE N. S. A.

Acting In That Responsible Capacity Ever Since the Inception of the Organization, and Having Had a Long and Varied Experience In Connection With the Phenomena and Philosophy of Spiritualism, Being One of the Ablest Lecturers, His Opinions Will Be Read With Great Interest In the COURT OF INQUIRY.

It was with great surprise, keen regret and a painful sense of humiliation, that I read Judge Dunn's elaborate defense of Winans and others of like ilk in respect to the mooted question of materialization. Surprise that such sophistry and nonsense should be advanced by such an erudite man as Judge Dunn; regret that this able jurist should lend himself voluntarily to the defense of wrong and outrage unspeakable; humiliation that our cause must needs be defended and apologized for by such poor logic as the old infamous Jesuitical doctrine, "the end justifies the means." No lover of truth and no person anxious to demonstrate the truth can ever accept that horrible dogma. If it is right for Winans, and (as Judge Dunn declares), all other materializing media to take their toggery into their cabinets with them, then it is right for lawyers to hire witnesses to go into court to swear to the innocence of their clients, even though said clients be red-handed murderers.

Judge Dunn errs in his very first paragraph in saying that Winans is one of "our most trusted and best accredited media." If the people who know what Winans' work really is, would tell the truth as it is, my good friend, Judge Dunn, would find to his surprise, that very few intelligent Spiritualists trust him or give him credit for even a modicum of honesty.

In truth Judge Dunn's own words convict Winans of having been a fraud through all of the years he has been before the public. He was caught in Hot Springs and obliged to exhibit his paraphernalia to the parties who detected him. He was caught in St. Paul years before and obliged to do the same thing there. He has been caught in other places and has always had his full supply of wigs, beards, masks, cheese cloth, etc., to exhibit to those who caught him. If he was to use these things while in the unconscious trance, was he unconscious when he bought them, concealed them about him, and had them always so conveniently at hand? Out upon such rank nonsense! "If the dear spirits" want to use wigs and cheese cloth in "making up" (?) they should call upon the more than "omnipotent" cabinet chemist," who would materialize them out of nothing, of course, in about one-quadrillionth of one second!

Brother Dunn's argument in favor of Winans' honesty, because of his willingness to have his cabinet examined and his own person searched, is simply amusing. Of course, he is willing to be searched, once, twice, thrice, or even a half-dozen times. His paraphernalia is never on his own person, but he always knows just where it is. Searching never avails anything, for the committee invariably searches the wrong person. If the one who has the toggery concealed about him were to be found, great would be the surprise of those present. It would not be the ubiquitous manager—it would not be the organist—nor anyone directly associated with the medium. It would be the man who posed as a skeptic, "present for the first time in his life at a place like this," or the modest, hollow-eyed little woman, who wants to see if she can get a message from her loved ones. It is too easy for anything, to do these things, to say nothing of the paid confederates, who attend the average seance to help the "poor, sick medium out." Confidence of the honest sitters is gained by the searching process, and by the courteous request of the medium to examine his cabinet. Then he is at liberty to fleece his victims without mercy.

As for Brothers Boving and Eastman, of Hot Springs, I have this to say—they certainly did what was right by Winans when he was ill, and if they had permitted him to defraud and deceive them, Judge Dunn would have found no fault with them. Because they had common sense and honor and the courage to use them, they are made the target of Judge Dunn's bitterest satire. Even supposing they were in fault on one side, was not the act of Winans in trying to deceive them in the name of their precious dead a much greater one? Was it not really the blackest of crimes? It hardly seems possible that a negro woman could or would be admitted into a seance of any white man, North or South. If such was the case in this instance, she was probably there at Winans' request, and was evidently the one whom he had hired to help him with his paraphernalia. The "poor, colored nurse" would be found to be after the cash, could the facts be determined as they really are. If our brothers in Hot Springs wish to clinch this matter they could do so by securing this woman's statement under oath, as to her true part in this conspiracy. I honor these men, as I do Brother Hale in Los Angeles, for their manly courage in exposing a wicked crime.

"Was Winans conscious?" Do ducks ever swim, Brother Dunn? Will anyone claim that Winans was unconscious when he purchased his wigs, cheese cloth, and other material used in his seance? Of course, Winans left a loop hole for his escape if caught in his trickery. "It might be materialization, etherealization, transfiguration, or impersonation!" Such was the broad ground he assumed at the outset, and if caught he was merely being used by the "dear spirits" to impersonate! Even in my palmy, "dead-easy" days, this quadruplet of possibilities became rather nauseating, and every sensible person finds it a thousand times more so to-day.

To justify the use of artificial paraphernalia in a materializing seance, is to ask man to stultify his own intelligence. To argue that the presence of such stuff is asked for by the spirits in order to husband their forces is to presume that all men are fools, and ready to believe that they are soon to have a large slice of that monstrous green cheese, the moon. No such material was allowed by Prof. Crookes in his seances with Miss Cook. No honest investigator, could feel that any evidence of honest fact were being given him, if he knew of their presence in the medium's cabinet. No intelligent spirit seeking to establish a great truth or principle would ever consent to the introduction of anything of the kind into a seance room or laboratory. It is truth and truth alone for which the honest excarnate spirit really stands, and his brother on earth ought to be equally as honest to find truth here. Prof. Crookes' work is the one hope of the Spiritualists of the world in respect to materialization. It was open, honest, above board, scientific. It stands alone in its class until substantiated by evidence equally clear, or overthrown by demonstration of absolute fact.

No doubt artificial toggery is a great help to such a medium. It helps him to put up a quicker show and a more perfect fraud. Legerdemain is now a fine art, and the material flowers brought into the seance room mentioned by Judge Dunn, are but one manifestation of its wonderful prowess. Legerdemain can, and does, account for many of the bogus manifestations of materializing fraud. Trickery is easy when confidence is once gained, and there are thousands who really enjoy being fooled. It makes them feel so good, don't you know?

Judge Dunn, however, has rendered Spiritualism a good service in one respect in his article. He has torn the masks from the faces of those harpies whom he so innocently defends, by admitting that they all use artificial means in producing their phenomena. This will open the eyes of many honest dupes and give them a chance to free themselves from all such influences. His argument that mediums have a perfect right to use artificial help, is no new one. I have heard it advanced for many years by people of low mental calibre and small spirituality, but never before by a man of culture who has worn the judicial ermine and is mentally equipped to know better. For the others there was the excuse of ignorance; for him—what excuse is there?

The writer does not claim to "know it all," neither does he assert that one failure or a dozen failures is evidence of fraud. A dozen counterfeits only prove that there is a genuine article somewhere. Therefore, I am a truth-seeker—not a fraud-hunter. When managers of seances go into seance rooms, armed with revolvers, bowie knives, sling-shots and brass knuckles, I feel that such paraphernalia is there for a purpose.

On the 5th day of the present month a gentleman told the writer that he once had a Colts' 45 navy revolver drawn on him at a certain materializing seance. He was "from Missouri, and wanted to know," hence the manager tried to shoot him. The party mentioned chanced to be a man of both courage and muscle. He caught the rascal's wrist and invited him to step outside of the house where both of them could have a chance to shoot! This case does not stand alone. There are hundreds like it, yet, according to Brother Dunn, the media and their managers had a perfect right to take these weapons into their seances in order that the spirits might do quicker and better work—that there was no harm in their use, provided the media were unconscious of having shot, stabbed, slugged, or killed one of more of their patrons!

For shame that such an argument could be, or has been, advanced! If wigs, cheese-cloth, coats, hats, ladies' wear, etc., are necessary for the spirits' use, no one can reasonably complain when revolvers, bowie-knives, sling-shots, and brass knuckles keep them company. The implements of murder are as "spiritual," "refined," "uplifting," "wholesome," and as justifiable as are the implements of deceit, spiritual dishonor and soul assassination! God help Spiritualism when it is reduced to this low level, and angels protect us when it comes to this—that we must accept fraud and rascality with as much complacency as we do truth and honesty!

Yours for Spiritual Spiritualism,
HARRISON D. BARRETT.

"Love—Sex—Immortality." By Dr. W. P. Phelon. Price 25 cents.

IS THERE ANY EXCUSE?

Hudson Tuttle, the Well-Known Author and Lecturer, and Editor-at-Large of the N. S. A., Presents His Views for the COURT OF INQUIRY In a Manner That Will Attract Great Attention.

During the time Spiritualism has been before the world, there has been a swarm of mountebanks who have pushed themselves to the front by brazen advertising, and by sleight-of-hand produced "manifestations," which have been impossible for the genuine medium. The result has been a succession of exposures which have disgraced the cause and driven away in disgust many who were otherwise attracted to it.

Yet in all these years there has never been a fakir exposed, even when the proofs were unanswerable, or self-confessed, but there were many champions ready to defend them. Always some plausible theory has been brought in explanation.

When the trumpet was blackened, and the paint was found on the medium's hands and lips, an unequivocal evidence of his part in the performance, the good believers said the black color was "transmitted from the spirit," and was rather proof that the spirits used the trumpet!

When spirits came out, making the floor creak under their tread, with breath tainted with onions or whisky, the believers said the spirit drew from the medium or attendants.

Yet of all the thousand theories brought in explanation of what to most people is transparent fraud, that of Mr. Andrew C. Dunn is the most ingenious and broad, FOR IT COVERS DECEPTION LIKE A BLANKET, AND SILENCES CRITICISM.

Mr. Dunn is a lawyer, reported as of more than usual ability, and surely has a remarkable gift to present his side with plausible address. He does not doubt that Winans had in his possession ALL THE PARAPHERNALIA claimed to have been found. He has no doubt Winans used them, or that they were used to impersonate spirits. Winans confessed that he carried this toggery for this purpose and used it.

Mr. Dunn further thinks all materializing mediums exactly follow Winans' method. They have three methods: "materialization," "impersonation," and "transfiguration." When they fail to have spirits materialize, they put on the toggery, or the spirits put it on them, and they parade as THE SPIRITS. Transfiguration is a phase few undertake, for it is impossible to imitate, or deceive in this high sphere of influence.

Mr. Dunn says: "What constitutes this so-called fraud? In what manner was this fraud disclosed? How was any deceit perpetrated?"

These questions reveal the peculiar mental condition which has made possible such frauds.

If Mr. Dunn was pleading the case of a burglar, who was caught not only with a housebreaker's kit in his possession, but in the act of using them, and afterwards he confessed that he used them for burglarous purpose, would he consider it sound argument that his client was innocent because he could not break into the house without his tools? What constitutes the fraud? How can this question be asked?

If pretending to have spirits materialize, to come before their friends in material form, while it is a sham, a masquerade, in toggery prepared for the purpose, is not fraud, what is fraud? How was it "disclosed?" If confession is not sufficient, what is more?

It is not satisfactory to say that the spirits take this way to assist themselves in "materializing," and the medium is not responsible because "unconscious." The medium is conscious while gathering his wigs, robes and tarletan raiment. He knows for what purpose he takes them into the seance. If the spirits advise this deception and assist in it, they are the greatest knaves of all.

THE THEORY IS A NEAT EXCUSE FOR FRAUD. IF THE SEANCE IS UNINTERRUPTED BY ADVERSE OBSERVATION, IT IS "WONDERFUL MATERIALIZATION!" IF THE SHAM IS EXPOSED, THE MEDIUM IS "PERSONATING!"

To affirm, in order to shield Winans, that all materializing mediums pursue his methods, we do not believe can be supported, but it undoubtedly is of the great class who advertise their shows, and have a set programme.

THERE IS NO NECESSITY OF A "CABINET" OR OF DARKNESS. The great medium, D. D. Home, had the most astonishing manifestations in the light and in parlors without any fixtures. Investigators should demand a light sufficient to see plainly, and let those who prefer the conditions imposed by deception revel in the "dark circle."

IT IS ALL WELL TO SAY, "LET US HAVE PEACE IN OUR RANKS," BUT IF PEACE IS TO BE GAINED BY UPHOLDING SUCH RANK DECEPTIONS, BY CONSTANTLY APOLOGIZING WITH BLUSHES OF SHAME FOR THE EXPOSURES OF SHAMS AND FRAUDS, BY ALLOWING THE MOST SACRED FEELINGS OF THE HEART TO BE TRIFLED WITH BY CONSCIENCELESS RASCALS, BETTER BE A CONFLICT UNTIL THESE VAMPIRES ARE CUT OFF.

It is such as these that have been a curse to the cause, and constantly brought it into disrepute. If you search for the reason for the decline in interest, it is readily found in the obloquy these shows have cast on the cause. Such an exposure accompanied with confession, should once and forever carry the criminal out of the ranks of Spiritualism, and to condone and excuse, is to sacrifice the cause to assist those whose place is behind prison bars.

Spiritualists have one course, and only one, and that to demand TRUTHFULNESS AND INTEGRITY. If they do not, if they excuse and palliate the mountebanks they must expect to be judged by the world by these vampires who represent them.

If they do not cut them off, they must expect the disgrace of having it done for them by the police, and to be identified by the outside world with the frauds.

As long as these fakirs are supported by professed spiritual journals, who give space to correspondents who write in their interest, extolling their "wonderful" performances, and disparaging all attempts to enlighten the public as to their real character, they will flourish, and be representative. Let the line between the true and the false be sharply drawn, and maintained and things be called by their right name.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

"The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional." This book, by the well known Father Chiniquy, reveals the degrading, impure influences and results of the Romish confessional, as proved by the sad experience of many wrecked

Spiritism and Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's Theories in Regard to It. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey. Demonstrates futility and inadequacy of Hudson's explanations of spiritual phenomena. Price 25 cents.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE I. S. S. A.

A True Friend of All Honest Mediums, an Eloquent Advocate of the Phenomena and Philosophy, and Ever Watchful for the Interests of Pure and Undefiled Spiritualism, He Adds Much Interest to the COURT OF INQUIRY, by his Comprehensive Views.

Our genial brother, Judge Dunn, is so loyal to his self-styled certainties about physical phenomena as to invite the application to himself of the ancient prophet's words: "Ephraim is joined to idols; let him alone." Eighty-nine years have passed since Commodore Decatur uttered at Norfolk that famous toast to our country: "May she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong." Our Winnebago City sage seems to almost paraphrase that sentiment into, May materialization always be honest; but materialization, honest or false.

Not so very many months ago Bro. Dunn favored The Progressive Thinker's readers with a glowing eulogy of a Chicago medium whose materializing seance he attended at the Clinton camp. Last August Bro. W. E. Kellogg, of New Boston, Ill., who shared with Winans' attorney by volunteer assignment, the honor of being mortal escort for the spirit which in its peregrinations from the cabinet on that occasion so enraptured our astute judge, privately gave the other side of the story of that evening, and more recent developments about that identical medium at the same center afford ample ground for believing that it was not Bro. Kellogg who was fooled at the seance, which filled Bro. Dunn with an overflowing faith in both medium and manifestation.

We hear at times much from press and stump about the "Iowa idea" upon a political and economical question. On two different occasions, to our personal knowledge, there has been expression of what might be called a "Minnesota idea" of materialization. A dozen years ago a Spiritualist who had just moved to Chicago from Minnesota, gravely explained the presence of robes, wigs, dummies and masks in a cabinet, during or after a seance, by saying the spirits produced them independently of mortal sources—that on each occasion this assortment of misfit toggery came fresh from spirit looms and factories—that spirits never wore one another's garments. Now another inspired Minnesota brain finds that "ready-made" clothing supplied by mortals greatly conserves spirit power by enabling it to be wholly devoted to production of the forms, which can instantly slide into their waiting wardrobes.

I am grateful for this information. Recently in a Michigan will case a rasping attorney called upon me to explain whence the clothing worn by spirits came. On second thought I am glad I did not then know, for the figment of fanciful explanation endorsed by our excellent Brother Dunn would not have strengthened the side of Spiritualism with the Presbyterian judge, or hostile jury, in whose keeping the issues of that case lay.

EVERY MEDIUM CAUGHT WITH PARAPHERNALIA OR IMPLEMENTS OF TRICKERY, IN HIS POSSESSION IS NO MORE ENTITLED TO CONFIDENCE THAN THE BURGLAR WITH HIS SKELETON KEYS, JIMMY AND DARK LANTERN; THE THUG WITH HIS BLUDGEON, OR THE COUNTERFEITER WITH HIS SPURIOUS COIN OR FRUITFUL MOLDS. WINANS WAS NOT ONLY CAUGHT WITH ARTICLES IN HIS POSSESSION WHICH NO MEDIUM NEEDS FOR GENUINE MANIFESTATIONS, BUT WAS DETECTED IN WEARING SOME OF THEM.

Judge Dunn, with the habit of his profession, multiplies words to create the impression that Winans was unconscious when he made conscienceless use of his deceptive outfit and therefore wholly blameless. Facts do not bear out that baseless assumption. In The Progressive Thinker of April 22, appears a "Defense of Winans." Among its signers was "Prof. Leith Old, Lecturer New Thought Society." After he left Hot Springs, I with a few friends met Prof. Old at a private home in Chicago and he there said that Winans admitted that he did practice trickery upon Dr. Eastman and Mr. Boving and gave as his reason therefore that he was called upon to work before his strength was sufficiently regained—which has been fully refuted by the above gentleman. Consciously, deliberately, wilfully he played the game, as the cold facts show, but specious pleadings deny.

Let me suggest that no one but materializing mediums themselves will be moved to apply the epithet of "fool" to Judge Dunn for his defense will prove a veritable bomb for their phase, among thinking people. The rest of us concede his sincerity and think too highly of him personally, to indulge in any individual abuse.

The most radical reformer in our ranks has never gone to the limit of charging that all phenomenal mediums carry and use paraphernalia. Truly they should join in prayer for deliverance from such friends as this valiant defender. Spiritualists from ocean to ocean will carefully note whether the physical workers endorse his statement by remaining silent under its imputation, or rise in indignation to an emphatic refutation of the charge. It is only one additional step to the endorsement of the use of professional cabinet confederates, for mortals should relieve spirit intelligences of all need for exertion. We will then have "ready-made" clothing and implements together with "ready-made" and inhabited bodies and the celestial denizens can loll in perfect laziness and mortals be the entire "push." DO NOT ASK US TO BELIEVE THERE ARE NO MATERIALIZING MEDIUMS WHOSE WORK IS ABSOLUTELY GENUINE! BUT LET US HAVE THE TRUTH AT ALL HAZARDS. We stand ready to donate our cast-off trousers for use of the angels.

Let us all study Sir Wm. Crookes' testimony upon materialization—the phase sadly needs the prestige of his endorsement and the support of equally careful methods. He concluded about it that it was an error to hold darkness essential to its phenomena, and his best results, with few exceptions, were in the light; they were given in his own house, at times appointed by himself, and under circumstances which absolutely precluded the employment of the very simplest instrumental aids instead of only in the rooms of, or, at hours named by the medium in advance; the sitters did not need to be selected by the medium, or be believers in the doctrine the latter taught, and he chose his own circle of friends, introduced any hard-headed unbeliever he chose and generally imposed his own terms to prevent fraud.

Presumably he or his friends had relatives in spirit life, but he does not tell of any of them appearing.

With Home as medium, a dark, shadowy, semi-transparent form like that of a man, seen by all present, stood near the window, waved the curtain and faded away, or a phantom form visible to all present for many minutes came from the corner and glided about the room playing an accordion picked up therein. Not a word, spoken by the spirit forms and no record of their recognition by the sitters.

In Florence Cook's manifestations no one but her guide, Katie King, appeared, walked, talked and was embraced. Minimize the probability of one's own lost ones materializing to mourners and overweening devotion to the phase will be checked and it will be studied in the light of sober reason. Prof. Crookes omits all mention of his spirit visitors requiring human-made garments, wigs and bowie knives. What force they must have wasted in providing their own clothing!

All phases of phenomena must be spontaneous in their manifestations to be genuine. Etherealization undoubtedly occurs at infrequent intervals and under the operation of forces not understood on the mortal plane. It can not be commanded by the will of the medium, the wish of the sitter, or by the financial necessities of either or both. I am not prepared to say that it may not so vary in density, or degree of solidification, as to reach the stage called by many materialization, but in that case its occurrence is still far less than the number of times it is offered for sale as a certainty. The same conditions apply to impersonation and transfiguration, the former occurring more frequently. I imagine Bro. Dunn is just a little too ready to accept so-called phenomena, and many of us have passed through the same stage whose completion required double, or more, the years he has given to investigation.

Daniel Dunglass Home, the great Scotch medium under oath said: "I have no control over them (physical phenomena) whatever—they occur irregularly, and even when I am asleep. Sometimes I am many months, and once I have been a year without them. They will not happen when I wish, and my will has nothing to do with them."

We will all join with Judge Dunn in a search for "solid testimony," but may differ from him in the use to be made of it when discovered. We have tried the plan of refraining from "giving cry publicly to our individual thought" for one-half the lifetime of Modern American Spiritualism. As a result the most certain thing about the character of our phenomena is their uncertainty. Moses Hull described the widespread condition of our cause when he wrote from Ashland, Oregon: "Spiritualists are, or have been nearly faked or frauded out of existence." The day of their deliverance approaches. Wrong will not always be upon the throne. Our individual differences of opinion are but the travail of enduring truth into birth.

GEORGE B. WARNE.

Leaves From the Diary of a Spiritualist Medium

An Interesting and Instructive Narrative from the Pen of that Talented Lady and Excellent Medium, Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vermont.

(Continued From No. 807.)

"Sensible people will say nothing," I replied, "and those who are not sensible are not worth noticing. If you are ever to find peace and happiness you must do what you know to be right and pay no attention to the idle talk of idle people. If you will give your mother a few words of praise every time you can find a chance you will find it will work wonders. Remember what the Bible tells you, and don't give grudgingly, but cheerfully, and do it heartily as unto the Lord. You have never got anything out of the Bible yet that was really worth having, and now is a good time to begin. I have no idea that any course of treatment will transform your mother-in-law into an angel during this incarnation, but you will find that she will be a much more comfortable woman to live with if you follow my advice."

"I will follow it and begin at once," was the reply.

Having disposed of the mother-in-law according to the best light given me, I went into the deserted sitting-room and sat down to think out the young man's case. I am not accustomed to dealing with young men, and I was at an entire loss to know what to do. I felt my ignorance and inability painfully, and it was plain to me that I would have to rely upon spirit guidance. After some minutes occupied in intense thought I noticed a slight tapping upon the book shelves, and looking, I saw a woman's hand resting upon one of the books as if to remove it. I arose to go to the shelves and the hand vanished. The book was a well-worn manual of botany and the fly leaf told me that it belonged to Mrs. Blind. A light broke in upon my mental darkness and I went in search of Mrs. Blind. I found her engaged in altering a frock for Miss Vivian, and as I approached I heard that young lady say, "You have not half ironed my lace and I hate the dress anyway. I always have the meanest-looking old things to wear—" Here she caught sight of me and left the room abruptly.

Mrs. Blind looked tearful and harassed.

"You can see for yourself what an ungrateful child I have got," she exclaimed impetuously, "that girl just wears the life out of me with her fault-finding, and here I am making a slave of myself every day for her."

I drew a long, deep breath. "Mrs. Blind," I said gently, "lay down your work, lean back in your chair, fold your hands quietly and let the light of truth illumine your soul and mind. Now listen to me. You have a God-given right to freedom and it is yours of you will claim it, but if you will make a slave of yourself you have no cause to complain if others accept of your slavedom and insist upon adding to your bondage. You are doing for your daughter what she ought to do for herself. If she does not know how, it is high time that she was taught. No superior power is going to do for you what you can do for yourself if you will."

"Next time your daughter finds fault with a piece of work you have done for her just say to her kindly but firmly: 'If I have not done it to please you, hereafter you must do it for yourself'; and then see that she does it and does it well. This is a duty you owe your daughter as well as yourself. You have no moral right to encourage her in her ignorance and selfishness. But it is of your son I wish to speak. Is he interested in botany?"

"He used to be, but he filled the house so full of weeds and litter that I couldn't stand for it, so I just put a stop to it," was the careless reply.

I went to my room thinking how much easier it is to make a mistake take than it is to rectify it, and how often we fail to recognize the way leading to the attainment of those things which we most desire. It is only through the cultivation of the spiritual nature and perception that we can hope to see clearly what is best for ourselves and others.

On my way to Blindville I stopped at the office and got my mail and in one of my letters I found some pressed flowers from the far South, and as soon as supper was over I produced them for Max Blind's benefit and soon had him engaged in animated conversation. The family soon left us to ourselves and for two hours we talked botany and kindred subjects, or rather he did, for I only made remarks to draw him out and listened attentively. During this conversation I learned that it was a hard blow to the young man when his mother refused to have his "litter," as she termed it, about the house any more.

"It's no use," he said gloomily, "I can't have anything I want here at home. I can't even ask one of the boys to come and see me without there's a fuss. If one of them happens to call, it's always, 'Be careful, Max, and don't step on my pansy rug with your dirty feet! O, look out! you'll jamb my silk pillow!' I am always getting tangled up in some blamed thing or other."

I laughed. "You have my sympathy," I said. "I love the beautiful, but I do not propose to be its slave."

Just then Mrs. Glum bounced into the room, and with her habitual straightforwardness, said to me: "Be you a Spiritualist medium?"

"I am," I said, wondering what next.

"Wall, the Widder Riley, she that was Becky Jane Harvey, that lives down here in the yeller house, has jist been in and she told me you was, but I wouldn't believe it. I guess Abigail don't know it, but if ye can call up dead folks and hear 'em and see 'em as the Widder Riley says you can, I want you to call up some for me."

I hesitated for a moment and then I said: "I cannot call up the dead, but if any of your friends you call dead are here with you to-night it is quite probable that I may be able to give you some message from them, provided we can make the conditions right."

"We'll make 'em right," she exclaimed excitedly. "Here, Max, you clear that truck an' dicker offen that table so that it can tip if it wants to, and I'll put out the lights."

I put out a detaining hand and said, "It is entirely unnecessary to do either. Before I proceed any farther I must consult Mrs. Blind, for I do not want to overstep my privileges."

Max who had regarded me with great interest during the conversation with his grandmother, now left the room but soon returned with his mother and sisters. Mrs. Blind seemed pleased with the turn affairs had taken.

"Run out, Vivian," she said, "and close the shutters and put out the light in the hall."

"What do you want to do that for?" said her son. "Haven't you a right to have a circle in your own house? You are not going to commit a crime, are you?"

"No," said Mrs. Glum, slyly, "she's only goin' to take a bath." At this they all laughed, and harmony was restored.

We had our little circle and I know by the conversation I heard afterward that I must have done extra well. Whatever they got it was something that took hold of them powerfully and they needed it. When I was going to my room Max slipped into the hall and sinking his voice to a whisper, said:

"That was my grandmother who came to me to-night, and I know it, and so does my mother. My grandmother thought the world of me, and if she had lived—O, Mrs. Drury, I— I—"

I knew just what he wanted to say and I land my hand upon his arm and said gently, "Yes, I think I understand; you have made some mistakes but you will never make the same ones again. Your life lies before you bright and beautiful if you will make it so. You are building your future now hour by hour, and you can make it grand and noble if you will. The grandmother who loved you so well loves you better now and watches over you fondly. You will not grieve her again, I know, but strive with all your power to make the noble man she wants you to make, that you yourself want to make, and will make. From this hour you will find you have begun a new life. Give good and seek for good and good will come to you."

The next day I talked with Mrs. Blind and spoke very plainly to her, and in conclusion I said: "Your son will make a man you may well be proud of if you will do your duty by him. Scolding and fault-finding never did any good yet. They only serve to strengthen the habits you wish to destroy. The one remedy for evil is good, therefore apply it and attend to it faithfully and let the evil entirely alone. Encourage your children to invite into their home those who ought to be their associates. Your son knows far better than you do what young men are fit to associate with his sisters, and you can trust him to choose wisely. Let them have their games and their music and throw your troubles to the wind and join in with them and renew your youth in the society of youth; then if you see a tendency to anything you consider evil you will be the better fitted to suggest the good that will overcome it. Make those who gather here feel that they are welcome, and if you have anything in your rooms that you consider to be too good to use, put it away. What are a few fancy articles, however beautiful, to the welfare of your children? Let your son pursue his studies in botany, and be very thankful he has the desire to do so. Take an interest in his work—you can if you will—and help him all you can. I would suggest that you give your son a room to fit up and use just as he pleases and place no restrictions upon him."

Mrs. Blind loves her children devotedly—there is no doubt about that—and some of my enthusiasm seemed to fire her and she at once began to plan, and when her son came home to dinner she told him what she had decided to do. The boy gave me a look of gratitude I shall never forget, and went and kissed his mother. I left the two alone together. What passed between them I do not know, but I am sure there is a bond of sympathy established between them that was never there before, and God grant that it may grow ever stronger and more precious as the years roll on.

That afternoon Mrs. Glum went out making calls and the result was four ladies came that evening and asked Mrs. Blind's permission to join our circle, and Max brought a motherless youth home with him.

Right here I will note the fact that the last night I was there, twelve besides the Blind family attended our circle, and several urged me to go to their homes and hold circles.

The next day Mrs. Blind asked me to go with her and look at the chambers occupied by her daughters. Miss Vivian was in her room and as we entered she hastily concealed a paper-covered book in the folds of her dress, but she was not quick enough to escape her mother's observation.

(To be continued.)

PILES CURED BY ABSORPTION

Thousands Are Being Quickly Cured of This Dreadful Affliction By Great Michigan Doctor's 3-Fold Discovery.

A DOLLAR PACKAGE FREE

To Try if You Write at Once

Send your name to-day and get by return mail free to try, Dr. Van Vleck's complete new 3-fold absorption cure for Piles, Ulcer, Fissure, Prolapse, Tumors, and Constipation. Test it thoroughly, and then if you are fully satisfied with the relief it gives you, you can send us one dollar. If not, it costs you nothing. You Decide after trying it.

G. W. VAN VLECK, M. D., LL. D. Ex-Pres. Medical University, of Ohio, Ex-Surgeon U. S. Army.

This treatment is 3-fold, consisting of Dr. Van Vleck's Absorptive Plasma, Muco-Food Cones, and Pile Pills. It is curing some of the worst cases on record—even after 30 or 40 years' suffering, and the cure is lasting because the treatment is constitutional as well as local, removing the underlying causes. If you have piles or the itching, burning sensation which tells that the dreaded disease is coming, don't delay, but write to-day to the Dr. Van Vleck Co., X020 Majestic Bldg., Jackson, Mich., for the trial package on approval. We send also a valuable book, in colors, on Piles, etc—all in plain wrapper.

FREETHOUGHT AND LIBERAL PAMPHLETS

These pamphlets were published by Mr. Green in the Freethought Magazine and are all by eminent and able writers. The price on most of them has been reduced.

Roscoe Conkling. Memorial Oration. by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price 3 cents.

Thomas Paine. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price 3 cents.

Voltaire. An address by Prof. Emile Pingault. Price 3 cents.

Abraham Lincoln. His Religion. By Robert N. Reeves. Price 3 cents.

Burns and Whittier. Some of Their Likenesses and Differences. By Prof. Charles G. Brown. Price 5 cents.

Religion in the Republic. By Mrs. M. A. Freeman. Price 5 cents.

Rational Worship. A lecture delivered before the Chicago Liberal Society by Dr. T. B. Gregory of Chicago. Price 8 cents.

Why I Am Not a Christian. By D. D. Stedman. Price 8 cents.

Genesis to Revelation. Free Thought Commentary on the Whole Bible. By Judge Parish B. Ladd. Price 10 cents.

Revelation Under the Microscope of Evolution. By Prof. Daniel T. Ames. Price 10 cents.

Life and Career of Charles Bradlaugh. By George Jacob Holyoake. Price 10 cents.

Religion and Science. The "Reconciliation Mania" of Dr. Paul Carus of The Open Court. Analyzed and Refuted by "Corvinus." Price 10 cents.

Free Thought Past, Present and Future. By Prof. Thaddeus B. Wakeman. With his portrait and life sketch. Price 10 cents.

The Priest and the Church—What Have They Done for the World? By Judge Parish B. Ladd. Price 15 cents.

John Tyndall Memorial. Ten short sketches of the life of this great man. Price 10 cents.

Cosmology Against Theology. By Vindex. Price 10 cents.

Church and State. The Bible in the Public Schools. The New American Party. A Criticism by "Jefferson." Price 10 cents.

Standing Up for Jesus; or What the Editor of the Freethinkers' Magazine Thinks of Jesus. Price 3 cents.

"Why An Expurgated Bible?" By Rev. E. H. Keeas. Price 3 cents.

Progress of Evolutionary Thought. The opening address before the Congress of Evolutionists, held in Chicago, Sept. 28, 29 and 30, 1893. By B. F. Underwood, the chairman. Price 3 cents.

Christianity; Its Impeachment and Decadence, Also Demands of Liberalism. By Dr. F. E. Abbot and Prof. T. B. Wakeman. Price 3 cents.

Myth of the Great Deluge. By James M. McCann. Price 15 cents.

The Evolution of the Devil. By Henry Frank. Price 20 cents.

Prayer; Its Uselessness and Unscientific Assumption. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

Liberalized Christianity. By Henry M. Taber. Price 5 cents.

The Republic in Danger. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

In Place of Christianity. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

UNCOOKED FOODS

And How to Live on Them—With Recipes for Wholesome Preparation.

Proper combinations and menus, with the reason uncooked food is best for the promotion of health, strength and Vitality. By Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Christian. Illustrated.

No one can afford to be without this book. Any one who tries some of the special recipes will discover that proper preparation increases the palatability of food. Learn how and what to cook in order to build and retain the highest degree of normal health by following the recipes of this cook book.

It will simplify methods of living, help to settle the servant question and the financial problems as well as point the way for many to perfect health. Price $1.

"Right Generation the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth." By Dr. M. E. Conger. An appeal to reason and man's highest aspirations. A plea for justice and equality in all the relations of life between men and women. Cloth, 75 cents; leatherette, 50 cents.

Social Upbuilding, including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennoblement of Humanity." By E. D. Babbitt, LL. D., M. D. This comprises the last part of Human Culture and Cure. Paper cover, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street,

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year..... $1 00
Six Months..... 50cts
Thirteen Weeks..... 25cts
Single Copy..... 5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE:

☞At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1905.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Any person donating one dollar to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., will, if desired, receive one set of spiritual tracts and one copy of "Violets," a booklet of choice spiritual poems. One contributing two dollars to the fund will also receive a copy of "Leaves of Truth," a cloth-bound book of instructive spiritual matter.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.
500 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C.

Truth and Error Should Not Combine.

In the "National Review," London, of a late date, from under the head of "Agnosticism and National Decay," we extract the following:

"Religion, for a very large number, and those in stations of influence, is no longer on its trial; it has ceased to exist. Doubt, positive and paralyzing, has taken hold of so many that a protest in the shape of revivals, accompanied by intense excitement, is spreading among the less educated, who feel that the clergy themselves have too often opened the gates which they were sworn to defend and are letting in the enemy. The future of England, as of other countries at a like degree of culture depends on its attitude toward the secularist or agnostic view of life and action."

All who read know agnosticism has taken a powerful hold on the educated classes. The age in which we live is based on knowledge. Faith, on which popular religions were built, had its rise in an age of ignorance, when the statement of a priest was the voice of God. Confidence in priestly clamor having failed, and the mind free to reason, doubt comes to the front, and is succeeded by denial.

Spiritualism furnishes the only proof of an immortal life. It supplies the evidence agnostics demand. This evidence came to the church; but it was repudiated by them, and this the cause Christianity is in decay.

But it is well. The popular religions were loaded down with the errors of paganism. To engraft the truth on it, a hybrid would be the product, and that product would not be worthy of preservation.

They who are striving to imitate the errors of Christianity, to unite the knowledge of the one with the faith of the other, are only hastening to destruction the creedless truth the immortals have taught us.

Truth and Error cannot dwell together in unity. Creeds are made to perpetuate ancient thought, and contract knowledge, not to expand it.

The mind, disenthralled from creeds, can roam through a boundless universe at will, gathering wisdom at every advance; but tied down and back to a narrow church creed and progress is ended.

Probable Origin of the Deluge Story.

They who wish to bolster up the idea of a universal flood, covering all the earth, and destroying all life, save such as was preserved in the ark, so as to strengthen belief in Bible narration, quote the universality of such belief by widely separated nations, as proof of its genuineness, forgetting, or never knowing, that all the great Western civilizations had a common origin in Central Asia, and in their emigrations carried with them traditionary accounts of such flood.

Geology gives evidence that there was a time when a great deluge did inundate both the valleys of the Euphrates and Tigris, and even covered the high land between those rivers, known to the Greeks as Mesopotamia. These rivers have their rise in the Taurus and Armenian mountains. With many tributaries they flow south-east, the last five hundred miles nearly parallel to each other, finally uniting and entering the Persian Gulf through a delta common to both rivers.

Probably nearly if not all the emigration which subsequently entered Europe, bringing their religion, a multitude of traditions, and some portions of the Sanskrit language with them, by which scholars are able to trace their migrations, passed through those valleys, and there learned of the great flood. The account was magnified by each narrator, until it was finally rendered stable by the sensational historian whose account is now received by many as divine inspiration.

Let us all weep if that is the way our oldest histories were written.

A New Kind of Revival.

Wm. T. Stead, the able editor of the London Review of Reviews, says: "A revival is a veritable moral epidemic. It spreads like the plague. Its coming is as mysterious as an outbreak of influenza. Its departure is as inexplicable. While it lasts there is no doubt about its infectiousness. It spreads like cholera by contact. To those who have long since divested their minds of all belief in anything supernatural, who have outlived their religion as they have survived their measles, the revival must present a fascinating subject for study."

We have greatly abridged Mr. Stead's article, but have carefully preserved his words and ideas. They were introductory to his mention of the recent great revival in Wales. The victims of that revival, he informs his readers, are the ordinary sensual kind of an animal. "They were as illegitimate in their birth-rate as the worst of their neighbors, and were at least as much addicted as other men to the grosser forms of intemperance and the crimes which drunkenness engenders."

Then Mr. S. said, "The apparently extinct volcano is in full eruption, and South Wales is in the throes of a religious revival." But note:

"It is a revival of a new kind. Heretofore a great outburst of religious enthusiasm has usually been due to a similar cause to that which produces eruptions of Krakatoa and the like. But in South Wales there has been no application of hell-fire to the explosive imagination of mankind. The note of the revival is love. These rude miners, not less than the smooth townsmen, have rediscovered love as the supreme law of life. For them conversion means the acceptance of a Divine Love hitherto pressed upon them in vain; and the religious life to which they publicly pledged themselves means but the daily application of the same law of love in all the relations of life. Forgiveness of all injuries is the watchword of the revival. If you forgive not your brother neither will the good God forgive you."

It must be admitted this is a new kind of a revival, and if fully carried out in practice it will not be a bad epidemic to be afflicted with. We commend it to Rev. Billy Sunday, to the Rev. Sam Jones, and to all others of that ilk. Instead of love as the inspiring influence in revivals, fear has been the agent employed, and hate has been the outgrowth. Fortunately the ailment has another resemblance to small pox. It rarely or never attacks the same person twice. Once afflicted, followed by recovery, and the patient is immune from a repetition of the contagion.

The Right Triumphed.

The late pending bill in the French House of Deputies, providing for the separation of church and state, has been adopted and become a law, so far as to proclaim: "The Republic neither recognizes, provides stipends for, nor subsidizes any religion.' The vote stood on its final passage, 337 for, to 233 against, a handsome working majority of over 100 in favor of the measure.

All the ancient governments, back as far as we have history, claimed to hold authority from the god they worshiped. The kings were the heads of the church, the supreme pontiffs, as is still the czar of Russia, and as is the Protestant king of Great Britain, with the amended title of Defender of the Faith. The kings of Austria, Spain, and until the late revolution, Italy, and most of the other nationalities outside of Germany and Switzerland, are subordinate to the pope, the supreme pontiff at Rome, all pledged to do him homage, he being the liege lord of all. It was an inheritance to that functionary from his pagan predecessors.

Great Britain has been laboring for many years trying to divorce its civil and ecclesiastical departments; but thus far without success. The United States, under the masterly direction of the fathers of the American revolution, were the first to lead in this great reform.

With the spread of intelligence all nations must necessarily fall into line, and leave the churches outside of civil governments, allowing them to manage their own institutions in their own way, so long as they keep hands off from the secular government, and do not trespass on the rights of individuals. This, however, seems almost an impossible thing for them to do.

The Kaiser on the Japanese.

A peculiar man is the German kaiser, and his speeches and actions are many times of a rather startling character. An instance is thus reported, of a recent date:

Berlin, May 8.—The Evangelische Kirchen Zeitung to-day prints a detailed report of Emperor William's remarks when swearing in the naval recruits at Wilhelmshaven on March 9, in which, according to the very brief report published at the time, he cited the Japanese as a luminous example of patriotism and soldierly fidelity. The Kirchen Zeitung's resume of the speech is as follows:

"The emperor referred to the heroic deeds of the Japanese and added that these are born of Japanese patriotism and love for children, which in turn resulted in splendid discipline in the army and navy. One must not, however, draw the conclusion from Japanese victories—victories of a heathen over a Christian people—that Buddha is superior to our Lord Christ. The Russian defeat, in his opinion, was due to the fact that Russian Christianity was in a deplorable condition. The Japanese, on the other hand, could show many Christian virtues. A good Christian makes a good soldier. Among the German people, too, Christianity is in a sad condition, and he doubted whether we Germans, in case of war, would have the right to pray God for victory—to force it from him like Jacob wrestling with the angel. The Japanese are the scourge of God, like Attila and Napoleon. It devolves upon us to take care that God does not chastise us some day with such a scourge."

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

"Death Defeated; or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young." By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D. Price $1, 10 cents.

"The New Life." By Leroy Berrier. Eminently suggestive along the lines of "new thought." Excellent in tone and tendencies. Price, cloth, $1.

THE LIBERTY OF PROTESTANTISM

By an Orthodox Minister.

The following article was first published in Scribner's Monthly, July, 1873:

Protestantism arose not only to protest against the papal corruptions, but also against the papal tyranny over the minds and consciences of men. But in this last respect there is also need of protest against Protestantism; for there is neither liberty of thought nor of conscience allowed to those within the pale of orthodox Protestantism.

If left to adult years to choose for themselves, they have the liberty to adopt one of many different creeds. But, having once done so, their liberty of private judgment ceases; for henceforth the judgment of their creed framer becomes the limit and measure of their own. They may not transcend the limits of thought fixed by their creed, except at risks which few will dare to take. The conscience, too, is bound, for it demands an utterance for profound convictions which they dare not give.

The liberty of Protestantism is, therefore, simply the privilege of choosing a sect. It is said, the communicant has the liberty of leaving the church. But that is not liberty, for he is compelled to do so if he differs from its creed. It is said, also, that he joins the church on confession of faith, thereby agreeing to adhere to its sreed while he remains in it. Is not that a fair compact? And what infringement of his liberty is there in requiring him to take himself off when he can no longer adhere to it? If he was capable when he espoused the creed of examining it and understanding it; if he knew the nature of the compact he was entering; and if, in dismissing him, the church imposed no disabilities, then there is no wrong done him. But there is rarely a case where all these conditions are fulfilled. If the point in which he differs from the chosen sect be one merely of difference between orthodox sects, he may be dismissed from one to the other without serious disadvantage to himself. But if his doubts concern a point in which all orthodox sects agree, then he must leave orthodoxy entirely, and incur the odium of heterodoxy, which involves always the suspicion of moral delinquency. Doubt is considered a sign of depravity; and orthodoxy treats the doubter as though he were immoral, not only by the withdrawal of confidence but by visiting upon him the same penalties as are executed against gross immorality, viz., arraignment and expulsion if he does not recant.

If this mode of treatment is unjust towards those who have entered the church intelligently and responsibly, it becomes a gross abuse of liberty in the case of a large majority of doubters who join the church in early youth, before they are capable either of investigating or understanding its creed. Probably ninety-nine out of every hundred doubters are of this class. While too young to doubt they accept, and profess honestly to believe the creed of their fathers, because they have been taught to do so from their infancy. They grow up in the church and learn to love it as the mother that has watched over and reared them. They are loyal to it and make sacrifices for its maintenance. More than that, they are loyal to Christ, devout and faithful Christians. But with growth and culture they come to the ability to think and investigate for themselves, and so to doubt the creed they accepted unquestioningly and blindly at first. For them there two courses possible. One is to give an outward adherence to doctrines they disbelieve, and the other to separate from the church they love, and around which are entwined the fondest memories of their childhood and youth. It is not strange that the majority prefer the former course, and consent to suppress their convictions, and maintain an outward allegiance to a creed which in their heart they repudiate, rather than leave the church.

There can be no doubt that there are thousands in the Protestant churches to-day who, if required publicly to render the same confession of faith which they made when they first entered the church, could not do it conscientiously. But the church accepts their external adherence, though cognizant of their heart-defection, and thus becomes a particeps criminis to a system of deceit which effectually undermines all integrity of character, sacrificing that for which alone the church was established, for the sake of an appearance of doctrinal soundness; preserving the shell, but destroying the kernel; debauching the conscience for the sake of preserving the creed intact.

But if the doubter will not suppress his convictions, and maintain an outward adherence to the creed he blindly accepted when he was too young, to investigate it, he meets the same fate as if he had been a knowing, responsible party to the compact; that is, he is excluded from the communion he has loved and supported from his childhood. Surely that is not liberty which hedges the thinker about with disabilities, which though not so malignantly cruel, are yet just as effectual in repressing liberty of thought and conscience as were the fagot, the thumbscrew and other tortures of the Inquisition.

Orthodox Protestantism is avowedly opposed to all theologic thought that does not harmonize with the creeds. It says to its adherents, "You may think, but within the limits prescribed by the creed. You may investigate, but you must always come to the same conclusion."

This is not liberty, but bondage.

And this bondage is felt more or less by every private member who thinks; but to the ministry it becomes a grievous burden and hindrance to efficiency. For while they are held to a stricter account for their opinions, they also suffer greater loss in case their orthodoxy is impugned. A slight suspicion of heterodoxy is usually sufficient to hedge up the way of a minister in any of the orthodox churches.

Any serious divergence from the prescribed and beaten track of theologic thought is sure to provoke grave discussion and threats of dismission on the part of the church, or his conference hastens to test his soundness, and if he is found to hold any obnoxious opinion he must renounce it, or he is declared a dangerous innovator; the pulpit and "official organs" of his church are closed against him, and he relegated to silence and obscurity.

Few ministers are willing to incur such penalties, even for the precious boon of liberty. Hence the majority suppress their best convictions, trim down their sermons and other productions to a rigid conformity with the creed.

The hope of preferment is also a powerful motive to conformity. In all orthodox churches, soundness in the faith is a sine qua non to preferment. The great temptation of every minister is to barter his liberty for success. Many do this, and having paid the price, get the leading positions. These, with the always large number seeking preferment and anxious to prove their fitness for it by a cheap zeal for orthodoxy, are able to greatly embarrass or wholly repress the few who prize their liberty more than preferment. This is precisely as it ought not to be. It is of the old Adam as distinctly, not to say as disgracefully, as possible, and not at all of Christ. If brethren cannot dwell together in unity, hoping all things, and bearing all things, it is because they are not yet fairly converted to Christ, and need the lesson which was given to the disciples about becoming the least of all and the servant of all. When shall we hear the leaders of a sect say to each, "Go not away from us to find freedom for your conscience, but let us serve even you in forbearance and charity, until we all come into seeing no more darkly."—Lord Salisbury.

But as things commonly stand, if a brother is providentially betrayed into stepping heavenward ahead of his sect, he is compelled to take himself off directly, lest his divergence stir up an evil spirit of difference, and make trouble to the communion. The Bampton lecture for 1871 says truly of a leading demonstration: "Any serious deviation from the common faith, on the part of any one of these thousands (of ministers), is sure to lead to his separation from the teaching ministry." And the editor of an official paper of this denomination says: "We are not a free thinking church, and if ministers will persist in putting on their thinking caps, they must be deprived of the ministerial office."

Thus the genius of orthodoxy and the interests of its adherents conspire to hold it in an attitude of opposition to liberty of thought and conscience. The result is a narrowness of the average theologic mind which makes orthodoxy the gibe of scientists and all other progressive thinkers.

In other departments of thought the freest discussion is allowed. Agitation is considered the surest method of exposing error and arriving at the truth. Political reformers are permitted liberty of thought and of the press. In science he is hailed as a benefactor who explodes old error and discovers new truth. But in theology, the broadest and most progressive of all sciences, he who denies the infallibility of the creed, or advances a new doctrine, receives only objurgation and anathemas for his pains.

In all this orthodoxy assumes that its creeds are perfect, entirely free from error, and containing the whole of theological truth, and therefore that there can be no such thing as progress in the science of theology. But wherefore? Has wisdom died with the creed-framers? Were men wiser five hundred and a thousand years ago, when the creeds were built, than they are now, or than they ever will be? Is age in a creed any conclusive evidence of accuracy? Must science and all other departments of thought go on progressing, and theology remain forever in its swaddling garments? Shall the Protestant conscience and thought be forever limited and bound by the dicta of Augustine and Calvin, while the opinions of their contemporaries in other departments of thought have been long discarded and forgotten? And yet each sect thinks its creed contains the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. But how many such creeds can there be? It is very unfortunate for this assumption of orthodoxy, that there are so many different creeds directly opposed in many points.

The fact is, that while orthodoxy contains much truth, it also contains much error. Most of its creeds are very old, and contain many articles of belief which are the bequests of the ages of ignorance that God winked at. There is room, therefore, for progress and improvement in the orthodox theology. There is also great need of change in the creeds in order that the essence of truth may be preserved. And theologic science cannot be perfected by one change nor by many; but will need frequent renewals of its creed-statements as the human race advances.

But believing its creeds to be infallible, and that everything contrary thereto is dangerous error, orthodoxy conceives it to be its high calling to guard its creeds with a flaming sword, and suppress every other form of doctrine, lest the truth committed to its keeping should suffer thereby. Accordingly its constant effort is to prevent freedom of thought, of investigation, and of discussion among its adherents. It prescribes for them all, young and old, what they shall read, what they shall think and believe, and proscribes everything else. The aims of all its theological teaching is to indoctrinate the pupil, and fortify him in a peculiar mode of belief; rather than to make him a student and a lover of the truth wherever it exists. What would be thought of a school of medicine in which the professors aimed to convince the student that the existing modes of treatment admitted of no improvement, or of a school of natural science which treated the discovery of new facts as a fault? But theology,—in its proper nature the noblest and universal of the sciences, the child of liberty, the lover of all truth, the leader of the human race—"theology has been manacled and guarded, and the first and last injunction to its votaries has been to stand aside."

One reason for the opposition of orthodoxy to liberty is the danger of its abuse. This danger equally besets all liberty. The right use of personal freedom is probably the most difficult of all things to learn. It is not merely that men are liable to abuse it, but that multitudes are certain to do so. But we do not therefore oppose civil liberty and advocate despotism, as the only means of preventing abuse. We believe it is better to have liberty notwithstanding the great perils attending it.

So in religious matters, there is great danger of an extreme use of the right of private judgment. But it does not follow that men should be deprived of religious liberty for fear they will abuse it. They must rather be taught that it is theirs of right, as a gift of God; that they are accountable to him for the use they make of it, and may not therefore abuse it with impunity. Admitted that many will ruin themselves by abusing their liberty, yet there can be no doubt that more would be ruined by an intolerance that drives them out of the church into a hatred of all religious truth.

Orthodoxy cannot keep men from thinking, nor can it keep the thinker within the prescribed limits. Mind is inherently free. It cannot be chained, nor kept in ignorance of its liberty. Sooner or later men will find out that they have an inalienable right to freedom. The question is, shall orthodoxy recognize their freedom and encourage it by making them feel that Christianity, the great liberator of mankind, is not the enemy, but the friend and foster-mother of freedom, and thereby hold them under its influence, where it can teach them how to use their liberty temperately, reverently, in the fear and service of God?

Or shall orthodoxy continue to teach men that free thought and investigation are wicked and lead to hell, and that if they persist in the exercise of their liberty they must be turned out of the church, and deprived of its sympathy and help; and thus force them into opposition to Christianity, and a hatred of the very name of orthodoxy as a synonym for bondage? If so, the result will be impious defiance instead of reverence, contempt instead of investigation, license instead of liberty, and utter recklessness instead of the fruits of a holy life.

The church has no right to drive men from its altars by intolerance, for in so doing it loses its power to benefit them. The church was not established to deprive men of their liberty, but to teach them how to use it. But in order that men may know how to use it rightly they must have it. It is only by the possession and exercise of liberty that men can learn its proper use. It is therefore the duty of Protestantism to win men to its altars and keep them there, by guaranteeing perfect freedom of thought and conscience, that it may be able to benefit them, and guide them out of their doubts into a higher faith beyond.

INDUCE

Your Neighbor to Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Now is the time to extend the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. It will contain Occult and Spiritualistic news with which every one should be familiar. No other paper published on this earth contains such a vast amount of matter so well adapted to enrich the mind. Send in a subscription now.

THE MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE.

Words of Gratitude and Sincere Appreciation.

To the Officers, Professors, Teachers and Students of the Morris Pratt Institute, Whitewater, Wis.—Dearly Beloved Friends:—Your very appreciative and fraternal article published in the current numbers of the Spiritualistic press has been read by me with a joyful and grateful heart: Joyful that you have during my recent visits to deliver lessons in Higher Psychology to the students and teachers in the Morris Pratt Institute manifested, more and more, your appreciation of my work as an instrument of the unseen ones, and have, personally, made me feel the true friendship and fraternity, the cordial greetings and kindest hospitality and earnest enthusiasm ever accorded to co-workers in a great cause; grateful that my busy life has been spared these many years to bear forward the work assigned me when a child, and that I have been privileged to be thus chosen to do such work as has been recently performed through me in your midst and which is so warmly appreciated by you.

When I consider the scope and grandeur of our beautiful philosophy and its sublime mastery over every department of the mind, as dominated by the spirit—the soul—I rejoice in a school that enables students, teachers, and professors to meet on a higher plane of education than that usually offered in the academies and universities of our land. For not only is true psychology (knowledge of the Soul and Spirit) not taught in other schools, but that which passes as "psychology"—recently introduced—is but physical, or at best mental philosophy.

The introduction into the class room—and I trust into the curriculum—of the Morris Pratt Institute, of every phase of training in higher thought and Psychological truth is a step in the right direction and an example to other institutions.

I wish it were in my power to express how much I value the work of the president, the principal and all the workers in the Institute for the work already done there, and for the untiring and unselfish zeal with which all connected with the school, whom I met in my recent five visits, have borne forward their work.

I bespeak for the future sessions of the school an ever-increasing interest on the part of the Spiritualistic public in sustaining with pupils, subscriptions, and endowments, a school so admirably conducted and so well founded in the principles of a correct and liberal education.

Hoping to be with you again in form, as I am ever one in the spirit of your work, I remain, ever sincerely and fraternally yours,

CORA L. V. RICHMOND.

Annual Convention of the Morris Pratt Institute Association.

The third annual convention of the Morris Pratt Institute Association will meet June 3, 1905, in the institute building, in Whitewater, Wis., at 2 o'clock, p. m.

Members of the association and friends who are interested in its welfare, should, if possible, be present. There is much to be done in this convention. By-laws are to be adopted, the constitution to be amended to allow the convention to be called at a more convenient time and earlier in the week. Other important matters relative to the work, the workers in and out of the house, the best methods to be pursued, etc., must be considered—all of which should be a matter of personal interest to the members of the association.

After three years of experience, the officers are in a position to suggest such changes as they deem advisable for the good of the school.

It is sincerely hoped there will be a good attendance. Remember the date, June 3, at 2 p. m.

CLARA L. STEWART,
Secretary.

GUILTY AS CHARGED.

That Is the Opinion of Dr. Eastman.

In reviewing the Winans case, Mr. Dunn has presented a masterly article, and given it the view one would naturally expect from a legal man. He has presented the case, as it were, in the form of a brief, in defense of his client, and in considering the same, it would only be fair to do so on the same lines.

First of all, Mr. Dunn admits that Winans uses paraphernalia, but the question at stake is: Was he conscious when the same was used? If he was conscious, Mr. Dunn admits that he is guilty, and that there is no punishment too great for him, whereas if he was unconscious, which he believes to have been the condition, he was not guilty of fraud, and is being innocently persecuted.

The case then hinges on whether Winans was or was not conscious of what he was doing, and comes under the legal head of involuntary commitment of crime.

The involuntary commitment of an illegal act, does not make the defendant any the less amenable to the law. Legal libraries are full of reports of such cases—some instances where the punishment has been severe. However, let us grant that Winans may have been unconscious of what was transpiring when attired in those garments, whether conscious or unconscious, he knew the paraphernalia was there, had it ready to use and VOLUNTARILY gave himself up for their use, and is therefore guilty as charged.

DR. E. H. EASTMAN.

Hot Springs, Ark.

A PLEA FOR THE AFFLICTED.

Insanity or Obsession, and its Remedy Whatever the Difficulty or Disease Human Treatment Is Required.

One of the great, if not the greatest problem of the age, is the constant increase in the number of victims to the malady termed insanity and the almost utter failure to restore them, and yet we know the day is past to say, "Ye are all physicians of no value," because the records prove at least some facts, and that the different treatments in vogue have not always been in vain; still there are too many cases of insanity under protracted treatment, which baffle the skill and efforts of the most expert, and why? Is it not behaps, because the diagnose failed to reveal the cause, and so the patient is subjected to the wrong treatment?

Physical ailments may readily yield to physical treatment; mental ailments to mental treatment, and so may spiritual ailments yield to spiritual treatment, and while the materialist may be very successful in treating his patient for physical ailment, he may be of little or no help to the mental sufferer, and worse than useless for the spiritual one.

On the other hand, mental and spiritual treatment may utterly fail to restore a patient from a physical ailment, while the mental or spiritual sufferer may be speedily and most thoroughly relieved by mental or spiritual treatment.

The astonishing results and undisputable facts of numerous healings of insanity is partly revealed in the experience of obsessions by Dr. Karl Wickland and brought out in an interview with Dr. Funk, of New York, should be looked into, and set the minds of men thinking especially in those of authority over Insane Asylums throughout the world.

It should be borne in mind that Dr. Wickland is not a novice in this noble work, nor stands he isolated in the same; foremost of all in the field is Dr. J. M. Peebles, of Battle Creek, Mich.; then Dr. Lester Lane, of Boston, Mass.; Dr. Kimball of Maine.; Mrs. M. Bergen Brown of Morgan Hill, Cal.; Dr. W. Yates, now of Madison, Wis.; and many other spiritually gifted, and who know and are ready to prove that insanity, so-called, is in most cases simply obsession by spirit influences which lie beyond the grasp and comprehension of the mere materialist.

The over-crowded condition of asylums, poorhouses and penitentiaries is alarming in the extreme, and should incite the proper authorities to study its real causes, not alone from a material point of view, which is well enough to furnish data and statistics on economy, sociology and criminology, but fails to find the root of the evil, or its remedy, unless its spiritual base, the foundation of all material, is reached, which, by the way, is the most dumfounding conundrum to the materialist, the belated scientist, the premature critic, and to the many misfits in theology. Only such men and women as mentioned previously, endowed with rare gifts mental, physical and spiritual, whose integrity of heart is only excelled by their love and devotion for a suffering humanity, have found and are fit to apply the remedy.

But what about the Apostles, the first or last, and all the rest of the disciples? Has the Man of Nazareth died in vain? Did He not teach them to heal the sick and to cast out demons? Have they all forsaken Him and worship Mammon? Even Dr. Dowie, who had boasted of having more healings in his Zion than were at Jesus' time done in all Palestine, refused a poor but obsessed woman in his presence!—The venerable Dr. Peebles has been instrumental in restoring many hundreds of such afflicted, yet lays no claim to any presumptive titles nor masquerades about in gaudy gown like a circus clown in an educated bonnet.

Multimillionaire philanthropists, like Mr. Rockefeller, Carnegie and others, have done much, especially for the education of many, yet the ever-increasing stream of unfortunates into public places of refuge, correction and restraint is unabated, and will eventually swell into a tidal wave destined to swamp with destructive force its feeble banks.

Yet there is hope when no delay. What is at present immensely more needed than Libraries, is Sanitariums in all principal cities, with men and women at the helm who are blessed with the necessary gifts of the spirit, and able not only to deliver the obsessed from the torments of undeveloped, earth-bound and unfortunate spirits, but to bring them to a better understanding of their destiny, and to induce them to work out their own salvation as missionaries among their own on both sides of the divide, which is often most cheerfully done in a sense of profound gratitude. Vice, crime, poverty and insanity would soon cease its abnormal proportions and dwindle down to its proper minimum and final extinction.

Chicago, Ill. G. A. WOLTER.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The Ohio State Spiritualists Association convention will be held May 26, 27 and 28, at Ashtabula, Ohio. We are certain to have one of the best conventions ever held in Ohio. We shall have our programs completed next week. Among the talent already engaged and those yet to hear from, are Mr. George B. Warne, president of the Illinois State Spiritualists Association, and Laura G. Fixen, vice-president of the same; Lizzie Harlow, F. D. Dunakin, Anna E. Baird and Elizabeth Schauss.

We wish to extend to all mediums and Speakers of Ohio and our sister states a most cordial invitation to attend the convention.

The Ashtabula society and citizens know just how to entertain the convention. Their society is one of the banner societies of the state, constantly adding to its membership. All delegates will be entertained during the convention by the Ashtabula Society members, urging that all societies send their delegates.

To all members of the O. S. A. Board I wish to give notice; that there will be a board meeting, Thursday evening, May 25, at Ashtabula, Ohio.

MRS. CARRIE FIRTH CURRAN,
President O. S. A.

FOURTH ANNUAL MEEETING.

The State Spiritualist Association of Kansas will hold its fourth annual convention in Topeka, June 1, 2, 3 and 4, 1905, at Security Hall Seventh and Kansas ave.; meetings each day at 3 and 8 o'clock p. m. All local societies are urged to have delegates at this convention. Good speakers and mediums will be in attendance. All out of town visitors made welcome.

A. SCOTT BLEDSOE.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations, of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. A very remarkable book. Large, octavo, 600 pages. Price, $1.75.

EQUALITY.

Heard I not an angel sighing?
Or perhaps, she lightly wept.
And a silver star was gleaming,
Strangely in my room it crept.
On the east and western pendants
Hung two scales of measured size;
Two words shone in the darkness—
"Brotherhood," and "Equalize."

"Angel, thou didst come from heaven,
What mean these words and balanced scales?"
Answer came, as opening flowers:
"Minus these, all justice fails."
Slow her snowy wings she lifted,
Transformed the air to lustrous gold.
"See," she said, "the yellow metal?
For this, our human lives are sold."

"This," she said, "you've made your idol,
You're worshiping a golden god;
But work and wealth will be united,
Both must pass beneath the rod.
White slaves no more shall kneel to masters,
Poverty's bell no more shall ring;
Dark age of mammon's reign will vanish,
And none will crouch before that king."

The golden light softly faded,
Flames ascended of blood-red hue.
"Hark, you people, living mortals,
Would you Christ's great work undo?"
Fell the scales from trembling starbeams,
"Conditions broken here,—behold!
Symbols of sacrificial blood-streams
Flowing over beds of gold."

Came the words with holy sadness
From the lips of the angel fair,
Then the blood-streams turned to darkness,
The bitter darkness of Despair.
She pressed her hand on her bosom,
Showed a heart of broken light;
Piece by piece she joined the fragments,
Saying: "Thus shall all unite."

"Beauteous angel, why these symbols,
Why these words of mystic worth?
Why hast thou from heaven descended,
Back again to dismal earth?"
She said, with accents firm yet tender:
"There is so much for me to do;
The poor must have a strong defender,
The rich must hear the message, too.

"God has waited long and loving,
Waited for some potent sign
For the heart of man to open,
And receive his Word divine.
Wondrous powers he gave his people,
Gave them heaven, in trust, forsooth;
The world He gave to all created,
For brotherhood, and right, and truth.

"He gave to man, progressive wisdom,
Universal love to claim;
And breathed on all living mortals
His own, eternal, holy name.
He gave the moon the nights to lighten,
The stars he gave, and kept not one;
Not life to burden, but to brighten,
He gave the wondrous, central sun.

"'Twas not enough," said the angel, weeping,
Man asked still more of God Supreme.
Then He gave all in all He cherished—
The son of man—the Nazarene.
But man is selfish and coldly thankless,
Oblivious to the strength of giving.
God taught life's most essential Law—
Equality, to each one living.

"Justice and peace to all mankind
Can be achieved without dismay;
Love's sweet embrace circling all,
With Reason's torch to light the way.
The strength of all is Unity,
Soul of freedom—faith of lover;
Not heaps of gold for pampered pride,
But true wealth—sharing with each other."

Fell these words from the lips of the angel,
"Hear me," she said, "I plead for you;
Listen: All this gold, and blood, and darkness
Will be changed to life anew.
And e'en cold doubt—man's ruling passion—
Doubting his God and fellow-men
Will be no more, for wealth and labor
Will be written: 'Brotherhood,' with mighty pen."

The heavenly vision slowly vanished,
Leaving the world in wondrous light;
United in Freedom—united in Power—
Proving the truth: "Equality is Might!"

In all the scenes of the world's great staging,
Will be heard the soft voice of returning dove;
On mother earth's bosom, God's law will be chiseled:
"Equality is Justice, Peace and Love."

LAURA M. HYLAND.

Ocean Park, Cal.

Woman Suffrage in the Philippines.

The census of the Philippines has now been concluded, and it is to be the basis for the establishment of a legislature in the islands which shall convene two years hence. Who are to vote for the members of that legislature, and who are to be entitled to seats in that body?

During the spring of 1902 the United States Senate Philippine commission summoned before it a number of persons competent to give expert testimony as to conditions existing in those islands. Among them was Judge William H. Taft, at that time Governor of the Philippines, and he spoke with higher authority than was possible for any other person. Governor Taft said to this committee:

"The fact is that, not only among the Tagalogs, but also among the Christian Filipinos, the woman is the active manager of the family, so if you expect to confer political power on the Filipinos, it ought to be given to the women."

Another witness summoned was Archbishop Nozaleda, who had been actively connected with the Catholic church in the islands for twenty-six years and archbishop since 1889. He testified as follows:

"The woman is better than the man in every way—in intelligence, in virtue, in labor—and a great deal more economical. She is very much given to trade and to trafficking. If any rights and privileges are to be given to the natives, do not give them to the men, but to the women."

There has been a great deal of similar testimony from correspondents and, others who have studied personally the conditions existing in the Philippines, all uniting in the opinion that the women in general are superior to the men in general. The census which has just been taken shows the proportion of women engaged in gainful occupations to be double that in the United States. It will be an outrage if these women are denied all representation in their government and arbitrarily relegated to a position inferior to any they have ever before occupied, but it is an outrage which the Congress of the United States is quite capable of committing—Ida Husted Harper in Indianapolis News.

"Handy Electrical Dictionary." A practical handbook of reference, containing definitions of every used electrical term or phrase. Price $1.

Inspiration Elucidated.

A Lecture by the Guides of Mr. J. Clegg Wright, Before the First Association of Spiritualists, Washington, D. C., Sunday Morning, April 23, 1905—Reported Expressly for The Progressive Thinker, by Walter P. Williams.

Mr. F. A. Wood, president of the society, said:

A little more than half a century ago the door between the seen and the unseen world began to be opened more widely, making it possible for ministering spirits and teachers to come to mortals; now, if it be practicable this morning, will the Intelligence who wishes to use the medium tell us something of what was the work of these ministers and teachers and what their methods before we were able to be conscious of them as a factor in the world's progress?

The entranced medium responded as follows:

Venturing again on the silent pathway of inspiration, I will strive to detain you while elucidating the problem presented by your worthy representative. It is impossible for any mind in the mortal confinement of capability to have the slightest conception of the nature of the relationship existing between myself as a conscious entity and the medium articulating for me. I wish I might be to you, for the purpose of this elucidation, just an intelligent voice.

There never does begin, in the processes of natural co-ordination, any new principle of relativity. In 1848 no new spiritual law came into existence and no new stratum of intellectual power and activity came to man. There was no organic change in the constitution of man. For the convenience of historic reference to certain abnormal manifestations of intelligent force, you speak of 1848 as the epoch year of Modern Spiritualism, but in truth it was not the beginning of any new process, of any new manifestation in spiritual relativity to mankind or to the general phenomena of nature.

To elucidate the true relationship between the activities of mortal life and the mental and spiritual capabilities of consciousness in the spiritual world will necessarily lead me into the field of definition. The personality that survives death is certainly a persistent and a great personality, and has been surviving death from the very period when life began to manifest in cosmic energy, for, however elemental the manifestation of life may be, it is a spiritual manifestation, a co-ordinating manifestation with matter under the conditions and expression then existing. The spiritual world in its elemental relationship direct with man is an inspirational relationship, and the expression is confined to those faculties of the mind which are the most powerful, whether those faculties which are the most powerful are closely related to the generative or to the vegetable side of soul activity, for I would call those faculties of the mind which lie below the floor of consciousness the vegetable or generative forces of the mind. Inspiration can touch these faculties.

Inspiration can touch another set of faculties which are sentimental in character, not thought-creating faculties, but impulses in consciousness. There can be an inspiration of this plane of feeling. The perceptive powers can be intensified and quickened into great energy by co-relation with spiritual force. The intellectual powers pure and simple can be intensified under the influence of spiritual power and the intuitive faculties are those faculties which lie nearer to the consciousness of the soul than the inductive and deductive powers of the mind, for the soul has a consciousness larger in its field of action, in its phenomenal reach and in its clairvoyant concepts, than reason. I have no terms to describe a consciousness that is above reason. The soul has a consciousness above reason and the mind expressed in brain organization is but a limited expression of the consciousness of the soul. It is a personal consciousness, this consciousness of the brain life, and that is then the first field of inspiration when the soul is the inspirer of the mind. This inspiration is closely related to all those mental phenomena which lie in the general social, intellectual and philosophical activities of men.

The poets are inspired, inventors, historians, orators, generals of armies, mechanics, adventurers, fathers and mothers, children, all men in their ratio of sensibility are inspired first by the soul manifesting in the organization. Consciousness itself is a personal function manifesting in the organization, and sometimes the soul's consciousness will carry the characteristics of the physical personality on to the subjective side and the outward mind in man will not be conscious of the manifestation, and the personality of the man will manifest on the spiritual plane.

The soul has the power to manifest its personalities on planes of sympathy where the relativities of psychical and etheric forces balance, so that you raise your conception of man personal to the plane that the power of the soul—a great master workman—can handle its personalities and inspire according to the development of psychical states in the organization.

Now, the poets of all ages are inspired by the soul and the spiritual sphere. By the "spiritual sphere" I mean souls independent of actual physical representation. There is a world of consciousness not expressing in matter states directly by personation; that is, there are souls in the spiritual world that are not now related to any bodily organization, and they on the plane of soul can sympathetically and consciously correlate. The correlation in this state is more perfect than any personal correlation you can make even in the trance consciousness. The development of the elemental power of clairvoyant consciousness puts the personalities of the soul on the spiritual plane in a closer relationship than that soul through its personalities can have with man and his states.

So in the development of inspiration from the soul incarnate, expressing in the body, a large field of inspiration can be touched and details of life and work can come under the potency of this inspiration. Now, in all ages of the world, and since man came there has been what you call a poetic power. What is a "poetic power"? Poetry, with the expression of the ideal in feeling, in passion, in perception of external nature, in the perception of historical sequence or time, for the concept of time is a great field for poetic inspiration, for the deductive capabilities in the attributes of the ideal of poetry come in so that we may summarize the poetic power as the faculty of inspired and realized ideality.

In all ages of the world this inspiration has been manifest. To make any review at this time would be impossible, but take the literature of India. The field of philosophical and religious inspiration has been very large, and, philosophically, the inspiration has tried to reach the genesis of causation. In the Hebrew cult, some of the finest inspiration that ever came to the human brain, you have the sublime ideality of some of the writers of the Psalms; philosophically imperfect but poetically beautiful; the grasp of ideality in the inspiration of Isaiah; the tragic and sublime sensibility of Jeremiah almost makes you feel that Thomas Moore, the Irish poet, stood in harmonious relativity with the plaintive patriotism of Jeremiah. The inspiration of Homer, majestically gathering the phenomena of the dramatic ardor of his ideality from time relativity rises to the grasping of nature and presents the operations and forces of nature in the carnal personalities of gods and heroes.

A Babylonian poet gave to you the tragic and magnificent didactic poem of Job. You see in the personality of Job the creative ideality—force represented in the operations of nature—at a time when the state of mental honor in man met in causation the moral attributes that passed judgment in good and evil. The ethics of the abstract had two forms, and so in that inspiration the philosophical thought is carried, but the ideal is an inspirational epic, and so down the ages, the spiritual world correlating with the soul has been inspiring the human race.

Up till this stage, and for a little while yet, the god of Mars will be the God of advancing civilization; it will be Thor as divinity for a while yet; the force of nature will be military because the attributes of the soul's personalities are manifesting in time when the soul could only express in animal monsters preying on each other in shallow seas and dense tropical forests; the animal propensities gather on the soul plane of expression and will represent themselves in the grand light and glory of the evolution of soul consciousness in experience and in its general expression, and with the realization of this there will come the epoch looked for in the earliest ideals—in the ideals of Christianity when peace and love shall sit in the sanctuary of human consciousness, when the low animal propensities of conflict and destruction shall be lessened in the instinctive constitution of the personality of man. These instincts of man are instincts; they are in man because the soul brought them from prior experiences in its contact with nature, in its power of expression; so that instinct is that power under the threshold of consciousness which is not enlarged by experience nor diminished by inactivity. Instinct is not progressive, it is the product of personality and hence in the touch of the soul on material states of expression it must bring with it its personalities. Oh, what a time it took to make mother love as an instinct of consciousness! Generation after generation it caused the soul to make the highest pleasure in animal existence the function of procreation before it could attain to the beautiful instinct of mother love, and even to-day the struggle goes on. Mother love is still personal. The mother loves her child—her child, not necessarily her neighbor's child.

It took ages of suffering for the benevolent instinct, the altruism in the ethics of conscious nature—it took untold ages of conscious personal evolution to make that altruistic emotion. It was born in pain, in suffering. If man had never suffered he never would have been kind. It is suffering which develops kindness. Siberia in Russia is rebuilding the altruism of the Russian peasant. The birthplace of Liberty is Tyranny, Oppression and Wrong. The birthplace of virtue is the blackness of vice, revulsion from satiety. And so the moral emotions,—moral adhesiveness—unroll in the expression and necessity of the human race.

For ages the spiritual power struggled for the manumission of man. The slave born into heaven sends back unto man the love of freedom. The singing bird at the gate of glory stirs the notes of the bird in slavery. The heaven of emancipated mentality sends back its power to stir the emotions of intelligence and of liberty. Dear and consecrated affections of family send back the force of pride and ideality on family descent. Aristocracies are based on the sentiment of family veneration and pride. The Daughters of the Revolution will make an aristocracy of mentality in America if that power alone could be dominant; but in the broad inspirations of your day such retrospective folly will be swept away under a grander ideal. The ideal of the inspiration of America will be and to a limited degree is that governments exist amongst men for the convenience of the men, women and children for whose special existence and protection they are, and collaterally for the development of the highest instincts of emotion and moral ideality for all nations.

If I were—or, rather, if I could be—an American statesman—if I could dominantly and effectually inspire an American statesman, I would make his moral ideal humanity, I would make it educational, I would make it a force to carry to every man, woman and child on earth the truths of nature and of life. I would make it easy to be good and difficult to do wrong. I would make the power of intellect moral, and love the education, for I would educate the love nature of man and women; I would educate the moral nature; I would educate the avarice, I would educate the imagination of man and woman, and I would make the study and ideality of nature supreme that the people of the earth might dwell together as one people. I would seek to abolish sectionalism; I would seek to bring genius to the expression, I would make genius the power, but as democracy cannot make genius I would make genius the elevator of democracy. It will always be that the man who stands on the frontier of inspiration and of thought will mold the fabric, the character and the law of a new civilization.

Can you measure the influence of the moral mentality—of the Pagan—so-called—Seneca? Can you measure in your day the brilliance of the inspiration and its effect on the civilization of the Augustinian age? Can you measure today the effect of the revival of classical and artistic art and learning in the middle ages? Can any man measure the magnitude and force of the artistic inspiration that came from the spirit world in the force of character and life of Lorenzo de Medici? Is it possible at this time of the day to measure the effect of the wars of the crusades? Going farther back, can you measure the force of inspiration that was at the back of Charles Martel when he rolled back the Mohammedan invasion of Europe? A sword-blade saved you—almost an accident in history. But for the sword blade of Charles Martel you would have been a Mohammedan; Christianity would have been obliterated from the face of Europe. How different would it have been in the history of the United States of America if the brilliant Lee had been victorious at Gettysburg; how different would have been the history of the United States of America if Lloyd Garrison had not been born and the generous genius of Abraham Lincoln not seen on earth? The mighty co-ordinating inspirations of the spiritual world in generation sent these men, for verily heaven can make a man when man needs that man. The epoch man is sent, and through the inspirations of instinctive generation the life appears to do its work, for at the back of historical phenomena of life and of heaven there is an Intelligence that holds the phenomena of this universe in the hollow of its hands, and I, as a soul, stand related to that Infinite Intelligence in the power of co-ordination as I stand in relation to the conic souls of the spiritual world. The lowest manifestation of intelligent life on earth is touched by the fire of divinity in its own order as you are touched by the fire of the infinite—life in the Infinite, life one eternal uncaused power. I am lost. How can I speak of that which lies in inspiration? How can I delineate the operations of divinity? How dare I try to bound my god when I cannot express my ideal? Why should I? I should ever be trying to express. I want to express. I want to express the infinite. I want to be infinite, not because of a mission, not for power, but that I may know. I have the thirst to know, and the thirst to be is eternally unfolded in the dreamy sphere of my progressive life.

I want to leave you with the idea that inspiration from the soul sphere began when the first cell of life appeared and filtering through the gyrations of phenomena, historical in time and physical in sphere, came on and on, and the Sphinx of civilization is opening to yonder central light, and as those dreamy eyes of the Sphinx look out on the wilderness of sand impassive, dreamy Sphinx eyes, so I look and behold only what I can realize; but distant, in the unexpressed, the Sphinx's eyes are luring me to the chambers of a consciousness I have not reached, and traveling in the weary wilderness I am, in the evolution of my consciousness, where sand and stones cut my feet, but I am rising to the light of my higher power. Where tears were falling and sadness abode I look and flowers from tears have sprung, and joys from broken dreams arise, the misery of one experience becomes the source of a new pleasure, and so I rise to your field and suggestively turn to the subject with delight as it marks the age, the epoch and the time.

In all ages the spiritual world has expressed in man. In all of the flight of time, in all the struggle, invention and development of conscious mind as well as cosmic form, the majesty of the infinite, the power of the infinite, the thought of the infinite, have been written on cloud, on mind and heart. So then let me say that in a day like this, dedicated to immortality, after a few more days have fled, you will take your flight to gardens fair, there to meet your loved ones, the darlings you have known before. Your tears will then be but sprinkling showers to raise new flowers at night, and in that greater state where wisdom blooms in conscious mind you will rise to realize that somewhere in the heart of this universe is a father who loves you and who will care for you in all the changes of endless time.

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. There is no risk or experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable.

Below we print extracts from testimonials such as are received by us daily.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 73 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kan., writes: "My honest opinion of Actina is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It cured my eyes, and cured my wife of asthma."

Hundreds of other testimonials can be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept 3H, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General.

WONDERFUL STOVE—BIG MONEY MAKER!

BURNS 90% AIR—ONLY 10% OIL—GAS. 7200 sold one month. Customers delighted with Harrison Valveless Oil-gas Stove. Splendid for cooking; also heating rooms, stores, offices, etc., with Radiator Attch. No wick, dirt, or ashes—no coal bills or drudgery—cheap, safe fuel, 15c to 30c a week should furnish fuel-gas for cooking for small family. Easily operated—absolutely safe—all sizes, $3 up. Write—Catalog FREE and Special Prices. AGENTS WANTED—$40 Weekly. Address World Mfg. Co., 5790 World B'ld'g, Cincinnati, O.

CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS.

Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address

DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

808

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

In the World Celestial

is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance medium, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness.

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

President Bowles of the National Liberal League, says: "It is one of the choicest pieces of literature of this marvelous age of books."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1. For sale at this office.

The Boy Medium's Methods Exposed.

It is with great sorrow that we admit to our columns this exposure of the methods of this young man Baker. Gifted in many ways, it is too bad, that he should resort to deception. An exposure of the boy at Smithville, Texas, came to this office, but we refused to publish it then, desiring to wait for further evidence, which has now come from Los Angeles, Cal., and seems to be complete in all respects. We have published many favorable reports of this boy, and it was with feelings of deep regret that we have heard of the deception he practiced in Texas and California.

BOY MEDIUM EXPOSED.

It Is Accomplished Before a Large Audience—He Is Driven From the Stage by a Well-Known Man Who Detects and Traps the Youth.

"Prof." M. Baker, the "boy medium," who has been electrifying a trusting public from one end of the country to the other with his alleged wonderful psychic powers, came to grief last night, falling an easy victim to a party of fraud hunters that had been lying in wait to show up his methods.

This young man is not yet 17 years of age, but has been before the public for some time, claiming to do marvels in the way of "independent slate writing." He assumes power to receive messages from beyond the grave, bringing back departed relatives at so much per head for anybody willing to pay the price.

The youthful "professor" reached Los Angeles a short time ago and was carrying on his mysterious slate-writing apparently without opposition from any source, while the gullibles were voting him a marvel. He had spoken before the Truthseekers' Society at Burbank hall, and was to appear there again night. A large audience turned out to see his slate-writing, and the fraud hunters were there, although the boy medium was blissfully ignorant of their purpose.

When the time arrived for Baker to appear everybody was on tiptoe of expectancy.

The lights were turned low and the audience was requested to examine the slates, which were held in the hands of the operator, but must not be touched. Then the medium and another man mounted the rostrum and stood each holding onto one end of the pile of slates. The medium quaked, groaned, wiped a bit of imaginary perspiration from the nape of his neck—and the business was done. "You can all see," he remarked, "under what a terrible strain I have been." Then the slates were opened, and behold, the writing.

Names were signed to the messages, and the boy medium encouraged his audience to recognize what loving friends had sent, but there was no response. Nobody claimed the test.

Exposure of Fraud.

When Baker had finished, Robert T. Hale, well known as a business man in Los Angeles, advanced and took the boy's breath quite away with one of the most sensational exposes that ever have been made in the interest of driving frauds from Los Angeles.

"Little boy," said Mr. Hale, "hold up your hand here before this audience; confess that you are an unmitigated fake, then turn over a new leaf, be a good child and grow up to be an honest man."

Baker was non-plussed and paced back and forth while Mr. Hale continued to unfold the carefully-laid plan by which the youth had been trapped. In the first place, he stated that he had been able to overhear a conversation in which Baker had acknowledged the methods used by him for deceiving the people, and being convinced from the boy's own words that he was a fraud, Mr. Hale had employed the services of a detective.

This is not Mr. Hale's first experience with the fakers which abound in Los Angeles and other parts of the country, and he has learned many of their secret signs. One of these, the sign of recognition, exchanged between strangers, he had given to the detectives, and with it the officer trapped Baker. Passing the sign, the detective drew the boy into conversation and offered to give him a list of stock tests, such as are exchanged among the fakers, and bestowed for cash consideration upon a visiting "medium," who intends to show his powers in a community where it is understood that he has no acquaintances and therefore cannot know the life stories of the people before him.

Bogus "Tests" Sold.

The boy medium was looking for these same stock tests; in fact, he could not do business without them, and he caught eagerly at the bait, going with the detective to a neighboring hotel and receiving the information which he desired about the gullibles who would, no doubt, be at last night's meetings.

The "tests," however, were all fictitious and not in any case near the truth. Besides this, the detective took the precaution to keep a type-written copy of what he had given out.

This copy Mr. Hale proceeded to read, showing that in substance it was the same as the tests on the slates. He also read for the edification of his hearers an agreement which Baker had signed, saying that he would not exchange with non-members of the "S. E. A. P. F." any of the tests received. This "S. E. A. P. F." it should be explained, was supposed to be a California association which the boy medium had not known before, but which he recognized as an order of his own kind. In reality the letters, set down in a spirit of merriment by the fake hunters, stand for "Southern Educational Association of Professional Fakers."

There was almost a panic in the hall when Mr. Hale had finished, and everybody wanted the method of the slate-writing shown up. This was undertaken and explained to the satisfaction of many, although the boy and his mother, who was with him, sought frantically to prevent the complete exposure.

How Trick Is Done.

When the slates were laid upon the table they were placed on a black cloth and as one after another was raised, the cloth was folded up gradually and finally removed entirely. The actual process, as seen by persons near the table who were on the alert, was this: The slates were covered with silica slabs, which is thin and slate colored and cannot easily be detected in a dimly lighted room. Under the silica was the writing already prepared, and after the audience had made its examination, the slate being held up by the medium, for that purpose, they were laid upon the cloth, the silica dropped down and the cloth folded over it.

"The satchel, the satchel! We want to see its contents!" came from every part of the room, but the boy medium made a dive for the telltale grip, and stood over it like a tiger. Finally he escaped with it, a detective shadowing him as he passed down the street. It is believed he will leave town at once. If he does not he will be further pursued by Mr. Hale and his friends.—Los Angeles (Cal.) Express, April 24, 1905.

Reads Messages Furnished in Advance, From Dead Persons Who Never Existed—Confessed to Fraud to Audience

Spirit messages to prominent Los Angeles Spiritualists from departed relatives who never lived were the downfall of Milton Baker, boy medium from Texas, whose psychic powers, manifested in slate writings have been the feature of meetings of the Truthseekers' Society the past fortnight. Detective work by members of the society who suspected the genuineness of the youth's manifestations also contributed to a most sensational expose at a session Sunday evening of the Truthseekers in Burbank Hall, and his subsequent repudiation by the society, as published in the "Examiner" yesterday.

Baker came to town armed with credentials from the National Spiritualists' Association and was immediately hired by the Truthseekers to give exhibitions at their meetings. He made good as a "boy wonder" from the first and would doubtless have left town with that reputation only that he is boastful, and Robert T. Hale and other members heard him remark that he had fooled Harrison D. Barrett, president of the National Association of Spiritualists, leading clergymen all over the country and even newspaper men. In fact, he declared he could fool anybody if he could only get his subject alone in a dark room.

It then occurred to the Los Angeles Spiritualists that the young Texan was fooling them, and they set about to accomplish his downfall.

Fakirs among mediums have an organization with secret signs and grips. They co-operate in securing from the unsuspecting facts about deceased friends and relatives which are made use of in slate writing.

Baker was given the "fakirs'" grip, which is three pinches on the left arm at the elbow; also a secondary sign to show he is "on"—three slaps on the left shoulder—and he responded. Mr. Hale then had the boy sign an agreement never to use professionally any fake tests he might receive; also never reveal to anyone where he got them. He was then given the following tests written on a typewriter and which he agreed to reproduce on slates at the next meeting of the Truthseekers.

"John McLane—Mother, named Margaret, died in Glasgow of heart failure thirty years ago; has two wives in spirit, one by name of Jane; second wife died in Cleveland June 1899.

"Robert T. Hale—Mother died in an insane asylum in England twenty-two years ago; sister died in Boston five years ago and her husband got $5,000 from railroad company after hard fight; has brother in spirit named frank, killed in Crimean war.

"Stephen D. Dye—First wife drowned in New York harbor; has spirit daughter by second wife, who always sends love to papa and mamma; she was only 16 when she passed away from typhoid fever and had much long hair down her back.

"F. A. Stowe—Has brother in spirit who was killed at Gettysburg and who sends word that the future will be a great deal brighter than the past has been; this brother Charles will be always with Frank and help him in every undertaking."

The above messages, each of which is addressed to a prominent Spiritualist, Mr, Dye being president of the Truthseekers, appeared on the boy wonder's slate last Sunday evening. They created a sensation, which, however, was mild when compared with the sensation when R. T. Hale led Baker to the front of the stage and made him admit he was a fakir, and that he had received the "messages" from a typewriter and not from spirit hands.

Baker's exposure is more than likely to cause a split in the Truthseekers' Society. Those who hired the Texan and who profited by the crowds he drew are angry, those who conspired against the boy declare he was furnished with stock tests at a dollar a test by members supposed to be sincere.

A report of the affair will be made to the National Association of Spiritualists by both factions.—Los Angeles Examiner, April 25, 1905.

The Truthseekers' Club of Los Angeles, Cal., Issues Resolutions Apologizing for Introducing Milton Baker, the Boy Medium.

Owing to the discovery on the part of the spectators at the meeting of the Truth Seekers' club yesterday afternoon that the officiating medium, Milton Baker, was using tricks to write the spirit messages on the slates used in the reading, the following resolution was adopted:

"To the public in general and Spiritualists in particular:

"We the undersigned, trustees and officers of the Truthseekers' society of Los Angeles, respectfully submit this apology to the public.

"For the last two Sundays we have introduced to the public Milton Baker, the so-called boy medium, as a slate writing medium. Being satisfied from what occurred at our meeting this evening that said slate writing was fraudulent, we hereby apologize to the public in general and Spiritualists in particular for having vouched for said medium by introducing him to the public.

"S. D. Dye, president; F. S. McPherson, secretary; Nettie Howell, treasurer; D. E. Lyons, M. T. Mann, Mrs. M. T. Mann, D. L. Newcomb, trustees."

Exposure of Baker—Dr. Curham Follows the "Materialist" to a Complete Expose—Last Night's Work Showed the Red Hand—The Carmine Did the Work.

The Spiritualist society of Smithville was organized here a little more than a year ago, and the organization has been controlled every week by members whose names were placed on the charter, with the aid of new members. The membership is made up from some of the best people of the town, and the society embraces good reliable citizens.

For Tuesday night of this week it was announced that Milton Baker, a 16-year old Spiritualist, of Dallas, would appear at the opera house and give spiritual manifestations from the stage. The night was a dark one and the ground was covered with mud, but the audience was a big one and filled the seats back to the two last rows. A cabinet covered with cloth, had been erected on the stage, and a committee of reliable citizens was selected to see that the work was fairly done. Young Baker addressed the audience at some length on the doctrine of Spiritualism, after which he was bound with a strong rope by the committee and placed in the cabinet. Dr. Curham, one of the committee, stated that he opened the corner of the cabinet and saw Baker loosen his right hand from the rope, take up the bell and rang it, dropped the bell, stooped and picked it up again with his right hand, dropped it the second time and could not reach it from his tied position, but took the mandolin from the table, reached with it for the bell under a chair, where it had rolled, and failed to get it; his hands supposed to have been tied all this time. He says he showed Baker's free hand to Prof. Bond, Mr. Maney, Mr. Gresham and Mr. Tom Dougherty.

In the second act, in which he was supposed to produce the voice of the spirit, to prove that he did not do the talking Baker took a mouthful of water, which he was supposed to hold in his mouth to prevent talking; that he swallowed the water and did the talking himself; that Baker placed his right hand in the inside pocket of his coat and produced a 4-ounce medicine bottle, from which he re-filled his mouth with water, then he replaced his hand back in the rope.

Dr. Curham says he searched Baker and found the 4-ounce bottle in the pocket and notified Dr. Hickman and Messrs Chase, Dougherty, Hudnall and other members of the committee; that he asked them to search and said he would give $20 if the bottle was not found in the pocket.

Second Meeting.

There has been much interest manifested to find what success was had in subsequent attempts by the young man to give manifestations.

Wednesday night, at a seance held at a private residence Mr. Chase and Mr. Moore used tape and tied Baker so firmly that he was powerless in the use of his hands. One of the members of the society, a gentleman who has strong faith in the doctrine of Spiritualism, in answer to a query, said that there was nothing accomplished; that the work was not satisfactory.

Third Meeting and Completely Exposed.

The third meeting of the society, beginning with Tuesday, was held last night and to this meeting Dr. W. R. Curham was invited. Baker and two members of the society took seats in front of the cabinet. A curtain was drawn in front of the three to cover their bodies to the shoulders. Baker and the gentleman placed their two hands on, each, an arm of the lady. The mandolin came into view above their heads. Dr. Curham had previously handled the mandolin as if to examine it, but during the formation of the "battery" and the progress of the performance he sat among the collection of members in front, watching every movement of Baker. Curham stepped forward and said to Baker: "Give me your hand." He held the hand and turned to the members and said: "Ladies and gentlemen, I did not come here to denounce Spiritualism, but to denounce fraud." Raising the palm of the hand up to the view of the people, he said: "You will observe that it is stained with the same carmine that is contained in the bottle which I pull from my pocket, and you will find carmine from the bottle on the handle of the mandolin." The lady assisting in the "battery" said to Baker: "I am a Spiritualist, but I know you are a fraud." Baker replied: "Did I take my hand from your arm?" and she answered, "Yes, you did!"

Every person that handled the mandolin was stained.—The Times, Smithville, Texas, March 10, 1905.

"The Constitution of Man." By Elizabeth Towne. Gives a clear and practical presentation of advanced mental science and embodies many new and original ideas, and the fullest teaching extant as to the nature, control and direction of desire. Price 50c.

"Spirit Echoes." My Mattie E. Hull. This pretty volume contains fifty-seven of the author's latest and choicest poems. Neatly bound in cloth, and with portrait of the author. Price 75 cents.

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland. Interesting, instructive and helpful; Spiritually uplifting. Cloth bound; price $1.

"Child Culture, According to the Laws of Physiological Psychology and Mental Suggestion." By Newton N. Riddell. A most excellent work for all who have the care or training of children. Price 65 cents.

A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

By Lilian Whiting.

Author of "The World Beautiful," "Kate Field," "After Her Death," "From Dreamland Sent," etc. With portrait. 16mo. Cloth, gilt. Price $1.25. The writer of this "Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning" has thrown the book into five chapters, with sub-titles as follows:

LIVING WITH VISIONS. "Summer Snow of Apple Blossoms;" Music-Flow of Pindar; Friends in the Unseen.

LOVES OF THE POETS. The Prefigured Friend; Vita Nouva; "One Day, My Siren."

IN THAT NEW WORLD. Pisa and Poetry; In Casa Guidi; Florentine Days; Walter Savage Landor.

ART AND ITALY. Individuality of Character; The Clasped Hands; Kate Field's Records; Mrs. Browning's Death.

LILIES OF FLORENCE. Poetic Rank; Spiritual Laws; Modern Scientific Thought; The Consideration of Genius.

For Sale at this office.

In Tune with the Infinite

By Ralph Waldo Trine.

Within yourself lies the cause of whatever enters into your life. To come into the full realization of your own awakened interior powers, is to be able to condition your life in exact accord with what you would have it.—From Title-Page.

CONTENTS—I. Prelude; II. The Supreme Fact of the Universe; III. The Supreme Fact of Human Life; IV. Fullness of Life—Bodily Health and Vigor; V. The Secret, Power and Effect of Love; VI. Wisdom and Interior Illumination; VII. The Realization of Perfect Peace; VIII. Coming into fullness of power; IX. Plenty of All Things—The Law of Prosperity; X. How Men Have Become Prophets, Seers, Sages, and Saviors; XI. The Basic Principle of All Religions—The Universal Religion; XII. Entering Now into the Realization of the Highest Riches. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $1.25.

Can Telepathy Explain?

Results of Psychical Research.

By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage, in this book of 243 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

A. P. A. MANUAL A complete expose of the principles and objects of the American Protective Association. A book for all patriotic American citizens. Price, 15 cents, or two for 25 cents.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

ALL THE HONEST MEDIUMS IN CHICAGO RECEIVE THE CORDIAL ENDORSEMENT OF THE ILLINOIS STATE SPIRITUALIST ASSOCIATION, WHETHER ORDAINED OR NOT. AS THERE ARE NUMEROUS FRAUDS IN THE CITY, IT WOULD BE WELL FOR ALL CAMP OFFICIALS TO BE EXCEEDINGLY CAREFUL AND WRITE TO DR. GEO. B. WARNE, 4203 EVANS AVENUE, FOR INFORMATION, IF THEY DESIRE ANY PARTICULARS. SUMMER CAMP-MEETINGS, WHEN PURE IN SOCIAL CONDITIONS, ELEVATED IN MENTAL AND SPIRITUAL TONE AND CONDUCTED ON STRICTLY BUSINESS METHODS ARE POWERFUL AIDS IN SPREADING THE TRUTHS OF SPIRITUALISM. IT MUST NOT BE FORGOTTEN THAT THEY ARE ALSO THE HARVEST TIME FOR THE FAKIRS, BECAUSE THEY COME TO THE RALLYING CENTERS FOR NUMBERS OF PEOPLE, MANY OF WHOM ARE HUNGERING FOR PHENOMENA ALL THE REST OF THE YEAR AND READY THERE TO PART WITH THEIR MONEY WITHOUT PRUDENCE. SPIRITUALISTS AND THE PUBLIC AT LARGE LOOK TO EVERY ONE OF OUR CAMP OFFICIAL BOARDS TO PROMOTE DECENCY, ELIMINATE TRICKERY AND RECOGNIZE ONLY HONEST MEDIUMS. THEY SHOULD PROTECT THE NOVICE AND THE GULLIBLE FROM IMPOSITION AND ROBBERY. THEY ARE LARGELY EDUCATORS OF THE PUBLIC. CAUTION, CANDOR, COURAGE AND DISCERNMENT ARE REQUIRED BY THESE OFFICERS.

Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran writes: "I wish to announce that I am not a candidate for the presidency of the O. S. A.; neither can I accept that office for another year. I take this way in answering my friends' request, thanking them for the support they have given me in the past two years. I regret that I was unable to do more for the state in the past year, but owing to ill health was compelled to leave the state work and go South where the sunshine and the rest has been a great benefit to me."

Harry J. Moore serves the Montana State Spiritualists Association during May and June. He delivers fifteen lectures for the New Era camp, near Portland, Oregon, during July. It may be that he will decide to remain and lecture in the West during August and September, but he will again work in Iowa during October and probably return to St. Joseph, Mo., for November. His present address is Cottage Inn, Billings, Mont.

Our correspondent at Sandusky, Ohio, writes: "Mrs. Marian Carpenter, of Detroit, addressed the Psychic Research Society, Sunday and Monday evenings, May 7 and 8. Mrs. Carpenter is one of the most brilliant and entertaining speakers who has visited our city, and has a large number of admirers here. Following her lectures, she delivered many messages from spirit friends of the audience, nearly all of which were acknowledged correct."

Professor-Doctor Uhlenhuth, of Germany, an eminent army doctor, definitely claims to have discovered the "missing link" by a long series of investigations, having established the similarity in every respect of the blood of the high apes and human beings. "If the blood serum of one animal be mixed with that of any other, the mixture remains clear. If, however, blood be taken from an ape and injected into the veins of a rabbit the blood subsequently taken from this rabbit becomes troubled when mixed with more ape's blood. A similar result is obtained if human blood be injected into the veins of a rabbit, and this simple experiment is often relied upon to prove it if a spot of blood found on the clothes of a suspected murderer is human. The phenomenon is observed only when the blood of some living animal is used, and the higher the ape in the scale of development the more pronounced is the reaction.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

H. Smith writes: "The Society Students of Nature holds meetings with varying success every Sunday evening, at 1565 Milwaukee avenue, corner Western avenue. Last Sunday, the meeting was unusually interesting; Brother H. Koeller, M. D., assisted the worthy pastor, Mrs. M. Schumacher. Sister McIntire gave us remarkable tests. Do not fail to attend the last Sunday evening service, May 28, the closing of the season until September. Prof. W. Lynn, the Hindoo, Prof. Hunt and his string orchestra of twenty juvenile musicians, will be present, which will be light of the evening to all. We predict a large gathering. All will be made welcome."

Mrs. C. Kerchner writes: "The services on Sunday afternoon, May 7, at the Rising Sun Mission, was fraught with pleasant surprises. The absence of our president necessitated Brother Montgomery taking charge of the meeting, which he did to the satisfaction of all. He delivered a forceful lecture upon spirit return, making the comparisons of demonstrations during bible times, which are recorded in the bible, and the present time. A great many Christians were in the audience, and it had a tendency to convince them that our Spiritualism is true, if they believe what their bible teaches. Demonstrations of the phenomena were given by our Sister Weaver and Mrs. Hamilton Gill, and a beautiful inspirational poem was rendered by Mrs. Virginia Bryan, a very talented spiritual worker from Ohio. No commendation is necessary on the messages given, as they brought consoling thoughts to all who received them. In the evening our hall was well filled by an eager throng of anxious strangers who were seeking after the philosophy and phenomena of our belief. I am glad to say they were not disappointed, for our speaker, that grand orator, Bro. Dr. J. McFarland, formerly a Presbyterian, now an ardent Spiritualist, enlightened them all. He took for his subject, "The Witch of Endor." He showed plainly that in her time there were demonstrations of spirit return, and if it were true then, the laws of the Great Spirit have not changed, so it must be true now, and all the creeds and dogmas of religions cannot contradict it if they place their faith on the bible, or on the phenomena as it is presented at this time. At the conclusion of his lecture he was heartily applauded. Spirit messages were given by Brother Burgess, Sister Weaver, and Brother Thompson, all of which bore out our speaker as to the truth of spirit return. Our choir rendered some beautiful selections which added materially to the services of the evening. We welcome strangers and investigators to our services every Sunday afternoon at 3; evening at 8, at Mission Hall, People's Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt streets. Our Second Annual May Hop will take place at our Pleasure Hall, People's Institute, on Saturday, May 20, and our lectures on Social Economy will take place the same evening in Mission Hall."

Professor Ernst Haeckel, scholar and exponent of Darwin, has delivered a most interesting lecture on the subject of evolution and the church. He had been induced, he said, to revoke his decision, made several years ago, never to lecture in public again by the appearance of a book which he claims marks an era in the history of evolution. It is the work of Erich Wasmann, a Jesuit father residing at Luxemburg, who has made a special study of ants. Wasmann acknowledges his conversion to Darwinism, except as regards the genesis of man, who, as he says, differs from the entire animal world in that he possesses a soul or the spirit of God. In spite of this reservation, Professor Haeckel sees in Wasmann's statements an admission on the part of the Catholic church that the Darwinian theory is correct, and he regards the present position as a compromise as important as that made by the church with Copernicus. The consequence will be, adds the savant, that church teaching will now gradually adapt itself to the Darwinian theory.—Special dispatch to the Chicago Inter Ocean, from Berlin, Germany.

Mr. Hassman, president, writes: "The attendance of the regular Sunday meeting of the North Star Spiritual Union was satisfactory. The opening prayer and lecture was delivered by Dr. P. M. Esser, after which Dr. L. C. Koehler followed with a short address on the Spiritual Philosophy. Tests were given by Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Rennau. The last mentioned medium has just opened a new society, "Light, more Light," at 1802 Ashland avenue. The sick were treated and flowers given to them, donated by the society. Any Spiritualist desiring to become a member of the society will get true instructions in the philosophy from Dr. P. M. Esser at his residence, 82 Willow street. The Progressive Thinker, a gem of thought, is at hand every meeting."

E. J. Schellhous writes: "On May 7, Arlington Hall, Kansas City, Mo., a large audience assembled to witness some very interesting spirit manifestations. Mrs. Margaret Vestal of Indiana, gave an exhibition of her mediumship in a full clear light. She holds the large end of her trumpet with her arm extended at full length, while the small end was held to the ear of the listener, and voices varying from a small child to that of a man, were distinctly heard by the whole audience, greatly to the satisfaction of the listener and interesting to the audience. This continued for an hour, and many went to the trumpet. Then W. W. Aber, the well known materializing medium, gave a light seance consisting of the ringing of bells and throwing them out from an improved cabinet while the medium sat in front of it in full view, so confined that he could not move. Then handkerchiefs taken from the audience were put in the cabinet one by one, and soon thrown out with a message on it addressed to the owner of it. About twenty messages were thus delivered. Then a blank tablet was put in the cabinet, and the leaves containing messages written thereon, addressed to persons in the audience to the number of over twenty were thrown out; all were recognized. A knife was then put into the medium's mouth and the spirits cut him loose. The trumpet medium received a round of hearty applause, and Mr. Aber's manifestations gave universal satisfaction."

Mrs. A. Turbett writes: "The Band of Harmony held its annual meeting at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Richmond, Rogers Park, May 4, this being the 21st anniversary of the Band of Harmony. The officers for the ensuing year are the following: Mrs. Cora Richmond, president; Mrs. Louise Goodrich, vice-president; Mrs. Mary Hill, secretary; Mrs. S. Ashton, treasurer; Mrs. A. Turbett, corresponding secretary. The afternoon and evening was spent in a pleasant manner."

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

A seance will be held on Friday evening, May 19, at the residence of Mrs. Geo. Lincoln, 626 East 63rd street. This well-known medium has volunteered her services, and desires other mediums to join in making the occasion a delightful and instructive one. Private readings will be given to those wishing the same. A small admission fee will be charged, and the proceeds of the entire affair will go to the Sunflower Club, Auxiliary to the Illinois State Spiritualist Association. Come one and all and enjoy this rare treat.

Mrs. O. S. Crane writes: "The Progressive Spiritual Church of Indianapolis, Ind., met May 3 for its first annual election of officers. The following were elected: President, C. A. Allen; vice-president, Mrs. O. S. Crane; secretary, Mrs. Eudora Compton; treasurer, Mrs. Chris Hartman; trustees, one year, O. S. Crane, J. A. Humphrey; trustees, three years, S. A. Zeigler, Mrs. J. E. Rehme and J. C. Barnes."

Mrs. B. Scherer writes from Louisville, Ky.: "The Ladies' Aid of Mrs. Anna Throndsen's Spiritual Church, gave her a surprise on April 4, she having been absent for five weeks, serving the friends in Indiana. It was a complete surprise to her. Refreshments were served. About forty ladies were present and all went away delighted. Our Aid is progressing nicely, and we hope to do better in the near future. During the five years Mrs. Throndsen has been in Louisville, she has endeared herself to the many people, bringing comfort to many homes. On Sunday night we will begin our usual Sunday services. We held services in the pastor's home during her absence."

Fred D. Dunakin writes: "The Ladies' Society, auxiliary to the Spiritualist Society of Elyria, Ohio, held a memorial meeting at its hall on last Sunday evening, May 7, in memory of Aunt Lydia Steel (as she was familiarly called by all), of North Amherst, Ohio. The little hall was well filled, for Aunt Lydia was a friend to everybody, and everyone loved and respected her, and sought by word and deed to show their respects to her whom they loved. The ladies had their room beautifully decorated with lovely flowers for the occasion, emblematical of the pure sweet life of the one they held so dear in their memory, and whose transition to the spirit world was like the breaking away of a dove-like spirit from its prison house of clay, and passing out to a more perfect condition, where all things are lovely like herself. The writer, assisted by Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran of Toledo, and Mrs. Anna E. Baird, of Elyria, Ohio, delivered the memorial addresses."

Flora Hardin Millspaugh writes: "The committee appointed by the Ladies' Bazaar Society, auxiliary to the Camp Chesterfield, Ind., and organized by Amelia Colby Luther, desire to close up their business pertaining to the Luther monument or marker for her grave, a notice of which was given through The Progressive Thinker last fall by Mrs. Louise Murphy, of Crown point, Ind. At the recent spring meeting of the committee, I was authorized to again announce through the Spiritualist press the purpose of this committee and to ask the friends and acquaintances of Mrs. Luther who desire to assist in this duty to her memory, to send at once their remittances to Mrs. Susan S. Mong, 325 West Adams street, Muncie, Ind. The committee have not yet enough funds to meet the expense. They desire to have the memorial service at her grave in the Muncie cemetery; also at Chesterfield as early during the session of camp-meeting as possible."

Mrs. H. L. Bigelow writes: "Married, in San Jose, Cal., April 25, 1905, L. W. Dexter and H. Anna Travis, Mrs. Hendee Rogers officiating. The writer of this and husband, also Mr. Rogers, witnessing the ceremony. The contracting parties have been Spiritualists for many years. Brother Dexter has filled the office of treasurer of the First Spiritual Union satisfactorily for several years. We congratulate them on their new relation most heartily, trusting they may walk together in peace and harmony for many years to come."

E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "The First Spiritualist Association has discontinued its meetings until October. The lyceum, under the supervision of Mrs. M. J. Stephens and Mrs. W. Miller and Mrs. Price, will give a picnic, which will be held at River View, down the Potomac River. The Temple League will hold meetings all through the summer, at Mrs. Farrows', 216 I street, N. W. A very interesting meeting was held on Sunday, May 7. After a musical selection by Miss Farrow, Mrs. Congdon addressed the meeting, assisted by Walter P. Williams, Mrs. Farrow, J. Potts, Mrs. Angel and others. The auxiliary of the First Association meets as usual at Mr. F. A. Wood's, 402 A street, S. E., every Thursday evening. Mrs. Stephens holds classes Thursday afternoons; Mrs. Emil Nabbe, as usual, at Woon's Hall; Mrs. Hinkle, No. 11 4th street, S. E.; Mrs. Price every Sunday evening; and the Educational Association at Smith's Hall, through the month of May."

Emma A. Newton writes from Glens Falls, N. Y.: "Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds has just finished a five weeks engagement with the first Psychical Society of Glens Falls. We feel a pleasure to speak regarding her work. She has been coming to Glens Falls every November and April for twelve years, and every year we realize a growth in her powers. She is a conscientious and indefatigable worker. This month there seems to have been a change in the guides to do a much more positive as well as scientific work. The Ladies' Aid gave a social in honor of Mrs. Reynolds, and it was a perfect success. If she has as many friends elsewhere as in Glens Falls. The cause seems to be growing in a substantial manner. Thinking people are admitting the truth. The president, Mr. M. B. Little, gives fine lectures when no out-of-town speaker is here, and he holds the standard high and demands the best, knowing that there is none too good for Spiritualism. We will look forward eagerly to November that will bring our sister to us again."

Reporter writes: "The Church of the Soul, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, pastor, held its annual meeting last Sunday morning. The treasurer, on making his report, said it was the best financial report ever made by the church. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mr. Waldo Dennis; vice-president, Mrs. S. J. Ashton; secretary, Mr. A. W. Austin; treasurer, Mr. J. Gieselman. Mr. Janse was the only new member elected on the board of trustees. The Sunday services will be held in the same hall, 309 Masonic Temple, the coming year. The Sunday services will be continued during the month of May, beginning again the third Sunday in September."

Mrs. Virginia Bryan, one of our most eloquent trance mediums, will lecture at Star Lodge Hall, 378 South Western avenue, each Sunday evening.

Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, the vice-president of the I. S. S. A., has received the following from Mrs. Lizzie Moore, of Wellington, N. Z., speaking of Mrs. Lole Prior, as follows: "Mrs. Prior is without exception the best medium we have had. She is drawing crowded audiences, and hundreds have to be turned away, though our hall has been considerably enlarged."

Maggie Henry writes: "On Sunday, May 7, at the Universal Occult Society, Evangelist F. M. Stoller read for the scripture lesson a portion of the 12th chapter of I. Corinthians. Then in place of the usual lecture he answered philosophical questions. Some very interesting questions were asked and answered. We have fine meetings, perfect harmony, and good music, Madam Lucile DeLoux presiding at the piano. She always favors us with spirit messages. Then Prof. Stoller is a fine psychometric reader and many get messages or readings. So all are blessed by attending our meetings. A cordial invitation is extended to strangers to attend our meetings. On May 24, Wednesday evening, Madame DeLoux will hold a test social in her parlors at 2952 Cottage Grove avenue; an invitation is extended to all. Refreshments served."

L. N. Walling writes from Lawrence, Kansas: "The First Spiritualist Society has recently had the pleasure of entertaining the public with a feast of good things by way of lectures from the gifted speakers, Mr. A. Scott Bledsoe and wife, of Topeka, Kansas. They spoke to appreciative audiences on Friday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoon, the 5th, 6th and 7th."

Mrs Johanne Rennau writes: "The North Side Spiritualist Society will give an entertainment and May party, May 20. A good time is expected. All are invited. Come and see for yourselves. There will be a short program, after which there will be music and dancing. Admission 15 cents."

Dr. Beverly writes: "Free meetings continue at Arlington Hall, 31st street and Indiana avenue, and large crowds are coming to investigate this new truth. Sunday, May 21, the president of the society will give a lecture on Vibration, using the blackboard and two megaphones, in illustrating. He teaches telepathy and is demonstrating some very useful truths that all should know. We have secured a new musician, and with Florence Daniels' lovely solos, our program cannot be excelled. All workers in the truth are welcome to come and help. We stand for honest demonstrations and the highest truths."

Emil T. Vaas writes: "The German English society, Bund der Wahrheit No. 18, will have a May Festival on Sunday, May 21, to be held at Heuser's Hall, 576 Larrabee street, near Wisconsin, beginning at 3 p. m. sharp. In the afternoon a very elaborate program will be carried out, consisting of songs, instrumental music, recitations, etc., as well as a lecture by E. T. Vaas on the subject of 'Obsession,' and tests and messages by Frank Joseph and other mediums. Supper will then be served, 25 cents per person, and the evening spent in dancing and general good time to everybody. Admittance 15 cents at the door. Come everybody, and enjoy the day with us, and remember the place, Heuser's Hall 576 Larrabee street. Come and help crown the most winsome lassie as May Queen for 1905."

D. G. Hill writes: "The Golden Rule Spiritualist Society's services for Sunday, May 7, were greeted by a large attendance, both afternoon and evening. The speaker for the afternoon, Mrs. Alice Sexsmith, delivered a most pleasing address, her subject being 'Spirituality,' which she handled in a very instructive manner. Your correspondent foretells for her a most promising future as a teacher of the truth of Spiritualism. She was followed by messages by those well-known mediums, Mrs. Nellie Kusserow and Mrs. Mary McIntyre. The evening lecture was by Mrs. Nora E. Hill, who always holds the close attention of her audience. The message bearers were Mrs. Alice Sexsmith and Mrs. Nora E. Hill. The speakers for Sunday, May 21, will be for afternoon, Mrs. Martha Price of Boston, Mass.; for the evening, Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, missionary for the State Spiritualist Association of Texas. All seekers after truth are cordially invited to attend these meetings each Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., O'Donnell College Hall, So. Paulina street, between Washington Boulevard and Park avenue. The reception and dance given by this society, Saturday evening, May 6, was a financial success and was heartily enjoyed by all. On Saturday, June 17, this society will give an entertainment at its hall, at which time a prize drawing of a complete set of books, the writings of John L. Stoddard, which was donated to the society, will take place. An enjoyable time promised on that occasion."

Joseph Challand writes from Topeka, Kansas: "I am pleased to be able to say that the First Spiritualist Society of Topeka is in quite a flourishing condition. The lectures are well attended, and are highly satisfactory as well as the tests given after each lecture. I have never seen a Spiritualist meeting conducted in a more becoming manner. I have had the pleasure of listening to many eloquent platform speakers but have never heard any, in any way, superior to Mrs. Bledsoe, and as to Mrs. Inez Wagner's perfect reading which is conducted under absolute test conditions, will say, they are perfectly satisfactory to all who are not influenced by prejudice or envy."

Simon Emery writes from Maine: "I was very much interested in an article by Julia H. Johnson in The Progressive Thinker of April 29, in relation to the great influx of spirit communication among the Shakers. I lived with them in Alfred, Maine. At that time I was quite young, not over 15 or 16 years old, but remember many of the communications, predictions and beautiful heavenly songs through their mediums. It only seems a little while since, and I am now past my 80th year. I have lived to see many of those predictions fulfilled to the letter. I remember when the spirits told them they were going to leave them for a while and commence on the outer wheel, and in a short time the tiny raps were heard at Hydesville, which have since gone to all nations. Nearly every family and sect has become honeycombed by these spirit manifestations."

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, May 21, 1905, S. E. 58: "Story of the Letter O.

Gem of Thought:—
O tells of morning, of glory and power,
Of oft open doors,—
Opportunities that crowd to the hour.

For information concerning The Progressive Lyceum, authorized lesson sheet of the National Spiritualists Association, address John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

A paper published at Hutchinson, Kansas, says: "The Psychic Research Society held a very interesting service Sunday afternoon, the subject of the lecture being 'Spiritualism, a Moral and Ethical Teacher,' which was handled with skill and care by the Rev. E. E. McCarthy, whose natural powers of explanation is unsurpassed. She lifts one out of his environment to dwell for a time at least among the blessed. She goes to Sterling with best wishes and hopes of her return."

Mrs. C. J. Dixon, secretary, writes: "The secretary of the Spiritual Association of Springfield, Mo., would be pleased to communicate with some good speaker bearing proper credentials, who may contemplate a trip through the Southwest. Under satisfactory terms, arrangements may be made for a short engagement. Address me at No. 529 West Linn street."

Maurgerite Mac writes: "In her parlors at 3019 Vernon avenue, on Thursday evening, May 25, Mrs. Jeffery Burland will hold her regular monthly social. If you want to have a good time and get a good cup of coffee, just attend one of her socials. After you have been to one, you will not forget to invite your friends to the next one. You are sure of a message or a palm reading, as Mrs. Maggie Henry is always with us to read the lines in your hands, and other psychics are always present."

Dr. Dobson-Barker writes from San Jose, Cal.: "The First Spiritual Union was greatly favored Sunday, at their morning and evening meeting, by having with them Prof. Geo. Perkins of Oakland. A large and intelligent audience gathered to hear him, the deepest interest being manifested at both sessions. Prof. Perkins' specialities are speaking and singing, and giving readings from a scientific standpoint, bringing prominently to the front questions pertaining to the domestic economy, the sacredness of home and the responsibilities resting upon father, mother and child. His lecture before our society was, 'See Thou Character,' analyzing Shakspeare's delineations, and pointing out the absence of the home teachings. Mr. Perkins emphasizes the necessity of having phrenology, astrology and psychometry taught in our public schools. The president calling for a rising vote of thanks, a unanimous vote was given by the entire audience rising to their feet, in response to their appreciation of the instructive lesson taught. We hope to have the Professor with us again in the near future. Sunday, May 14, we are to have an address by Mrs. N. P. Fox, followed by Mrs. R. Cowell, of Oakland, who will give tests, and during the evening session, will christen the infant grandson of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. J. Hambly, son of Mr. and Mrs. Theall, having recently returned to San Jose from New York City."

In a letter received from Dr. Peebles, in London a few days since, we learn that he is lecturing every Sunday upon Spiritualism in Nottingham, Birmingham, Leeds, Sheffield, Manchester, Glasgow, Merthyr in Wales, and so forth. He desires us to state that he cancels all his engagements with the camp-meetings to which he had been invited, except the Chesterfield, Indiana, camp-meeting, and one in Michigan, near Battle Creek. His outlined literary work prevents his spending time at these camp-meetings. He returns from England some time in June.

Eva McCoy, the excellent test medium, writes from Sheridan, Wyoming: "I am engaged for the month of May and June at this place, and through Montana, to serve the state association. I serve the New Era camp at Portland, Oregon, for July and through Iowa in September."

Moses and Mattie E. Hull will be at home not later than the 23rd of May, and ready for work in the Spiritualist field. Mrs. Clara L. Stewart is going to the Pacific Coast to work in the interest of the Morris Pratt Institute. She begins her work in Seattle, on Sunday, June 18, and in Portland, on Sunday, July 3. She can be addressed after June 16, Hotel Vendome, Seattle, Wash., and after June 26, at 311½ Stark street, Portland, Oregon. Mr. Hull writes: "I am now holding a great debate with Elder Steers, a great Adventist Minister of Vancouver, B. C."

THOMAS GRIMSHAW.

A Letter From His Home in England.

Dr. Geo. B. Warne says: Brother Thomas Grimshaw's many friends, both East and West, will read with interest the following lines from him, and knowing his innate modesty will not mistake his freedom of expression in private correspondence for seeming egotism. He wrote from Burnley Lane on May 1:

Here I am in the land of the free and the home of brave, at least that is what Englishmen say, and of course it must be true.

Well, we arrived safely after a most delightful voyage. The sea was almost as calm as the scriptural sea of glass. No sea sickness. I managed to dispose of four good square meals each day, and—tell it not in Gath—I gained eight pounds of flesh in eight days.

Since our arrival the weather has been beastly, raining nearly all the time. Speaking socially and spiritually I have had a delightful time. After a brief visit to my old home where the Spiritualists gave me a grand reception, we journeyed to London and spent a week in seeing the sights, and the friends I met were very agreeable. I met good old Dr. Peebles, who is paying one of his flying visits. Easter saw me in Manchester, where we had a splendid time. Good Friday they celebrated the Anniversary. In the afternoon we were entertained with a choir contest; several choirs connected with societies in different parts of the country participated. In the evening we had a tea party, about a thousand people partook of the feast of good things, after which we adjourned to a large hall and had the pleasure of meeting and hearing many of the leading workers of the movement. Your humble servant was the honored guest, and I met with a magnificent reception.

Sunday I lectured in Manchester before the central Society, the hall was literally packed, many being turned away. Easter Monday found me present at a demonstration of Yorkshire Spiritualists in Dewsbury. Yesterday, Sunday, April 30, found me back in my home town, Burnley. Although it rained all day, we had an audience of over six hundred last evening. If the weather would only clear up, I am looking forward to having some delightful times. I am engaged every Sunday in different parts of the country, and if I was not here for rest I could talk every night.

There, I have blown a long blast on my own horn, and I suppose you are tired. Sorry I could not be with you at May board meeting—hope you have accomplished great things and that the triumphant march of the cause is assured for the next six months.

EXPLANATORY.

Dr. G. B. Warne's Reply to Jane Steffenson's Criticism.

Jane Steffenson's criticism of the Chicago Spiritualists' League and its May meeting particularly, published in The Progressive Thinker of May 13, calls for a word of explanation.

The settled policy of the body has been to limit the main address of each public programme to thirty minutes in its time of delivery, from a conviction that the average audience feels that it is generally willing to dispense with all a speaker cannot compress into that period and from a desire to do justice to all participants who have a part in the evening's entertainment. Dr. Wickland was granted ten minutes in excess of that limit, and without doubt could not have exhausted his experiences and conclusions had the entire evening been at his disposal. His work in all psychic lines bears the stamp of candor and of painstaking studiousness.

Your lady correspondent is the first one whose complain against the suspension of five-minute speeches on the evening's subject has reached the executive board of the league, while on the other hand many exceptions to that feature have been expressed, because of the lateness when it was reached, because the speakers often bestrode some individual hobby foreign to the pending question, and because free criticisms preceding the messages often created an atmosphere of friction which hampered the mediums for that phase.

The executive board is simply seeking to learn what is most interesting to the audiences and use the knowledge thus acquired. Each meeting adds to its fund of experience. It has already so nearly abolished the unpleasant advertising feature by private notification and platform protests that criticism upon that point is too belated for present consideration. Three message mediums are enough for any one evening.

GEO B. WARNE,
President C. S. L.

Evolution as Defined by Dr. Austin.

Dr. B. F. Austin, pastor of the First Spiritual Church, Baltimore, Md., lectured on "Evolution," Sunday, April 30.

In part, the doctor said that evolution, once so unpopular with religious people, is now the dominant philosophy of the scientific world, and is rapidly invading the theological colleges. It has been defined as a "continuous progressive change, according to definite laws and by means of resident forces." Three great steps upward in human thought have been taken in the past: The recognition that the sun is the centre of our system; the law of gravitation and the evolution theory. Copernicus, Newton, Huxley and Wallace are names "not born to die." It is said that evolution is not logically proven; neither is the law of gravitation, nor the assumed fact that the sun will rise rise to-morrow.

It is said that evolution does away with God; not so. It does destroy those puny and unworthy conceptions of the Great First Cause, those anthropomorphic ideas of God which men formed in the childhood of the race. Whence came the "resident forces," and whence the "definite laws," if not from God? In place of an "absentee God" who toiled six days and then rested, evolution shows us the living and present God at work in all nature's operations.

Evolution enlarges our conceptions of revelation, making it world-wide and age-long, and showing us that nature is full of divine truth and every "burning bush" ablaze with God. Evolution, fully understood, is not antagonistic to true religion, whatever its relations with and effects upon theology. It asserts the great antiquity of the earth, and many of its expounders tell us man has been an inhabitant of this globe a full quarter of a million years. It declares that there has been no disastrous fall, but a constant rise in human life and character. It is supported by a vast array of corroborative facts in geology, astronomy and kindred natural sciences.

In place of degrading man by giving him a lowly origin, it represents nature as at work for millions of years in making preparations for his coming, through that gradual organization and sublimation of matter in vegetable and animal forms, which rendered the human body and brain a possibility. Man embodies in his form the results of all lower forms of life; in him the whole animal world is represented. This truth is taught in Markham's poem, "The Making of Lincoln," in Boyesen, Tennyson and other great poet philosophers. Evolution makes man's future inexpressibly glorious and sublime.

D. FEAST.

JOSEPH JEFFERSON.

The Noted Actor Visits a Former Actor Friend.

Last evening Dr. F. D. C. Meyer, Justin Hulburd and E. W. Hulburd were in the home of the latter, reading a recent spiritual publication entitled, "Death—The Meaning and Result," by J. K. Wilson, and conversing upon its contents. About 9 o'clock Justin was observed to be under some influence that was endeavoring to obtain control of his organism. He arose and walked about the room in an unsteady manner, finally approaching an open door, staggered and fell against the door casing. Dr. Meyer and E. W. Hulburd sprang to his assistance and led him to an armchair.

After a few minutes the spirit extended the medium's hands, shaking ours in a cordial manner, saying, "Good evening, gentlemen. Well, well, well. He is nearly as broad as he is long. What has become of those beautiful curly locks and that petite form? Where is his pride now? All gone. I am rather weak on my pins. I thought I would walk around until you stopped reading, but I staggered and come near falling. You have a nice, comfortable home here in the mouuntains. Everything looks beautiful outside.

"I suppose you would like to know who I am. My name is Joseph Jefferson, I passed into spirit life a few days ago. You may think it remarkable that I have come so quick, but I have known of this for many years. I am a thorough Spiritualist and knew all about the change.

"How do you suppose I got here so quick? I met Charlotte Cushman. She said, 'Joseph, don't you want to go and see Puss? (the nickname of the medium when on the stage) You can talk through his organs of speech.'

"I said, 'Yes,' and she brought me here.

"I knew I was going to leave the body—at one time I thought I might get up again, but it was not so ordered. I am not altogether myself. I cannot get my thoughts together and am somewhat weak.

"Charlotte wanted me to come and give my first communication through little Puss. I will come again and hope to do better next time."

Dr. Meyer asked the spirit if he found it over there as he had anticipated. He said, "Not quite. In some respects it is not exactly as it had been represented or as mediums had described it to me, but it is all right. I will soon be straightened out."

The spirit ceased talking and apparently left. Presently he returned and said: "I nearly forgot to say good-night. Remember me to Puss. I will come again."

Owing to his diminutive form, Justin was by his theatrical friends called Puss; that nickname was applied to him while he remained upon the earth.

The passing of Joseph Jefferson leaves Justin the last of that old school of actors.

E. W. HULBURD.

Descanso, Cal.

OUR TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

And lastly, our latest premium book, "Letters From the Spirit World," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea.

All these TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.75 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family,—an achievement only accomplished by the Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

THE CO-RO-NA MEDICATOR

MAILED ON FIVE DAY'S TRIAL

FREE

Cures Catarrh, Head Colds, Headache, Partial Deafness and immediately relieves Hay Fever and Asthma.

Never take medicine in the stomach to kill germs of Catarrh in the head. Nothing but air can reach their hiding places, and the Co-ro-na kill them on the spot.

SPECIAL OFFER.

For a short time I will mail my new Co-ro-na Medicator with medicine for one year's treatment to any person naming The Progressive Thinker on five day's trial free. If it gives you perfect satisfaction, send me $1 (half price), if not, return it at the expired time which will only cost you 3 cents postage and you will not owe me a penny, or if you enclose $1, I will include free for the asking, 30 days' treatment of my Australian Life Tablets for Rheumatism and Kidney trouble.

They destroy the Uric Acid poison in the plasma of the blood.

Address, E. J. WORST,
8 Elmore Blk., ASHLAND, OHIO.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

20th Century Guide TO PALMISTRY

This is the simplest, clearest and yet the most exhaustive presentation this interesting science has yet received. All of the discoveries, investigations and researches of centuries are summed up in this practical, fascinating treatise on Palmistry.

There is no trait, no characteristic, no inherited tendency, that is not marked on the palm of the hand and can be traced with unerring accuracy by following the principles enforced by the presented in this. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, $1.

"The Spiritual Signific

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Roy Barcal: Q. If God created all life, is it not sinful to take the life of animals ever for food? Are there any particular passages in the Bible on this point?

A. The Bible by designating the kinds which may and may not be eaten, gives the religious law, which is supposed to give the right to man to use a portion at least as he pleases. The Bible further is understood as placing the animal world subservient to man, and thereby made him lordly, unjust and cruel to the animals with which he comes in contact. It was believed that they had no feeling, or reason, and no rights man was bound to respect. Not until science came and declared that man was only one remove from the animals beneath him, and instinct a less developed reason; that all the various species of animals were united by their plan of organization, alike in all, that all had nerves that felt the thrill of pleasure or of pain, was humane sentiment possible.

This correspondent puts his question from the standpoint of theology. In answering it, we must dispose of the idea that God "created" animals or man for any purpose. There has been no creation! there has been evolution. The old story of God creating the world, is a child's dream, and is like the other tales of the childhood of the world.

The matter of "sinfulness" would turn on the point of whether it was God's will that man should kill—that is in a religious sense, for sin means acting contrary to the will of God expressed in religious dogmas. According to the Bible, God was an insatiate lover of smoking flesh on the reeking altar. He commanded his chosen people to sacrifice (kill) the best for Him. But this has nothing to do in deciding the question of right and wrong.

It is "right," that is in accord with their organization, for the carnivora to eat flesh, as it is for the frugiverous to eat fruit, or the herbiverous to live on vegetation. It would be wrong if either attempted the diet of the other.

Hence the answer depends on the class to which man belongs. If his teeth and digestive tract show that he was evolved from the carnivora, then flesh being his natural diet, he like all flesh eaters must obtain it by the slaughter of animals. The carnivora simply obey the impulses of their organization.

If man has partially evolved out of the carnivorous state, and become omniverous, then his flesh food must be obtained by killing lower animals.

There is, however, a radical disagreement as to man's early estate. The anthropoids immediately below him are frugiverous. The orang outang, chimpanzee, etc., live on fruits and nuts, with now and then birds' eggs, or young birds. Man came from frugiverous ancestors and not carnivorous. His history proves this, and it is confirmed by his anatomy. At some time in his advance, either by failure of his natural food, or the perversion of his appetite he became a flesh and fish eater.

Among savage peoples, the struggle for food is the dominant incentive, and starvation is an ever-present menace. Whatever will appease hunger is seized—insect, reptile, or animal. Especially is this the case with tribes, driven away from the more fruitful regions. While those living in the tropics may have a continuous supply of fruits, nuts, and vegetables, those pushed into the temperate regions, would find it impossible to sustain life, without taking other life. In the dire visitations of famine cannibalism had its origin, to continue after its necessity had passed.

Few there are who would relish flesh, if they came fresh from the slaughter house, having witnessed the cruelty and pain, and disgusting operations.

Man has a right to protect himself against venomous and destructive animals, but he has no right to cause unnecessary pain, even to the lowest creature.

We believe that the growth of humane sentiment, will eventually lead man to prefer the diet which his organization clearly indicates.

T. A. Wentworth: Q. Does religion harmonize with science? What is worship in a scientific sense?

A. If religion is the truth, it must harmonize with science, which is demonstrated truth, for truth wherever found is a unit. Whatever dogma of religion does not harmonize, must then be false. There may be supreme worship in a "scientific sense," though not that worship which comes from cringing fear; the begging prayer of the slave who regards God as a tyrant master to be appeased and turned from his purpose. Consecration to knowledge—to know the principles of nature, and the sublime capabilities of the spirit, is the highest form of worship. We know that not the least law of the physical or spiritual universe can be changed. That prayer and intercession will not change the course of things in the least. We know we must then, place ourselves in line with the laws of our being, and if we do so there is harmony, and whatever the power beyond, if we call it God, we thus become in harmony with him; we obey his commands and fulfill his purposes.

This is true worship; the adoration of knowledge. If we pray, intelligently, it is not that the laws of the world be changed, but that we understand and conform to the laws physical as well as spiritual.

Can deeper reverence come to the human soul than is felt when, under the dome of stars, it sees in each gem-like light a sun and stretching into infinitude of space continuous suns and systems, all held in mazy orbits by the hand of law? When it contemplates the universe thus presented as looking off into space from the headland of this earth, feeling as an atom in immensity, yet it is conscious that it is superior, as a being comprehending the forces on which this complex immensity depends.

It does not worship by a confession of weakness, of incapacity, and imbecility, but by admiration and the ennobling consciousness of being the one product of this evolution having the possibilities of comprehending the universe.

Peter Valentine: Q. What is the difference between magnetism and hypnotism?

A. Magnetism, in the sense given the word by this correspondent is "animal magnetism" as distinguished from physical magnetism. There is no difference in the meaning of the two words. Hypnotism is less objectionable than magnetism, but both convey erroneous ideas, and in no wise are expressive of the phenomena. The early practitioners of mesmerism found that when they held their hands near the foreheads of subjects, there was apparently an attraction exerted by the hands, drawing the forehead as a magnet attracts iron. They changed the name of mesmerism to magnetism, prefixing "animal," to distinguish it. Later investigators saw in the phenomena resemblance to sleep, and to escape the odium which had been cast on these names, invented a new designation, hypnotism. But as this state is sleep only in faint resemblance, the term is misleading.

M. S. B. Greenwald: Q. Is it necessary to have "Rev." prefixed to a person's name, when engaged in speaking on Spiritualism?

A. Unless ordained, really you have no right to affix "Rev." to your name, although many do. It is a false pretense. Ordination by the N. S. A. confers advantages, such as the law gives all ministers of the gospel, such as half-fare on railroads, power to perform the marriage ceremony, and makes the meeting which they address unquestionably protected by the laws in common with all religious gatherings. But if ordained, no one is required to write "Rev." before his name. That is entirely a matter of taste. As used it is now a meaningless term,—however much it meant to a past generation. There is no need of writing L.L. D., or Rev. with the name of Savage, or A. M. S., F. L. S., F. H. S., Ph. D., and a dozen other abbreviations to the name of Thomas Edison. It is a streak of vanity which exhibits such appendages, and the really great man is belittled thereby.

Prominent Spiritualist Passed On

Our arisen sister, Mrs. Mary Schwenker, 98 N. Front street, Columbus, Ohio, crossed the border line, just as the sun went down at 6 o'clock, Wednesday evening, April 26 in her forty-seventh year. A true, noble woman, unselfish, and an ardent worker for Spiritualism. The writer visited her often during her last illness, and her face was most beautiful and radiant—so beautiful that I had to express to her how beautiful she looked, and I told her that it proved to me that her mind was at rest. She said, "Yes, Sister Webster, I am ready to go when the angels come for me. Every wish is gratified; there is nothing in this world that I want but what I can have for the asking. I know I must go soon, and I am ready." Mrs. Schwenker is the beloved wife of Mr. Chas Schwenker, one of Columbus' most influential business men. He is also a true Spiritualist, and had her funeral conducted under spiritual rites, Miss Elizabeth Harlow of Boston, officiating. Miss Harlow was assisted at the home by H. E. Boerstler, president of the West Side church, and at the cemetery by the writer. Miss Harlow was fully inspired and delivered an eloquent and beautiful address that was soothing and comforting to those who were near and dear to our arisen sister before passing to higher life. Mrs. Schwenker made a gift of three hundred dollars and more to the West Side church, having her lawyer pay off the mortgage and cancel the remaining notes, leaving our church free from all indebtedness, saying, "Now, Sister Webster, I have paid off the debt; now those of you who have worked so hard can raise money and beautify the inside for the angels." She had been interested in the church since its organization. She was very energetic, and helped us to decorate the board of trade auditorium for the state association last May, and spared neither time nor money to have it a success. She was a good, true woman, always trying to do something for the upliftment of humanity. Her funeral was largely attended and the floral tributes were grand in the extreme.

MRS. HATTIE G. WEBSTER.

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Having read of the success of some of your readers selling Dish-washers, I have tried the work with wonderful success. I have not made less than $3.00 any day for the last six months. The Mound City Dish-washer gives good satisfaction and every family wants one. A lady can wash and dry the dishes without removing her gloves and can do the work in two minutes. I got my sample machine from the Mound City Dish-Washing Co., of St. Louis, Mo. I used it to take orders and sold 12 Dish-washers the first day. The Mound City Dish-Washer Co. will start you. Write them for particulars. Ladies can do as well as men. JOHN F. M.

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms and Ceremonies for the Use of Liberals." Price 25 cents.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

Life in the Spirit Realms.

A Series of Letters From Spirit Carlyle Petersilea, Through the Mediumship of His Wife, Mrs. Amelia Petersilea.

Letter Number Eleven—Continued.

Now, I wrote the foregoing that it might be somewhat of a test, and to let you all know that we know your thoughts and also what is written about us. This afternoon, since the foregoing was written, my wife has received The Progressive Thinker, dated April 8, wherein a lady refers to Abby Judson, and that the idea of her being united to the other half of herself must be very erroneous—that she thought of little else but her brother Elnathan, and that her greatest happiness would be to make him happy.

My wife has a letter in her possession that Miss Judson wrote to us previous to her departure to the spirit world, in which she says: "I have read your books with great delight and satisfaction. They make clear to my mind many things that I have long desired to know. Two points, especially, have come home to me as great truths—eternal verities. One is the spiritual germ theory, the other the great question of soul counterparts. I am convinced that what you wrote on those subjects is true. I never could believe that animals ceased to exist at the death of the body, nor that angels were sexless. The spiritual germ theory explains everything, and clears up the mist. Your showing up of the eternal counterpart seems as true to me as it is delightful. I, myself, have an inkling of how it will be with me who have never been married. I also feel certain who my true other self may be; but he passed into spirit life many years ago. No doubt that is the reason why I never married."

The above is the gist of what Abby Judson wrote, and the letter, as previously stated, is in my wife's possession; and now I shall allow Abby herself to take the control.

CARLYLE PETERSILEA.

My dear friend and all other friends, who may read this message. Is there one of you who can suppose that simply to witness my brother's joy would be joy enough for me throughout eternity?

My brother's joy belongs to him, and my joy belongs to me. I may be delighted and sympathize with my brother in his joy, but I cannot sink my own individuality within that of my brother's, or either one of my brothers, for Elnathan is not my only brother. Elnathan suffered much while in the earthly form, but he was not entirely conscious of his sufferings. One of the first to meet and greet me when I arrived here was Elnathan, together with my father and mother. My father had already been instrumental in restoring my brother, for at first he was little more than a child in spirit, his real self had been buried so long in a crazed brain and weak, impotent body. I found him an inmate of my father's house, once more taking up his life where he left it in early youth, for his spirit had really made very little progress after his brain became so useless to him.

He visits me now often for great lengths of time, and is interested himself in my work and that of my dearly beloved husband.

The love of a brother does not in any way interfere with that of a husband, neither will either one of us remain within the home of our parents throughout eternity. No, nor for any great length of time. Each soul has its own particular work to do—its mission to perform—and my father, Adoniram, would not consider either Elnathan or myself worthy of him if we selfishly remained within his home, simply that we might enjoy ourselves.

My friend says she doesn't think it like me to slip off and marry an old lover. Well, to say the least, such a way of putting it is very undignified. I surely did not slip off, but my husband was brought to me by my own parents, and Elnathan's joy was greater than all the others, apparently, for he was the most child-like in the manifestation of it. Elnathan himself, when the proper time arrives, when he is fitted for the true union, will be united as I have been. This, he already knows, and the event no doubt, will soon take place. If his spirit had been fully developed in earth life it would have taken place some time ago, and when it does happen, his work, together with his own other-self, may be far away from me. It is just as erroneous to suppose that families come together here, and remain thus throughout eternity, as the old idea of heaven, God sitting on a throne, and the angels singing psalms and playing harps forever and ever. Earth is a type of heaven, and all you have there we have here on a grander scale, one grand remove higher and all that we have missed or lacked on earth the great law of recompense and strict justice restores to us here.

I became very weary of my brother Elnathan's obscene and abusive ravings before he left his body, and felt that unless he were greatly changed I should not care to see him; and, can any sensible person think that I should be forever tied to my brother's side? I love my brother as dearly as any sister ever loved a brother, but a brother is but a brother and not a husband. My spirit is so far ahead of Elnathan's that he is almost like a child to me, and we are extremely far apart—that is our souls are! Where would be my own joy and recompense if I were to remain by him forever? Moreover, he would be the first to shake me off.

Spiritual beings sometimes feel almost discouraged at the obtuseness of the lower world about these things, and if after great endeavor we write to them, they will not believe us if we do not continue to say the same old things we used to say, without being one step in advance, then in their estimation it cannot be ourselves. O, how strange it seems to me now!

Ingersoll must still believe and write the same things he did when in the earth life or it cannot be the redoubtable Colonel, forgetting that Ingersoll now knows what he before did not know, and consequently is changed.

Charles Darwin must still continue to teach evolution just as he believed it to be when in the earth life, forgetting that his eyes and spiritual knowledge are opened to a greater truth; and that truth is involution, together with evolution, and you will not accept them and that which they have learned. Still you all preach progression—eternal progression—but if they may not be allowed to tell of the things that they have learned since coming here, where is the progression?

Others will talk about creating life by joining certain chemicals together, forgetting that the germs of life reside within the ethers and are attracted into matter from thence, when the proper conditions are made. If life could be created in the way before mentioned, the credit might be given to any neglectful housewife who left messes to sour and become putrid; in this case life appears at once and the messes are a mass of living creatures, but the germs were within the air or the ether, and were attracted to the messes on account of this condition.

And so, when I, Abby A. Judson, wrote to you of that which has taken place with me, some of you scout it. I must talk and write exactly the same as before, not having gained a particle of knowledge or experience. I do not know how any will progress at that rate.

Now I am doing this writing, and not Mrs. Petersilea, I am now within her aura and able to write that which I wish to write, and we are now, this moment, talking together. Her spirit is talking with my spirit, but I am doing the writing.

She says: "Abby, if I thought I should never be again united to my husband, I would much rather be annihilated." But one would think to hear some of you talk in earth life that true marriage was rather disgraceful than otherwise. Such people ought to turn Catholics and become priests and nuns. The great eternal perfect law is: "And they twain shall become one flesh;" or, rather, spirit, as it really was rendered in the olden language.

Would my old-time friend desire that I should remain an imperfect half throughout eternity? If she so desires and thinks, nature does not; and the perfect law must be fulfilled. Because I remained unmarried in the earth life is no reason why I should remain thus forever. I had a good reason for remaining single when on earth, and well knew that my life there was only a half life, but maiden-like concealed my real feelings from curious and unsympathetic eyes; but now need no longer blush, for a true union has changed me from a shrinking, sensitive female to a courageous and wholesouled woman, for the other half has been added to my life, consequently do not expect to find me exactly the same as I was in my undeveloped, single, earthly state. We are trying to give through this medium as well as through many others, but we do not expect that all will accept it.

All nature is male and female or positive and negative, and even when in the lowest forms of life it appears as though there were but one principle, it is only in seeming, the two principles reside within one form to be evolved into two forms later on. If my captious friend will send to Mrs. Petersilea for a book entitled "Mary Ann Carew, or Wife, Mother, Spirit, Angel," she may become somewhat enlightened as to our mode of life here.

Mrs. Petersilea says that she would rather be annihilated than not to rejoin her beloved husband here, and I now say that I would rather be annihilated than to be separated from my own. But this can never be, for if one half were to be annihilated the other surely would be, for one half cannot die and the other live. When in earth life I said but little on the marriage question, fearing that I might be misunderstood, and being a maiden lady I could not fully understand, not having lived it, what true marriage really signified; but after reading the Petersilea books my eyes were opened, and where before I saw through a glass darkly, now all that appertained to true marriage became clear, and I now know by experience that the principles therein expounded are true. That there is no propagation in this life is also true. The material earths are the only places wherein propagation takes place, and from thence fill and sustain the spirit realms.

Justice and equilibrium are two great eternal, unchangeable laws in nature, and all that the soul has missed on earth is restored and equalized here.

If sex simply belongs to the material body, then, indeed, one might say that there was no sex in the spirit world; but yet, you all say, or at least Spiritualists do, that the death of the material body changes nothing—that the spirit takes up its life precisely where it was when it left the body—and this is true, and sex really belongs to the soul and spirit and not to the material body, for that body was but the covering of the soul and spirit. Then how can one say there is no sex in the spirit world? All who say this are wrong, for the male is the male forever, and the female is the female forever, and they twain make one.

Many earthly marriages are fleeting, I know, because they are not founded on the right bases; and that is one great reason why I remained single while there, for I would not enter into an ill-assorted marriage, preferring to wait until I should find the one great, eternal and true union.

I am led to think that nothing ever takes place in vain, for I am now very glad that I wrote that letter to the Petersileas, as it proves what I really did think on the subject; and, also, is another or added proof of my identity. But what I said, or may have thought, does not change eternal law one iota, for natural laws are unchangeable.

Hoping to give nothing but truth to a hungering and suffering world, I remain as ever, yours for humanity and spirituality.

ABBY A. JUDSON.

RHEUMATISM

CURED WITHOUT MEDICINE

New Remedy Discovered Which Absorbs Acid Impurities Through the Large Foot Pores.

A DOLLAR HAIR FREE

On Approval—Write To-day.

Don't take medicine for Rheumatism, but send your name to the makers of Magic Foot Drafts, the great Michigan discovery which is curing every kind of Rheumatism without medicine—chronic or acute—Muscular, Sciatic, Lumbago, Gout, etc., no matter in what part of the body. You'll get the Drafts by return mail. If you are satisfied with the relief they give, send us one dollar. If not, send nothing. You Decide.

Magic Foot Drafts possess the remarkable quality of absorbing from the blood the impurities which cause Rheumatism, curing where everything else has failed. They are even curing cases of 30 and 40 years' standing. They will cure you. Send your name today to Magic Foot Draft Co., X020 Oliver Building, Jackson, Mich. Our splendid new book on Rheumatism comes free with the Drafts. Send no money—only your name. Write to-day.

THE HOWLANDS.

An Earnest Defense of Their Mediumship, In Defiance of Their Positive Statement That They Are "Not Mediums or Spiritualists, God Forbid."

I am in favor of everybody being just and honest. Honest ignorance is common. Honest ignorance is one of the most unjust manifestations in Spiritualists. You published an editorial from the Banner of Light about Mr. and Mrs. Howland in Boston. Did the editor of the Banner of Light visit and study the manifestations through or by Mr. and Mrs. Howland while they were in Boston in 1905? He did not report that he did. That editorial is an opinion without justice, as no trial was held, and the editor, as judge, had not seen any fraud. I went to see the Howlands three times during their stay in Boston in 1905. They invited the brightest and smartest people in their audiences to detect them in any trick. They gave six men and six women liberty to examine them and all their work by closest examination at all public meetings. The first part of the meeting was a lecture by Rev. Howland. His ideas were good and pleased Boston audiences close to Trinity church, Boston Public Library, and Copley Square, to such extent that all seats appeared to be taken at 35 and 50 cents per seat, while at the free meeting where Mr. J. J. Morse was medium, only a few hardened Spiritualists assembled—also near Copley Square, Boston. Many seats that were free were unoccupied by any material human. I attended the place and heard J. J. Morse, and my opinion was with the larger audience that went to hear and see Mr. and Mrs. Howland. We have better test mediums than Mr. Howland, but none at present to equal the manifestations through Mrs. Howland after and under the closest examinations.

I went to a private meeting with the Howlands in 1905. They invited all the audience to examine the cabinet and meeting room. I used this invitation to the full extent of my ability. Women examined Mrs. Howland and removed all her garments and placed garments that were all black, and stranger's on her. We had remarkable manifestations, and I did not discover one sign of fraud at this or any other meeting held with Mr and Mrs. Howland in 1905. I knew they were called frauds by some people, and I was watching for fraud. I found more dishonesty, fraud and ignorance among some called Spiritualists in Boston, than with Mr. and Mrs. Howland. If their manifestations are material tricks of material humans—expose them. Tell us where they kept the white garments? Tell me where they kept the flowers that appeared and remained with us in my home?

I am an agnostic about spirit manifestations. I have walked and talked with materialized ghosts under careful test conditions. I had with me associates to discover tricks of spirits in human material bodies, and of spirits from dead human bodies. I accept the facts I found and concede Spiritism is a fact, a truth—the only evidence of immortality or a continued intelligent individual existence of a soul after its leaving a dead human body—Spiritualism. Spirits love to deceive and love to please. Expose the Howlands in an honest and just way. Expose the man who closes his eyes and advertises to speak entranced or in a trance. Push the expose into the ranks of inspired writers and public speakers, etc., etc. I am writing for honest and just treatment of all mediums in Boston, and all who will visit us. AURIN F. HILL.

Boston, Mass.

We publish the above views of Mr. Hill in compliance with the request of Mr. Howland, who claims there are other Howlands before the people, and that he is in no wise responsible for the latter's conduct, and that he and his wife were never driven from any place as set forth in the Banner article, and they "never posed as mediums or Spiritualists, God forbid."

We take pleasure in correcting the misstatements, and hope that future investigations now being carried on in Philadelphia, and various other places, in the West, will lead to more fully sustaining the statement of Mr. Howland, and establish his innocence in all respects.

Now read the following letters, exactly as written, one to the Banner of Light, and the other to The Progressive Thinker, and then you can more properly estimate the real character and literary ability of Mr. Howland:

Threatens the Editor.

Buffalo N Y April 17 05

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Article Published in your paper in reference to my wife and self and our work is made out of whole Cloth and is a Lie from beginning to end. your Editorial is worse than the Article itself To think you as an Editor would be guilty of such an ungentlemanly attack on Innocent people is proof enough to all fairminded people, That you are not fit to hold such a position my wife & self are not Spiritualists (never claimed to be) But we are Spiritual Scientists, if you will get your dictionary and look up the Words perhaps you will See your mistake, But you havent a medium in your ranks who can (claiming to be materializing and flower mediums) duplicate our seances under the same test conditions, nor can any magician legerdemain or sleight of Hand man do it either You will hear from our manager on this subject. Such men as you have been horsehipped by Ladies for such unjust attacks I as Mr Howland wish to deny the statements made by The woman styling herself Madame Hubbard she as you is a fabricator & a coward ashamed to publish her name. The titles of "Dr. & Rev" were conferred on me as "honor" by your leading Spiritualists, I never asked for them and care nothing for them, your statement that we refused to give a seance is false The seance was declared off By the Parties themselves who telephoned to our Manager, Now then Mr. Editor if there is any law in Mass. to reach you I'll make you do justice to my wife. I'm a new Englander myself of "The Green Mountain Boys stock (The Allens & Howlands) who made history & helped to make the Republic, you know what fighters they were, If you had a spark of sense you wouldent listen to A "Clairvoyants" and old womans twaddle yours as a Spiritualist Scientist

Clarence C Howland

The above letter is printed exactly as it reached the hands of the editor.—Ed. "B. L."

Now read the following written to us:

Buffalo N Y April 26 05

J. R. Francis

Chicago.

In your paper of April 29th you publish article from ("Banner of Lies") not Light) and also dare to head it "The Notorious Howlands" you are aware of the fact no doubt that you have layed yourself liable to a damage suit, your statements like the Banners are false and made out of whole Cloth—all Lies We never posed as Mediums or Spiritualists (God forbid) We were never driven out of a city or Exposed in our lives. If you were a little smarter & wiser (and surly you are old enough) you might know that The notorious Howland not Howlands' (of California was another man, what about "The Fox Sisters did they not sign an affidavid That they were fakes & frauds & afterward the spiritualists took them back and used them as foundation stones to found their religion on your paper is a living lie & you know it. We will be in Chicago before long we are through with The Old Bay State & have a pocket full of money The only trouble with you is we dident give you & "The Beautiful Banner some of it, Tuttle comitted Suicide & robed the Banner after I told him he was anything but a man We have hundreds of wealthy Spiritualists in Boston who know what lying papers yours is & The Banner too. We are about to begin suit against the Banner It will be different, Than, yours & Mable Abers' (who posed as a medium) & we dont & never did. your attacts on my wife who is not a miss This or that (as so many of your so called women mediums are) but a respectiable Lady a married woman a mother,) Is to say the least cowardly & ungentlemanly Have you ever seen our work, How do you know (we are fakes did you ever see us exposed, A beautiful Editor, A wolf in Sheeps Clothing, I hope you will publish this But of course you wont I Bet you $1000 you cant get any medium on earth who can duplicate our work Their are Thousands of Spiritualists you never know who believe in us who wouldent have your paper in their house. Thanking you for free advertising Clarence. C, Howland.

Mr. Hill's defense of the Howlands as mediums, loses its force when confronted with their emphatic declaration, "We never posed as mediums or Spiritualists, God forbid!" If not mediums then legerdemain produces all the materializations, all the doves and all the flowers at his meetings. Mr. Hill's allusions to J. J. Morse, one of the finest speakers today on the rostrum, a noble man, a medium, too, of the highest order, greatly esteemed in this country as well as at his home in England, is in extremely bad taste in saying that while the meeting of the Howlands was well attended at 35 and 50 cents per seat, the one held by Mr. Morse, where no charge was made, "only a few hardened Spiritualists assembled." Then God and the angels pity the spiritual culture of Boston, its Spiritualists preferring a show to the elevated, spiritualizing teachings of Mr. Morse.

The statement that Mr. Hill makes, that the flowers were materialized at Howland's meeting, and remained "with us in our home," only exhibits his childishness—if not his extreme intellectual weakness—in the investigation of Spiritualism. Flowers never have been, nor can they be materialized, especially before a large audience, and thereafter remain in the home of mortals. God and the angels pity Spiritualism, if those who say they "are not mediums or Spiritualists—God forbid!" are to be sustained by gullibles as being really genuine mediums.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

At her home, in Jacksonville, May 1, Mrs. Betsie A. St. John, widow of David E., was born into spirit life. She was a consistent Spiritualist for fifty-five years. Music by the members of the Zuleika Society. The writer conducted the services at the house and the grave. The floral offerings were numerous and beautiful. AMY BUCHANAN.

Passed to spirit life, May 25, 1905, after a lingering illness, Samuel Ulst, a pioneer of Marion county, and later a resident of Marion, Ohio, and almost a life-long Spiritualist, having reached the ripe old age of 79 years. Services were held at the residence on Sunday. Prof. L. M. Lydy, a noted Spiritualist of Columbus, Ohio., delivered the discourse. A large concourse of people attended the funeral. COR.

On April 4, William Thomas Graham passed to the higher life—a soldier serving through the entire war, and at its close receiving an honorable discharge under the title of Major. A Spiritualist of twenty years' standing, he goes joyfully to meet his beautiful spirit daughter Pearl, and serenely looks forward to a reunion with a wife and daughter left behind. His soul has gone to answer the last bugle call while his body lies beside his old comrades in its last camping ground. Esther Thomas Bosley officiating minister.

The removal by death of Brother Allen of Lansing, Mich., takes another veteran of our cause from among us. His funeral took place April 16, at the Universalist church of the above-named city. Mrs. A. E. Sheets, assisted by Rev. Bard, conducted the services.

Brother O. H. Soules passed to spirit life, May 3, at his home in Ionia, Mich. He and his companion who survives him were among the early Spiritualists, and have been well known by attendants at camp where they were accustomed to go each year. The services were conducted by Mrs. A. E. Sheets, of Grand Ledge, Mich. His long and painful illness was borne by patient fortitude, and his aged wife was given strength to minister to him to the last. He leaves also two daughters, who are consoled by the teachings of our philosophy. MRS. A. E. SHEETS.

WHAT SHALL WE EAT?

The Food Question from the Standpoint of Health, Strength and Economy.

Containing numerous tables, showing the constituent elements of over three hundred food products and their relations, cost and nutritious values, time of digestion, etc., indicating best foods for all classes and conditions. By Alfred Andrews. 120 pp. Price, leatherette, 50 cents; cloth binding, 75 cents.

To many people there is no question of greater importance than the one asked in the title of this book, and no more satisfactory effort to answer it has been made than is to be found between the covers of this practical volume. It opens with a consideration of the purposes for which we eat, and how food material is converted to our needs, and is used in sustaining life.

A very important feature of the work is found in the numerous tables given, showing the results of some 1,500 analyses of food products to determine the constituent elements, comparative food values, time required for digestion, etc.

"Koradine. By Alice B. Stockham and Lida Holt Talbot." In the form of an entertaining story, it contains lessons which every girl should know. Price, cloth, $1.

STORE YOUR MIND

By Reading Prof. W. M. Lockwood's Publications.

Store your mind with the great but demonstrative truths found in consecutive order only in these writings.

Prof. Lockwood is the only writer, thinker and lecturer in this country who affirms that the evolution of the soul of man is in strict accord and agreement with the evolution of the soul of nature; and that the only proof of immortality inheres in an analysis of nature's fundamental principles and the co-relation of cosmic elements and energies.

These great truths are explained and demonstrated from the plane of the Spiritual Philosophy founded on Nature itself.

The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature and its Relation to the Philosophy of Spiritualism. A scientific demonstration of the invisible principles and attributes of nature and Modern Spiritualism. A mint of scientific truths as the basis of its phenomena. Price 25 cents.

The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism—A Menace to the American Civilization. The entire hierarchy of Ecclesiasticism arraigned as infidels for subverting the scientific demonstrations of universities and colleges, by substituting the immoral phantoms of the Mosaic Hypothesis. It is a hot shot. Price 25 cents.

Historical, Logical and Philosophical Objections to the Dogmas of Reincarnation and Re-Embodiment. A concise and masterly review of the historical origin of Reincarnation as an ancient dogma. Its illogical claims and inconsistent assumptions. Its glaring defects and dogmas dissected. Price 25 cents.

The Spiritualism of Nature. Modern Spiritualism has its basic truths in nature, and is proven not by the bible or any sacred cosmogony, but by an analysis of nature's self-existent principles. Price 15 cents.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth. The greatest book, and the greatest truth of any age; a book of 212 pages with several telling scientific illustrations. Continuity of life and the association of spirit realms demonstrated to be in scientific accord with principles of the Co-relation of Force, and the Conservation of Energy. The greatest book ever written in the defence and support of Spiritualism. Price $1.

The Relation Science Holds to Natural Philosophy and its Conflict with Every Phase of Religion. In this essay the author shows that science is not a thing—a corporation or individual, but a process of inductive and deductive reasoning. Its acceptance means the death of Theurgical religions. Price 15 cents.

All of Prof. Lockwood's publications are on sale at The Progressive Thinker office, Chicago, Ill., and at the rostrum when he lectures. These treatises contain the wealth of a vast historical and scientific research.

MOSES HULL'S BOOKS.

Encyclopedia of Biblical Spiritualism; A Concordance to the Principal Passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism; together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible. Price $1.

Our Bible. Who Wrote It? When, Where, How? Is It Infallible? A voice from the higher criticism. Price $1.

Two in One, being a combination of the two books, The Contrast, and the Question of the Spiritualism of the Bible Settled, together with a series of startling contrasts between creedal Christianity and the facts and philosophy of Modern Spiritualism. Price $1.

The Spiritual Alps and How we Ascend Them, or a Few Facts as to How to Reach the Altitude. Price, cloth, 40 cents; paper 25 cents.

Joan the Medium, or the Inspired Heroine of Orleans, or Spiritualism in France nearly 500 Years Ago. A most interesting book. Price, cloth, 40 cents; paper 25 cents.

Christs of the Past and Present—a Comparison of the Christ-work, or Mediumship of Biblical Messiahs. Cloth, 35 cents; paper, 25 cents.

PAMPHLETS:

All About the Devil. Price 15 cents.

Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies. A Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev. Frank Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism. Price, 10 cents.

The Devil and the Adventists. A brief review of some of the recent attacks made by Adventists upon Spiritualism. Price, 10 cents.

The Spiritual Birth, or Death and Its To-Morrow. Price, 10 cents.

The Old and the New. Price 10 cts.

BOOKS BY MATTIE E. HULL.

Wayside Jottings. Essays and sketches gathered from the highways and by-ways of life. Price 75 cents.

Spirit Echoes. Short poems and sketches. Very beautiful. Price, 75 cents.

The Spiritual Songster. A small booklet with words only, adapted to congregational singing and circles, etc. Price, 10 cents; $6 per hundred. Postage, 50 cents.

STANDARD BOOKS,

Cloth Binding, 50c. Each.

The following books by well known and popular writers, we have selected with the thought that they will be of interest to our readers. They are printed on fine paper; perfectly clear, readable type; cloth binding. Good home library edition:

Heroes and Hero Worship, and the Heroic in History. The Hero as Divinity. The Hero as Prophet. The Hero as Poet. The Hero as Priest. The Hero as King. By Thomas Carlyle. 350 pages.

Past and Present. By Thomas Carlyle.

Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer.

Fairyland of Science. By Arabella B. Buckley. This book is written in such a pleasing manner that young as well as old can understand it. Illustrated, gilt top.

Origin of Species. By Charles Darwin.

Descent of Man. By Charles Darwin. These two books by Mr. Darwin, should be in every home.

Karma. A Novel. By A. P. Sinnett.

A Romance of Two Worlds. By Marie Corelli. A most wonderful occult story.

Zanoni. By Bulwer Lytton. A romance by that most wonderful and mystic writer, after a long residence in the East and an exhaustive study of occult lore.

Any one of the above valuable books can be obtained for 50 cents, a miracle of cheapness.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth, $1.50.

A Rank Insult to Spiritualists and Mediums.

TESTING SPIRITUALISTS AS A BODY.

The Light of Truth is engaged upon the only purpose spirit return has in this world's affairs. That purpose is to free the spirit man here and now and make earth a fit dwelling place for him.

In this work the Light of Truth appeals, for the present to Spiritualists, because they are supposed to be the people that know about these things.

The Light of Truth is testing the Spiritualists of North America specifically, and the Spiritualists of the world generally.

This test will go on until the fiber of the goods is thoroughly known and understood.

For the MOST PART the STUFF SO FAR TESTED IS EXCEEDINGLY SHODDY. Some of the PACKAGES TIED WITH FANCY STRING and BABY RIBBON offered for inspection WILL NOT BEAR IT AT ALL.

A FEW SMALL PACKAGES tied with the ordinary binding cord contain big values. They are the kohinoors among the diamond fields of things Spiritualistic. On them the Light of Truth depends for courage to continue the test.—Editorial in Light of Truth.

Trenchant Criticism, by Guy A. Cherry.

Guy A. Cherry of Los Angeles, Cal., criticises the above editorial in Light of Truth, which calls the Great Mass of Spiritualists "Shoddy." It will be read with deep interest, and Spiritualists generally will agree with Mr. Cherry, who says: "For rank imbecility, it excels anything I have ever seen in what claims to be Spiritual literature."

It is well known to the readers of The Progressive Thinker that my communication in defense of Mr. Hale was published in this paper several weeks ago. Some time previous to this he was attacked for several weeks by the Light of Truth in a most shameful and cowardly manner, abusing and misrepresenting him in every conceivable way, in the use of the most scurrilous invectives, without offering any reason or mentioning any cause for such dastardly treatment, for they, as we know, had none.

Mr. Hale was personally unknown to the owner and editor of the Light of Truth, and had done nothing ungentlemanly, dishonorable, unkind, or unjust. Notwithstanding all of this, Mr. Hale was selected as a target for J. B. Townsend and Hull to unmercifully and libelously slander through the columns of their paper, thus inviting the just criticism we feel it our duty to return. There may be others hurt before we are through with the criticism still "held in remembrance dear."

The only one thing that Mr. Hale did do, was to incidentally hurt the finance of the Light of Truth in exposing the fraud mediums that infest the ranks of Spiritualism, by offering, unsolicited, in all honesty, as a lover of the truth, the generous contribution of one thousand dollars to be paid to any person who would come to Los Angeles and produce one single materialized spirit under a test condition, so simple that no reasonable intelligence in all the world could object to. This startled all the fakirs in this line of work, who, not accepting this proposition, have acknowledged that it is all trickery in which nothing they claim is genuine, and therefore dare not expose themselves to a man who is aware of their tricks. Whereupon the cohorts of this sacrilegious profession of the materializationists rose up in one accord in its defense; among whom, the most prominent are these who are responsible for the existence of this pretended Spiritualist paper inappropriately called the Light of Truth. In the columns of this paper is published glowing accounts of this pernicious work of darkness, lauding its heartless, cruel, and dark perpetrators by representing them as mediums of Spiritualism of the highest type, thus defrauding the people of their time and money, and blinding them to the light of truth by deceiving with their tricks, into the belief of a lie.

CHAMPION OF FRAUD MEDIUMS.

It is very palpable that this paper, called the Light of Truth, is the champion of all fraud mediums that will yield financial returns to its proprietors. It is the organ patronized by the fraudulent element found in the ranks of Spiritualism and then comes out with the editorial which stands prominently at the head of this communication. It was printed in caps and therefore specially prominent, and FOR RANK IMBECILITY excels anything I have ever seen in what claims to be Spiritualist literature. Notice what it says: "The Light of Truth is testing the Spiritualists of North America specifically, and the Spiritualists of the world generally." We do not suppose that a single Spiritualist has felt the vibrations of this "testing."

WHO ARE THESE TESTERS?

By what right and authority do they undertake the task? Who has requested them to do so, and what are they going to do about it if they find the stuff "shoddy"? There is not a true Spiritualist who, when he reads the above quotation, but will feel indignation for the arrogance and assumption of this mysterious clique that has set about testing Spiritualists; not testing Spiritualism, but the great body of Spiritualists. The test has found them a very "shoddy" lot, but a few "tied with ordinary binding cord," "are the kohinoors among the diamond fields of things Spiritualistic."

DOLEFUL PACKAGES OF TRUTH.

Who are these "kohinoors" that have been found by this wonderful testing? Why, Elsie Reynolds is one, whom the Light of Truth has lauded to the skies as an angel upon the earth when clothed in her robes of white, DAZZLING IN THE LIGHT OF PHOSPHORESCENT paint in a dark seance. But, alas! Poor Elsie, who has been exposed many times, has fallen too low in her last exposure in Los Angeles to ever rise again. Not alone with mask and goggles, with skirt rolled up posing as the spirit—"Old Aunt Betsy"—which was witnessed to by eight reliable persons under oath and many others whose oaths were not taken, all testifying that they saw her in a clear light as above described masquerading as a spirit. This she could have overcome with most of her following by beating the devil around the bush, as she has many times done during her wild career, when caught; but the letters she wrote and signed with her own hand in confidence to one who had learned of her, will forever stand as a sure record on earth, a living witness, CONDEMNING ALL HER WONDERFUL MATERIALIZATION OF SPIRITS TO BE ALL FRAUD. This is one "package of truth" in testing Spiritualists found by this infallible court called the Light of Truth. This is what they call a "kohinoor" of things Spiritualistic. Oh, God and Angels!

Another "package of truth" is Harry Crindle, the son of Elsie, who with his wife was exposed in Los Angeles and taken to jail, where they confessed their guilt; and upon promise of leaving the city were dismissed by the authorities.

Again we have Fallis, the spirit artist of Chicago, whose methods were exposed by Dr. G. B. Warne, President of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association.

Another small "package of truth" consists of Willard J. Hull, editor of Light of Truth, who refused to lecture on the rostrum with the venerable Moses Hull (no relation to Willard), who is his superior in all respects that pertain to sterling character, genuine manhood, and ability. All such "packages" have been tested by the Light of Truth and found to be genuine, "tied with ordinary binding cord" and "contain big values." Willard in his own opinion is a kohinoor, while Moses is shoddy! What presumption! What idiocy! A specimen of the deference paid to such "packages of truth" is that of eulogizing Elsie Reynolds as a refined, courteous "lady."

With his definition of a lady, a genuine lady, Mr. Hull had better secure her attendance at the coming camp meeting in Los Angeles, with her mask and goggles used when posing as Spirit Aunt Betsy. These two dainty "packages of truth," walking arm in arm to a seat on the rostrum would add grace and beauty to the other "packages of truth" of which this camp will be composed. It would be well, however, for Harry Crindle (Elsie's son) to be there with his wife as another "package" tested and found to be kohinoors. These would advertise the camp and give it a boost.

The questions here naturally arise: Who is this Light of Truth? Have all the leaders in the Spiritual movement formed an association in that name? Is that the one and the only source of truth? The paper from which we copy the editorial that stands at the head of this article, called the Light of Truth, is under the direct management of one man, J. B. Townsend. He is a promoter, and promotes this paper as he does other schemes. It has another man who is a tool of the promoter. This tool, Willard J. Hull, when picked up by the promoter was one of the most rabid of radical lecturers, who left all, to help promote.

Too shameful to tell; but if the promoter wants Spiritualists "tested" and has already reached conclusions from his tests, is it not well to apply the "test" to him, and determine if he is what he pretends to be? The promoter Townsend is not all. He only stands in the front, for behind him in the background is a woman, a "genuine lady," through whose pretended mediumship the whole scheme is given.

The scheme under the cloak of a bastard altruism, appealing to the most spiritual aspirations, but really to promote a mining scheme by which for every dollar that comes back to the stockholder, ten will probably go into the pocket of the promoter, as "expense" on his part. What the first stockholders get as dividends, the later buyers pay in. Possibly (?) the great King Solomon Mines may be worked. The poor deluded victims have entrusted their savings with this promoter because of his Christ-like representations, viz., that he did not want the millions that would flow from the mines for his personal use, but that every dollar profit would go to the cause of Spiritualism. Those who have will regret their credulity. The whole business scheme is a concoction of the medium who has directed the details of the business of the paper, and now uses her influence by "spirit advice" (?) to friends to invest in mining stock. Her record ought to be spread before the Spiritualists of America. If this were done, it would shake the confidence of the over-credulous in the honesty and ability of this tribunal to test Spiritualists.

WAS THERE EVER CONCOCTED A MORE CUNNING, A MORE CRUEL SCHEME TO GET MONEY IN THE NAME OF RELIGION? TO MAKE ITS DUPES BELIEVE THEY WERE ASSISTING THE SPIRIT WORLD WHILE HELPING THEMSELVES?

Spiritualists, how do you like the scheme of being "tested" by such a tribunal (Townsend, Willard J. Hull and Josephine C. Stowell)? IT HAS BEEN APPLIED AND YOU ARE FOUND "SHODDY," only now and then a rough diamond!

Why are you called "shoddy"? Why have you proved a failure?

Because you have not given your belief over to the keeping of the promoter Townsend and his submissive servant, Willard J. Hull. That is one reason. Another one more potent is that you have failed to respond to the lurid advertisement of "King Solomon's Mines," and have not invested your hard-earned dollars in support of the promoter, his cringing servant and his "medium." Those who have fallen into the trap are the "diamonds," the "kohinoors" who have given their all—not to the Lord, but into the pocket of the promoter. Of course the Light of Truth depends on these "kohinoors" for not only "courage," but the cash by which to meet its increasing deficit. Its publisher need not worry about its subscription list as long as King Solomon Mine investors are dropping money into his pocket.

If to be "shoddy" means to have sufficient common sense to keep out of the clutches of the get-rich-quick speculators, we are glad there is plenty of shoddy among Spiritualists, with good, plain knowledge which enables one to spot a trickster at sight, and not be caught in his net, however artfully spread.

I desire here to say that I am a full-fledged Spiritualist and have been for many years—one of the too credulous kind until my eyes were opened by the pernicious practices of Elsie Reynolds and others. There are times when silence is golden, when even in the presence of a great wickedness it is better to wait in patience. There are other times when to be silent and inactive is a crime. If a wolf comes into the fold concealed as a sheep, it should be destroyed, and the shepherd who did not do this would regret his folly. If a viper coiled itself on the hearth, it would be unwise parents who allowed it to remain. We believe in charity. We pity the most degraded criminals. We pity yet more their victims.

There is one thing superior to all, which really is the highest charity in its outworkings, and that is Justice. In the end, however much we may give to mercy, pity and charity, justice will be outwrought and the right come uppermost. We do not think that the Spiritualists of "North America," or "The World" will consider an apology necessary for what we have said about the above paragraph. If they have read the flood of similar matter which has been labeled Light of Truth, they will wonder why we have not come to the rescue of the Cause before.

Now that judgment has been passed, what is this court of three, the promoter, servant and woman going to do with the Spiritualists? They have the "kohinoors" hooked fast by investments, but the "shoddy" (?) mass, why they will remain as unconscious of the sentence of this delectable trio as they were of the investigation.

A gnat once alighted on the back of an elephant. "I fear my weight is a great burden," it said.

"Had you not spoken I should not have known you were there," replied the elephant.

Don't be a "kohinoor" nor a "diamond," or perchance with others you will contribute to the sham altruistic movement by making a necklace for that woman's neck.

GUY A. CHERRY.

1232 E. 36th St., Los Angeles, Cal.

A BROAD-MINDED CRITICISM

Of the Scurrilous Attack on Spiritualists, Designating the Great Mass of Them as Being Shoddy.

To test is to judge, and one judges others by himself. A rascal naturally thinks all men are rascals. For any one to set himself up as the UNIVERSAL CENSOR OF SPIRITUALISTS THE WORLD OVER, and in North America specifically, is for that one to arrogate to himself all the Spiritualistic virtue there is: "I AM IT, AND BY MY CRITERION, OR FOOT RULE, I MEASURE ALL THINGS."

Egotism undoubtedly has a place in the mental make-up of men; but when it runs riot and becomes the dominant motive, it makes of the man A BRAGGART OR AN INSUFFERABLE MEDDLER.

Spiritualists are such by virtue of their knowledge of spirit return; a recognition of this fact makes them Spiritualists. Per se, they are made neither better nor worse by such knowledge; yet they stand to become far broader, more charitable and perfect in their views of, and conduct in, life, by reason thereof.

Such knowledge naturally tends to quicken the conscience and to set the judgment more nearly right on many of the perplexing problems of life. This is desirable and commendable, and naturally must bear fruit, and he who cannot discern it must either be purblind, spiritually, or have some material axe to grind at the expense of the large majority who in some way have disappointed his sordid expectations.

A. M. GRIFFEN.

"Wedding Chimes." By Delphs Pearl Hughes. A tasty, beautiful and appropriate wedding souvenir. Contains marriage ceremony, marriage certificate, etc., with choice matter in poetry and prose. Specially designed for the use of the Spiritualist and Liberal ministry. Price 75 cents.

Honesty of Purpose Brings Its Own Reward

We are glad to announce that The Progressive Thinker is exceptionally prosperous. Our issue this week is something over 12,000, a larger edition probably, than all the other Spiritualist papers combined. This is ample evidence that the people approve the stand the paper has made for true Spiritualism and honest mediumship.

HELP... FOR THE ...SICK

Dr. Peebles Institute of Health offers Free Consultation to the Sick and Suffering.

If you are in poor health and wish to be cured, write the Doctors at once. They Can Help You.

Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, has for years made a specialty of treating chronic diseases and by their Home Treatment have cured hundreds who came to them in utter despair because their cases had been pronounced incurable by their local physicians. They successfully treat Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Rheumatism, Kidney and Bladder Trouble, Heart Trouble, Stomach, Bowel and Liver Troubles, all Blood and Nervous Diseases as well as all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to both man and woman.

They employ the latest and most approved methods of treating these disease and if you are not completely cured your stomach is not ruined with strong drugs. If you are in poor health and want treatment or if you do not understand your case and wish to know your exact condition write the Doctors for advice. They charge you nothing for a complete diagnosis and if they find your case is curable their charges will be most reasonable. They will also send you literature fully explaining their methods of treatment.

If sick yourself or if you are interested in a sick friend write them a plain, candid letter and they will tell you what your trouble is and if your case is curable will quote you their lowest terms. Write to-day. Address Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, 28 Main St., Battle Creek, Mich.

R. S. RAY, Psychic and Natural Clairvoyant Readings by mail, $1.00. 207 Lincoln ave., Chicago, Illinois.

READINGS BY MAIL.—Lock of hair; $1.00, and stamp. Mrs. E. Newman, 710 13th st., S. E., Washington, D. C.

Annie Lord Chamberlain's Card.

Dear friends, you can greatly help me care for my blind sister, Jennie L. Webb, one of the earliest mediums now in the form, by writing a letter to 8 spirit friends. Send it to me with $1, and I will try and get reply by independent writing or whispers. Address Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, Milford Mass.

MYSELF CURED I will gladly inform anyone addicted to COCAINE, MORPHINE, OPIUM OR LAUDANUM, of a never-failing harmless Home Cure. Address MRS. M. F. BALDWIN. Box 1212 Chicago, Ill.

MADAM THERESE SHAGREN,

Is the most gifted medium and psychic in the world to-day; her testimonials from all parts of the globe speak of heroes a marvel; call and send them and receive a free life reading, or send lock of hair, date of birth and 3 stamps for free reading by mail, with answers to 3 questions; or full life reading, 50 cents in stamps. Address 19 Ewing Place, E. San Francisco Cal.

Free Psychic Diagnosis.

J. A. Marvin, Psycho-Medical and Magnetic Healer, Sterling, Ill., cures asthma, bronchial troubles, goiter, paralysis, rheumatism, brain, spinal, stomach, liver, kidney and female troubles, where others have failed. For diagnosis send name, age, married or single, with lock of hair (no symptoms), and six cents in stamps.

PLEASE READ THIS.

If sick write me; will give you a free examination and surely cure you. I cure when all others fail. Nervous exhaustion and lost vigor of both sexes successfully treated. Great success with diseases of children. Write in own handwriting, giving name, age, sex, weight, leading symptom, and five 2-cent stamps, and receive a correct diagnosis, worth dollars to you. For children send lock of hair.

FRANCES L. LOUCKS,
35 Warren St., Stoneham, Mass.

TO THE SICK.

I extend my Brotherly hand and earnestly request that each and every reader of this paper write for my Free BOOKLETS, on Cures by NATURE'S FORCES. I have cured thousands in all parts of the United States, and nearly every port and entry in the world. I have good news, for 30 days only, to all sick people—whether rich or poor. Write this very minute, as this opportunity may never come to you again.

Address DR. M. ROGERS, V. D.,
Union City, Mich., U. S. A.

FRED. P. EVANS,
The Noted Psychic for
Independent Slate Writing and Clairvoyance,

Has recently left New York, and is now located at 1112 Eddy St., San Francisco, Cal. Send stamp for circular on Mediumship.

BODY AND SOUL
BY J. CLEGG WRIGHT.

This volume consists of a course of lectures delivered in the trance state, and is certainly no small contribution to the study of the soul. It is a good work to open the eyes to the difference between the deductive and inductive process of mind. Bound in cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

Sheet Music. Three Beautiful Spiritual Songs.

"We Are Passing But Once This Way." Song and refrain, by P. O. Hudson; price, 25 cents.

"Satisfied." A reverie. By A. J. Maxham. Price 25 cents.

"The Light of Reason." English and German words; sung to the tune of "Lead, Kindly Light." Price 25 Cents.

LISBETH. An Interesting Story of Two Worlds. Elevating, Fascinating and Instructive Throughout.

This work by Carrie E. S. Twing is exceptionally interesting. She well says: "These characters which have brought out the highest and lowest in different religious beliefs, have moved me, not I them." The whole book is interesting, fascinating, and instructive. Price, $1.00.

JIM, or The Touch of An Angel of Mother.
BY CARRIE E. S. TWING.

Her dedicatory lines are sufficient to show the spirit of the book as well as the author, it reads, "Because my own children are all under the tender care of the Angels, and my heart is hungry for the love of the young, I most lovingly dedicate this book to the children of the world." This book is full of soul elevating and interesting thought. Price, cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

A MASTERLY WORK.
Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth
By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual conscious selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth, $1.00.

The Myth of the Great Deluge.

By James M. McCann. A complete and overwhelming refutation of the Bible story of the Deluge. Price, 15 cents.

Self Contradictions of the Bible.

One hundred and forty-four propositions, theological, moral, historical and speculative; each proved affirmatively and negatively by quotations from Scripture, without comment. Price, 15 cents.

ANDREW B. SPINNEY, M. D
Who has had
Forty Years' Experience in the Study and Practice of Medicine, Two Years Prof. in a Medical College, Ten Years IN SANITARIUM WORK,
and is a Natural Clairvoyant. He never fails in diagnosis. He has given special attention to eye, ear, throat and lung troubles, also all forms of nervous diseases of both sexes. Never fails to cure piles. If you would like an opinion of your case FREE, write just how you feel with your own hand and hold the letter in your hand five minutes. Enclose stamp for reply.
Address, ANDREW D. SPINNEY, M. D.
Prop. Reed City Sanitarium, Reed City, Mich.

DR. J. S. LOUCKS

Is one of the oldest and most successful Spiritual and Magnetic Physicians. His cures are marvelous; his examinations are free to all who send him name, age, sex, and lock of hair, and 6 cents in stamps. He doesn't ask for leading symptoms. He treats nervous exhaustion of both sexes with wonderful success, at reduced prices. A trial will convince you. His practice extends all over the land. He cures you in your own home.
Address, J. S. LOUCKS, M. D.,
Lock Box 1203 Stoneham, Mass.

Academy of Higher Sciences
And College of Fine Forces.

Teaches new and wonderful methods of cure. "Fast becoming of world-wide fame."—H. Tuttle Light, Color, Electricity, Magnetism, Mind, Baths. Its beautiful Diploma confers title, "D. M." Doctor of Magnetics: can be gained at College or at one's home. Books and instruments furnished. Send stamp for catalogue to
E. D. BABBITT, M. D.,
62 East Ave., Rochester, N. Y.

AN ASTONISHING OFFER

Send three two-cent stamps, lock of hair, age, name and the leading symptom, and your disease will be diagnosed free by spirit power.

Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker,
230 North Sixth St.
San Jose, Cal

A Wonderful Spectacle. Restores Lost Vision. Write for illustrated Circular showing styles and prices and photo of Spirit Yarma, who developed this Clairvoyant power in me. I can adjust my Melted Pebble Lens Spectacle as perfectly to your eyes at your own home and send by mail, as if you were in my office. Thousands will testify.
E. P. POOLE.
43 Evanston Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mr. Poole:—Your spectacles are perfect. I can say perfection. I shall recommend them to my friends. Ever your friend. E. D. Robertson, Los Angeles, Cal.

Mediumship and Adeptship.

To unfold your psychic powers is only a matter of science and science is only a matter of knowing how! My System of Development is an Eye-opener! It develops you in less time and at less cost than the unpopular incubator methods. No trances, no controls, unless you want them. No obsessions; all dangers removed.

Send stamped addressed envelope for my booklet, (25c. to be enclosed for psychic delineation), and reduced terms. Address 1225 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston, Mass.

Books of Mysteries and Revelations.

Clairvoyance. Cloth, 150 pages, by J. C. F. Grumbine. Teaches how to read the future, practice telepathy, penetrate the veil between the seen and the unseen, converse with spirits, know the mysteries. It is a revelation. The only practical book of its kind ever published. Lillian Whiting, Henry Wood, Mind, Light, all adepts endorse it. Price (reduced from $2.00), $1.50.

Auras and Colors.—How to read the atmospheres of persons and understand the appearance of halos, auras and nimbus. Contains a color dictionary. Paper, price 50 cents.

Death and Afterwards, by an Adept. A profound study from actual facts of life beyond the grave. Cloth, price 75 cents.

Realization. How to become well, successful, prosperous. A wonderfully helpful book for beginners. Paper, price 50 cents.

Psychometry. Teaches how to get at the soul of things. Paper, price 50 cents.

The New Philosophy, luminously set forth so that anyone can realize God. Cloth, price 75 cents.

☞ Send $2.25 for a large crystal for crystal reading. Address J. C. F. Grumbine, 1285 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, Mass.

The Devil and the Adventists.

An Adventist attack upon Spiritualism repulsed. By Moses Hull. Price, 10 cents.

Force and Matter By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.

Series one, two and three. By Lillian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

THE LIFE RADIANT.

BY LILLIAN WHITING.—In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration. Price, cloth, $1.00.

A Very Interesting Book for All.

Philosophy of Spiritual Intercourse. This work contains a graphic account of the very wonderful spiritual developments at the house of Rev. Dr. Phelps, Stratford, Conn., and similar cases in all parts of the country. This volume is the first from the author directly upon the subject of Spiritualism, and has stood the test of many years. Cloth, 80c.; postage 10c.

AFTER HER DEATH.

The Story of a Summer. By Lilian Whiting. Pervaded with pure and beautiful spirituality of thought. Instructive and helpful to all who love and seek the higher and finer ways of spiritual experience. Price, $1.00.

What All the World's a-Seeking.
RALPH WALDO TRINE:

Each is building his world from within; thought is the builder; for thoughts are forces,—subtle, vital, irresistible, omnipotent,—and according as used do they bring power or impotence, peace or pain, success or failure.—From Title-page.

The above books are beautifully bound in gray-green raised cloth, stamped in deep old-green and gold, with gilt top. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

FROM INDIA TO THE PLANET MARS.

A MOST REMARKABLE WORK.

Fascinating, Interesting and Instructive.

By Th. Flournoy, Professor of Psychology in the University of Geneva.

"This is an account of the experiments with the 'Geneva Medium,' Helene Smith. In her trances she lives the dual existence of an Indian princess and of an inhabitant of the planet Mars. Professor Flournoy and his fellow scientists have for more than five years experimented with these astounding physical phenomena."

This is a work of thrilling interest. It has excited great attention in this country and in Europe. Price $1.50.

LIST OF CAMP-MEETINGS.

Send In Your Dates and Name of Secretary at Once.

Interest in the various Spiritualist camp-meetings has commenced, and secretaries of the same should report at once to this office, so that proper announcement as to dates can be made.

MT. PLEASANT PARK, CLINTON, IA.

The twenty-third annual camp-meeting at Mt. Pleasant Park, opens July 30 and closes August 27. The very best talent has been secured for the season, and Opening Day promises to be a red letter day in the history of the camp. Programs and information given to all who write to Mrs. M. B. Anderson, secretary, Clarksville, Mo.

ONSET CAMP.

Onset camp commences its twenty-ninth annual meeting, July 23, and closes August 27. Onset is one of the most beautiful seashore resorts in the world, and is in close proximity to other noted summer resorts. It is connected by a bridge with Point Independence, and close at hand lies Monument Beach, and beyond Gray Gables, formerly the summer home of Ex-President Cleveland, and at the head of the bay is located "Crow's Nest," owned by Joseph Jefferson.

The water supply, introduced by the Onset Water Company from Sandy Lake, could not be purer or better.

No summer resort is better supplied with well-regulated hotels, with rooms and board at reasonable rates. Also rooms can be obtained at cottages, and meals at either hotels or restaurants in close proximity.

Letters addressed to the proprietors of the following hotels, Onset, Mass., will be promptly answered, giving full statement with regard to prices of rooms and board: Hotel Onset, Glen Cove Hotel, Glen Echo Hotel, Union Villa, Washburn House, Bullock's, Hotel Marcy, Highland House, and Mrs. Ronald's.

CHESTERFIELD, CAMP.

The official board met at Camp Chesterfield, April 9, to perfect arrangements for the coming camp session, beginning July 15 and ending August 27. The grounds are in fine condition and we want to make this the best camp ever held here. We have secured the very best talent and will have them well advertised. The programmes will be ready for distribution in a month. Mrs. Lydia Jessup, secretary, Anderson, Ind.

SUNAPEE LAKE CAMP, N. H.

Sunapee Lake Spiritualist Camp-meeting Association will hold its 28th annual meeting at Blodgett's Landing, N. H., commencing July 30 and closing August 27. We have a good list of speakers and test mediums. Address all letters to Thomas Burpee, Sutton, N. H., or the secretary, Lorenza Worthen, Hillsboro Br., N. H.

VICKSBURG, CAMP.

Vicksburg camp, Mich., opens July 30 and closes August 20. For full particulars address Mrs. Jeannette Fraser, Vicksburg, Mich.

MINERAL PARK CAMP, CAL.

The Spiritualists of Southern California have engaged Mineral Park, the camp grounds in the Arroyo Seco, just below Garvanza, for their annual camp-meeting, from June 25 to July 25. Many improvements are to be made at the park, and fourteen cottages will be erected. Mrs. Nettie Howell is the head of the executive committee. Address her for programmes.

NEW ERA CAMP-MEETING.

The New Era camp-meeting begins July 9, and continues over four Sundays. We will have with us during the meeting those grand workers, Harry J. Moore, Mrs. McCoy, Mrs. Ella Royal Williams, sure, and hope other good workers will also attend from all parts of the compass. We expect many of the lecturers and mediums from the coast (and we have many good ones) to attend during the meeting. Everybody come and help make this coming camp-meeting a grand and glorious one. The hotel will be under the management of the president, and everything possible will be done for the comfort and welfare of the guests. Camp ground is only 22 miles from the great Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland, Oregon. Address Rev. G. C. Love, president, 354 College street, Portland, Oregon.

EDGEWOOD CAMP, WASH.

The annual camp-meeting of the Spiritualists of the state of Washington, will be held at the Edgewood camp-grounds on Surprise Lake, commencing July 30 and ending August 20. These grounds are owned by the state association and can be reached either from Tacoma or Seattle by the Interurban electric cars. The annual state convention will also be held at the same place on August 21 and 22. Spiritualists from the East who intend to visit the Lewis & Clark Fair at Portland, should time their visit so as to stop over for a day or two at the camp, where they will find a hearty welcome from their western co-workers. All railroads give stop-over privileges at the different Sound cities. GEO. E. KNOWLDEN.

Tacoma, Wash.

UNITY CAMP, SAUGUS CENTRE, MASS.

The season's work at Unity Camp, Saugus Center, will open on Sunday, June 4 and continue every Sunday until the last of September. These meetings will be fully up to standard of former seasons, with many added improvements. One of the most important items is the fact that visitors can come direct from Boston to the camp without change of cars, which will be a decided improvement over the old method of changes and many times long waiting. Cars will leave Scollay Square every half hour, for Saugus, by way of Cliftondale.

There will be some slight changes in the time of services. The conference will be at 11 as usual, and all speakers and mediums are cordially invited to assist in this service and make it what its name implies, a conference.

The next service will be at 2, song service at 4:30, concert and entertainment at 5 and regular service at 6. By this programme those wishing to stay to the last service will have ample time to reach their homes in good season.

A strong effort will be made to have better car service to Lynn than in the past. The officials promise that as many extra cars as may be needed shall be furnished to accommodate visitors to the camp.

The concert and entertainment which will precede the evening service is an innovation which we think will be appreciated, being conducted on the same lines as those in Cadet Hall, Lynn, which are proving very popular.

Some of the finest talent procurable will assist at these concerts. A study of the program will convince you that the speakers engaged will be worth coming a long distance to hear. Gas will be introduced into the kitchen to be used for cooking purposes, and the seating capacity of the restaurant enlarged, so that all who wish to remain through the day will have no difficulty in being served well and promptly. All seekers for truth and pleasure combined are cordially invited to visit Unity Camp.

CENTRAL OHIO CAMP.

This camp opens Sunday, June 4 (and closes Sunday, June 25), at Buelen Park, eight miles southwest of Columbus, directly on the B. & O. railway, and Columbus, Grove City and Southwestern Traction Lines; one-half hour's ride from Columbus and 20 minutes from Morgans; will land everybody at the park. Many talented speakers engaged. All are welcome. Officers: H. E. Boerstler, president; L. M. Lydy, vice-president; A. W. Dennis, treasurer; Hattie G. Webster, secretary. For further particulars, address the secretary, 55 McDowell street, Columbus, Ohio.

GRAND LEDGE CAMP, MICH.

The Grand Ledge Spiritualist Camp-meeting opens July 21, 1905, and closes Aug. 21, 1905, with Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly as presiding chairman. As the programs are now being printed they will be distributed as soon as possible, and all those wishing further information regarding the camp, address J. W. Ewing or W. R. Divine of Grand Ledge, Mich. The association extends a cordial invitation to all.

Parkland Heights Spiritualists' Home and Camp-Meeting Association.

To the Spiritualists and friends of the cause everywhere—Kindly Greeting:—Realizing that in union of high purpose there is strength, the members of Parkland Heights Spiritualists' Home and Camp-Meeting Association take this mean of informing you of the fact that our society—organized on the 30th of August, 1903, for the dissemination of the religion and philosophy of Spiritualism, and also for the purpose of establishing at this beautiful rural spot a home and orphanage for Spiritualists—is now an incorporated body, with a membership of 100, and that we do sincerely, most earnestly, desire your co-operation in this work, to which we are giving the best of our lives.

At our annual meeting held in Philadelphia, Pa., on the 21st of January, 1905, by unanimous vote, the following were re-installed in office for the ensuing year:

Richard F. Adams, president; Frank E. Luce, vice-president; Elizabeth M. Fish, secretary; William R. McGlenn, treasurer; Julia R. Locke, corresponding secretary; and by virtue of their respective offices, they are also Directors, and to work in conjunction with them, as such, the following were also elected: Thomas M. Locke, Frank H. Morrill, William A. Grossick, Helen F. Adams, Ida V. McGlenn and Augusta Volk, all of Philadelphia, Pa., except the secretary, whose summer and winter home is at Parkland.

Last summer grove meetings were held during July and August, with two services each Sunday, with good attendance. The high spiritual thought which permeated these meetings was inspiring, and we feel they augur well for the success of our project; that the name of Parkland shall yet resound with honor and glory through the whole of this broad land.

At present the society is in possession of the following property: Six lots, with an auditorium thereon; nearly 500 chairs, an organ, a seal with full name of society, a few books, some dishes and tools—all free of encumbrance—and about $100.00 in cash, all of which we feel to be a good showing for the first eighteen months' work.

Parkland, Pa., is on the New York branch of the Philadelphia & Reading Railway, about 20 miles from Philadelphia (this line dividing the lower grounds from the Heights), with several trains stopping daily. It has many natural advantages for the purpose now designed. It is beautifully situated on a high eminence, commanding a fine view of the surrounding country for many miles. With its lovely groves, with the brook running through, and the historic Nishaminy creek gently flowing at its feet, Parkland is, indeed, a lovely spot in which to build up a prosperous Camp-meeting, and also to establish a "Home," for with its pure air and fine spring water, there is no more healthy location in the country.

During the past year nine new houses were built on the Heights, making a total of 32—besides, about seventy on the lower grounds, where there is also a large hotel and dining room, a commodious pavilion, and a chapel, the latter the property of the First Association of Spiritualists, of Philadelphia.

A public school was recently started here, poles have been placed for electric lights, and a trolley line is in prospect for the near future.

It is our aim to conduct our meetings along a progressive, educational line, serving from our rostrum only such food as will inspire to higher, more noble living; that beautiful Parkland may yet become a great center of high spiritual thought that shall radiate its light of Truth far and near.

In connection with this Camp, it is also our desire to establish on these Heights a Home for worthy mediums, and Spiritualists who have given their lives to the Cause so dear to their hearts; also, an Orphanage, where the dear little blossoms of humanity may be gathered in and lovingly sheltered, and given proper conditions to unfold their innate powers to grow into noble men and women, and so take their rightful places in the progressive march toward making of mother Earth a real heaven, on which coming generations shall yet live in peace and harmony.

And now, oh friend of Progress! realizing that we have entered upon a most sacred work, we earnestly ask for your co-operation, for we do most sincerely desire the assistance of those who have awakened to the realization that Spiritualism is truly a religion of an every-day right-living; that our Cause is the cause of humanity; and having themselves tasted of the sweetness of the living waters of Life, recognize the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man, and aroused to their own individual responsibility are not willing to selfishly enjoy alone the fruit of their higher understanding.

We have recently started a special fund to be known as the "Home Fund," and all who give proper thought to this matter must realize the great need of such a Home, and we feel the time is fast drawing near when we shall not appeal in vain for the needed donations and endowments to carry on this great work.

We would be glad to have societies announce at their meetings the foregoing, and devise ways and means to assist in this work, which as truly belongs to them as us, and all assistance, whether great or small, will be thankfully accepted and duly acknowledged by the secretary through the Spiritual press.

ELIZABETH M. FISH, Sec'y
Floral Heights, Parkland, Eden P. O.
Penn.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32 CHICAGO, ILL., MAY 27, 1905. NO. 809

RECEIVED WITH OPEN ARMS.

Mrs. Lole F. Prior's Grand Reception by the Spiritualists of Wellington, New Zealand.

By the last steamer from San Francisco a noted medium and lecturess came to New Zealand from the United States to fulfill an engagement with the Wellington Association of Spiritualists, Registered. The lady's name is Lole F. Prior, and she gave her first address at the New Century Hall, Wellington, on Sunday evening, 9th April. The spacious hall was crowded, and many were unable to obtain admission. Mrs. Prior's kindly face and quiet, yet earnest manner captivated her hearers, and she was listened to with close interest.

On the Tuesday evening following, the society gave a "reception" to their visitor at the hall. A large number of invitations had been sent out, and on the evening in question the hall was filled with an intelligent gathering. Mr. William McLean, the president, occupied the chair. A few songs were rendered at the commencement of the proceedings, the guest of the evening occupying a seat on the stage under the folds of the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes.

The chairman said it was a memorable occasion, for two reasons. First, it was their privilege to welcome one of the bravest and best women in the cause of Spiritualism. He most cordially welcomed Mrs. Prior, not only to New Zealand, but to a free platform, and he could tell her that she was in a country where, before the law, women stood equal with men, and at election time her vote had the same weight. With regard to mediums the law was not satisfactory, but he hoped their legislators would soon perceive the necessity of amending the present law. The Chairman next referred to the enormous strides Spiritualism was making in all countries, the sympathetic attitude of numbers of scientific men, and the press and in the Church, where a bitter spirit had been shown, there was not such marked antagonism. He thanked the Wellington papers for their lengthy notices concerning Mrs. Prior and her work. The second reason why the occasion was memorable was because they were gathered in the hall after considerable alterations and additions had been made. It was now one of the most comfortable and best appointed halls in the colony. In welcoming Mrs. Prior the Chairman assured her that there was a very kindly feeling existing in this colony towards their American cousins; and he felt sure that her visit would cement the friendship.

Mrs. Prior then stepped forward amid warm applause. Such occasions, she said, left her without words, for she felt that the welcome was the outburst of warm hearts. As she stood beneath the Stars and Stripes on Sunday evening she realized that there was a strong bond of sympathy between the two peoples—that they were more brothers than cousins. She came with fraternal greetings from across the sea, and her welcome had been warm and touching. Mrs. Prior then spoke at some length on the philosophy of Spiritualism, the teachings of Jesus Christ, and lastly, of the unprincipled persons who posed before the American public as materializing mediums and trifled with the tenderest feelings of humanity. These fraudulent persons were coining money by their deception, and she felt it a duty to warn the Spiritualis' of New Zealand, so that they might ware of these adventurers, who were not Spiritualists, but posed as such. The lady resumed her seat amidst another shower of applause.

Mr. John Duthie, M. H. R., at the request of the Chairman, said a few words. Though not a Spiritualist he believed the organization was doing what it could to benefit humanity.

A very young lady delivered a recitation with good elocution and grace.

Mr. W. C. Nation, of Levin, joined in the greetings to Mrs. Prior. She was now in what had been called "Wonderland"—a land of rippling streams and mountain torrents, of fields of ice in the South and subterranean fires in the North. He was glad to join in the welcome and he believed that Mrs. Prior's mission would be productive of much fruit, and when she returned to her own land she would be followed by thankful hearts and good wishes. He was glad the visitor had spoken of the frauds practiced upon unsuspecting inquirers. He could tell the audience he had received a circular from the United States detailing a complete outfit for materialization seances, and offering to supply such at a price. He would publish the particulars, he said, in The Message of Life, so that Spiritualists throughout the colony could see what was in store for them. Mr. Nation spoke of the different schools of thoughi. He said he felt he was amongst students of New Thought, the Subjective Self, Mental Scientists, Theosophists, Spiritualists, and other students of the occult. All were climbing up the mountain side, in different tracks may be, but they were trying to gain the summit. By and by they would reach the height they were striving for, and he could imagine the greeting after this style as they met in the purer atmosphere, "Oh, you here too? I didn't expect to meet you!" The summit attained they would all be closer together. The speaker urged patient investigation and a deeper spirituality in the lives of all, so that the close ofthe mortal career might be like a beautiful sunset of blue and gold.

The whole company then adjourned to the spacious supper room, where refreshments were provided without stint. There was a marked display of good feeling, and Mrs. Prior got in touch with many warm-hearted, intelligent, and earnest seekers after truth.

Since this gathering Mrs. Prior has had well-attended meetings. As a lecturess and as "message bearer" from friends who have passed on she has been highly successful, and her work in New Zealand will produce rich fruit.

Speaking of one of Mrs. Prior's meetings, a Wellington paper said: "After the lecture she devoted half an hour to giving tests, most of them remarkable. No questions, either oral or written, were addressed to her, nor were the lights turned down. Standing on the platform she described various spirits which she said were present, was impressed with the ailments with which they had died, and indicated the part of the hall where sat the persons for whom their messages were intended. In certain instances where no response was made, Mrs. Prior stepped down from the stage and successfully identified the persons who knew the spirit in this life. They were evidently taken by surprise.—"Message of Life."

Life has no blessing like a prudent friend.—Euripides.

A PROPHETIC DREAM.

A Spirit Gave Him the Impressive Vision, Showing Him the Burning Home.

Waukesha, Wis.—Dreams sometimes come true.

The dream of little Louis Spechtenetsky came true last week and to people who believe in presentiments this will be but another evidence of the truth of their faith, while to the materialist it will appear a mere accident. However, they will both agree that it was a strange occurrence.

Last Tuesday night as Louis and his mother were coming home on the interurban electric car from Milwaukee the boy fell asleep. He suddenly awoke from a dream and said:

"Ma, our house is on fire."

His mother comforted him in his terror over his presentiment, saying:

"No, our house is all right. We will soon be home now and pa will meet us."

When she reached Main street, Mrs. Spechtenetsky suddenly shrieked:

"My God! My children!"

For less than a block away she saw the upper story of her home on White Rock avenue in flames, a crowd of people on the street and the fire department at work.

The mother's heart was soon relieved from its burden of crushing fear, however, for her children were safe, and the damage to the house was small.

It happened that another son, Nathan, had set a candle too close to his bed. One quilt and his clothing were burned before the boy was aroused and he probably would not have awakened in time to save his life if it had not been for his sister Annie, who discovered the blaze. She aroused him and then gave the alarm.—Milwaukee News.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

Mr. and Mrs. Aber in Arkansas City—A Select Circle Held in Which the Manifestations are Most Remarkable.

W. W. Aber and wife from Kansas City, Mo., spent ten days in our city, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Terrell, using their parlors for the reception of those seeking information from their friends in spirit life. The rooms were crowded each evening. Many persons were convinced of spirit return, meeting and conversing with their friends for the first time since their transition to spirit spheres. Mr. and Mrs. Aber are each excellent mediums.

The Sunday evening developing seances, held at E. J. Hoyt's are progressing nicely, and growing in interest. The circle consists of members of Mr. H. and family, with a few select friends and an occasional invited guest or guests. The light in the rooms is slightly shaded, the features of the sitters being plainly visible. Preceding the sitting, a half hour or more is spent in the parlor rendering delightful instrumental music. Mr. H. is a fine violinist, using an instrument that cost $500. Ella, his daughter, presides at the piano. Joe, a nephew, plays the cornet, and Turner, the son-in-law, and medium, plays a horn. These concerts are a good prelude to a harmonious circle. Exactly on time the sitters take their respective places. The medium, dressed entirely in black garments, enters the cabinet, which is a curtain in two parts suspended on a wire stretched across the corner of the seance room. The cabinet and medium are inspected, the curtains closed and the medium is soon in a deep trance. The friends from spirit spheres announce everything in readiness, when form after form appears, bows to friends, and seem pleased when recognized. Some are clothed in robes of spotless white; others dressed in garments such as they wore in earth sphere. They talk through the medium to the circle or some member of it, answer questions and give advice. No fee is charged or donations accepted; no exhibition in public contemplated; the circle is held for investigation, and has demonstrated to its members that our departed friends can, under favorable conditions, appear visibly and converse with us.

THOS MURRAY.

Arkansas City, Kansas.

ANOTHER COMMENDABLE WORK.

To Advance the Grand Truths of Spiritualism.

Dear Friend:—Are you a Spiritualist? And if so, are you desirous of assisting in building up and advancing the Cause of the Angels? No higher, holier cause was ever presented to the human race for its consideration than that which proves the immortality of the human soul, the perpetuity of love, and the eternal progress of mankind.

In view of this, I am desirous of establishing a Home for Spiritualism in the city of St. Louis, Mo., to serve as a center of activity in the upbuilding of our cause in the Great West.

St. Louis is a large and rapidly growing city, centrally located in the great Mississippi Valley, and contiguous to all points in the West and Southwest. There is no better field for propaganda work to be found anywhere than here.

You are therefore solicited to contribute the sum of one dollar to a fund that is already begun, to be appropriated to the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a building suitable for the following purposes:

An entertainment hall, with all necessary appointments for the purpose of public meetings of all kinds, including amusements, etc. A kitchen and dining hall, seance rooms, laundry, and rooms for sanitarium and dispensary purposes.

This establishment shall be open at all times for the purpose of assisting all who need either physical, mental or spiritual aid, and for the purpose of furthering in every way the cause of true Spiritualism.

The officers of the organization known as the Spiritual Society of Truth Seekers of St. Louis, a body organized and chartered by both the Progressive Spiritualist Association of Missouri, and the National Spiritualists Association, have caught the spirit of this lofty ideal, a movement instigated and initiated by your correspondent, into which she is putting all of her life energies, and which has the full approval and endorsement of the angel world.

Will you help us? If so, please remit by return mail the sum of one dollar, together with the names of all Spiritualists whom you think would be interested in such a movement.

Sincerely yours,

MRS. JOSIE K. FOLSOM.

3007A Dickson street, St. Louis, Mo.

A PIECE OF INTOLERANCE.

An Address by Dr. J. M. Peebles Rejected.

The following is from Light of London, England:

I have been for fifteen years a promptly-paying member of the London Victoria Institute and Philosophical Society of Great Britain, of which body the Earl of Halsbury is president, but a paper upon "Immortality" that I had prepared to be read at a meeting of that society on Monday, the 17th inst., was, at the last moment, rejected by the council in session.

Though yearly admiring many of the essays upon science and religion read and discussed by this distinguished body, I felt that the temple of this conservative Institute needed a "living stone," a present-day inspiration; and from the best and highest motives I prepared to furnish it under the name of "Immortality: Its Naturalness, its Possibilities and Proofs."

The thinking, progressive souls of the twentieth century do not care whether the old Moabites were polygamists or monogamists; whether Samson chased the foxes or was himself chased by the foxes; but they do care and pray for the termination of this brutal war between pious Christian Russians and the more enlightened "Pagan" Japanese; they do care about the unemployed in London and the street-corner beggars in New York; they do care about the uneducated, half-clad orphan and weeping mother mourning over the cold, dead form of a loved child. With no knowledge of a future life, many Rachels are mourning without consolation!

Serious pondering upon these momentous subjects, I selected Immortality, with its legitimate corollaries, as a fit subject for my paper. It was duly prepared, and handed to the secretary, Professor Edward Hull, LL.D., F. R. S., on April 3, and, according to the custom of the Victoria Institute, it was printed in pamphlet form, and sent out to many of the members, that they might know its contents, and be prepared for the reading and discussion. The paper was in the hands of the officials and members for two weeks. All seemed well. In the meantime the secretary, very courteously wrote me, knowing the condition of my throat and lungs, and expressed the hope that I would be able to personally read the paper. The tickets of invitation had been printed and distributed.

The hour had come. The people had assembled. The reporters were at the table—then, and then only, was I summoned into the council room, and gravely informed that the council had decided that "for good and sufficient reasons," the "paper was not considered appropriate to be read" before the members and invited guests. Using the "Daily Mail's" phrase, the "address was closured before it began," and the Rev. Canon R. B. Girdlestone, M. A., was substituted to deliver an address on the "Resurrection." The most of my friends, city officials and journalists, indignantly left the lecture hall.

The council having refused to accept my paper, treating of the evidences of the Divine existence, and proofs from ancient testimonies, and present-day spiritual phenomena, in demonstration of a future conscious life, I withdrew it, and it is now my property. Spiritualism was the crux, and yet, at the head of the printed pamphlet—sent out by the Institute—was this passage: "The Institute's object being to investigate, it must not be held to endorse the various views expressed either in the papers or discussions." But, inasmuch as it is the professed purpose of this body to "investigate," the inquiry naturally arises here: Could the members of the Institute "investigate" and "discuss" a paper which was forbidden to be "read?"

I need not dilate upon the shock, or the crushing, mortifying position in which this belated decision placed me. It is passing, and almost mirthfully, strange that this council and the learned members had previously received, and had discussed, a paper on the "Venomous Snakes of India"; and another paper (see Vol. XXXXIII.) of twenty-seven pages was read by the Rev. F. A. Walker, D. D., upon "Hornets," particular stress being laid upon the point as to what "period of the year do queen hornets leave their nests."

Think of it! A distinguished body of ministers, clergymen, and titled scientists permitting a paper to be read upon the characteristics of "Hornets" and "Wasps," yet rejecting a paper treating of the ancient and present-day proofs of human immortality! As I have said, Spiritualism was the crux, and yet these clergymen should not be frightened at Spiritualism, when many of the brainiest and most scholarly men of the world are Spiritualists—when the illustrious Dr. Jowett, Master of Balliol College, Oxford University, in a sermon upon "Faith, Doctrine, and Immmortality" (p. 319), says: "The spirits and forms of the dead seem to hover around us and to be about our bed and about our path, sometimes for a shorter and sometimes for a longer period after they have been taken from us." Jesus asked (I quote from memory), "How much, then, is a man better than a sheep?" and I shall ever say, when thinking of the Victoria Institute and Philosophical Society of Great Britain, how much better is immortality, with its angel ministries and spirit messages, than the "hornets" and "wasps," and the "snakes of India," the characteristics of which this institute allowed to be described in a paper (of twenty-one pages) by Sir Joseph Fayrer, M. D., LL.D. By the way, there is no reference in this exhaustive paper upon snakes to the rib-made woman of Eden, and her conversation with the "serpent."

The extraordinary treatment I have received from the council of the Victoria Institute excites in me not the least anger, but rather the fraternal feeling of a most condescending pity. And yet, owing to my abiding and unbounded faith in God and the fulfillment of His mighty purpose in creation, I believe in the future enlightenment and final salvation of the members of this Institute's council; basing this beautiful belief in a degree upon this sacred scriptural passage: "The Lord preserveth the simple."

J. M. PEEBLES.

[We have much pleasure in announcing that Dr. Peebles has kindly consented to give his "rejected" address on "Immortality: Its Naturalness, Its Possibilities and Proofs," to the members and associates of the London Spiritualist Alliance, on May 25 next, and we are confident that he will receive a very sympathetic welcome from a large and appreciative audience on that occasion. —Editor Light.]

MATERIALIZATION.

An Old and Forgotten System for Spiritualists to Consider.

To the Editor:—We fully realize the greatness and profundity of the subject before us, the delicate chemical processes involved in the production of this the most wonderful of all psychic phenomena; also do we recognize our inability to properly and clearly convey our ideas to the advanced student reader on this great question, and if we should fall short on language and appropriate terms necessary to present the true facts to your consciousness, it is hoped that the intelligent reader will be able to supply the deficiency and level up to the line of thought we here lay out for your candid consideration.

The Musical Scale.

Our line of argument in the form of an explanation of the processes involved in this most wonderful phenomenon called materialization, will be based upon the musical scale. The seven octaves of our musical range of vibration hold a perfect multiple relation to one another, yet, by an almost unlimited combination of individual notes, harmony and discord are produced in endless variety and degrees.

It is this range of the seven chromatic scales that we hold to be a true representation of the macrocosmic and the microcosmic scales of vibrations. By the macrocosmic scale of vibration we mean that infinite range of vibratory rates existing between the lowest vibrating atom on the lower C and the highest rate of vibratory motion on the highest C. By the microcosmic scale of vibration we mean all vibratory activity between the lowest vibrating atom constituting the human organism and the highest vibratory soul power on the high C on the seventh octave, which includes all vibratory powers, forces and elements operative in the visible and invisible realm of the human being.

Materialize, according to Webster's definition, is: 'to reduce to a state of matter," and we take it for granted that the meaning he intends to convey is, that an invisible substance of high vibratory motion or activity is reduced or lowered down to that state of vibration exhibited in tangible material objects, which are visible to our sense of sight by responsive capacity of our visual organs.

Now let us remember this fact: To materialize is to reduce to lower atomic vibration of an invisible ethereal substance which under the law of transmutation becomes condensed and at last solidified sufficiently to be visible to our physical sense of sight. The term reduce, means: "to bring back to a former state." (Webster.)

It is customary for investigators when explaining this phenomenon, especially in regard to its genuineness, to base their conclusions upon experience under close observation, but this is not always a safe method, for under the present system practiced by many materializing mediums, said to produce this phenomenon, the investigator is run up against powers and forces which render it impossible for him to at all times be absolutely sure that he sees an object when he thinks he sees it. This applies especially to the question of identification.

The object of this article is not to explain the processes and methods used by materializing mediums at the present time, who under various conditions produce what is said to be full form materialization, which, to a certain extent, no doubt, are genuine. In many cases when the requisite conditions are present; but rather to explain the true process in materialization when circles are formed in accordance with nature's laws and principles as exemplified in the musical scale.

All nature is established upon a musical basis. All psychical as well as physical phenomena result from a blending of primary forces and elements; this blending always takes place to the same degree that harmony exists—and is not harmony inherent in the musical scale?

Subject to Musical Laws.

Every human being is at all times subject to musical laws, and has a certain location on the musical scale, according to inherent predominant electric or magnetic force, which constitutes a person's key-note, and is one of the great dominant factors of existence.

No Two Persons Born Alike.

By the thirteen notes on the chromatic scale we have thirteen different human characteristics and temperaments represented. If we divide every half step on the scale in four equal parts, we have fifty-two different temperaments represented. If we make a more sweeping division we have 258, but this is not practical, yet we might go into the hair-splitting business and deal with fractions, which gives us that infinite variation under which no two person are ever born just alike; no two leaves in the forest are just alike; but in this article we shall only deal with the original thirteen human temperaments according to their location on the chromatic scale in which is inherent the basic principles of existence.

According to statement in the New Testament, Jesus must have understood and practiced this system when he went about over the country picking up his disciples here and there as he found them corresponding to the twelve notes on the chromatic scale, he himself being located on F sharp, the vital center, a position only held by a perfect human being, and is called the messianic point, with John on G and James on F, which are the prophetic points; Peter on high C, with Judas on low C, which constitutes the two extremities. This gives us three chief divisions of the human family: the electric, the magnetic and the electro-magnetic, each one with their sign-board aloft designating their position on the scale. Judas was just as necessary in the formation of this great battery as low C is in the musical scale, although Jesus knew that Judas was a devil (see John 6:70); nevertheless had to have him in order to have his battery complete. Here might be maintained the beautiful thought of the evolution of the low C into the multiple relative positions from octave to octave, but we must curtail.

P. PEARSON.

Ponca City, Okla.

(To be continued.)

The road to ambition is too narrow for friendship, too crooked for love, too rugged for honesty and too dark for science.—Rousseau.

The friendships of the world are oft confederacies in vice, or leagues of pleasure.—Addison.

AN IMPRESSIVE COMPARISON.

Keeler the Medium vs. Kellar the Magician.

After reading the above, which has appeared in a great many papers, both city and country, as a full and complete expose, and as an expert and scientific explanation and refutation of the phenomena of slate-writing, it is the wish of the writer to place along side of the story of how Kellar, "the most mystifying and marvelous magician on this mundane sphere," says he did his wonderful work of slate-writing, a statement of the work witnessed by the writer on the 3rd instant, at the home, in this city, of Mr. P. L. O. A. Keeler, the medium, who has for twenty-five years been the instrument through which has been given this most interesting and convincing phase, and positive proof of the power of spirits to return and communicate with mortals.

Calling at Mr. Keeler's home at 11 o'clock on May 3, I was invited to the front room on the second floor, and seated at a small table opposite Mr. K., and with the light of noonday streaming in upon us through four windows, having previously procured from a down-town store, three slates, 8x12 inches in size, which were placed upon the table, Mr. K. assuring me that conversation would in no wise interfere with the work, we touched upon several subjects entirely irrelevant to the matter we were engaged in, but after the passing of a half hour's time, Mr. K. was apprised by his guide, George Christy, that the notes I had prepared before leaving home had not been addressed to names, which was necessary; so I opened them and made the change suggested. A further suspension of anxious waiting of some 15 minutes, during which Mr. K. apologetically inquired if I was growing impatient, and expressed his regrets at the delay, but saying he could not help it, when his guide made the further request that I separate the two slates which had been secured together and remove and hold in my hand for a moment the bit of pencil which had been placed between them. This was done, no writing appearing as yet on either slate, but on replacing the piece of pencil the sound of the scratching began immediately, and continued for not to exceed 45 or 50 seconds, when O. K. was received from the guide.

I at once picked up the slates and separated them, and received the revelation that will ever dispel doubt from my mind on this momentous question.

These two slates were not touched by either of us during the writing; they were simply lying upon the table between us. There were five communications, completely covering the two inside surfaces with closely written matter; the writing and composition as distinctly different in character and form as it is possible to get from five persons in any promiscuous gathering.

Mr. Keeler then received intelligence that the guide wished to write a communication, so he picked up the remaining slate and one of those already written upon, put them together, holding them toward me in his hands, arms extended. I took hold of the opposite side, the pencil began moving in a way that indicated very rapid movement, and in 15 seconds stopped with the whole side of the slate closely written.

The character of the matter was highly intelligent in every particular in each instance. I identified fully each personality and their peculiar traits. I had know all intimately for periods ranging from twenty to fifty years, their respective ages being from 30 to 73 years.

It is but fair to say, for the purpose of acquainting the reader who may have misleading surmises as to the predilections or bias of investigation of the writer, that all his natural tendencies of thought, both speculative and so-called scientific is, and has been for over a half century, impregnated with skepticism to an extreme and intolerant degree.

I am compelled in candor to admit that up to the very moment of opening the slates and beholding the revelation in the fullness of all the faculties possessed, I was so incredulous as to think it absurd and absolutely impossible to get what I was led to expect in accord with report and reputation of the medium.

It is conceded to Kellar that he is the high priest of fakirs, the prince of tricksters traveling the land.

If his performance is amusing and mystifying, perhaps worth the price if you are pleased, we have no word of reproof, but, dear reader, do exercise your intelligence, weigh in the balance of reason, study thoroughly, analyze your deductions and the facts as you find them, make the fullest comparison, be free, frank and fair, note the wide contrast between the work of Kellar the magician and his fake, and Keeler the medium and phenomena. Of what priceless value to the sincere, earnest soul searching for the truth, and seeking solace for the sore heart whose healing depends on a proof of the fact of continuity of life after death, inseparable from love, as is given by the divinely gifted Keeler in that honest work, so simple in manner, so amazing to the mind, yet so satisfying to the heart throbbing with the longings of love to feel the unmistakable assurance of the presence of those dear ones gone a little before to enter the beautiful realms of a purer and higher condition of existence.

It is an unpardonable presumption on the intelligence of the people to parade before the public pretending to do that which he cannot, and Kellar's self-laudation and conceit above are equal to the occasion; it would be perfectly safe to wager that he could not get a single scratch from a bit of pencil the size of a broom straw and an eighth of an inch long in a decade of his deceptive practice.

He may be able to confound and dumfound scientific savants and suckers, but is it possible that people will permit such cheap trickery of legerdemain to pass their discernment and discrimination between the fickle and false, and the irrefutable, convincing evidence of the living truth?

J. W. NIGH.

Washington, D. C.

MUSIC.

Ah, music, thy voice is tender,
Thou art no shallow base pretender,
Thy tones are deep as love of woman,
Thy sympathy is something more than human.

Down to the deepest heart's emotion,
Down to the soul's unfathomed ocean,
Deeper than earthly lines have sounded;
Thy notes sink limitless and unbounded.

—G. Diuvan Young.

TESTIMONY FROM IRELAND.

Showing the Prevalence of a Belief in Spirit Return.

The Irish Independent recently offered a guinea prize for the best answer to the question, "Do you believe in Ghosts?" and the winning reply was the following, published in that paper on March 1st, and written by Mr. B. Granger, of 2, Millmount-terrace, Drumcondra:

"My own belief in the supernatural world and its sometimes visible denizens is as instinctive as my belief in God. It admits of no debate, and requires no justification—to myself. But there are doubters and skeptics. The instinct is not universal, although, if proper tests could be applied, it might be found generally true that in all there is the cord that thrills responsive to the supernatural.

"In a rural district in Ireland you will hear well-authenticated instances of wraiths, or apparitions of persons still alive—one was mentioned a few days ago in connection with the Richill poisoning case—of ghosts, i. e., apparitions of individuals known to be dead, and of mysterious intimations, variously conveyed, of the deaths of relatives and friends. And that, too, from truthful, sober-minded men, to whom it would be an insult to impute falsehood or hysteria.

"Spiritualism, mentioned by Canon Courtenay Moore, is one of the most thoroughly absurd creeds in the world. Table rappings, juggling, trickery—these constitute Spiritualism, say the critics, who will not take the trouble to make themselves acquainted with the facts. Maskelyne, in his "exposures" of the various mediums (properly witches), has exposed a vast amount of unreasonable prejudice in himself, and similarly with others who had made up their minds not to be convinced. What they could not understand was only some trick cleverer than the rest.

"I have been present at clairvoyant seances where the "controlled" medium has described the ghosts who hovered about in the vicinity of various members of the audience. Their descriptions have enabled the living fathers, husbands, wives, to recognize the deceased members of their households, and messages have been given by the mediums from the spirit world to those on earth. I might have argued collusion in all these cases had I not had positive proofs of the impossibility of such a thing in the case of several friends of my own.

"I could multiply instances like these did space allow, and though I do not regard Spiritualism as by any means a healthy subject to dabble in, its revelations, taken in connection with what might be described as the unaided belief in things ghostly, seems to me to afford positive proof of the objective existence of ghosts."

In another reply, a Roman Catholic priest states that while Spiritualist seances are condemned by his Church as grievously sinful, there is no a priori reason to show why spirits should not manifest themselves. Man's soul, he says, after its separation from the body, is a spirit, and can assum appearances. There is abundance of evidence, which in law would be regarded as decisive, to prove that spirits do make manifestations. One man in every ten has had experiences, but the majority are ashamed to acknowledge them. Lastly, he cites the authority of the bible, which records many spiritual phenomena.

"The Herald of the Golden Age" continues to bless its readers with its winsome reflections upon Spirit-life. We send our kindest greetings to our excellent ally. A late article, on "From Matter to Spirit," is a beautifully written presentation of the truth "that we are living souls, not animated bodies." "Our fleshly tabernacle," it says, "is but a temporary movable dwelling-place—a convenient means of communication with this physical world, in which we are gaining necessary and valuable experience and are perfecting our spiritual evolution."

The spiritual awakening is also very tenderly and luminously described. The following sentences are like points of light:

When the human soul awakes from the long sleep of materialism, and becomes spiritually conscious, all things become changed. It sees a new heaven and a new earth.

It becomes aware that this dense material universe is the theatre of a great drama, in which it is, itself, playing a humble but not unimportant part; that our planet is the scene of a great work of soul-transformation or evolution, which is ever taking place.

It is no longer in bondage to the fear of death; for it knows that departure from the physical body is but the laying aside of an earthly garment which has become outworn, and that the etheric form which envelopes it is of finer texture and of more sensitive vibration, and one that will more perfectly reveal its true self.

The material world loses its grip; dependence upon physical sensation becomes lessened; the stupendous vision of the unexplored wealth, and the transcendent possibilities of the spiritual worlds are intuitively perceived; and the soul begins to realize, even though it be but faintly at first, the glorious liberty and privilege of "the children of God."

In due time, it is permitted to have foretaste of the peace that passeth understanding, and the joy that cannot be expressed, which constitute the perennial conditions of the Christ-sphere where love and sympathy are freely outpoured.

When its hour has come and it has been tried and tested, and found faithful, it is admitted to the mystic kingdom and the real Presence—and, finding there the fulfillment of all its hopes and all its dreams, it abides, and goes out into the darkness no more.—Light, London, England.

THE KOSMON DAY IS HERE.

The hearts of men throughout the earth
Beat in unison from their birth—
In pulsing throbs of joy or pain—
In yearning, gracious, glad refrain—
The coming of a Brighter Day.

The Day is here, we heed it not!
Within! Within! Behold thy lot!
United we in soul commune—
United we at Kosmon Noon—
The Kosmon Day is here.

JOHN A. LANT.

Fraternal Home, Pittsburg, Kans.

There was a noble way, in former times of saying things simply, and yet saying them proudly.—Irving.

SIDE LIGHTS.

A Message of Good Cheer From Maori Land.

I arrived in New Zealand April 7, and remained at Auckland, port of entry, only a few hours, coming out to Wellington, where I landed safely April 8, after nearly three weeks' voyage. One little realizes the size of the Pacific Ocean, until he sails westward upon it; day after day we steamed on, sometimes making 400 miles in 24 hours, and no sight of land; only the great expanse of blue water, water!

How little one feels when looking out across the billows. Such a trip is a very good cure of egotism, for one realizes fully, that he amounts to little, when compared to the earth and its wonders!

I was met at the depot by Brother McLean and his good wife, who took me in charge, they having arranged for lodgings, and they made me feel at once that I was not a stranger in a strange land, but with cheerful words and kindly smiles was I greeted as if they had always known me.

Mr. McLean is president of the society here, and a very nice society it is, too. New Century Hall is owned by the Spiritualists. It has recently been enlarged, relighted and reventilated, so to-day it compares well with some of the churches of the city.

The membership roll is a large one, and each one has, seemingly, put himself out to make my stay a pleasant one.

On Sunday, April 9, the seating capacity of the hall could not accommodate the crowds that came, there were over one hundred turned away, and the door charges were 2s., equal to our 50 cents, showing in itself what interest is taken in Spiritualism. I have given two Sunday lectures, and one Wednesday evening test meeting, and the same crowds have come.

The singing and music at the meetings are especially good, and the choir should be praised for the good work which it does. The Spiritualists here are active, progressive men and women, and they have had the best in our philosophy taught, Dr. Peebles, W. J. Colville, J. J. Morse, Ada Foye, Nellie Brigham and Laura G. Fixen all having been here in the past, and I feel that the work I am called to do, is but adding a few grains of truth to much that has already been sowed.

On the 11th a grand reception was given me, and I was welcomed to the colonies by a member of parliament; but the most delicate compliment was the draping of "Old Glory" above my chair. How quickly my eyes filled with tears when I saw the folds of the Stars and Stripes embraced by the folds of the flag of New Zealand. Now true Spiritualism is a bond that closely unites us, making us one great family, that knows no line or boundary of land nor state.

I shall be here two months, after which I start on a tour of the colonies. You will hear from me again.

LOIE F. PRIOR.

MRS. NETTIE PEASE FOX.

A Tribute of Respect to This Gifted Lady.

It was my privilege to hear this gifted lecturer first in 1883 at the Mt. Pleasant Camp-meeting, Clinton, Iowa. Her husband was president of the association at that time. He was also editor of the Spiritual Offering, a paper that was distinctively temperance as well as Spiritualistic in its endeavor to enlighten the world.

I was at that time only an investigator. Tangible evidence of immortality had not yet reached me.

While in attendance at that meeting, it occurred to me that having been a dreamer of very vivid dreams all my life, it might be a good thing for me, and later for the world, if I should attempt something of an analysis and clasification of dreams; and without giving a hint of my intention to a living soul, I actually began recording my dreams, morning after morning for a period, but finally abandoned the idea of classification, and with it, the recording of my dreams. But the vivid dreams persist.

Curious to say, the work which I had abandoned, Mrs. Fox's guides pursued, and the first lecture I was permitted after the lapse of 22 years to hear from her, was upon this very subject, "Dreams." It was here in San Jose, about a month since, and I instantly took in the remarkable co-incidence—the dream episode at Clinton in 1883, and the dream analysis by this same able lecturer in 1905.

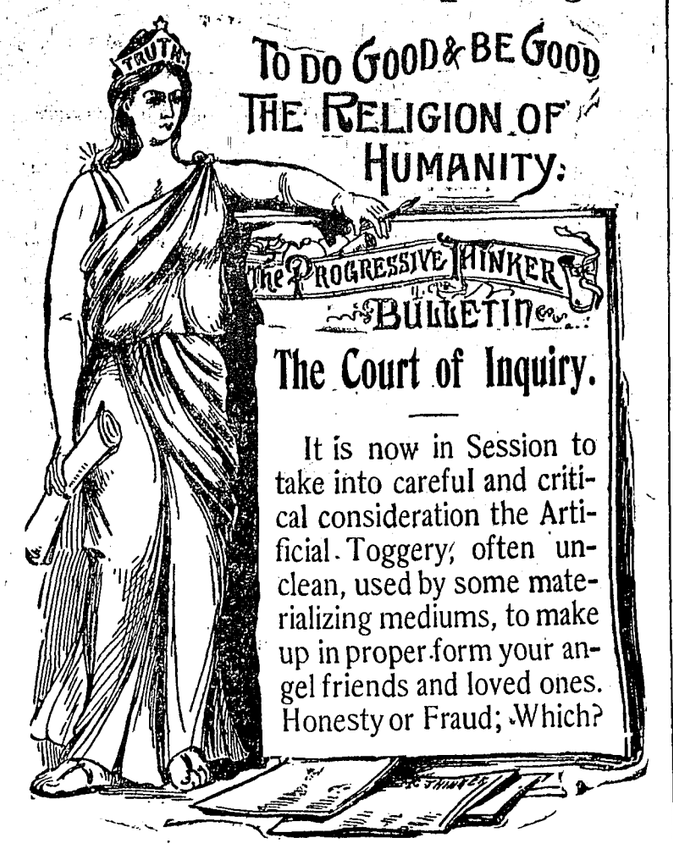
She gave a very lucid and thoroughly scientific analysis and logical classification of dreams and their true significance, such as would be of profound benefit to all thoughtful people.

The following Sunday she lectured on Progression, and manifested true inspiration of a high order. Most impressive and eloquent was her allusion to the grand fact that success in our meetings from week to week, is not necessarily marked by crowded halls and seasons of excitement, but rather by a quiet determination which manifest itself in the co-operative endeavor of a few earnest souls, intent upon solving the great problem of relief of struggling humanity as we find it today, crushed and bruised by the tyrant hand of injustice, dealing blow after blow with fatal effectiveness, while the vast uncounted millions of victims, still patient in their forbearance, are struggling against tremendous odds for relief, and wondering why it never comes.

This, indeed, is the burden of thought of all true Spiritualists to-day the wide world over. The wise and thoughtful ones in our ranks find here their chief concern.

Her lectures rate not among the ordinary. On the contrary she is a thorough artist in her line, and judging from these two lectures I infer that she ranks with Cora L. V. Richmond, both in vigor and grace, and I hope that henceforth her fine powers will find ample opportunity for expression.

It is needless to say I have written this frank statement unsolicited and entirely unknown to the one whose name I have here so freely used, as a tribute of respect to the living and the just claims of the world upon her future service.



THOS. H. B. COTTON.

San Jose, Cal.

Few men are so clever as to know all the mischief they do.—Rochefoucauld.

It is only necessary to grow old to become more indulgent. I see no fault committed that I have not committed myself.—Goethe.

Court of Inquiry.

The Court of Inquiry.

It is now in Session to take into careful and critical consideration the Artificial Toggery, often unclean, used by some materializing mediums, to make up in proper form your angel friends and loved ones. Honesty or Fraud; Which?

Crisis Pending in the Ranks of Spiritualism.

THERE HAS AT LAST COME A VERY SERIOUS CRISIS IN THE RANKS OF SPIRITUALISM.

MANY MATERIALIZING MEDIUMS, EMBOLDENED BY THEIR SUCCESS IN THE USE OF ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY IN THEIR SEANCES, HAVE AT LAST FORCED AN UNPLEASANT CONDITION OF AFFAIRS INTO THE RANKS OF SPIRITUALISM.

EVER SINCE THE DAVENPORT BROTHERS TRAVELED THROUGH THE UNITED STATES WITH THEIR MYSTERIOUS CABINET FEATS, MYSTIFYING THE PEOPLE, LEGERDEMAIN, CONFEDERATES, ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY, DRESSES ILLUMINATED WITH PHOSPHORUS, FALSE WHISKERS, WIGS, CHEESE CLOTH, FEATHERS, AND EVEN KNIVES HAVE BEEN BROUGHT INTO REQUISITION TO HELP THE MEDIUM OR SPIRIT IN WHAT IS EVIDENTLY A WORK OF DECEPTION OF THE DARKEST KIND.

THIS ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY IS OFTEN UNCLEAN, AND REVEALS UNDER THE MICROSCOPE, MICROBES WHOSE ONLY PLACE IN THE ECONOMY OF NATURE IS IN THE FILTH OUTSIDE OF THE RANKS OF PURE SPIRITUALISM.

ALL THESE ROTTEN TRICKSTERS HAVE GOTTEN IN THEIR PESTIFEROUS WORK UNTIL EMBOLDENED BY THEIR SUCCESS IN THEIR DECEPTIVE METHODS, THEY HAVE ACTUALLY NAUSEATED THOUSANDS OF HONEST SPIRITUALISTS, AND DRIVEN THEM INTO THE VARIOUS LIBERAL CULTS AND CREEDS THAT HAVE ASSUMED GREAT PROMINENCE IN VARIOUS PARTS OF THE COUNTRY.

COMMENCING WITH THE EXPOSURE OF MRS. GRIFFEN, IN MILWAUKEE, WIS., OVER TWO YEARS AGO, DRESSED IN A HOME-MADE INDIAN COSTUME, WITH A HEADGEAR ORNAMENTED WITH FEATHERS, TO REPRESENT AN INDIAN CHIEFTAIN, THERE HAS BEEN A DOZEN OR MORE EXPOSURES, AND IN EVERY CASE THE "SPIRIT" PROVED TO BE THE MEDIUM DRESSED IN GROSS MATERIAL, OFTEN DIRTY, AND ESPECIALLY PREPARED FOR THE OCCASION BY MORTAL HANDS INTENT ON DECEIVING.

EVEN ELSIE REYNOLDS, THE GREAT LEADER OF A CERTAIN GANG WHO USE ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY IN DECEIVING THE PEOPIE, WHEN EXPOSED IN LOS ANGELES, CAL., HAD ON A MASK AND GOGGLES, WITH HER SKIRT ROLLED UP, REPRESENTING HERSELF AS THE SPIRIT OF "AUNT BETSEY." SUCH BEING THE CASE MR. DUNN HAS SOME FOUNDATION FOR HIS STATEMENT THAT ALL MATERIALIZING MEDIUMS ARE GUILTY OF PRACTICING THE SAME DECEPTION, HENCE THIS COURT OF INQUIRY HAS BEEN CALLED, WITH THE OBJECT IN VIEW TO ARRIVE AT THE REAL FACTS IN THE CASE.

A Trenchant Reply to Judge Dunn.

F. C. Boving is a Prominent Spiritualist of Hot Springs, Ark., respected by all classes for his sterling honesty and integrity, and his answer to Judge Dunn will be read with deep interest.

To the Editor:—I have just read and thought over the very remarkable and exhaustive article of Andrew C. Dunn. It is to me remarkable because a man of unusual intelligence, such as Mr. Dunn undoubtedly possesses, would be expected to have better judgment and reasoning than his article indicates. After digesting his article two thoughts came to my mind, namely: Mr. Dunn is either employed to defend the cause of fake phenomena, and has done the best he could with his subject, and possibly said more in the fakes' behalf than could have been presented by one out of a thousand in the ranks of Spiritualists, for this he is entitled to credit and has done what his profession requires.

On the other hand, if this supposition is wrong, then he honestly believes, feels and thinks that his expressions are true. In this event I am surprised, for his argument is absolutely without reason. He states that all materializing mediums carry paraphernalia. This I am able to dispute, for there was a medium at my house for two weeks last fall, who permitted her trunk and effects to be thoroughly searched upon entering my home, and before entering the cabinet, (which was a corner of the room behind my wife's curtains, instead of her own) permitted the ladies to disrobe her of every garment, and donned a black dress furnished by the ladies, entering the cabinet without music box or other effects. There was no chance for trickery here, and from the cabinet came forms white as snow, she being clothed entirely in black, and all sizes from three to six feet high. This proves Mr. Dunn's statement false regarding paraphernalia being used by all such mediums.

His argument that this trash is needed by the spirits sounds absurd.

For what purpose do they need it?

In personating, he will doubtless answer.

What is personating?

My understanding of the use of the word in this connection is, where the spirits take possession of the medium's person and bring him before the audience, (the medium being unconscious) for the purpose of using the medium's anatomy through which instrument the spirit may communicate to his friends in the circle. The object then is to give some intelligent communication which will be recognized as coming from the spirit of one of our departed friends. Why then decorate the medium's person with robes of cheesecloth, old discarded hats with various alterations and decorations, false beards and wigs? Do these articles convey to the loved one in the circle any satisfaction? No! Then why use them? If such stuff is to be used, wouldn't it be better for the medium to make explanation of them, and exhibit them before the seance?

WHY DO THEY LIE when asked about paraphernalia, and secrete it in the music box where no one can find it? When the audience is asked to examine the cabinet, why don't they also open up the music box and expose the contents of the secret pocket beneath the disk?

If it is right for this stuff to be used, and ALL, as stated, carry the same, why should the public not know it, and have its use explained?

The medium expects the circle to be honest in their investigations, hence, why not the sitters have the same right to expect the medium to be honest in return?

Deception is not akin to honesty in any sense.

Did you ever hear of a medium acknowledging that he carried paraphernalia for the benefit of his spirit guides, to be used in their seances? No! They deny this emphatically, and exclude from their circles all whom they know have such suspicions. At my house, Winans explained personation to be when the spirit made up and resembled himself in appearance, manner, talk, etc., but positively stated that it was THE SPIRIT MATERIALIZED that came from the cabinet and never himself. To satisfy the circle of this, he is often sewed to his chair or placed beneath a mosquito bar which is fastened to the ceiling and floor, in such a manner that there is apparently no chance for him to escape without tearing down the same. This is a trick like many others performed.

On yesterday morning, Winans' trunk and diamonds were sold on the streets by the constable, and I purchased his music box, which was locked and no key to be found which would open it. I procured one from a locksmith, however, and on opening it found THE SECRET COMPARTMENT STUFFED FULL OF ROBES, WIGS, TURKEY-FEATHERS, BEARDS, A DECORATED HAT, BANNERS GAILY DECORATED WITH STARS, CRESCENTS, CROSSES, HANDS, FLOWERS, ETC. Many of these articles were recognized by wife and self as having been materialized by Jimmie Bundle, last August, on the Clinton camp grounds, to the amazement and great pleasure of the circle. Also a fan which was mysteriously materialized by Jimmie Bundle, and with which he moved from one to the other of the circle fanning each to show it was not a vision, but the real thing produced from a borrowed handkerchief, also a bowie-knife produced in the same way. The music box and most of the articles above enumerated at this moment lie on a table before me and anyone who would like a feather from the head-gear of Winans' Indian guide, will please write and make such request, the same will be granted at once.

If Winans is an honest medium, why does he perform such tricks to create false impressions on the minds of the innocent investigators, who spend hours afterwards talking about the wonders of Jimmie Bundle, the lace-maker, who materialized so many articles from a borrowed handkerchief?

Do you, my reader, think this part of his performance in any way spiritual, and does it promote in the minds of any one proof that we live beyond the grave, when the explanation of how these things are done is made? No! Such is nonsense and rot.

I purchased at the sale, his black curtain and can now explain how the materialized hands came through.

The curtain had the appearance of being two solid pieces of heavy black cloth, and the hands apparently came through the cloth, most any place. On inspection the curtain proved to be full of holes with flaps in front covering same, to enable the hands to pass through and return without showing to the audience any apparent puncture or opening in the curtain.

Does my friend, Mr. Dunn, say that this is right too? If he does, I am satisfied he does not mean it. Does he think all this deception and trickery a part of the play, and what should be expected by the honest investigator? If so, he is the first man I have heard so express himself.

Winans' friends in Hot Springs say that on the night of February 26, at my house, he gave what he advertises on his card as one of his phases of demonstration, namely, personation. This is when he is decked out in the paraphernalia and parades before the audience, and in THIS instance not giving one single word of intelligence.

What is this for?

No one recognizes the feature, form, voice, action or intelligence of anyone known to have passed to the other side.

Then, I again ask, for what purpose is such a circus presented? Was there anything spiritual in this spectacle?

I leave the answer to my intelligent reader.

Was Winans conscious at the time he appeared in these rags? Yes, I am prepared to positively state that he was, and Winans himself acknowledged the same to Dr. Hallman, Eastman and myself. When asked, "Why do you use these traps?" his reply was, "At times I cannot get materialization, and then I use the paraphernalia to hold and satisfy the audience."

This is self-conviction to any fair mind. Would the audience be satisfied if they knew that the forms were Winans himself, and getting no communications at all?

What can there be, I ask, of a spiritual nature in such performances, to console and convince the honest investigator?

When pinned down to the exact number of times he had used this regalia, Winans acknowledged using the same at least one dozen times. If he used it this often to his certain knowledge, isn't he just as guilty as if he had said ever since his career began? I am sure my reader will answer in the affirmative.

Yes, I was in Winans' seances last August at Clinton, Iowa, and was there duped by his trickery, but in my own home I had better chances to investigate than when his guest at Clinton.

Mr. Dunn sarcastically refers to the fact that on discovery of Winans' trickery and deceit he was "Ruthlessly thrust from the door into the inhospitable streets of Hot Springs, penniless, forlorn and disgraced, and his trunk and belongings sent post haste to the railroad station." Would Mr. Dunn or any of my readers have done otherwise?

After having nursed the man for two months through serious illness, making a hospital of my house, allowing my wife to nearly break her back, and wearing out her nervous system with attention to him night and day, assisting him in and out of his bed when nature demanded, and doing such work that would be disgusting to anyone at times when the nurse was absent; giving him hot baths, rubbing his limbs to relieve pain, moving him from one position to the other in the attempt to make him comfortable; how many, I ask, will do this for a stranger, and for what reward?

TO FIND HE IS A TRICKSTER, DECEITFUL AND NOT WHAT HE REPRESENTED HIMSELF TO BE.

After all this, I am inclined to think that most people would have kicked him from the door and thrown his effects into the street, instead of carrying his grip, paying his car fare and assisting him to the station, paying a transfer man to haul his trunk as I did. The kindly feeling ceases when you bestow your hospitality, time and money, upon one who makes no attempt to reciprocate, BUT LIKE A VIPER TURNS AND ATTEMPTS TO INFLICT THE DEATH WOUND WITH HIS VENOMOUS AND POISONOUS TONGUE.

Yours for Truth, F. C. BOVING.
Hot Springs, Ark.

A Talk With Life.

The golden leaves of my life have closed forever. The vase that held my choicest flowers lies shattered at my feet; the sweet song that nestled close within my heart hath died to a moan, and the perfume of Love hath melted and dissolved into the vapor of sorrows. The white-winged messenger Death, hath closed and locked the door that guarded the sanctuary of my heart and heaven; silence engulfs my soul cry, and seals the echo beneath the dark waters of Lethe. This kiss that thrilled the moment in an ecstasy of bliss is now laid upon the altar of celestial rapture to bloom in the garden of God. A sweet throb beats within the measure of hope that soothes and breathes the glad tidings of reunions in the yet "To Be," when the mists have all been kissed away by the glowing warmth of Eternity's morning, and the soul's recognitions are wrapped again in the mantle of unchanging love and undying harmony, where triumphant songs that glorify the arisen resound through the corridors of Divine Love, and mingle with aromas distilled from flowers of heaven.

Rose L. Bushnell DonnElly.

"Spirit Echoes." My Mattie E. Hull. This pretty volume contains fifty-seven of the author's latest and choicest poems. Neatly bound in cloth, and with portrait of the author. Price 75 cents.

AN ETHEREAL DEFENSE.

Mediums May Well Pray to Be Saved From Their Friends.

It would seem to be a positive fact that, no matter how palpable the fraud and trickery practiced by a "medium," he or she will find defenders among Spiritualists. If no other excuse or defense is possible, the trickery is charged to the "spirit controls," who use the organism of the medium, in an entranced condition, to perpetrate fraudulent materialization by means of the medium's impersonation of a spirit, dressed in material toggery kindly provided by the medium, to assist the dear spirits in their work.

If there is no attempt or intent to deceive, why hide the paraphernalia in a music box or other hiding-place, before and after the "manifestation?" Certainly it would seem more honest to display the toggery beforehand and explain its intended use by the "spirits."

"Apparently unconscious." Yes, "apparently"—and that is all that can be said for it. And there is not a fake medium that will not, when exposed, claim that he was unconscious, in a trance, while performing his trickery—to help himself out of a tight place.

When skeptics as well as believers make an investigation of the cabinet, before the seance, why, if the medium is ingenuous and honest, does he keep the artificial toggery used in impersonation (while entranced, and unconscious) deftly hidden away from view?

Is it well, is it best, for a medium (or a spirit control) to deliberately pursue a course that bears all the indication of sheer dishonesty and trickery?

Certainly the indications are, in such a case as this, that the medium is dishonest, and there is no reliance to be placed on his "apparent" trance or "unconscious" state, and we cannot rely upon his word or his "apparent" entrancement.

And under such condition, to admit that the medium used such paraphernalia, and assert further that similar paraphernalia is used by every other medium giving materializing seances, is virtually to—in legal phrase—"give the case away" so far as defending such mediums is concerned. Truly these mediums may well pray—Lord save us from our friends!

Trusting all to the word of mediums, "as honest people," when they all, by the use of home-made artificial toggery to assist the spirits, and by hiding the same before and after the "manifestations," carry all the indications of sheer trickery in their performances—does not seem the wise and proper course for an investigator or a believer.

The fact that a medium knows where his paraphernalia is hidden is evidence that he is not under unconscious entrancement in his performance with artificial toggery.

Was he unconscious, in trance, when he manufactured or purchased the paraphernalia, and when he hid it in a music-box and carried it to the seance room?

And why keep it hidden, so deftly that ordinary mortal detective would not suspect its hiding place? Why keep it hidden at all, if it is to be honestly used, and not for deception?

Why need they be concealed from the eyes of any Paul Pry who might be found wandering in forbidden pastures and examining nooks and corners where he had no business?

Why forbidden—if the medium is honest?

To the common mind it would seem that it were Paul Pry's proper "business" to search every nook and corner, to discover, if possible, such rich, succulent pasturage as rewarded the efforts of our Hot Springs friends.

The plea of "unconscious trance" in Winans' case and others of the same sort, is entirely too "ethereal" to justify a verdict of innocence—and that seems to constitute all the plea there is to this attempted defense.

JAS C. UNDERHILL.
Hammond, Ind.

THE RUSSIAN-JAPANESE WAR.

A Prophetic Message From Queen Victoria to the Czar of Russia.

To the Editor:—In reading Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond's highly interesting discourse on Japan and Russia, which appeared in The Progressive Thinker, issue of May 13, I am reminded of a request made me by Victoria, beloved ruler of Great Britain for so many years.

About six weeks before the Russian-Japanese war broke out, I was sitting alone in my office meditating, when the familiar voice of the late Queen addressed me as follows:

"My friend, will you grant me a favor? I wish you to write the Czar of Russia to use every means in his power to avoid war with Japan, for as surely as he engages in a struggle with the Japanese, he will not only be defeated, but Russia will become a second-class power among the nations of the earth.

"Say to him that I, Victoria, from my spirit home, through this earth instrument, send out to him this warning and beg him to heed, beware, for her sake and the peace of his own and many other souls."

I said in the beginning that the "familiar" voice of Queen Victoria spoke to me. I will explain. My guiding intelligence or chief adviser in spirit life, was a renowned English physician, a graduate of Eton, and at one time professor at Oxford, who practiced extensively, not only in England but also Paris and Berlin. Through his invitation Queen Victoria, since passing to a higher state of consciousness, has often been present and witnessed the work of my spirit physicians and chemists over our patients, many times giving me most beautiful messages while I was in an entirely conscious state, as was the case when the message referred to was received. Those who are familiar with the family ties existing between Queen Victoria and the Czar will readily understand why she took such keen interest in him. I consulted my companion regarding this message, and she advised that I do nothing about it, adding, "Your letter, even though it reached the Emperor, would doubtless find its way to the waste basket." So I did not carry out the ex-queen's request. Later, however, after the war commenced, she came to me again, and among other things, said:

"I thank you the same as though you had written Nicholas as I desired. It would have done no good. It was then too late, too late! Believe me your sincere friend, Victoria."

DR. GEORGE LESTER LANE.
Boston, Mass.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

"The Constitution of Man." By Elizabeth Towne. Gives a clear and practical presentation of advanced mental science and embodies many new and original ideas, and the fullest teaching extant as to the nature, control and direction of desire. Price 50c.

OCCULT POWER OF THE SOUL.

He Heard His Son Calling Him.

"He heard my son calling him on his deathbed," said Mrs. James J. Crerand, this morning, wife of the Camden man who has just returned from the west, after having aimlessly wandered over the country for a period of two years, his mind a blank and his recollection of home, family and friends completely obliterated.

The son, Vincent, who was fifteen years old, died a year ago at 738 Berkely street, Camden. He was a victim of spinal meningitis, and a few hours before death is alleged to have given a wonderful manifestation of the subconsciousness which is claimed by many scientists to exist in man. His mother said: "Vincent lay in a stupor. Suddenly he raised his right hand and rapped on the headboard of the bed in the Morse code of telegraphy, 'Come quick, pop, I'm waiting for you, hurry up.' Then he repated the words after the signals. He did this many times shortly before he died."

Mrs. Crerand was told by her husband, who is slowly beginning to recognize his surroundings, that many times while he was in the Western sanitarium in which he was found, he heard knocks on the door, and his boy's voice calling, "Father, father, I want you." The attendants at the institution, the man says, reprimanded him for believing in such delusions. He was finally located at Evansville, Ind., and his wife and child went to bring him home. They were then living at 505 Haddon avenue, Camden.

Crerand disappeared in San Francisco while on a visit to some relations where he was looking up an estate. His wife received a letter after his arrival on the Pacific coast saying: "My brain is on fire. I am burning up inside. Oh, what torture, what will become of me." Shortly after this he disappeared. The son grieved for his father to such an extent that Mrs. Crerand believes it hastened the boy's death.

The husband did not recognize his family until his little girl called him by name in Evansville and rushed into his arms. His hair is grey from the terrible experiences through which he has passed. The family are now living at 1515 Federal street, Philadelphia, with relatives.—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

A FRANK CONFESSION.

The Pope's Cane Brought Bad Luck to John L. Sullivan, the Pugilist.

John L. Sullivan, ex-champion pugilist, is writing his "reminiscences" for a Boston daily. Last week he said:

"I had a nice talk with Pope Leo when I was in Rome. He didn't do any preaching at me because of my business, the dear old man. He seemed very glad to see me, and when we parted, I took from the Vatican with me a feeling of reverence for him as a kindly soul who understood that all of us couldn't be as perfect as he was. Before leaving, I gave him a $500 U. S. bill for his poor. His Holiness told me that he appreciated the gift, and asked:

"Isn't there something I can give you to remember your visit?"

"I told him I would always remember him and my visit to Rome. At first, I couldn't think of anything he could give me, but he urged me to make a selection. There was a fine tree growing near by in the Vatican garden, and it occurred to me that a cane from one of its branches would be a nice thing to have. I told him so.

A few days after, a walking stick, beautifully carved, was brought to my hotel in Rome by a messenger in uniform, and given to me, with the compliments of His holiness. That cane I carried for a long time, but I never had a day's luck while it was in my possession.

"Often I have thought that I was not good enough to take a gift from so holy a man; but whatever the cause, everything I attempted went sidewise. After Corbett made me run 25 miles in a small ring, I was in Providence, R. I., and Patsey Farker, the detective, a good friend of mine, carried the cane all day and frequently expressed admiration for it. He thought so much of it that I said to him: 'Patsey, that stick is yours. I hope you will have better luck while you own it than I have had since it has been mine.' Poor Patsey. Like many of his old friends, he has gone where there are no troubles."

Here John testifies that the Pope's gifts, like the Pope's blessings, bring a curse to the recipient.—Boston Citizen.

OHIO NEWS.

The Wentworth Association of Spiritualists.

On last Sunday, May 14, the state president of the O. S. A., Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, of Toledo, Ohio, presented the Wentworth Association of Spiritualists with a new state charter that unites us more closely with the state and National workers, and will keep us in touch with all the honest workers, and help us to guard against frauds and tricksters that are too apt to impose on unsuspecting individuals and associations that are not thus protected.

Mrs. Curran delivered a very interesting and instructive address in the afternoon on the subject of co-operation in the spiritual work, and the advantages derived from confining the physical and mental phenomena to our own homes and private circles, and to avoid the growing custom of making merchandise of that which should be to us too sacred to be thus tampered with.

Our association elected two delegates to represent us at the state convention to be held at Ashtabula, Ohio, May 26, 27 and 28. Our worthy president, Albert Wentworth, is a son of Thomas Wentworth, for whom the association was named; and Albert's son, Thomas Wentworth, and grand-son of the father of the association, is our present secretary.

Annual grove meetings have been held right in the same neighborhood for nearly forty years, and many speakers of note and distinction have voiced their sentiments in proclaiming the truths of Modern Spiritualism to the multitudes that come from year to year to listen.

We hope to grow in strength and in the knowledge of Spiritual truths as set forth by those noble teachers that are handing down the philosophy from the angel world through their own mediumistic organization for the benefit of earth's children.

FRED D. DUNAKIN.
Cecil, Ohio.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations, of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. A very remarkable book. Large, octavo, 500 pages. Price, $1.75.

CASTS OUT EVIL SPIRITS.

Umatilla Indian Performs Some Miraculous cures—Medicine Man of Tribe Heals With Black Eagle's Feather—Undergoes "Sleep of Death" and Comes to Life Again—He Illustrates the Grand Truth That Spirit Return is Common to the Whole World.

Pendleton, Oregon.—At last it seems as if the "red man" was to be reclaimed from the whisky habit, in spite of a recent supreme court decision that allottees can have free access to intoxicating drinks. This reformation among the inhabitants of the Umatilla Indian reservation is due to the visit of the Weinito, a "medicine man" of the Yakima reservation in Washington, who, with two companions have just returned home after performing miraculous cures among the tribesmen in this county.

Weinito is said to have cured many Indians here of the liquor habit, the cure being so effective that even the smell of whisky causes the former heavy drinkers to become deathly sick. During his two weeks visit Weinito has, so it is claimed, driven the evil spirits from twenty-five men and women, all of whom had been addicted to the use of whisky. In addition to these cures the "medicine man" is credited with having healed a number of Indians who had been in ill health for years.

Was Dead Six Days.

There is an interesting story connected with Weinito's past career. Several years ago he was considered a very bad Indian and is said to have committed numerous crimes, including murders. Soon after his last crime he took suddenly ill and died, according to the story. Just before his death he commanded his tribesmen to watch over his body for six days, keeping candles burning at night. The news of the strange case was soon spread about, and Indians gathered at the Yakima reservation from many parts of the country to view the body of the dead man. At the end of the six days' vigil the watchers were surprised to see signs of life returning to the supposedly dead Indian. Weinito slowly recovered from his "sleep of death," showing no signs of physical depression. He claimed that he had received a message from the "Great Spirit" and that he was to be hereafter endowed with supernatural powers. His chief missions was to go among the Indians, heal them of their ills and cure them of the drink habit.

His Feats of Healing.

In performing his feats of healing Weinito's methods is to place a black eagle feather in each hand of a sick or drunken person, or one who has committed a crime, and after closing both eyes tightly and muttering a few mystic words to give his subject a sudden twirl to the left. The subject falls to the ground, and, if a criminal, goes through the various motions of his former crime or crimes. Should the Indian be sick Weinito touches the afflicted part and pulls out the disease, while in the case of a drunken Indian he is never able to keep liquor on his stomach again.

The Umatilla Indians look upon Weinito as almost a supernatural being and all worship him frantically. Many of the Indians regard him as being in close touch with Sahalie, one of the great gods of Indian mythology.

Weinito himself claims to be a disciple of Smo-Hollow, an aged Indian Spiritualist, who is accredited with having embroiled the Indians during the outbreak of the Nez Perces in 1878.—Chicago Chronicle.

WOMEN'S CLUBS DEFENDED.

By W. L. Bodine, Superintendent of Compulsory Education in Chicago.

W. L. Bodine, Superintendent of Compulsory Education in Chicago, does not agree with Grover Cleveland that women's clubs are pernicious. He writes:

"I believe in women's clubs, because I am in an official position, as Superintendent of Compulsory Education in Chicago, to know the vast amount of good they have accomplished in child-saving work, in securing legislation on compulsory education, parental schools and juvenile courts, and in the suppression of child labor. Women's clubs are not theoretical. They are practical. They act. They 'do things' for the good of the community and the country. While men have been busy quarreling over the money question and the tariff question, women's clubs have been safeguarding humanity.

"Grover Cleveland in a recent article assailed women's clubs. He believes they are inimical to society, a menace to the nation. The distinguished gentleman from New Jersey prates much of home life, of woman, her duty, her work. Be it remembered this is the same distinguished gentleman who lived half a century as a club bachelor before that indefinable spell of enchantment known as romance took possession of his soul, and he at last knew what home life was.

"For some time prior to that event, during Mr. Cleveland's first administration, the republic beheld the spectacle of a president setting as an example to his people, a man in the White House who had no wife and no concrete value for home life—then a distinguished exponent of race suicide, to say the least. Be it said to the credit of Mr. Cleveland, he has since redeemed himself. But as a penitent it is ungracious for him to assail mothers who belong to women's clubs, and some of whom had families long ere he had taken unto himself a bride. It would be unreasonable for him or any other citizen to paint the ideal wife, in this day and generation, as one whose life was bounded by the kitchen and drawing-room, the nursery and the front porch. Any man who would not give his wife a day off once a week or oftener, to spend an intellectual afternoon at a woman's club, is unreasonable, undemocratic and un-American.

"Women's clubs do not impair home life; they promote it. They do not tend to race suicide; the majority of their members are mothers. They not only improve their own homes, but they extend the helping hand of benevolence to other homes—to other people's children, to the fatherless and oppressed, to the poor children of the city whose outings and vacation schools are a few of the many beautiful philanthropies where the altruistic doctrine of women's clubs is apparent."

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland. Interesting, instructive and helpful; Spiritually uplifting. Cloth bound; price $1.

"Child Culture, According to the Laws of Physiological Psychology and Mental Suggestion." By Newton N. Riddell. A most excellent work for all who have the care or training of children. Price 65 cents.

"The New Life." By Leroy Berrier. Eminently suggestive along the lines of "new thought." Excellent in tone and tendencies. Price, cloth, $1.

"Handy Electrical Dictionary." A practical handbook of reference, containing definitions of every used electrical term or phrase. Price $1.

CANDIDLY

The World Has Never Seen the Like Before

Read This Offer:

Truly, the world has never seen the like before. Search the annals of history, ancient and modern; critically examine the history of Spiritualism; look here and there, in every nook and corner of the world, and you cannot find a parallel to the offer made in reference to these twelve remarkable Premium Books. They constitute a wonderfully valuable Spiritualistic and Occult library, and are furnished at a nominal sum. All are substantially bound and neatly printed, and those who purchase them are delighted with them. The last one to appear, "LETTERS FROM THE SPIRIT WORLD," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea, should be in every library. Read the following carefully:

We have now TWELVE magnificent Premium Books, and you can select from them as follows:

Any one of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price 25 cents. This is the price, remember, when you order only one book in connection with a yearly subscription. The paper, one year, and one Premium Book, $1.25.

Any two of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price 70 cents.

Any three of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.75.

Any six of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.05.

Any seven of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.

Any eight of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.65.

Any nine of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.90.

Any ten of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $3.10.

Any eleven of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $3.40.

Lastly, all of these TWELVE Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.75, something never before equalled in this country or Europe.

Bear in mind that every order for a Premium must be accompanied with a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker. We repeat that the world has never seen the like of it before.

OUR TWELVE REMARKABLE PREMIUM BOOKS FOR $3.75.

The following is the list of titles of the Twelve Premium Books:

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.

2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.

3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3. These three volumes have been prepared by J. R. Francis. They contain invaluable data.

4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.

5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.

6—The Next World Interviewed, by Mrs. S. G. Horn, a most remarkable medium.

7—The Occult Life of Jesus, by Alexander Smythe, a medium of rare gifts.

8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Translated by A. Farnese, a wonderful English medium.

9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science, by Hudson Tuttle.

10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

12—Letters from the Spirit World, written through the mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea.

Each Spiritualist should at once commencing forming a Spiritualist and Occult library.

When ordering a Premium Book, one or more, you must send in a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker.

WOMANLY BEAUTY

Of Form and Feature—The Cultivation and Preservation of Personal Beauty Based upon Health and Hygiene.

By twenty well-known physicans and specialists. With 80 half-tone and other illustrations. Edited by Albert Turner. A handsome volume, 256 pages, bound in cloth and gold.

In this volume the editor has brought together the teachings of those who have made a study of special features of the subject, and the result is a work that is unique and practical, not filled with a medley of receipts and formulas, so often found in books on beauty.

Fully illustrated with pictures that mean something to the reader, not of so-called "beauties," closing with chapters of "Hints in Beauty Culture" and "Hints in Health Culture," which, if followed, would alone be worth many times the price of the volume in securing health and good form, which is possible to all. Price $1.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

VOICE FIGURES.

Voice figures, exquisitely beautiful, will yet have something to do with our Cause, playing an important part in Spiritualistic and Occult Investigation.

On Thursday evening, the 9th inst., Mrs. J. Page Hopps delivered an interesting address to the members and Associates of the London Spiritualist Alliance on "Voice Figues," in the Salon of the Royal Society of British Artists, Suffolk street, Pall Mall. The address was illustrated with a large number of lantern views of the curious and striking figures produced in sand, etc., by voice vibrations, several of which we reproduce. Mr. H. Withall, vice-president, occupied the chair, and in a few well chosen remarks introduced Mrs. Page Hopps, who said:

In ancient Hindu writings, Brahma is spoken of as "The Great Breath" who, by breathing into space, created the manifested universe. In the Hebrew scriptures it is said of creation that "God spake and it was done,; and in the New Testament we are taught that "in the beginning was the Word" (or Logos) "and that in it was life." The Greeks' idea of the "Harmony of the Spheres" was more than a mere poetical expression. They seem to have had a feeling that the soul of Nature was music, and that she manifested herself everywhere as a harmony. Carlyle beautifully expresses this in his essay on the "Hero as Poet." "Musical," he says, "how much lies in that! A musical thought is one spoken by a mind that has penetrated into the inmost heart of the thing, detected the inmost mystery of it, namely the melody that lies hidden in it, the inward harmony of coherence which is its soul, whereby it exists, and has a right to be here in this world. All inmost things, we may say, are melodious, and naturally utter themselves in song. * * * See deep enough, and you see musically; the heart of Nature being everywhere music, if you can only reach it."

Present-day science now comes in to confirm all this. In contradiction to the old materialistic and physical explanation of the basis of life and form, we are now told that all forms of manifestation known to us, and presumably those unknown, are determined by varying degrees of motion in the ether. Everything then is resolved into vibration of different degrees of intensity, and this law seems to apply everywhere.

By scientific experiments it has been found that the vibrations which produce musical sounds emerge, and travel, as figures of great beauty and variety. A modern poet (J. C. Earle) has anticipated the experiments, for, speculating concerning the pictures produced by music in the air, he said:

"Ah, could I see the motions in the air
Through which the dulcet warblings of a flute
Are welling, * * * * *
* * * * —if there
I watched the musical conditions fair
* * * * * * * * *
Then I should know how beauty and sweet sound
Rest on a common basis and embrace
As sisters—how vibrations, in a round
Of choral dance, their stated figures trace—
How sights and strains harmonious intersphere,
And music runs her geometric race."

Various attempts have been made to render the sonorous vibrations visible. Chladni succeeded in his experiment of scattering powder or sand on plates of glass, and then drawing a violin bow across one of the edges of the plate, when many varied and lovely figures, star-like and geometrical, were produced, according to the note played. Then Savart experimented with a fine powder scattered on a stretched gold-beater's skin or parchment, but the membrane was not sufficiently flexible or sensitive, so the results were not quite satisfactory.

It has been left to Mrs. Watts Hughes, who has lately been experimenting in this field of research, to invent the eidophone—the most appropriate instrument for the transmission and expression of the sonorous vibrations.

The eidophone consists simply of a kind of speaking trumpet with an upward bend in it, the top of you that for every idle word that men shall speak, which is carefully covered with a well-stretched membrane of India rubber. The membranes used are of different degrees of thickness, and the discs over which the membrane is stretched also vary in size according to the powder or liquid used in the experiments and the lung capacity of the voice, and also according to the figures required. Upon the membrane, fine sand or lycopodium is sprinkled; or prepared water color, such as flake white, is placed on it, and, upon the singing of any note through the trumpet, a figure is produced upon the sensitive surface of the membrane. These figures are wonderfully varied, and most of them very beautiful, as you will presently see, consisting of geometrical patterns, crystals and shell forms, flowers, leaves and even trees and landscapes.

Although the figures produced by lycopodium and those produced by sand are often similar in appearance, the manner in which they are produced differs; for whereas lycopodium has been found to settle on the disc in those parts which are the centers of motion, leaving the other parts bare, sand, on the other hand, flies from the centers of motion and settles at the nodes or points of apparent rest. Faraday explains this fact of the lycopodium remaining at the centers of motion, by pointing out that, owing to the powder being so light, it is caught up in swirls by the vibratory agitation, and is held at those points until the agitation ceases, when it drops and settles.

Besides sand or lycopodium figures, Mrs. Watts Hughes experimented with water or milk with which she flooded the disc; and then, when a note was sung through the tube, the liquid surface became at once covered with regular wavelets in beautiful patterns, the wavelets varying in size according to the number of vibrations of the notes sung. When flake white or red lead was added to the water, many of the curves of the liquid became more definite, and spread out into forms suggestive of roots, branches and foliage.

In experimenting it has been found that the figures produced bear a strict relation to the pitch and intensity of the notes sung into the trumpet. It would seem, then, that the vibrations of the air forced from the larynx are sent forth in rhythmical waves which take shape in perfect accord with the note and its intensity. The figure representations which Mrs. Hughes has had printed show that every note has a corresponding form which has a distinct individuality, any slight variation of pitch or intensity from the original note altering the form in some way.

This reminds one of Emerson's saying, that "over everything in nature stands its demon or soul, and as the form of the thing is reflected by the eye, so the soul of the thing is reflected by a melody."

In order to produce any particular figure, the note must be sung with the exact amount of intensity and in the exact pitch by which the form was originally produced.

Mrs. Hughes found, when experimenting with lycopodium, that a greater or less degree of intensity, when singing a certain note, increased or decreased the overtones; and that, when singing too loudly, the presence of overtones prevented the figure from forming clearly on the disc. Certain figures, in fact, will only form under the influence of simple tones.

The difference in the relationship of the overtones to the fundamental note is what constitutes differences of quality, making one voice beautiful in tone and another weak or harsh. Mr. Arthur Lovell, in his little book on "Beauty in Speech and Song," says that quality is the very essence of music, representing form and harmony as distinguished from brute force and animal strength. This same writer holds the opinion that in the voice there is something more than the mere mechanical action of the larynx, the tongue and the lips. He finds in it something spiritual, and believes that will, imagination and concentration play a very large part in the production of the voice by acting on the mechanical instrument, and, according to him, the "tone of voice is the expression of the individual as a whole." Although we cannot affirm this, I think that it is at least safe to say that what gives a powerful impressiveness to a voice is the factor of sympathetic emotion, which appears to act in some way to the larynx, giving feeling and quality to the voice, and producing a correspondingly beautiful form. So, by the photographs of the voice figures which I am going to show, you will see that the poets anticipated what science is confirming. Music does "run her geometric race," and the soul or melody does express herself in various beautiful forms.

If, as we are now assured, these sound vibrations fill the air, what lovely pictures we should see if we had eyes refined enough to behold them! Is it too large a speculation that this unseen universe of exquisite vibrations does convey delight to unseen beings adapted to receive and comprehend them? But is this universe of exquisite vibration entirely unseen by us? No! for, if we are to believe what clairvoyants tell us, it is not entirely unseen by mortals.

Mr. Leadbeater, in "The Theosophical Review," gives a remarkable description of what he saw during an original recital. He says:—

"I noticed the effect which is produced;—the enormous edifice built up in the astral and mental matter, extending away above the organ and far through the roof of the church like a kind of castellated mountain range, all composed of glorious flashing colors, corruscating and blazing in a most marvelous manner like Aurora Borealis in the Arctic regions. I especially noticed, too, the difference in the character of the edifice built by the works of the various composers as the organist played them. Wagner makes always a magnificent whole with splendid splashes of vivid color; one of Bach's fugues an ordered form of mathematical precision, with parallel rivulets of silver, or of gold, or of ruby, marking the successive appearances of the motif; while one of Mendelssohn's songs without words makes a lovely airy erection—a sort of castle of filigree work in frosted silver."

This opens to us an immense and splendid field of speculation and experiment into which we cannot enter now, but every rightly informed Spiritualist knows it well; and those who are not Spiritualists, and cannot or will not accept the testimony of the clairvoyants who have described to us the infinite variety and beauty of this wonderful unseen world of sound, and presumably of color vibration, now have before them the actual photographs or originals of sonorous vibrations expressed in visible forms.

Many may not see what voice figures have to do with Spiritualism, but it seems likely that in the future they will play an interesting and important part in spiritualistic investigations.

At the conclusion of the address a large number of the very striking and varied "figures" which had been referred to by Mrs. Hopps were exhibited, by means of lantern slides, by Mr. A. E. Isaac; and Mrs. Hopps afterwards replied to numerous questions from the audience regarding them.

A hearty vote of thanks was given to Mrs. Hopps for her interesting address, to Mrs. Watts Hughes for her kindness in lending her lantern slides, and also to Mr. Isaac for kindly exhibiting them by means of his lantern.—Light, London, England.

THE CREATIVE VOICE.

Those who had the good fortune to be present at the exhibition of voice pictures a fortnight ago had revealed to them a wonder-world of mysterious beauty which becomes more wonderful as we reflect upon it, and which suggests deeper and deeper thoughts. Apart from those deeper thoughts, however, the mere artistic loveliness of these pictures is surprising. We happen to know that when the figures were introduced to the great Spiritual artist, G. F. Watts, his remarks indicated the feeling that they belonged to a hidden realm, and not to the common earth. We do not wonder at that, especially when the manner of their production is remembered. That a single note sung into a tube should, on a simple membrane, be translated into a figure so involved, so exquisite, so full of meaning, as most of these pictures are, must, indeed, "give us pause," and carry our thoughts to that which lies in the realm of the unseen, for these figures reveal what hitherto has been unseen,—something of that tremendous ocean of voice-vibrations which flood the world with their million myriads of forms, in the midst of which we live and move and have our being.

For good or evil, every spoken word goes forth and carries its waves of motion into the atmosphere. To do what? Who can say? All we know is that those waves go forth and take their place and exert their influence upon the sum total of vibrations that pulse everywhere upon the brain or the finer self within.

Thus considered, a word is indeed a serious thing, and, in the light of it, one may find a deep and grave significance in that saying of the Master, "I say unto they shall give account in the day of judgment."

Registered in the surrounding atmosphere, every cadence tells. The utterance of impatience and of anger as well as the expression of kindness and affection, are sent forth into that invisible world where all the subtle causes are. Who can tell what influences the forms produced may have upon the feelings and thoughts of others? We are assured by science that every vibration set going, travels throughout space, and plays some part in the tremendous whole. What if the vibrations we send forth are discords, ugliness, sources of irritation? Who knows the mischief they may do when received upon the sensitive brain or more sensitive spirit of one in a condition to receive them? On the other hand, if the vibrations we set going are melodious, beautiful, and sources of joy, who can tell what ministries of good, what suggestions of soothing may go with them?

In the Book of Genesis the awful record stands against Cain, "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." "A figure of speech," it may be said. Hardly, in the light of these strange appearances. There were no sonorous vibrations proceeding from Abel's blood, but there were their equivalents. In John Ruskin's "Time and Tide," there is a passage of profoundest significance as to this. He said:—

Yesterday afternoon I called on Mr. H. C. Sorby, to see some of the results of an inquiry he has been following all last year, into the nature of the coloring matter of leaves and flowers. * * * My friend showed me the rainbow of the rose, and the rainbow of the violet, and the rainbow of the hyacinth, and the rainbow of forest leaves being born, and the rainbow of forest leaves dying. And, last, he showed me the rainbow of blood. It was but the three-hundredth part of a grain, dissolved in a drop of water; and it cast its measured bars, forever recognizable now to human sight, on the chord of the seven colors.

At this point, may one venture the suggestion that there is something in the human voice besides vibrations,—something that is vital, leading up to those other wonderful words of the Master, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life"? A secondary and transcendental significance, that; but the sayings of Jesus are largely subtile and transcendental. It is the voice that largely differentiates man from the "brutes," and it is hardly likely that the difference is only one of modulation. Not without meaning did the lecturer commence with the lofty note of the following words:

In ancient Hindu writings, Brahma is spoken of as "The Great Breath," who, by breathing into space, created the manifested universe. In the Hebrew Scriptures it is said of creation that "God spake and it was done"; and in the New Testament we are taught that "in the beginning was the Word" (or Logos) "and that in it was life."

There is probably some underlying fact beneath the superstition concerning magic words, incantations and spells, as living vehicles of operative impulses proceeding from the user of them. A curious story in the First Book of Kings is interesting at this point. The scene is a wilderness where Elijah is in hiding from the enraged Jezebel, and where "the Lord" manifests to him His presence. He is told to take his stand "upon the mount before the Lord"; whereupon a mighty wind that rent the rocks passed by, "but the Lord was not in the wind"; then there was an earthquake, and a fire, "but the Lord was not in the fire"; and after the fire "a still small voice"; and when Elijah heard that, he wrapped his face in his mantle, and listened. Greater than tempest and earthquake and fire was that gentle voice.

Two other highly interesting topics invite attention, but we can only just mention them. One is the very curious similarity between some of these voice figures and certain well-known peculiarities of spirit drawings. The other is the simply marvelous resemblance many of these figures bear to natural objects, such as shells, snowflakes, flowers, trees, ferns, mosses, crystals, feathers, and microscopic objects, such as diatoms, thrillingly suggesting the lurking of creative powers in the voice,—a simply immense thought. If the human voice can create in the atmosphere vibrations corresponding with these objects, what large meanings lie within that saying of the ancient Hebrew poet: "He spake and it was done; He commanded and it stood fast"! But here we get indeed into deep waters; and, though these strange thoughts are inevitable, one can entertain them only as they who look up to the inaccessible stars.—Light, London, England.

PUBLICATIONS OF Hudson Tuttle.

Library of Spiritual Literature.

STUDIES IN THE OUTLYING FIELDS OF PSYCHIC SCIENCE.
This work essays to utilize and explain the vast array of facts in its field of research by referring them to a common cause, and from them arise to the laws and conditions of Man's spiritual being. Third edition. Price 75 cents.

LIFE IN TWO SPHERES.
In this story the scenes are laid on earth, and in the spirit world, presenting the spiritual philosophy and the real life of spiritual beings. All questions which arise on that subject are answered. Price, 50 cents.

HERESY, OR LED TO THE LIGHT.
A thrilling psychological story of evangelization and free thought. It is to Protestantism what "The Secrets of the Convent" is to Catholicism. Price, 30 cents.

ANGELL PRIZE CONTEST RECITATIONS.
For humane education, with plan of the Angell Prize Oratorical Contests. By Emma Rood Tuttle. Price, 25 cents.
All books sent postpaid. Address
HUDSON TUTTLE, Publisher,
Berlin Heights, Ohio.

The Arcana of Spiritualism

A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker are already acquainted with character of this book. It is intended by its assisting, inspiring spirit-authors to furnish a compendium to the student of psychic laws and manifestations. It has been more than thirty years in preparing and contains all that has been received by me through inspiration and research during that time on the subjects it treats. Few questions will arise in the minds of investigators that are not answered in its pages. Price, $1.25 postpaid.

Address all orders to
HUDSON TUTTLE,
Berlin Heights, Ohio.

FREETHOUGHT AND LIBERAL PAMPHLETS

These pamphlets were published by Mr. Green in the Freethought Magazine and are all by eminent and able writers. The price on most of them has been reduced.

Roscoe Conkling. Memorial Oration. by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price 3 cents.
Thomas Paine. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price 3 cents.
Voltaire. An address by Prof. Emile Pingault. Price 3 cents.
Abraham Lincoln. His Religion. By Robert N. Reeves. Price 3 cents.
Burns and Whittier. Some of Their Likenesses and Differences. By Prof. Charles G. Brown. Price 5 cents.
Religion in the Republic. By Mrs. M. A. Freeman. Price 5 cents.
Rational Worship. A lecture delivered before the Chicago Liberal Society by Dr. T. B. Gregory of Chicago. Price 8 cents.
Why I Am Not a Christian. By D. D. Stedman. Price 8 cents.
Genesis to Revelation. Free Thought Commentary on the Whole Bible. By Judge Parish B. Ladd. Price 10 cents.
Revelation Under the Microscope of Evolution. By Prof. Daniel T. Ames. Price 10 cents.
Life and Career of Charles Bradlaugh. By George Jacob Holyoake. Price 10 cents.
Religion and Science. The "Reconciliation Mania" of Dr. Paul Carus of The Open Court. Analyzed and Refuted by "Corvinus." Price 10 cents.
Free Thought Past, Present and Future. By Prof. Thaddeus B. Wakeman. With his portrait and life sketch. Price 10 cents.
The Priest and the Church—What Have They Done for the World? By Judge Parish B. Ladd. Price 15 cents.
John Tyndall Memorial. Ten short sketches of the life of this great man. Price 10 cents.
Cosmology Against Theology. By Vindex. Price 10 cents.
Church and State. The Bible in the Public Schools. The New American Party. A Criticism by "Jefferson." Price 10 cents.
Standing Up for Jesus; or What the Editor of the Freethinkers' Magazine Thinks of Jesus. Price 2 cents.
"Why An Expurgated Bible?" By Rev. E. H. Keens. Price 5 cents.
Progress of Evolutionary Thought. The opening address before the Congress of Evolutionists, held in Chicago, Sept. 28, 29 and 30, 1893. By B. F. Underwood, the chairman. Price 3 cents.
Christianity; Its Impeachment and Decadence, Also Demands of Liberalism. By Dr. F. E. Abbot and Prof. T. B. Wakeman. Price 3 cents.
Myth of the Great Deluge. By James M. McCann. Price 15 cents.
The Evolution of the Devil. By Henry Frank. Price 20 cents.
Prayer; Its Uselessness and Unscientific Assumption. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.
Liberalized Christianity. By Henry M. Taber. Price 5 cents.
The Republic in Danger. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.
In Place of Christianity. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

BOOK REVIEW.

The Little Book of Life After Death. By Gustav Theodor Fechner. Translated from the German by Mary C. Wadsworth. With an Introduction by William James. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

The publishers have conferred a great favor on the spiritually inclined, by issuing this gem of a book, a gem in appearance and a crystal of the wonderful intuitive thoughts of the greatest philosopher, scientist, and Spiritualist of his age. Prof. James has introduced the book and author with a sympathetic appreciation, which at once places the reader on familiar terms and adds much to his enjoyment and understanding.

The book was written as long ago as 1835, seventy years ago, yet its vitality and truth is such that the present has just overtaken the views of the author. He was a Spiritualist in contradistinction to a materialist—a Spiritualist in the highest sense, advocating the supremacy of spirit over matter. His was the "daylight view," as contrasted with the "night view" of materialism.

In passing its pages under review, the temptation is strong to transfer page after page, for all is so interesting, so full of thought, it is difficult to choose one passage more representative than another.

In the beginning he says man "Lives upon the Earth not once but three times": before birth, his earth-life, the third when: "His life is merged with that of other souls into the higher life of the supreme spirit and he discerns the reality of ultimate things.

"The passing from the first to the second stage is called birth; the transition from the second to the third is called death." "Death is only a second birth to a freer existence, in which the spirit breaks through its slender covering and abandons inaction and sloth as the child does in its first birth."

Of spirit communion he says: "A Goethe, a Schiller, a Napoleon, a Luther, still live among us, thinking and acting in us, as awakened creative individuals, more highly developed that at their death,—each no longer restrained by the limitations of the body, but poured forth upon the world which in their lifetime they molded, gladdened, swayed and in their personality for surpassing the influences which we still discern as coming from them.

"This is the great justice of creation, that everyone makes for himself the conditions of his future life."

"According as the man has been good or bad, was industrious or idle, will he find himself possessed of an organism, healthy or sick, beautiful or baleful, strong or weak, in the world to come, and his free activity in this world will determine his relations to other souls, his destiny, his capacity and talents for further progress in that world."

Of unconscious spirit impressions: "Man does not know from whence his thoughts come to him; he is seized with a longing, a foreboding, or a joy, which he is quite unable to account for; he is urged by a force of activity, or a voice warns him away from it, without his being conscious of any special cause. There are visitations of spirits, which think and act in him from another center than his own."

There has of late been a discussion of the question whether spirits could be benefited by coming into the sphere of mortals. Fechner affirms that they can. He says: "The outside spirits established within a man are quite as much subjected to the influence of the human will, though in a different way, as man is dependent upon them; he can from the center of his spiritual being, equally well produce new growth in the spirits united to him within, as these can definitely influence his deepest life; but in harmoniously developed spiritual life, no one will has the mastery over another."

Now comes the key to "obsession."

"All spirits cannot be united indiscriminately in the same soul; therefore the good and bad, the true and false spirits contend together for possession of it, and the one who conquers in the struggle holds the ground." He feels the conflict, "But not as a prize won without effort, or as a willing victim, does he fall to the strange spirits in the contest, but with a source of self-active strength in the center of his being, he holds between the contending forces within which wish to draw him to themselves and fights on whichever side he chooses; and so he can carry the day even for the weaker impulses, when he joins his strength with theirs against the stronger. The Self of the man remains unendangered so long as he preserves the inborn freedom of his power and does not become tired of using it. As often, however, as he becomes subject to evil spirits, is it because the development of his interior strength is hindered by discouragement, and so to become bad, it is often only necessary to be careless or lazy."

"The bad man must first overcome and subdue by his own will all the evil spirits which have striven against him * * * Pure spirits turn gladly to enter a pure soul and evil without fastens upon the evil within * * * But even good spirits, if they despair of winning a soul from the final mastery of evil, desert it, and so it becomes at last a hell, a place fit only for the torments of the damned." Most true is the means the author prescribes for communion with the dead.

One means there is of attaining the highest conscious meeting between the living and the dead; it is the memory of the living for the dead. To direct out attention to the dead is to awaken theirs to us: "At every festival we devote to them they rise up; they float about every monument we raise to them; they listen to every song with which we praise their deeds."

"And how much man will have to learn after death! For he must not think at the first entrance he will possess the whole divine perception for which the future life will offer him the means. There may be a beginning without an end, says Fechner, "But are you afraid that human consciousness because born out of the universal, will again flow back into it; then look at the tree. Many years passed before the branches grew out of the trunk; but once there they do not go down into it again * * * so will the life-tree of the world grow and unfold itself."

Had this book been written yesterday it would not be so marvelous, but to meet a clear and beautiful presentation of the principles of Modern Spiritualism, which is the result of immeasurable communications, written thirty years before its advent, is a delightful surprise.

There are a few passages, somewhat obscure, and others seemingly conflicting, yet on the whole there is no doubt of the author's meaning. His condensation of thought, sententious and assertive at times, makes his clearness the more remarkable.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Do You Suffer with Asthma?

If you do, you will be interested in knowing that the Kola Plant, a new botanic discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa, is pronounced an assured cure for Asthma. Most marvelous cures are wrought by this new plant, when all other remedies fail. It is really a most wonderful discovery.

Mr. R. Johnson, Sr., a prominent citizen of Grand Forks, N. Dak., writes: I tried twenty physicians and changes of climate without relief, but was completely cured by the Kola Compound after fifty years suffering. Dr. W. H. Vail, an eminent physician of St. Louis, Mo., writes that he tried Himalya on several different cases of Asthma with satisfactory results in every case. Mrs. Millie Borchers, Amanda, Ohio, writes: I suffered with Asthma twelve years until the Kola Compound cured me. Mrs. W. E. Murgittroyd, North Chatham, N Y., writes, I suffered for several years with Asthma and could get no relief until I used the Kola Compound which cured me. Hundreds of similar letters have been received by the importers, copies of which they will be pleased to send you.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Company, No. 1161 Broadway New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

DENVER, COLORADO.

The Psychical Research Society, Incorporated.

To the Editor:—The cause of Spiritualism has taken a long step in advance in this city by the organization of the Psychical Research Society under the auspices of the National Association, and its incorporation under the laws of the state of Colorado in such a manner as to enable it to carry on the religious work of the organization under the protection of the state laws and at the same time to conduct a publishing house or establish schools, as it may be deemed best.

For the past year or so the organization of the Spiritualists of this city has seemed an impossibility, because of the same feeling that has handicapped the movement in all the centers of activity in the country, namely the petty jealousies of so-called leaders and mediums who have been unwilling that any other organization than one that centered around their own personality should have an existence; but the coming of Brother and Sister Sprague has made a great change in the situation, and the society has organized with a working membership of about fifty.

The board of officers is a sterling one and very harmonious in its composition, and well-known men and women and mediums are on the board. The society will hold a number of socials and entertainments during the summer, and there are vigorous plans on foot for the construction in this city of a temple that shall be a headquarters for not only the Spiritualists of the city, but of the entire state, and there shall be a school here, which shall be to the Spiritualists of the great West what the Morris Pratt School of the East is, or should be to the Spiritualists of the East.

The society intends to also establish in due time a publication house which shall be the means of issuing the standard literature of the cause in the places where it will do the most good, and publish from time to time such books as will help the cause in any manner possible.

The president, W. C. Marshall, is a wealthy mining man and a thorough business man. The vice-president, Mrs. Banner Ford, is a new-comer comparatively in the ranks, but a magnificent speaker and psychic. The secretary, H. H. Warner, is a well-known printer and publisher, and has spoken on the platform in the east, but has retired from that part of the work and devotes his time to the work of the press and the care of the correspondence and finances of the society in connection with the treasurer, A. B. Montgomery, who is a mining man of large means, and with all the members of his family a devoted Spiritualist. Miss Cobb is a business woman, Mrs. Gehring-Patterson is well known as one of our most reliable mediums, and C. E. Bull is a large dairyman. The board is planning for opening the fall campaign with such speakers as Moses Hull, H. D. Barrett, Mrs. Cooley and Mrs. Gaule-Reidinger and other psychics of national reputation. The secretary of this society would be pleased to hear from speakers and mediums wishing engagements, and can be addressed at 2062 Lincoln avenue, Denver, Colo. No drinkers, users of drugs, or mediums whose methods of work or living will not bear close inspection, need apply.

The society has no use for such upon its platform, and does not intend to stand as sponsor for them before the public.

The society is taking an active interest in protecting the rights of the local mediums, and is actively opposing the passing of an ordinance in the city council which is intended to repeal the present law that exempts our ordained mediums from the payment of the license fee demanded from the palmists, astrologers, etc., who are flooding the papers with pretentious advertisements of the great wonders (?) they will accomplish if you only patronize them.

H. H. WARNER, Sec'y.

To Whom It May Help.

I came into the realization of spirit return through the study of divine science, and knew nothing of Spiritualist literature until my guide directed me to subscribe for The Progressive Thinker, telling me where it was published, and saying it would direct me into channels of thought necessary for my unfoldment. I am happy to say it has. I have always entertained the thought of the love-principle, as Christ taught it, and my experience is, the perfect love we should have for each other, the love that casteth out fear, is the key that unlocks the way to this great psychic principle, and the gateway is obedience and simplicity to the divine principle within and around us.

If we wish to see beauty, we must live beauty. Knowing this, we are encompassed by the opposite to good, and if we wish to communicate with minds in the higher and holier realms of thought, we must live in those higher and holier realms, for the ego is a free agent and goeth where it listeth.

Shall we be pure and holy Spiritualists, or float down the stream with the driftwood and dead fish? Let us live and demonstrate to the world Spiritualism in its highest and purest potency. Let every reader of The Progressive Thinker join the psychic circle as suggested in its columns, and project a thought of perfect love to all humanity. It will cost but little, and may buy a great deal, for thoughts are things and are creative.

LEO JONES DAVIS.

The Work of Oscar A. Edgerly.

The people of Lynn, Mass., who have been fortunate enough to listen to the inspired utterances of our friend and brother, Oscar A. Edgerly, who has occupied the platform of the Lynn Spiritualist Association during the month of April, have enjoyed an unusually rare treat. The Spiritualistic public are quite well aware of his success as a speaker and medium in private as well as public, and I am pleased to report the very acceptable work he has, with the assistance of his guides, rendered the society and the public, who have shown their appreciation by filling the hall to its fullest capacity upon each Sunday of his engagement. The writer always an admirer, finds after an absence of nearly seven years of faithful labors performed for the cause in the west, a great increase of intellectual power in the treatment of all subjects chosen by his guides. He has been no less successful in his labors on each Wednesday evening at the society's weekly sociable, when they have a "spread" prepared for all comers, and the tables are well filled, many coming from adjoining towns to again greet an old-time friend and co-worker—and we part with him with many regrets. In chronicling the above events the writer wishes to bear deserved testimony to the fact that Brother Edgerly always carries himself with dignity, and yet with uniform courtesy and kindness to all, and commands, by his exemplary life, the consideration and respect from those who do not endorse the claims made by him and his friends as to the reliance he places upon his mediumship for the elucidation of spiritual truths.

He will, during the month of May, enjoy a much-needed rest, passed with his sister at Newburyport, Mass., when he again puts on the armor to contend with the forces of error, ignorance and superstition, making the light of truth shine in dark places.

The good work goes bravely on in Lynn, as exemplified by the two societies managed respectively by Dr. Caird and Mrs. Anna H. Quaide. We will close our hall meetings the last Sunday in May, and the first Sunday in June open up at Unity Camp and also at Mowerland Park, otherwise known as "Camp Progress," to continue until the first Sunday in October. Mediums and speakers who desire engagements should address either Mrs. A. A. Averill, 42 Smith street, or Mrs. Anna H. Quaide, 13 Tower avenue. The writer is gratefully acknowledging the co-operation of spirit forces, greatly augmented within three months, which are helpful especially in social and business lines, and some platform work is prophesied for him in the near future. He sends greetings to the editor and staff, and all his friends everywhere.

DR. G. W. FOWLER.

Lynn, Mass.

"Right Generation the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth." By Dr. M. E. Conger. An appeal to reason and man's highest aspirations. A plea for justice and equality in all the relations of life between men and women. Cloth, 75 cents; leatherette, 50 cents.

"Social Upbuilding, including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennoblement of Humanity." By E. D. Babbitt, LL. D., M. D. This comprises the last part of Human Culture and Cure. Paper cover, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street,

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year..... $1 00
Six Months..... 50cts
Thirteen Weeks..... 25cts
Single Copy..... 5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE:

☞ At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, MAY 27, 1905.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Any person donating one dollar to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., will, if desired, receive one set of spiritual tracts and one copy of "Violets," a booklet of choice spiritual poems. One contributing two dollars to the fund will also receive a copy of "Leaves of Truth," a cloth-bound book of instructive spiritual matter.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.
600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C.

It Won't Do.

Rev. Edward T. Slater, an English clergyman, in a late issue of the London "Churchman," discoursing on the need of a "higher religious education," in the course of his polemic, says:

"It is idle to deny that a change has come over men's ideas, and they justly require the great central truths to be restated in terms of modern thought."

The proposition is correct, but is it not a fact that what is termed "great central truths," like the language in which they are expressed, are concepts of a barbarian age, and of a half civilized people; and do they not need revision, as largely as the "terms" in which they are expressed?

This is an age of enlightenment, of science, of cultured thought, in wonderful contrast with the teachings of two thousand years ago. As well attempt to revive the uncouth costumes of the Gothic age, and make them the standards of to-day, as to revive their modes of thought. But Rev. Slater would do worse than this; he would carry us back two or three thousand additional years, and impinge the morals, and the crude religious notions of those ancient people, only lately emerged from a savage life, worshiping idols of wood and stone, and make their thoughts models of present knowledge and refinement. It won't do. The angelic world, co-operating with morality, are opening up new ideas in regard to a future life, and these in time will become perfected, leaving no place for the rude splendor of ivory thrones, streets paved with gold, and brutal wars between celestials.

The Spirit.

To the spirit there seems to be no past, no present, no future, but an eternal Now. Height, depth, distance, seem annihilated. The boundless universe is in its grasp. Byron beautifully describes a spirit as he conceives it, and no inspiration by prophet has favored us with such a sublime description as he:

"Eternal, boundless, undecay'd,
A thought unseen, but seeing all,
All, all in earth, or skies displayed,
Shall it survey, shall it recall;
Each fainter trace that memory holds,
So darkly of departed years,
In one broad glance the soul beholds,
And all that was at once appears.

"Before creation peopled earth,
Its eye shall roll through chaos back;
And where the furthest heaven had birth,
The spirit trace its rising track.
And where the future mars or makes,
Its glance dilate o'er all to be,
While sun is quenched or system breaks,
Fix'd in its own eternity.

"Above of love, hope, hate or fear,
It lives all passionless and pure;
An age shall fleet like earthly year;
Its years as moments shall endure.
Away, away, without a wing,
O'er all, through all, its thoughts, shall fly;
nameless and eternal thing,
Forgetting what it was to die."

Deserted the Ancient Faith.

The papers announce that a French Catholic church, at Manchaug, Mass., has become associated with the Baptists, Rev. A. E. Ribourg, pastor.

In some features the Baptist denomination is the most liberal of the orthodox sects. More converts to Spiritualism came from the Baptists and Universalists than from other church. The writer remembers one Baptist church, way back in the early '50s, which closed its doors because of the large desertion of its members to faith in the teachings from spirit life.

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

Material for Learned Thought.

The age in which we live has opportunities of critical research experienced by no other. In all the past there were no such libraries as we now possess, neither were there persons so deeply learned as now, persons who are able to decipher every extant written language. The hieroglyphics of Egypt, and the cuneiform inscriptions of Babylonia and Assyria, are now more easily read than was the Greek four hundred years ago.

Our principal metropolitan cities have libraries today to which the masses have access, greatly superior to any extant in ancient times. We are told by Josephus, without regard to who he was, or when he wrote, that the Jewish library consisted of twenty-two books. Those twenty-two books now appear in a part of one of our present volumes, which, labeled in Greek, means "The Books." The two hundred thousand volumes of Pergamus, or the seven hundred thousand volumes of Alexandria, would probably diminish in numbers as did the Jewish, if appearing in modern characters.

With easy access to these storehouses of modern wisdom it is not strange, then, that ancient thought and pretended knowledge should pass under review, and very possibly give place to more correct ideas.

Every biblical student who has dared to think, must have wondered why there were so many gospels and so variant, professedly giving an account of Jesus. There are nearly or quite fifty gospels, canonical and apocryphal, extant. All of these, taking current ecclesiastical history for authority, were in being when the Council of Laodicea was holden, where it is claimed the four canonical gospels were selected. This number, it was said, was selected because there were four seasons of the year, and the choice fell upon those which best agreed in their narrations. The acceptance of either of the others would have made a different Jesus and a different religion from that we now have. So had but one of either of the accepted gospels remained as authority, all others being rejected, the character, Jesus, in some respects, would be quite different from that now entertained of him.

We might inquire: Why this divergency in statement? To us the question can be best answered by inquiring into the origin of the so-called gospels, whether canonical or otherwise.

It has been claimed there was probably a prior gospel to any now in being, from which writers drew for their principal facts, and where divergent they drew on an active imagination to round out the record. This seems very plausible; but is not that record still accessible? May it not be found in what is now known as the New Testament? Is not every material point involved in Paul's Epistles? And the variations, whether in the canonical or non-canonical gospels, are they not just such as a monk in his cloister would be liable to write were he familiar with Paul's productions, and he was ambitious to have a full story of the apostles' Jesus?

It is universally conceded by biblical scholars, that Paul's Epistles antedate the gospels. And they who have turned their attention in that direction admit the dogmas of the church derive their principal support from Paul. Salvation by faith in Jesus first appears as a Christian teaching in the Epistles, and so with many other inculcations. The clergyman preaching on immortality draws on the Epistles for texts in support of his faith, and rarely makes citations from the gospels, for there it appears second hand.

Why should not Paul be received as original authority? He says, Galations, i., 11,12: "I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man; for I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it; but by the revelation of Jesus Christ."

Paul never saw Jesus save in a vision. That vision seems the result of sun-stroke; though Kitto says: "Some regard that whole narrative as a myth." Paul himself determined that his teachings were the only gospel. See Gal. 1:8. "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."

A review of all the passages in Paul's Epistles which would suggest and lead up to the gospels are too voluminous for these editorial columns; but the student who shall turn his attention in this direction will find an ample field for thought, and possibly be able to make clear that which we admit we only suspicion.

The conclusion is, how can we account for the numerous gospels, genuine and otherwise, which seem of equal antiquity, only on the hypothesis that the several authors gleaned their material points from—shall we write it?—still older myths?

Insane Asylums and Religious Wrecks.

Superintendent Gorst of the Mendota Hospital for the Insane, of Wisconsin, to a visiting party of the state legislature, is reported by the La Crosse Chronicle to have said:

"There is no greater crime against the state than holding religious 'revivals.' Whenever there is a stirring religious revival in any part of the state it is followed by a veritable influx of patients sent to the asylums. It is not always safe to say these things openly, because it is not always safe to tell the truth; but that is the fact. Religious mania is one of the most common forms of insanity, and together with over indulgence in alcoholic drink and family troubles, religious enthusiasm is the great cause of sending persons to institutions like this."

This is a plain, straightforward, unadorned narration of facts, well known to practicing physicians the whole country over. It is not peculiar to Wisconsin, but it is common to the sensational pulpit everywhere. Restrictive legislation is required on this subject; and yet it is probable constitutional provisions are in the way. But this would not count if Spiritualism produced such unhappy consequences.

NEW YORK STATE CONVENTION.

The ninth annual convention of the New York State Association of Spiritualists will be held in Empire Hall, Syracuse, N. Y., on June 2, 3 and 4, to which all members, also Spiritualists and liberals are most cordially invited to be present. A large number of good speakers and phenomenal mediums will be present. Choice music will be rendered and elocutionary readings will be given by our talented elocutionist, Miss Victoria C. Moore, of Dryden, N. Y.

Arrangements have been made for reduced rates of board at the Empire Hotel for all visitors and delegates. Let us all endeavor by our presence and enthusiasm to make this the most interesting annual meting held.

HERBERT L. WHITNEY,
Secretary.
35 Irving Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Court of Inquiry.

THE COURT OF INQUIRY IS SOMETHING NOVEL, SOMETHING STARTLING, SOMETHING THAT WILL AGITATE SPIRITUALISM FROM CENTER TO CIRCUMFERENCE! IN FACT, IT IS SOMETHING NEW IN THE HISTORY OF OUR CAUSE—SOMETHING ORIGINAL, AND SHOULD BE READ BY EVERY SPIRITUALIST IN THE LAND. LEGERDEMAIN, DECEPTION THAT IS ALMOST IMPOSSIBLE TO UNCOVER, AND SLEIGHT-OF-HAND ARE THE AGENTS BROUGHT INTO REQUISITION TO KEEP PACE WITH, OR IN ADVANCE OF, IF POSSIBLE, THE GENUINE SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA. FOR YEARS NO ONE SUSPECTED THE USE OF ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY IN THE MATERIALIZING SEANCE TO MAKE UP YOUR "ANGEL VISITORS," BUT SOME STEADFAST FRIENDS OF THE CAUSE AND THIS PHASE OF MEDIUMSHIP DECLARE THAT ALL PHYSICAL MEDIUMS USE THIS ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY, AND THAT IF YOU CATCH THE "SPIRIT" YOU WILL HAVE THE MEDIUM DRESSED IN A ROBE THAT WILL NOT DEMATERIALIZE. THIS IS A SERIOUS CHARGE, AND IF TRUE, DEMONSTRATES DECEPTION OF THE DARKEST KIND. LET THIS UNIQUE COURT OF INQUIRY DECIDE.

Afraid of Spiritualism.

A more than usually shameless exhibition of petty, narrow-souled bigotry, and intolerance of freedom of thought and its expression, was that manifested by the "council" of a society known under the high-sounding title of "Victoria Institute and Philosophical Society of Great Britain"—in its treatment of Dr. J. M. Peebles, as is set forth in a statement published by Light, of London, England, which may be found in this issue of The Progressive Thinker.

Such infinitesimal littleness does not indicate the breadth of mind and judicial qualities that characterize genuine philosophers, or honest, earnest seekers after truth.

Of course, by this action, the said society will have only succeeded in belittling itself in the estimation of the public, which likes fair play and a square deal.

Spiritualism, and Dr. Peebles as its representative and advocate, will gain in prestige and influence as a result of this manifestation of combined cowardice and bigotry.

Spiritualism cannot be put down or hindered by such small tactics on the part of its cowardly opposers.

In view of the plain reasons for his shabby treatment, Dr. Peebles should consider himself honored by the council's action, rather than otherwise; he is entitled to congratulations rather than commiseration. The members of the council were afraid of him and his presentation of truth.

His address will doubtless be published in good form and will reach thousands of minds that, if he had been allowed to deliver it, would never have seen or heard of it.

Startles a Church Congress.

The Rev. Dr. John Peters, rector of St. Michael's church, New York, is reported to have greatly stirred members of the Episcopal Church Congress, by declaring that the bible, when treated as history, must be subjected to the same rules of criticism as any other narrative compilation.

His analysis of the personalities which have come down to us under the names of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph startled the more conservative of the congress and elated the more progressive. Comment on Dr. Peters' attitude was running freely at the congress today. His statement that the Book of Genesis is full of myths, that Abraham, Jacob, and Isaac were not real people in the commonly accepted sense, but are merely composite photographs, so to speak, of Israel, and that much of what is recorded of the patriarchs is purely romantic, led to no end of argument, approval, and criticism.

Dr. Peters elaborated his contentions that the bible as a historical narrative must be subjected to analytical and synthetical criticism, just as other records of events. The rector added that the bible legends were superior to other folklore in that they served to point to the higher moral and spiritual life.

"The stories of Abraham, of Isaac, of Jacob, and of Joseph, differ in no essential degree from the folklore legends of our own Germanic and Celtic kinsfolk," said Dr. Peters. "Those stories originated in the myths, the legends, and the traditions of Hebron, Beersheba, Bethel, and Sechem, and those pre-Israelistic myths and legends were woven into the fabric of Hebrew story. So the ancestral heroes, gods, or demigods of the country of which the Israelites took possession were adopted by Israel as its own ancestors—patriarchs whose personalities were clothed with the traditions of israel's history, religious beliefs, ideals, and convictions."

A Prominent Spiritualist Passed to Spirit Life.

Levi P. Barrett, the father of H. D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., lately passed to the realm of souls, at Canaan, Maine. He was one of the noblest men in the ranks of Spiritualism, and was fully ripe for the great change. President Barrett's little baby daughter has also passed to spirit life, having been attacked by pneumonia.

SPIRITUALIST MASS-MEETING.

We have been notified that there will be a mass meeting of the Spiritualists of the state of Kansas at Topeka, June 9, 10 and 11. The following well known speakers are engaged for the occasion: Dr. G. B. Warne, vice-president of the N. S. A., a forcible and eloquent speaker; Mrs. Virginia Bryan, well known throughout the state as an excellent lecturer and message-bearer; Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, a splendid test medium, the daughter of that veteran, Capt. E. V. Wilson; Mrs. Lull, a fine speaker and message bearer. Other able lecturers and mediums will be present. The musical programme will be under the supervision of Prof. Worrel.

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism. A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood, lecturer upon physical, physiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the molecular or spiritual hypothesis of nature. Scholarly, masterly, trenchant. Price 25 cents.

AN URGENT APPEAL!

For Money to Assist in Defending the Goff Will.

To the Editor:—Herewith I send you a short article as an appeal for help in the Goff will case. I know your valuable space has been used for this case several times, but as yet the desired results have not been reached.

We wish to say to the Spiritualists of Michigan, if you lose this case by letting it go by default, for the want of a small amount of money, you are making a great mistake. John F. Goff was a man of as sound judgment and good business ability as any man in the county at the time his will was made, twenty years ago, and in fact he had no superiors in business ability up to the last year of his life, yet the opponent is trying to break the will on the ground that said Goff was insane, basing his claim of insanity on the fact that he was a believer in Spiritualism. The case was sustained in the probate court, but by a prejudiced jury we were beaten in the circuit court. The contestant has said in public that such of the legatees as did not oppose him would receive their legacies in case he succeeded in breaking the will, hence only a few of the legatees have given any assistance, and the lack of money has come very near to losing the case, but we have succeeded in getting until June 1, in which to complete the bill of exceptions, etc., and we need some money at once, with which to pay typewriter, printer, etc.

Now, you people who have property that you may wish to leave by will, should consider this matter and assist us in sustaining the will and not allow the verdict to go out that all Spiritualists are insane.

To allow this case to go by default would be to merit the claim of insanity. The estate is in the hands of the temporary administrator, and under the ruling of the court, which will not allow any further expenses to be taken from the estate, and the three administrators appointed by Mr. Goff, who are illy able to do so, have been advancing money, and pledging more, which has made it possible to hold the will from going by default and it is nearing the time when the records and briefs are to be printed, which will cost probably $250, possibly $300.

If the will is sustained it means $15,000 or more for the State Spiritualist Society, with which other cases can be assisted, should they come up, as no doubt they will; and now you who wish to assist in establishing the precedent in the court that a man can be a Spiritualist and not be insane, we ask you to help us; if you cannot send us $25, $10 or $5, send smaller sums; 25 or 50 cents thankfully received.

Bear in mind this point, that if you send one dollar or more we will send you a receipt, promising to pay the amount back to you in case the will is sustained; if you wish such receipt, please mention same. Address all donations to Rena D. Chapman, state secretary, Marcellus, Mich.

H. L. CHAPMAN,

By request of administrators, who are Dr. B. O'Dell, Pawpaw, Mich.; Alfred H. Underwood, Wakelee, Mich.; H. L. Chapman, Marcellus, Mich.

THE SPIRIT VOICE.

It Warned Him of Danger, Saying, "The Bridge, Frank, the Bridge"— Strange Premonition Saved 150 Passengers From an Awful Plunge to Death.

Saved by the premonition of Frank G. Yost, engineer, from the horrible fate of a plunge from a railway trestle, the 150 passengers on C., L. & N. train No. 34 are thankful that they are alive to-day to tell the story of one of their most remarkable escapes, as set forth in the Post of late date.

It was during the raging of the big storm Thursday as the train neared the high C., L. & N. trestle over a deep ravine, a quarter of a mile south of Kennedy Heights.

Yost's train was to go to Montgomery, and he started the run from the depot on Court street, near Broadway, with the coaches well filled with suburban passengers. Despite the wind and rain that lashed about the cab windows Yost had the throttle open several notches and the train was speeding as it neared Kennedy. Through the sheets of rain Yost could see that the track ahead was clear.

But suddenly, so he told his companions, a voice from out the air seemed to say to him:

"The bridge, Frank; the bridge!"

Yost answered by throwing on the air brakes and the train came to a stop within a few score feet of the bridge. Yost clambered down from his cab and went ahead.

The supports of the bridge he found had been almost entirely torn away by the torrent of water that fought its way through the ravine. Its own weight was almost enough to send it crashing below, yet from the train it looked perfectly safe and no train could have gotten half way across without crashing to the bottom.

The passengers, learning the conditions, crowded about Engineer Yost and wrung his hand. But he told them to thank not him, but the higher power that sent the strange warning. Then he calmly resumed his place at the throttle and backed the train to Cincinnati. Workmen have been repairing the trestle ever since.

Sublimely true, Spirit Return comes to all, without regard to the station in life. It is a grand truth that Spiritualists do not have a monopoly in the Spirit Return business. C. R. ITIC.
Cincinnati, Ohio.

A DREAM VISION.

Which Told the Boy His Mother Was Dead.

Bridgeport, Ct.—William Craw, a nineteen-year-old patient in the Bridgeport Hospital, has amazed the surgeons by a mysterious faculty of "seeing things" in dreams before they happen, or about the time they happen.

Mrs. Rosa Jepson, a sister of the young man, who is recovering from the loss of a leg in a railroad accident, called on him. His mother died after he was taken to the hospital and his sister feared to break the news.

"Mother had another of those bad spells last night," she said.

"Why, mother is dead, now," said the young man, sadly. Then he told of a dream. "I knew she was dead last night when I had a dream at 10 o'clock," he said. "I dreamed that I was in the open air. Suddenly two stars descended. One of them burst open and I saw mother's face. She smiled and I felt her fingers running through my hair. She said: 'Oh, Willie!' Then I awoke."

The boy's mother died at 10 o'clock, the hour he had the dream.

Three nights before Craw met with the accident he dreamed that he was injured and told his friends at the time. —Chicago Examiner.

The Commandments Analyzed, price 25 cents. Big Bible Stories, cloth, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

Dr. J. M. Peebles in England.

Interesting Items, Experiences, Sketches, Observations and Paragraphs from English Journals.

Safely across the Atlantic waters, which were extraordinarily calm for stormy March, I reached London safely on Saturday, and the next day was standing and speaking upon a platform long identified with Spiritualism, and I have lectured every Sunday since, and sometimes on week-day evenings. My future appointments are in Nottingham, Birmingham, Manchester, and Glasgow, back to London, down to Merthyr Tidville, then returning to London I appear a second time before the Hackney Society and shall lecture before the British Vegetarian Society in London, before the Psycho-Therapeutic Society upon the subject of Suggestion, Hypnotism, Mental Reading, and am also to spend an evening in Westminster Hall with the members of the Anti-Vaccination Society. So goes the world of activity. Weary with the getting out of two new books, I sought rest—relaxation—from hard study, and I only had it while upon the nine days' voyage upon the ocean.

MY FIRST VISIT TO LONDON.

There has been some misunderstanding as to the time of my first reaching London and doing some lecture work in this great city of cities. As a matter of history it may not be so very important, but it is decidedly interesting to those who have studied the beginning and progress of Modern Spiritualism. I reached London the first time, in the autumn of 1869, doing some lecturing under the auspices of James Burns, whose devotion and energy in this movement were deserving of the greatest credit.

A fine reception was tendered me at that time. By turning to the "Medium" and "Daybreak" of June 3, 1869, one will see, under date of May 29, 1870, that I delivered my valedictory address in the Cavendish Rooms before returning to America, and in the issue of the "Medium" April 2, 1870, may be found these earnest words from James Burns:

"We found in Mortimer street a suitable place for Sunday evening services and with very little publicity filled the hall comfortably on the second evening. These services have gone on steadily for three months and now seem to have attained a steadfast footing. This is the first effort that has been undertaken in London to hold a similar series of religious meetings, and the result has been in every way most profitable. This is no mean achievement, and if we were asked to point out a case in which it had been before accomplished in this country, we should be obliged to confess that we had no knowledge of any such case."

This was fully thirty-five years ago. While here at that time I visited and lectured in Dublin, Ireland. On this trip I was accompanied by Mr. McDonald, who after lecturing kindly took me out to some of the round towers of Ireland. They are wonderful relics of a remote antiquity, and it is quite generally thought that they related to Phallic worship. Others, and among them myself, think differently. The witty O'Brien suggested that these towers were built by the ancients to puzzle the moderns and they have proved a grand success.

DIFFERING VIEWS OF SPIRITUALISTS.

There is in England considerable of a line of demarcation between what are termed materialistic Spiritualists and Christian Spiritualists. This is unfortunate. There is a strong, and I may almost say, uncharitable controversy now raging upon this subject in the columns of the "Two Worlds." Never while men have differently shaped heads and dwell under different environments can they be made to see or believe precisely alike—and why should they? Monotony would be anywhere an intolerable Hades. When I was in London thirty or thirty-five years ago gathering the materials for the "Year Book on Spiritualism" issued by Hudson Tuttle and myself, I sent a circular to the noted Spiritualist journalist and book reviewer, S. S. Hall, asking him for a short article. He replied thus briefly: "Sir, I am a Christian Spiritualist, and I am informed that you are propagating opinions hostile to Christianity. I am therefore bound to withhold from you all aid or countenance in any way." Brother Hall was a good conscientious man, but church-bound. The distinguished William Howitt, said to have been the author of 70 volumes, sympathized religiously with Mr. Hall. Benjamin Coleman, a veteran in the cause, took the same view on the subject.

OLD REMINISCENCES.

Being in London again recalls to mind many interesting occurrences of my first visit to England. I reached Liverpool August 23, 1869, and lectured in Manchester August 27 of the same month. And when putting my feet upon British soil I thought and kept thinking of E. C. Dunn, and of his spirit guide calling himself Aaron Knight, who very frequently entranced him. Mr. Dunn was with me much of the time for 14 years and from the time of his first entrancement, during the after years I talked with his spirit guides hundreds and hundreds of times. He (Aaron Knight) informed me that he was born in York, Yorkshire, England, something like 200 years ago, although, he would add, I take little note of time in my present higher life. He described to me over and over again the old Yorkminster, the ruins of St. Mary's Abbey, remnants of the old city walls, the River Ouse, the general topography of the country, the picture of the Virgin Mary in the minster with the serpent under her feet. He also said that his brother, the Rev. James Knight, the original name being McKnight, was a distinguished clergyman, ordained a deacon in the Savoy Chapel, London. And mark, at this time I had never been in England, nor had this young unlettered Dunn, so there could have been no telepathy about the test. Very well, reaching England, I went to London, to Manchester, where I met Robert Green, who accompanied me to the old city of York where I commenced a search for the names of the Knights, that I might if possible identify the family and learn the particulars of the Rev. James Knight and so forth.

It is always tiresome to ransack old libraries. The first day was spent among the old "annals" of York, but with no success. Then we went the next day to a venerable antiquarian, who directed us to the "Will Office." When there I asked the clerk to go back some two hundred years and search for the family name of Knight. He did so, and at length, to my delight, he found the name of the Rev. James Knight, the identical brother of Aaron, and he also unearthed other matters connected with the family of which Aaron Knight had acquainted me. Paying the clerk, he gave me a full copy of the original record in Latin with this translation: "24th of October 1714, Rev. James Knight, A. M., was ordained deacon in the Savoy Chapel, London, and preached in the same Chapel, on the following Sunday." This with the almost minute descriptions of the city of York, its minster, St. Mary's Abbey, the River Ouse, the lay of the land where the boy Aaron had played and other scenes which he had described to me, all conspired to confirm his identity. This—all this—I pronounced remarkable, and I defy any candid skeptically-inclined mind to come to any other conclusion than that this was the Aaron Knight, the veritable brother of the Rev. James Knight, once a mortal, now a risen conscious spirit. Similar facts Henry Ward Beecher once said "strengthen faith." They do more. They demonstrate the reality of a conscious converse between the two worlds visible and invisible.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

The London papers have made a long extract from Professor Haeckel's lectures in Berlin. Not only have they reported them, but they have discussed them. Haeckel is one of the rankest materialists that I know of. He denied "the possibility of the existence of any immortal spirit." He declared that "what is generally called the soul or spirit is a mere function of the brain and a development of the intellectual faculties derived from and possessed by the higher domestic animals, such as fidelity, moral consciousness and self-sacrifice." He visited while in Berlin the famous Hans horse, the horse that knows and remembers so much, but cannot tell it. Haeckel says there was "nothing wonderful in the horse's performance, as the intelligence of insects and animals differed from men only in degree." Professor Voght and other materialists taught the same thing years ago, in fact, this chain of materialism can be traced link after link back to that atheistic materialist Lucretius. And yet our most distinguished scientists admit that they know nothing of matter when traced down to the last analysis. And so they are emphatically "know nothings." What a contrast to Spiritualists who know, positively know, that they converse with their risen friends.

A STRANGE TRANCE.

A boy of some ten years, bright and precocious, living at Normanton, was considered exceedingly religious and sedate for one of his age. He had spells which were called by the most enlightened of the neighborhood, trances. In one of these trances he foretold his death: He declared several times that he should not be alive at the next Christmas. Taken sick, he was pronounced dead from meningitis. Physicians had pronounced him dead, and had so legally certified. The hour for the funeral had arrived—the hearse was at the door and the rector present, when the mother thought she saw a redness about the ears of her boy. Lifting the eyelid, the eye seemed bright and clear, putting a polished glass over the mouth there was a slight moisture. They called several physicians, two pronounced it a case of suspended animation, the other said he is doubtless dead. They took him from the coffin, the form seemed limber, and they put him before the fire and placed smelling salts under his nose. For four days the form remained in this questionable condition, some pronouncing him alive in a trance, and others denying it. But finally there was a discoloration around the throat, the eye assumed a dull leaden color; there was no further moisture from the mouth and he was pronounced dead, and consequently buried. In my opinion many are buried alive each year.

ENGLISH NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS.

The Daily News informed us a few days ago that the Methodist Church at Forest Hill presented a remarkable scene. Some sixty members of the church, while holding a prayer-meeting and later "discussing the public houses" became excited. The excitement rose high. Bitter, angry words passed and then a scene of wildest confusion. The mission hymn books were rolled into balls and thrown by the men at each other and this was followed up by using the kneeling hassocks as missiles. It was, says the reporter, a most deplorable sight, a disgrace to the name of Christianity.

While the Bishop of London was celebrating the rite of ordination, Mr. Kensit and some half dozen others walked up to the choir where Mr. Kensit began reading a paper protesting against the ordination of the Rev. Basil S. Dyer. A noisy scene ensued. Bitter words were spoken. Mr. Kensit being violently opposed to the ritualist portion of the English Church and the Roman Mass, was next day arraigned and fined by the Lord Mayor thirty-five dollars.

There is a great excitement now in the English Church over the fact that some one hundred of their most distinguished clergymen and college professors have signed a manifesto endorsing what is termed the "Higher Criticism." A leading member of the High Church party declares that this manifesto represents the thin edge of the wedge of an organized effort to tamper with the very foundations of the church. It was an attempt, he said, to wipe the supernatural element out of our religion and to break down the whole sacramental system.

A resident merchant of Benares in India writes that India is about to become the center of a lively religious war. The "leading Hindoo thinkers are organizing for the purpose of driving Theosophy from the strongholds it has begun to attain in Hindustan." These Hindoo leaders declare that the Theosophist pretensions and writing are only a fabric of fiction. Annie Besant, the successor of Mme. Blavatsky, has built up a college for the teaching of her personal doctrines. They say that Mme. Blavatsky was a female magician and untruthful. Mrs. Besant, they inform us, wears the Hindoo dress, eats only food cooked by the Brahmins, and declares that she was a Brahmin in a previous reincarnation, and walks the streets of Benares counting her beads surrounded by young men. She announces that the religion revealed to Mme. Blavatsky is the oldest religion in the world and precedes the Vedas. All of this the educated Hindoos and the higher class scholars repudiate. They ask her to prove her occultism, but she utterly refuses, and these Hindoo teachers and scholastics insist that she knows little of the Vedas and nothing of the Sanskrit, and they pronounce the Mahatmas imaginary ghosts to frighten the uneducated. A series of lectures are now being given in India to show the folly and pretensions of the theosophists.

Since my visits to India, Ceylon and China, and there conversing with the natives, studying their magic, their mediumship, and their obsessions, I have said over and over again that these people all, or nearly all, were Spiritists. It is an exception to find a man or woman who does not believe that their ancestral spirits are around them, about them, and under varying conditions converse with and give to them advice. In accordance with this position Admiral Togo at a funeral service held in Tokio in memory of officers and soldiers killed in action addressed their spirits—mark it well—in the course of an address he lifted his eyes and said:

"As I stand before you spirits I can hardly express my feelings. Your personality is fresh in my memory. Your corporeal existence has ceased, but your passing from the world has been in the gallant discharge of your duty by which the enemy's fleet on this side of the world has been completely disabled.

"Our combined fleet retains the undisputed command of the seas. I trust this will bring peace and rest to your spirits. It is my agreeable duty to report our successes to the spirits of those who sacrificed their earthly existence for the attainment of so great a result.

ENGLISH MIRTH.

As every circus has its clown, so the English Parliament has its inveterate humorist. It is Sir Wilfred Lawson. In one of his speeches he said that a minister, addressing a meeting of his congregation, asked all women who had never quarreled with their husbands to stand up. Every woman kept her seat. Then the minister asked all men who had never quarreled with their wives to stand up. Ten men stood up, and they expected the minister to praise them. Instead, he said, "Oh! Lord, have mercy on these ten liars."

THE BATTLE UPON "OBSESSIONS" J. J. MORSE.

Through not seeing The Progressive Thinker regularly, in consequence of my journeys hither and thither, I am not up to the mark in regard to the moral combatants. But the other day, in looking over the bound London "Medium and Daybreak," I came across the following in regard to Mr. J. J. Morse and his controlling Chinese intelligence, Tien. Here are some of the questions put to this Chinese spirit guide and the spirit's answers. It will be observed that they are in line with the direct testimony of nearly every enlightened spirit and intelligent mediums.

Q. What is the philosophy of obsession?

A. Numbers of disembodied men and women retain a liking for the pleasures of life, but their new habits prevent them from the enjoyment of their old habits, so they find one of similar tendencies with whom they come enrapport. This connection lasts as long as the person obsessed answers the purpose of the spirit or till the spirit attains a higher position than its earthly desires.

Q. Can the obsessing spirit extract elements from the spiritual nature of the obsessed person?

A. Our previous answer implies the affirmative. Food nourishes the spiritual nature as well as the physical and this spiritual sustenance the obsessing spirit absorbs."

This Chinese sage who has entrance Mr. J. J. Morse so many years, is one of the ablest spirit intelligences that I ever had the pleasure of conversing with, and considering his long experience in the higher life his direct testimony to the fact of spirit obsessions counts one in the affirmative—a big one—as do other strong and irrefragable facts relating to this subject.

I am just in receipt of the "Harbinger of Light" from Australia and I see by this issue that the editor, W. H. Terry, takes precisely the same view of "obsessions" that I do myself. These are some of his words: "The spirits who hover about the earth-plane are not the elite of the spirit world, but those seeking to participate in the sensuous pleasures of their earth-life by association with those of like disposition, and when they have, through the ready acquiescence of the sensitive, obtained control, they are often difficult to get rid of." "Commercial spirits" or those on the lower plane may be clever and faithful to their medium, so much so that when the conditions are unfavorable to produce legitimate phenomena, these spirits will co-operate with them to substitute bogus ones." And here is a hint that when brought out more fully before Spiritualists will induce them to understand that there may be "bogus spirits and fraudulent-inducing spirits" as well as fraudulent mediums. This class of spirits were wisely named by A. J. Davis, diakka.

WISDOM WORDS FROM HUDSON TUTTLE.

Who is so well prepared to write about obsession or the condition of the dead as those who have long held conscious converse with them as has my friend Tuttle. In his book "Life in the Spheres" and under the heading of "the low societies" he has this, briefly abbreviated, but not a thought nor an idea changed. "A spirit who had just arrived from earth came from a barroom with all its sots. He died while intoxicated, was found lying in a gutter. Becoming conscious and hearing the word 'drink,' he asked, 'Drink; can you drink here?'

"'Yes,' was the grim reply, 'we just can and feel as nice as we please. But all can't—not unless they find one on earth just like themselves—form a connection with such an one and when he gets to feeling good, you will feel good also. I will try it, no mistake. * * * *

"Did you hear what an infernal scrape I got into last night? I went to Fred. He did not want to drink. I destroyed that feeling and made him think he was dry. He drank and drank, more than I wanted him to, until I was so drunk —(mark the phrase—till I was so drunk that I could not break my connection with him or control his mind. He undertook to go home, fell into the snow, I suffered awfully, ten times as much as I did when dying." (pp. 30 and 31). This testimony corresponds perfectly with that of many others who have conversed with spirits that had just passed from the underground slums and liquor-maddened saloons of earth. And yet Mr. Tuttle, as do all other Spiritualists, was careful to speak in this connection of the great love of progress that uplifts even the lowest on to the higher planes of the higher life.

J. M. PEEBLES.
18 Endsleigh Gardens, London, N. W.

"The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional." This book, by the well known Father Chiniquy, reveals the degrading, impure influences and results of the Romish confessional, as proved by the sad experience of many wrecked

What Shall We Do to Be Saved?

A Lecture Delivered by James L. Dow, before the First Spiritual Society of Manhattan, Kansas.

What shall we do to be saved? To be saved from suffering and sorrow here and hereafter?

This is the most important question that the human family ever had to deal with. From away back in the dim distance of the past, as far back as we have any reliable record, people were asking this question. And all through the myriads of years and thousands of generations that have passed since then, up to the present time this has always been the question most frequently asked, and the one that has never been satisfactorily answered to any considerable number of people.

The answer to this question has been so varied according to the belief and spiritual development of whoever undertook to answer it, that the great majority of the people have become dazed upon the subject and hardly know which way to steer. The various requirements of salvation as given out by different people have been easy and natural, hard and difficult, or tyrannical and cruel, just according to the character given to God by the people, and the character given to God is always in harmony with the moral and spiritual development of the people.

God and Moral and Spiritual Development.

In order to show you how perfectly the character of a God who is worshiped by a people conforms to the moral and spiritual development of that people I wish to call your attention to the inhabitants of Carthage, when that city was in its greatest glory. The inhabitants worshiped the sun and the moon, and were called fire-worshipers, as they believed the sun was fire, and their Magi, or Oracles claimed to have received some of this fire direct from the sun, and they called it holy fire and kept it continually burning upon their altar in the temple, and they worshiped it as a God or a representative of their God, and the whole nation would have gone into mourning if by any means this fire should have become extinguished. These people were warlike, as were all the people at that time, and while they were fairly honorable in their dealings with their own people who devoutly worshiped their God, they were most unjust and cruel to all others. Their common enemy if captured was usually put to the sword, while their leaders were subjected to the most inhuman torture that they could devise. (As in the case of their torture of Regulus, the Roman general.) Cutting off the hands and feet, pulling out the tongue by the root, cutting off the eyelids, and burning at the stake with a slow fire, was no uncommon occurrence with them. Their rulers were haughty, selfish and proud, and extremely jealous of anyone whom they might have the least suspicion of aspiring to their position, and they usually put to death all their own relatives, as well as the relatives of all former rulers, so there should be no legal aspirant for the throne.

So afraid were these rulers that some other citizen would get some of the praise of the people, that they usually put to death any one whom the people praised for justice, wisdom, or bravery; like the god the worshiped they required, and demanded all the praise, and to assure themselves that they were getting it, they required continual demonstrations from the people that they were still loyal, and loved them.

The people were often required to bow their heads down to the dust and worship them as a semi-God. And unless the people continued to demonstrate this attitude towards their ruler, the ruler became jealous and angry, and the people had to pay dearly for it.

The Character Attributed to God.

The character of the people and their rulers being such as I have stated, it becomes easy to understand what kind of a character they would be likely to attribute to their God. God being a ruler of rulers, and king of kings, they gave him the character of their ruler, only greatly intensified. They believed that God required and demanded their most humble submission to his will. That he required daily sacrifices in order to assure him that the people was loyal to him. They believed that while the people could only torture the followers of other Gods while physical life should last, their god could and would torture them through all eternity in a burning lake of holy fire. They not only believed that God was jealous of other Gods, but they believed that he was subject to fits of anger which could only be appeased by a great sacrifice, which in many cases was as heartless and cruel as the torture to which they subjected some of their prisoners.

Believed Their God Had Become Angry.

About the year 500 B. C., the inhabitants of Carthage saw a Roman army approaching the city. They believed that for some reason their God had become angry and was leading this Roman army against them for the purpose of destroying them. And they cried out: "What shall we do to be saved?"

The wise men of the city were hurriedly called together to see if they could find out the cause of the displeasure of their God, and after looking the matter over they unanimously agreed that the cause of his anger was because they had been offering up as a sacrifice to him the children of the poor people, and the children of their slaves; they believed that their God demanded the best of everything, and was angry because they had offered up to him the children of the poorer class. They therefore quickly decided that the only thing that would save them, and cause God to again smile upon them, was to offer up to him some of the best of their children. So they went among the rich, and noble of birth, and compelled two hundred mothers to each bring one of their best children to a place designated for the sacrifice.

Cries of Babies in Holy Fire.

At this place they had a large bronzed statue with its arms stretched out and slightly downward, and under these arms they had a roaring, seething furnace of holy fire, and before the eyes of their natural protectors (their mothers) these little innocent and unsuspecting children were laid one at a time upon the hot arms of this unfeeling statue, and there while calling piteously to its mother to help, it clung to these hot, unfeeling arms in its endeavor to escape the fiery furnace which was beneath it, until it was exhausted, when it fell into that terrible pit below where its cries were smothered in that liquid holy fire; when this horrid scene was again repeated with another child, and this thought to be holy exhibition was continued until two hundred were thus cruelly forsaken by their mothers, and were allowed to fall headlong into this fiery furnace to satisfy an angry God. And if one of these mothers let drop a sigh, or shed one tear for her suffering child, she was severely punished, and the offering of the child became useless, as they believed that God would not accept a sacrifice unless it was freely and willingly given. Here we see what the wise men of that city gave as an answer to the question, What shall we do to be saved? The people of that city being cruel and heartless towards those who sinned against them, believed that God would require cruel sacrifices of them, if guilty of sin.

Some Very Unpleasant Truths.

You may say these Carthaginians were pagans, and therefore nothing better could be expected of them; but we find recorded in the eleventh chapter of Judges that Jephtha offered up his only child as a burnt offering in fulfillment of a contract he made with the God of the Bible. You may urge that this was in the early part of the world's history, and that the people had made but little advancement, and that Jephtha was not a follower of Christ. But what are you going to do with those pious Catholics who burnt hundreds and I think I could safely say thousands in slow fires for Jesus' sake and for the love they entertained for their God. And how about John Calvin, the founder of the Presbyterian church, who had a little argument with Servetus on a theological subject, in which they disagreed, and a long time afterwards Calvin, learning that Servetus was in Geneva and stopping at a hotel, had him arrested and kept him in a dungeon, and afterwards had him burnt at the stake with a slow fire made of green wood, and this he did in his zeal to please the God of the Presbyterian church, and make sure that he (John Calvin) would be saved.

The Catholics even at the present day are shutting many human beings out from the world in the unwholesome air of their prisons called by them nunneries, where the world is not permitted to know of the sorrow and premature deaths that occur there in the name of Jesus and for the love of God.

And it is a notorious fact that even in this enlightened day and generation a large majority of the people believe that God requires sacrifices.

All the Christian churches are still offering up sacrifices to please God. They believe we should abstain from many harmless pleasures, that we should do penance, that we should contribute to the church, give liberally to the missionary fund in an endeavor to convert the heathen to Christianity; they require us to become members of their church, and love and worship their God; they say we must be baptized according to the rules of the church and the requirements of God, that we must fast, and abstain from meat on Friday, and above all we must not forget to pray. Now these and many other sacrifices are believed by Christians to be demanded by their God, and essential to our salvation.

The Pagans and Early Christians.

While the Christians of the present day look with horror upon some of the sacrifices of the Pagans and early Christians, they fail to see that they are following in the path marked out by these Pagans and early Christians, and that their present practices only differ from theirs in degree. They believe that their God gets angry at their shortcomings, and becomes pleased with their sacrifices; they seem to think him very jealous of other Gods, and will severely punish any who dare to worship any other god but him. They seem to think that God requires daily exhibitions of your love in order that he may know that you are still loyal to him.

The only difference between the Pagan God at Carthage and the present Christian God, is that the present Christian God (like the people) is a little less bloodthirsty. He gets angry just as quick (although the Bible says that anger rests only in the breasts of fools) and requires something that will mortify the flesh in order to get him good-natured again. He seems only to be delighted when we are sacrificing our time, or our money to him, or humbling ourselves in the dust before him. He seems to retain all the characteristics of those early rulers as regards their vanity, and love of praise, but is a little more moderate in regard to the amount of pay which he demands in return for his love.

What Shall We Do to Be Saved?

Well, if you are ever saved you will have to save yourself, God will never do it. God in the beginning did for man all he will ever do. He placed within his reach happiness which he can obtain only by right action. Suffering comes entirely from transgression, and God will never transgress his own law to relieve the sinner. God never sympathizes with the afflicted, and is never displeased with those who are happy. He loves the vilest sinner just as devotedly as he does the most devoted saint, he is no respecter of persons, all creation is his. If a man transgress a human law, the penalty of which is one hundred dollars, after he has paid that fine he stands equal before the law with one who never transgressed it. And thus it is with God's law; suffering always follows quick upon the heels of wrong doing, and happiness is sure to come from all good acts. This is the never-varying law of God. God never punishes the sinner, or rewards the saint. The seeming rewards and punishments are but the natural operations of law.

God does not require sacrifices of any kind, all sacrifices are sacrilegious. They originated and belong to the dark ages.

Something About the True God.

The true God does not get angry at the transgressor who is always paying the full penalty, neither are his smiles bought by flattery, devotion, love, or money. God does not demand that we worship him, for that would be vain in him, and could do neither him nor us any good. God does not demand our love, for love cannot be forced, neither can it be resisted if the being is lovable. God does not either demand, hear or answer our prayers, and prayer is but another branch of heathen sacrifices, and has never been known to move God in any direction. When President Garfield was shot and lay hovering between life and death, the whole Christian world and many others were asking God to spare his life, but God was not moved. When the Slocum (loaded with over thirteen hundred human beings mostly mothers and their children, who were members of a Sunday-school, and going to a picnic to celebrate their devotion to their God) took fire and the most heartrending appeals were sent up to save these dear children, and while these mothers did not think it too much for them to cling with their hands to redhot iron rods until their hands were baked fast to these rods in a vain attempt to save their children, his children, God was not moved, although it seemed sufficient to move a heart of stone. If a man falls into the water where it is over his head, and he comes up and cries out: "O, Lord, what shall I do to be saved?" the only intelligent answer he could possibly receive either from man or God would be—swim. To believe that God will by any special act interfere with our life here or hereafter, or in any manner have anything to do with our salvation, requires us to put our reason under our feet, and close our eyes to the most palpable self-evident facts.

The Magnitude of the Planets.

Let us go out into the starlight and behold the millions of worlds that come within the range of our vision, which are a thousand times larger than this world, whirling through space with the rapidity of a rifle ball, and yet many of them have not been able to make one revolution of its orbit since the time the Bible claims the world was made; some are known to take twenty-six thousand years to make one revolution of its orbit.

Then let us come within our own little planetary system and see how little our world is. Uranus is about 300 times as large as the earth, Neptune is 400 times as large, Saturn is 700 times as large, Jupiter is 1300 times as large, and you could tumble a half-dozen worlds like this with all its inhabitants into one of those little pock marks that are to be seen on the face of our sun, and then the depression would not be nearly full.

This earth compares in size to the visible universe about like a grain of mustard seed to this world. And then it is not reasonable, in view of the fact that there is no end to space, to suppose that the visible universe is one-millionth part of the created worlds.

Millions Upon Millions of Worlds.

When we contemplate the vastness of these millions upon millions of worlds whose size is almost incomprehensible, and which move upon exact time and in perfect order, whose actions have never been interfered with by God since they were created and placed under law, does it not make you a little tired to think of millions upon millions of people all over the world asking and expecting this almighty creator who was never known to violate or suspend one of his laws, to come down and fix up some little matter of law with them?

Prayer is but a relic of paganism, it is not only useless, as has been demonstrated thousands of times in the most thorough manner, but it is a foolish waste of time. We have nothing to pray for, we have nothing to ask for. If we ask for his love we are asking for what we already have, for God loves his entire creation down to the smallest worm. Had we ought to ask for mercy and expect to receive it from God, when mercy is always unjust unless the penalties are unjust or excessive? Do you think the penalties attached to God's laws are excessive or unjust? Had we ought to ask God to save us, when he has placed at the feet of every human being a ladder upon which we can climb to salvation? Some say we are poor, mean, low, degraded sinners, and not worthy of salvation, or preserving in any manner. Does it not look like a gross and inexcusable insult to God to talk like that about his works. Men would get mad if you should talk like that about any of their works.

If God's work in making man was such a tectotal failure, why did he not at once destroy him, and try it again? Why do Christians condemn man and praise all the rest of his works? When their Bible credits God with saying after he had created man, that he saw everything which he had created, and behold it was very good. (Genesis 1:31). No, my friends, God has not been disappointed in man; man is all that God expected of him.

As I have told you many things that man does which do not work for his salvation, I will now tell you about something that will save you.

In the first place all good acts which do not amount to a sacrifice will make you happier here and lay up happiness for you hereafter.

As you cannot buy your way into heaven, anything given, or done in order to lay up treasure in heaven will be found to be a failure.

Must Do Good Because We Like to.

It is those things that we do that bring us happiness here, that will lay up joy for us hereafter. If we do a thing because we think it is a duty, or because we think it will make us happier in another world, it at once becomes a sacrifice, and all sacrifices deface our mansion in heaven rather than beautify it. The stranger traveling through a strange country who lifts a crying child out of a mud-hole, cleans off its clothes and gives it a nickel to make it forget its troubles, and passes on to other countries without giving his name or residence, and having no thought of God at the time, has done more for his salvation than the man who builds a hundred ten thousand dollar public libraries as a monument to his name. If we would be saved we must do good because we like to do good, and not for a reward or for the fear of punishment.

The man who is restrained from stealing only by the fear of the law, is a moral thief, as much so as the one who takes his chances and does steal. The man who quits sinning for the fear of God or his punishment is still a sinner. The elders who went out on the ice barefooted down in Pennsylvania and baptised a woman eighty years old, through the ice, that she might be saved and they strengthen their chances of salvation, would have sent more solid material to the spirit world with which to erect a mansion if they had kept their shoes on and stayed in the house and played a game of blind man's buff with the old lady, for they might have given each other a little pleasure without hope of reward.

Our Earth Life Reflected.

Our earth life is reflected into the spirit world, and happiness here reflects joy over there. Sacrifice is a loss or the losing of something, and those who sacrifice here will have to sacrifice over there.

When you can get happiness enough in this life to suit you, you are saved, and the spirit world holds out to you the prospects of a happy reception over there; but if you have made this life such that it has been a burden to you, filled up with sorrow, suffering, degrading humility, and sacrifices, you can look for nothing better upon the other shore than a barren desert which you will have to irrigate with your tears, and make beautiful with the work you should have done while here.

If you cannot make yourself happy under the laws that govern this world you can reasonably expect hard times for a while over there, for the same ruler rules both worlds.

Secret of Salvation and Happiness.

The whole secret of salvation is learning how to get present happiness out of doing good. Happiness is God's declaration of present salvation. If you wish to find happiness when you land upon the shores of spirit life, then live so as to be happy here, for the conditions of this life are reflected upon the other shore. If you would increase your happiness after getting into the spirit world, then get wisdom, for wisdom is the only currency that will buy happiness over there.

Wisdom is the only currency that goes at par in that world to come. Every one should endeavor to take a good supply of this currency along with them, as with it they will be able to purchase all they need. A little of this currency will go farther in that world of spirits, than the prayers of a million Christians.

Reason is God's most noble gift to man, it is the pilot sent from heaven to guide our life-boat through life's journey here and land us safe in that summerland of the spirit world. The man who uses his reason in deciding his duty to himself or his God will always take the shortest road that is possible for him to salvation. This road will be a short one, or one a long way around, according to the development of the intellect of the one supplying the reason, but whether it be the short road, or the long one, reason will finally lead to the winning post.

But the people who take the teachings of any book, or their father, or their mother, or the word of any preacher, priest, pope, or potentate in regard to what they should do to be saved, without first putting it under the strongest searchlight of their reason, are about as near hell as people ever get, and anyone who has preconceived opinions, which prohibit or restrain them from investigating any question touching upon the subject of what we shall do to be saved, is wandering from the path and losing himself in a wilderness of ignorance and superstition.

Reason is our guide from God, and will lead us in true paths, but preconceived opinions are the creations of man, and may lead us astray unless we keep the searchlight of our reason focused upon them.

Take no man's word in regard to what you should do to be saved, unless it conforms to the standard of truth as viewed under the light of your own reason. God has set no man over you to tell you what to do, neither has he given the keys of heaven to any sect, creed or congregation. Every tub stands upon its own bottow and there ought to be some reason for every tub.

Eye Glasses Not Necessary.

Eye Sight can be Strengthened, and all forms of Diseased Eyes Cured without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in the great majority of cases, has been proven beyond a doubt, by the testimony of thousands o' people who have been cured by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." Actina also cures sore and granulated lids, Glaucoma, Iritis, etc., also removes Cataracts and Pterygiums without cutting or drugging. Over seventy thousand of the Actinas having been sold, thereforeit is not an experiment but an absolute fact. The following letters are but samples of those that are received daily:

Mrs. M. E. Champney, 242 West 135th St. New York City, writes: The "Actina" cured me of Iritis, after the doctors said there was no cure outside an operation. I have been entirely well for over four months, can see to read and sew as well as before. I can honestly recommend "Actina" for all afflictions of the eye.

Emily Kapp, 1920 Galena Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, writes: The "Actina" I purchased from you a year ago saved my brother's eyesight. My brother was near-sighted, wore number five and six glasses, and now he can go to school and do all his work and study without glasses.

E. R. Holdbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "Actina" has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office.

Actina is not a drug or lotion, but a small pocket battery, which can be used by old and young with perfect safety, as it is impossible to do any harm with Actina. Every member of a family can use the one Actina for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, or Throat or Head. Actina will last for years, and is always ready for use. Actina is sent on trial postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342N., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely FREE a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General, and you can rest assured that your eyes can be cured, no matter how many doctors have failed.

CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS.

Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address

DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

$3 a Day Sure Send us your address and we will show you how to make $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully, remember we guarantee a clear profit of $3 for every day's work, absolutely sure. Write at once. ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 867, Detroit, Mich.

Dr. Woolley's PAINLESS OPIUM AND Whiskey Cure SENT FREE to all users of morphine, opium, laudanum, elixir of opium, cocaine or whiskey, a large book of particulars on home or sanatorium treatment. Address, Dr. B. M. WOOLLEY, 106 N. Pryor St. Atlanta, Georgia.

809

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

In the World Celestial

is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance medium, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness.

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

President Bowles of the National Liberal League, says: "It is one of the choicest pieces of literature of this marvelous age of books."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1. For sale at this office.

A Study of

Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

By Lilian Whiting,

Author of "The World Beautiful," "Kate Field," "After Her Death," "From Dreamland Sent," etc. With portrait. 16mo. Cloth, gilt. Price $1.25. The writer of this "Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning" has thrown the book into five chapters, with sub-titles as follows:

LIVING WITH VISIONS. "Summer Snow of Apple Blossoms;" Music-Flow of Pindar; Friends in the Unseen.

LOVES OF THE POETS. The Prefigured Friend; Vita Nouva; "One Day, My Siren."

IN THAT NEW WORLD. Plea and Poetry; In Casa Guidi; Florentine Days; Walter Savage Landor.

ART AND ITALY. Individuality of Character; The Clasped Hands; Kate Field's Records; Mrs. Browning's Death.

LILIES OF FLORENCE. Poetic Rank; Spiritual Laws; Modern Scientific Thought; The Consideration of Genius.

For Sale at this office.

In Tune with the Infinite

By Ralph Waldo Trine.

Within yourself lies the cause of whatever enters into your life. To come into the full realization of your own awakened interior powers, is to be able to condition your life in exact accord with what you would have it.—From Title-Page.

CONTENTS—I. Prelude; II. The Supreme Fact of the Universe; III. The Supreme Fact of Human Life; IV. Fullness of Life—Bodily Health and Vigor; V. The Secret, Power and Effect of Love; VI. Wisdom and Interior Illumination; VII. The Realization of Perfect Peace; VIII. Coming into fullness of power; IX. Plenty of All Things—The Law of Prosperity; X. How Men Have Become Prophets, Seers, Sages, and Saviors; XI. The Basic Principle of All Religions—The Universal Religion: XII. Entering Now into the Realization of the Highest Riches. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $1.25.

Can Telepathy Explain?

Results of Psychical Research.

By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage, in this book of 243 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

THE RELIGIOUS SITUATION.

As Understood by a Master Mind, Goldwin Smith.

To the Editor of the Sun—Sir: Your acceptance of my letter has brought me many tokens of interest in the subject to which they relate. Some of my correspondents ask me my theory. But as I have said before, I have no theory. All I pretend to do is to state the case and invite opinion.

The subject is one of interest, practical as well as deep, were it only from its bearing on the future position of the clergy. What are clergymen on whose minds the light of criticism has dawned hereafter to do? Renan and Matthew Arnold seem in effect to wish that the clergy should continue to preach a religion suited to the multitude, while they, the sons of light, sit aloft in light by themselves. But will learned and conscientious men, as your clergy must be, be found to preach wholesome falsehood for State purpose, and, like Roman augurs, to laugh each other in the face when they meet?

There are symptoms also of the disturbance of morality, especially of public morality, by the failure of religious belief. The strange phenomenon of flag worship is one of them.

If ultra-materialism is true, man is a mere development of the germ-plasm. There is no ground for belief in a moral government of the universe. Conscience, if it speaks of a tribunal higher than the human, lies. Death ends all for us, and levels us all. When we die it signifies nothing whether our life has been good or evil. Materialists say that the evil-doer be punished by remorse for the wasted life. But how can his life be said to have been wasted if he has supped full of pleasure gratified every passion and bilked human justice? Positivism tells us that we shall live for good or evil in the future of the race. What interest when we have personally ceased to be, shall we have in the future of the race? After all, in what will the race end? Science says in a physical catastrophe.

Dogmatic and miraculous Christianity we resign. But the vital principles of Christianity, the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, still rest on their historical and moral evidences as a key to the moral problem of our being. At the same time Christianity, by throwing off dogma and miracle, is rid of one of its heaviest burdens. There is no longer a barrier between Christendom and the rest of humanity. The term "heathen" becomes unmeaning. Socrates, Epictetus, Marcus Aurelius are no longer consigned as out of the pale of salvation to the uncovenanted mercies of God. We live henceforth under an ampler sky.

THERE IS NO USE IN GUESSING AT THE NATURE OF THE POWER WHICH FILLS AND MOVES THE UNIVERSE. WE CANNOT HOPE TO DELINEATE OR DEFINE THE INCONCEIVABLE.

The world visible to us presents to our senses a perplexing mixture of that which to us is good with that which to us is evil, of order with disorder, of beneficence with cruelty, of beauty with the unbeautiful. We cannot solve the mystery. Bridgewater Treatises, picking out instances of order and beneficence and saying nothing about the opposites, no longer afford us help. Human excellence is attainable only through effort, which implies a struggle with evil. This, apart from revelation, is apparently the only hint of a solution that we have. Yet it is difficult to believe that rational being is confined to this planet or that nothing speaks to us through the majesty and glory of the universe.

Conscience, says Bishop Butler, a keen anatomist of human nature, would rule the world. Conscience tells us that as we do well or ill it will be well or ill in the sum of things. Is this a mere delusion? Is conscience, or is it not really a part of our nature? If it is, have we any special ground for refusing its evidence more than for refusing that of our physical senses on which all science, moral or physical, rests? After all, what is truth but that which, by the constitution of our nature we cannot help believing? Is any man without a conscience There are men who crush it, perhaps silence it in themselves; but is any man without it?

That notions of duty vary considerably from age to age may be admitted. But conscience always declares for duty as we see it at the time against the forces of passion or self-love.

It may be true that conscience, like other parts of our nature, including the scientific faculties, is developed by an evolutionary process. This does not affect its authority. When developed, it is here. We must, however, be allowed to challenge the claim of the germ-plasm to prepotency and finality. The germ-plasm is the starting point of a development which, carried forward and moulded by a variety of influences, culminates in Socrates. But Socrates is not a germ-plasm any more than he is a particle in the nebula from which the germ-plasm is an emanation. That man had his foundation in the dust we knew long ago. But conscience, moral aspiration, spiritual affection, the sense of spiritual beauty, idealization, are, if our inner sense does not utterly mislead us, higher in their nature than dust.

Let ultra-materialism prove its case, and we accept it, little welcome as it may be. But let it distinctly prove its case. We are just now in the rush of the great Darwinian discovery. We want a little time and reflection to see what the limits of that discovery are.

GOLDWIN SMITH.

INDUCE

Your Neighbor to Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Now is the time to extend the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. It will contain Occult and Spiritualistic news with which every one should be familiar. No other paper published on this earth contains such a vast amount of matter so well adapted to enrich the mind. Send in a subscription now.

THOMAS PAINE—COL. INGERSOLL.

A Desire to Have Them Specially Honored.

To the Editor:—I thank you for giving out my suggestion to honor the memory of Thomas Paine and Robert G. Ingersoll, with bronze statues. If the plan could be carried out I think it would assist some in counteracting the influence of the pope of Rome in this country.

Societies should be organized in different parts of the United States to raise funds to place these statues where they would do the most good, or where the largest number of people would see them.

I see it stated that our government contemplates bringing the mortal remains of John Paul Jones to this country for burial. Would it not be wise and proper to bring the body of Thomas Paine on the same flagship, and bury the two side by side?

In my judgment this country has a better claim on Thomas Paine's mortal remains than any other. I wish ten thousand people would write President Roosevelt and urge him to take up this matter, and have the remains of Thomas Paine brought to the United States in the name of the people of this great nation.

WM. B. KETCHAM.

Mendota, Mo.

"Love—Sex—Immortality." By Dr. W. P. Phelps. Price 25 cents.

THE ETERNAL TREND.

Live who may and die who must,
The work of the world goes on,
And the right will rule, we hope and trust,
When we to our graves have gone;
Though sin may vaunt herself in her might
And surfeited lie and yawn,
The evil is only the span of night
And right is the pearly dawn.

Live who may and die who must,
The work of the world stays not,
And even our acts of hideous lust
Are a part of the greater plot;
And whether or no we fit in the plan
That a higher pow'r hath wrought,
The evil of man devised by man
But cometh at last to naught.

Live who may and die who must,
The work of the world rings true,
And dark and light in the web is thrust
The things that we mortals do;
And the pattern is wrought by him who sees
As the shuttle glances through,
And the evil is changed to good with ease
And roses are born of the rue.

Live who may and die who must,
The work of the world is done,
Or ever the workers lie down in the dust
They are used and every one;
For the master weaver is above it all
And sits in the blazing sun,
And those who rise and those who fall
Are used, for he wasteth none.

—Chicago Chronicle.

What Shall We Do to Be Saved?

A Lecture Delivered by James L. Dow, before the First Spiritual Society of Manhattan, Kansas.

What shall we do to be saved? To be saved from suffering and sorrow here and hereafter?

This is the most important question that the human family ever had to deal with. From away back in the dim distance of the past, as far back as we have any reliable record, people were asking this question. And all through the myriads of years and thousands of generations that have passed since then, up to the present time this has always been the question most frequently asked, and the one that has never been satisfactorily answered to any considerable number of people.

The answer to this question has been so varied according to the belief and spiritual development of whoever undertook to answer it, that the great majority of the people have become dazed upon the subject and hardly know which way to steer. The various requirements of salvation as given out by different people have been easy and natural, hard and difficult, or tyrannical and cruel, just according to the character given to God by the people, and the character given to God is always in harmony with the moral and spiritual development of the people.

God and Moral and Spiritual Development.

In order to show you how perfectly the character of a God who is worshiped by a people conforms to the moral and spiritual development of that people I wish to call your attention to the inhabitants of Carthage, when that city was in its greatest glory. The inhabitants worshiped the sun and the moon, and were called fire-worshipers, as they believed the sun was fire, and their Magi, or Oracles claimed to have received some of this fire direct from the sun, and they called it holy fire and kept it continually burning upon their altar in the temple, and they worshiped it as a God or a representative of their God, and the whole nation would have gone into mourning if by any means this fire should have become extinguished. These people were warlike, as were all the people at that time, and while they were fairly honorable in their dealings with their own people who devoutly worshiped their God, they were most unjust and cruel to all others. Their common enemy if captured was usually put to the sword, while their leaders were subjected to the most inhuman torture that they could devise. (As in the case of their torture of Regulus, the Roman general.) Cutting off the hands and feet, pulling out the tongue by the root, cutting off the eyelids, and burning at the stake with a slow fire, was no uncommon occurrence with them. Their rulers were haughty, selfish and proud, and extremely jealous of anyone whom they might have the least suspicion of aspiring to their position, and they usually put to death all their own relatives, as well as the relatives of all former rulers, so there should be no legal aspirant for the throne.

So afraid were these rulers that some other citizen would get some of the praise of the people, that they usually put to death any one whom the people praised for justice, wisdom, or bravery; like the god the worshiped they required, and demanded all the praise, and to assure themselves that they were getting it, they required continual demonstrations from the people that they were still loyal, and loved them.

The people were often required to bow their heads down to the dust and worship them as a semi-God. And unless the people continued to demonstrate this attitude towards their ruler, the ruler became jealous and angry, and the people had to pay dearly for it.

The Character Attributed to God.

The character of the people and their rulers being such as I have stated, it becomes easy to understand what kind of a character they would be likely to attribute to their God. God being a ruler of rulers, and king of kings, they gave him the character of their ruler, only greatly intensified. They believed that God required and demanded their most humble submission to his will. That he required daily sacrifices in order to assure him that the people was loyal to him. They believed that while the people could only torture the followers of other Gods while physical life should last, their god could and would torture them through all eternity in a burning lake of holy fire. They not only believed that God was jealous of other Gods, but they believed that he was subject to fits of anger which could only be appeased by a great sacrifice, which in many cases was as heartless and cruel as the torture to which they subjected some of their prisoners.

Believed Their God Had Become Angry.

About the year 500 B. C., the inhabitants of Carthage saw a Roman army approaching the city. They believed that for some reason their God had become angry and was leading this Roman army against them for the purpose of destroying them. And they cried out: "What shall we do to be saved?"

The wise men of the city were hurriedly called together to see if they could find out the cause of the displeasure of their God, and after looking the matter over they unanimously agreed that the cause of his anger was because they had been offering up as a sacrifice to him the children of the poor people, and the children of their slaves; they believed that their God demanded the best of everything, and was angry because they had offered up to him the children of the poorer class. They therefore quickly decided that the only thing that would save them, and cause God to again smile upon them, was to offer up to him some of the best of their children. So they went among the rich, and noble of birth, and compelled two hundred mothers to each bring one of their best children to a place designated for the sacrifice.

Cries of Babies in Holy Fire.

At this place they had a large bronzed statue with its arms stretched out and slightly downward, and under these arms they had a roaring, seething furnace of holy fire, and before the eyes of their natural protectors (their mothers) these little innocent and unsuspecting children were laid one at a time upon the hot arms of this unfeeling statue, and there while calling piteously to its mother to help, it clung to these hot, unfeeling arms in its endeavor to escape the fiery furnace which was beneath it, until it was exhausted, when it fell into that terrible pit below where its cries were smothered in that liquid holy fire; when this horrid scene was again repeated with another child, and this thought to be holy exhibition was continued until two hundred were thus cruelly forsaken by their mothers, and were allowed to fall headlong into this fiery furnace to satisfy an angry God. And if one of these mothers let drop a sigh, or shed one tear for her suffering child, she was severely punished, and the offering of the child became useless, as they believed that God would not accept a sacrifice unless it was freely and willingly given. Here we see what the wise men of that city gave as an answer to the question, What shall we do to be saved? The people of that city being cruel and heartless towards those who sinned against them, believed that God would require cruel sacrifices of them, if guilty of sin.

Some Very Unpleasant Truths.

You may say these Carthaginians were pagans, and therefore nothing better could be expected of them; but we find recorded in the eleventh chapter of Judges that Jephtha offered up his only child as a burnt offering in fulfillment of a contract he made with the God of the Bible. You may urge that this was in the early part of the world's history, and that the people had made but little advancement, and that Jephtha was not a follower of Christ. But what are you going to do with those pious Catholics who burnt hundreds and I think I could safely say thousands in slow fires for Jesus' sake and for the love they entertained for their God. And how about John Calvin, the founder of the Presbyterian church, who had a little argument with Servetus on a theological subject, in which they disagreed, and a long time afterwards Calvin, learning that Servetus was in Geneva and stopping at a hotel, had him arrested and kept him in a dungeon, and afterwards had him burnt at the stake with a slow fire made of green wood, and this he did in his zeal to please the God of the Presbyterian church, and make sure that he (John Calvin) would be saved.

The Catholics even at the present day are shutting many human beings out from the world in the unwholesome air of their prisons called by them nunneries, where the world is not permitted to know of the sorrow and premature deaths that occur there in the name of Jesus and for the love of God.

And it is a notorious fact that even in this enlightened day and generation a large majority of the people believe that God requires sacrifices.

All the Christian churches are still offering up sacrifices to please God. They believe we should abstain from many harmless pleasures, that we should do penance, that we should contribute to the church, give liberally to the missionary fund in an endeavor to convert the heathen to Christianity; they require us to become members of their church, and love and worship their God; they say we must be baptized according to the rules of the church and the requirements of God, that we must fast, and abstain from meat on Friday, and above all we must not forget to pray. Now these and many other sacrifices are believed by Christians to be demanded by their God, and essential to our salvation.

The Pagans and Early Christians.

While the Christians of the present day look with horror upon some of the sacrifices of the Pagans and early Christians, they fail to see that they are following in the path marked out by these Pagans and early Christians, and that their present practices only differ from theirs in degree. They believe that their God gets angry at their shortcomings, and becomes pleased with their sacrifices; they seem to think him very jealous of other Gods, and will severely punish any who dare to worship any other god but him. They seem to think that God requires daily exhibitions of your love in order that he may know that you are still loyal to him.

The only difference between the Pagan God at Carthage and the present Christian God, is that the present Christian God (like the people) is a little less bloodthirsty. He gets angry just as quick (although the Bible says that anger rests only in the breasts of fools) and requires something that will mortify the flesh in order to get him good-natured again. He seems only to be delighted when we are sacrificing our time, or our money to him, or humbling ourselves in the dust before him. He seems to retain all the characteristics of those early rulers as regards their vanity, and love of praise, but is a little more moderate in regard to the amount of pay which he demands in return for his love.

What Shall We Do to Be Saved?

Well, if you are ever saved you will have to save yourself, God will never do it. God in the beginning did for man all he will ever do. He placed within his reach happiness which he can obtain only by right action. Suffering comes entirely from transgression, and God will never transgress his own law to relieve the sinner. God never sympathizes with the afflicted, and is never displeased with those who are happy. He loves the vilest sinner just as devotedly as he does the most devoted saint; he is no respecter of persons, all creation is his. If a man transgress a human law, the penalty of which is one hundred dollars, after he has paid that fine he stands equal before the law with one who never transgressed it. And thus it is with God's law; suffering always follows quick upon the heels of wrong doing, and happiness is sure to come from all good acts. This is the never-varying law of God. God never punishes the sinner, or rewards the saint. The seeming rewards and punishments are but the natural operations of law.

God does not require sacrifices of any kind, all sacrifices are sacrilegious. They originated and belong to the dark ages.

Something About the True God.

The true God does not get angry at the transgressor who is always paying the full penalty, neither are his smiles bought by flattery, devotion, love, or money. God does not demand that we worship him, for that would be vain in him, and could do neither him nor us any good. God does not demand our love, for love cannot be forced, neither can it be resisted if the being is lovable. God does not either demand, hear or answer our prayers, and prayer is but another branch of heathen sacrifices, and has never been known to move God in any direction. When President Garfield was shot and lay hovering between life and death, the whole Christian world and many others were asking God to spare his life, but God was not moved. When the Slocum (loaded with over thirteen hundred human beings mostly mothers and their children, who were members of a Sunday-school, and going to a picnic to celebrate their devotion to their God) took fire and the most heartrending appeals were sent up to save these dear children, and while these mothers did not think it too much for them to cling with their hands to redhot iron rods until their hands were baked fast to these rods in a vain attempt to save their children, his children, God was not moved, although it seemed sufficient to move a heart of stone. If a man falls into the water where it is over his head, and he comes up and cries out: "O, Lord, what shall I do to be saved?" the only intelligent answer he could possibly receive either from man or God would be—swim. To believe that God will by any special act interfere with our life here or hereafter, or in any manner have anything to do with our salvation, requires us to put our reason under our feet, and close our eyes to the most palpable self-evident facts.

The Magnitude of the Planets.

Let us go out into the starlight and behold the millions of worlds that come within the range of our vision, which are a thousand times larger than this world, whirling through space with the rapidity of a rifle ball, and yet many of them have not been able to make one revolution of its orbit since the time the Bible claims the world was made; some are known to take twenty-six thousand years to make one revolution of its orbit.

Then let us come within our own little planetary system and see how little our world is. Uranus is about 300 times as large as the earth, Neptune is 400 times as large, Saturn is 700 times as large, Jupiter is 1300 times as large, and you could tumble a half-dozen worlds like this with all its inhabitants into one of those little pock marks that are to be seen on the face of our sun, and then the depression would not be nearly full.

This earth compares in size to the visible universe about like a grain of mustard seed to this world. And then it is not reasonable, in view of the fact that there is no end to space, to suppose that the visible universe is one-millionth part of the created worlds.

Millions Upon Millions of Worlds.

When we contemplate the vastness of these millions upon millions of worlds whose size is almost incomprehensible, and which move upon exact time and in perfect order, whose actions have never been interfered with by God since they were created and placed under law, does it not make you a little tired to think of millions upon millions of people all over the world asking and expecting this almighty creator who was never known to violate or suspend one of his laws, to come down and fix up some little matter of law with them?

Prayer is but a relic of paganism, it is not only useless, as has been demonstrated thousands of times in the most thorough manner, but it is a foolish waste of time. We have nothing to pray for, we have nothing to ask for. If we ask for his love we are asking for what we already have, for God loves his entire creation down to the smallest worm. Had we ought to ask for mercy and expect to receive it from God, when mercy is always unjust unless the penalties are unjust or excessive? Do you think the penalties attached to God's laws are excessive or unjust? Had we ought to ask God to save us, when he has placed at the feet of every human being a ladder upon which we can climb to salvation? Some say we are poor, mean, low, degraded sinners, and not worthy of salvation, or preserving in any manner. Does it not look like a gross and inexcusable insult to God to talk like that about his works. Men would get mad if you should talk like that about any of their works.

If God's work in making man was such a teetotal failure, why did he not at once destroy him, and try it again? Why do Christians condemn man and praise all the rest of his works? When their Bible credits God with saying after he had created man, that he saw everything which he had created, and behold it was very good. (Genesis 1:31). No, my friends, God has not been disappointed in man; man is all that God expected of him.

As I have told you many things that man does which do not work for his salvation, I will now tell you about something that will save you.

In the first place all good acts which do not amount to a sacrifice will make you happier here and lay up happiness for you hereafter.

As you cannot buy your way into heaven, anything given, or done in order to lay up treasure in heaven will be found to be a failure.

Must Do Good Because We Like to.

It is those things that we do that bring us happiness here, that will lay up joy for us hereafter. If we do a thing because we think it is a duty, or because we think it will make us happier in another world, it at once becomes a sacrifice, and all sacrifices deface our mansion in heaven rather than beautify it. The stranger traveling through a strange country who lifts a crying child out of a mud-hole, cleans off its clothes and gives it a nickel to make it forget its troubles, and passes on to other countries without giving his name or residence, and having no thought of God at the time, has done more for his salvation than the man who builds a hundred ten thousand dollar public libraries as a monument to his name. If we would be saved we must do good because we like to do good, and not for a reward or for the fear of punishment.

The man who is restrained from stealing only by the fear of the law, is a moral thief, as much so as the one who takes his chances and does steal. The man who quits sinning for the fear of God or his punishment is still a sinner. The elders who went out on the ice barefooted down in Pennsylvania and baptised a woman eighty years old, through the ice, that she might be saved and they strengthen their chances of salvation, would have sent more solid material to the spirit world with which to erect a mansion if they had kept their shoes on and stayed in the house and played a game of blind man's buff with the old lady, for they might have given each other a little pleasure without hope of reward.

Our Earth Life Reflected.

Our earth life is reflected into the spirit world, and happiness here reflects joy over there. Sacrifice is a loss or the losing of something, and those who sacrifice here will have to sacrifice over there.

When you can get happiness enough in this life to suit you, you are saved, and the spirit world holds out to you the prospects of a happy reception over there; but if you have made this life such that it has been a burden to you, filled up with sorrow, suffering, degrading humility, and sacrifices, you can look for nothing better upon the other shore than a barren desert which you will have to irrigate with your tears, and make beautiful with the work you should have done while here.

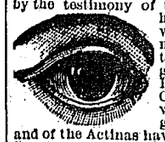
If you cannot make yourself happy under the laws that govern this world you can reasonably expect hard times for a while over there, for the same ruler rules both worlds.

Secret of Salvation and Happiness.

The whole secret of salvation is learning how to get present happiness out of doing good. Happiness is God's declaration of present salvation. If you wish to find happiness when you land upon the shores of spirit life, then live so as to be happy here, for the conditions of this life are reflected upon the other shore. If you would increase your happiness after getting into the spirit world, then get wisdom, for wisdom is the only currency that will buy happiness over there.

Wisdom is the only currency that goes at par in that world to come. Every one should endeavor to take a good supply of this currency along with them, as with it they will be able to purchase all they need. A little of this currency will go farther in that world of spirits, than the prayers of a million Christians.

Reason is God's most noble gift to man, it is the pilot sent from heaven to guide our life-boat through life's journey here and land us safe in that summer-land of the spirit world. The man who uses his reason in deciding his duty to himself or his God will always take the shortest road that is possible for him to salvation. This road will be a short one, or one a long way around, according to the development of the intellect of the one supplying the reason, but whether it be the short road, or the long one, reason will finally lead to the winning post.



But the people who take the teachings of any book, or their father, or their mother, or the word of any preacher, priest, pope, or potentate in regard to what they should do to be saved, without first putting it under the strongest searchlight of their reason, are about as near hell as people ever get, and anyone who has preconceived opinions, which prohibit or restrain them from investigating any question touching upon the subject of what we shall do to be saved, is wandering from the path and losing himself in a wilderness of ignorance and superstition.

Reason is our guide from God, and will lead us in true paths, but preconceived opinions are the creations of man, and may lead us astray unless we keep the searchlight of our reason focused upon them.

Take no man's word in regard to what you should do to be saved, unless it conforms to the standard of truth as viewed under the light of your own reason. God has set no man over you to tell you what to do, neither has he given the keys of heaven to any sect, creed or congregation. Every tub stands upon its own bottow and there ought to be some reason for every tub.

Eye Glasses Not Necessary.

Eye Sight can be Strengthened, and all forms of Diseased Eyes Cured without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in the great majority of cases, has been proven beyond a doubt, by the testimony of thousands o' people who have been cured by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." Actina also cures sore and granulated lids, Glaucoma, Iritis, etc., also removes Cataracts and Pterygiums without cutting or drugging. Over seventy thousand of the Actinas having been sold, thereforeit is not an experiment but an absolute fact. The following letters are but samples of those that are received daily:

Mrs. M. E. Champney, 242 West 135th St. New York City, writes: The "Actina" cured me of Iritis, after the doctors said there was no cure outside an operation. I have been entirely well for over four months, can see to read and sew as well as before. I can honestly recommend "Actina" for all afflictions of the eye.

Emily Kapp, 1920 Galena Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, writes: The "Actina" I purchased from you a year ago saved my brother's eyesight. My brother was near-sighted, wore number five and six glasses, and now he can go to school and do all his work and study without glasses.

E. R. Holdbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "Actina" has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office.

Actina is not a drug or lotion, but a small pocket battery, which can be used by old and young with perfect safety, as it is impossible to do any harm with Actina. Every member of a family can use the one Actina for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, or Throat or Head. Actina will last for years, and is always ready for use. Actina is sent on trial postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342N., 969 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely FREE a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General, and you can rest assured that your eyes can be cured, no matter how many doctors have failed.

CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS.

Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address

DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

$3 a Day Sure Send us your address and we will show you how to make $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully, remember we guarantee a clear profit of $3 for every day's work, absolutely sure. Write at once. ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 867, Detroit, Mich.

Dr. Woolley's PAINLESS OPIUM AND Whiskey Cure SENT FREE to all users of morphine, opium, laudanum, elixir of opium, cocaine or whiskey, a large book of particulars on home or sanatorium treatment. Address, Dr. B. M. WOOLLEY, 106 N. Pryor St. Atlanta, Georgia.

809

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

In the World Celestial

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance medium, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness.

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

President Bowles of the National Liberal League, says: "It is one of the choicest pieces of literature of this marvelous age of books."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1. For sale at this office.

A Study of

Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

By Lilian Whiting,

Author of "The World Beautiful," "Kate Field," "After Her Death," "From Dreamland Sent," etc. With portrait. 16mo. Cloth, gilt. Price $1.25. The writer of this "Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning" has thrown the book into five chapters, with sub-titles as follows:

LIVING WITH VISIONS. "Summer Snow of Apple Blossoms;" Music-Flow of Pindar; Friends in the Unseen.

LOVES OF THE POETS. The Prefigured Friend; Vita Nouva; "One Day, My Siren."

IN THAT NEW WORLD. Plea and Poetry; In Casa Guidi; Florentine Days; Walter Savage Landor.

ART AND ITALY. Individuality of Character; The Clasped Hands; Kate Field's Records; Mrs. Browning's Death.

LILIES OF FLORENCE. Poetic Rank; Spiritual Laws; Modern Scientific Thought; The Consideration of Genius.

For Sale at this office.

In Tune with the Infinite

By Ralph Waldo Trine.

Within yourself lies the cause of whatever enters into your life. To come into the full realization of your own awakened interior powers, is to be able to condition your life in exact accord with what you would have it.—From Title-Page.

CONTENTS—I. Prelude; II. The Supreme Fact of the Universe; III. The Supreme Fact of Human Life; IV. Fullness of Life—Bodily Health and Vigor; V. The Secret, Power and Effect of Love; VI. Wisdom and Interior Illumination; VII. The Realization of Perfect Peace; VIII. Coming into fullness of power; IX. Plenty of All Things—The Law of Prosperity; X. How Men Have Become Prophets, Seers, Sages, and Saviors; XI. The Basic Principle of All Religions—The Universal Religion; XII. Entering Now into the Realization of the Highest Riches. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $1.25.

Can Telepathy Explain?

Results of Psychical Research.

By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage in this book of 243 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

THE RELIGIOUS SITUATION.

As Understood by a Master Mind, Goldwin Smith.

To the Editor of the Sun—Sir: Your acceptance of my letter has brought me many tokens of interest in the subject to which they relate. Some of my correspondents ask me my theory. But as I have said before, I have no theory. All I pretend to do is to state the case and invite opinion.

The subject is one of interest, practical as well as deep, were it only from its bearing on the future position of the clergy. What are clergymen on whose minds the light of criticism has dawned hereafter to do? Renan and Matthew Arnold seem in effect to wish that the clergy should continue to preach a religion suited to the multitude, while they, the sons of light, sit aloft in light by themselves. But will learned and conscientious men, as your clergy must be, be found to preach wholesome falsehood for State purpose, and, like Roman augurs, to laugh each other in the face when they meet?

There are symptoms also of the disturbance of morality, especially of public morality, by the failure of religious belief. The strange phenomenon of flag worship is one of them.

If ultra-materialism is true, man is a mere development of the germ-plasm. There is no ground for belief in a moral government of the universe. Conscience, if it speaks of a tribunal higher than the human, lies. Death ends all for us, and levels us all. When we die it signifies nothing whether our life has been good or evil. Materialists say that the evil-doer be punished by remorse for the wasted life. But how can his life be said to have been wasted if he has supped full of pleasure gratified every passion and bilked human justice? Positivism tells us that we shall live for good or evil in the future of the race. What interest when we have personally ceased to be, shall we have in the future of the race? After all, in what will the race end? Science says in a physical catastrophe.

Dogmatic and miraculous Christianity we resign. But the vital principles of Christianity, the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, still rest on their historical and moral evidences as a key to the moral problem of our being. At the same time Christianity, by throwing off dogma and miracle, is rid of one of its heaviest burdens. There is no longer a barrier between Christendom and the rest of humanity. The term "heathen" becomes unmeaning. Socrates, Epictetus, Marcus Aurelius are no longer consigned as out of the pale of salvation to the uncovenanted mercies of God. We live henceforth under an ampler sky.

THERE IS NO USE IN GUESSING AT THE NATURE OF THE POWER WHICH FILLS AND MOVES THE UNIVERSE. WE CANNOT HOPE TO DELINEATE OR DEFINE THE INCONCEIVABLE.

The world visible to us presents to our senses a perplexing mixture of that which to us is good with that which to us is evil, of order with disorder, of beneficence with cruelty, of beauty with the unbeautiful. We cannot solve the mystery. Bridgewater Treatises, picking out instances of order and beneficence and saying nothing about the opposites, no longer afford us help. Human excellence is attainable only through effort, which implies a struggle with evil. This, apart from revelation, is apparently the only hint of a solution that we have. Yet it is difficult to believe that rational being is confined to this planet or that nothing speaks to us through the majesty and glory of the universe.

Conscience, says Bishop Butler, a keen anatomist of human nature, would rule the world. Conscience tells us that as we do well or ill it will be well or ill in the sum of things. Is this a mere delusion? Is conscience, or is it not really a part of our nature? If it is, have we any special ground for refusing its evidence more than for refusing that of our physical senses on which all science, moral or physical, rests? After all, what is truth but that which, by the constitution of our nature we cannot help believing? Is any man without a conscience There are men who crush it, perhaps silence it in themselves; but is any man without it?

That notions of duty vary considerably from age to age may be admitted. But conscience always declares for duty as we see it at the time against the forces of passion or self-love.

It may be true that conscience, like other parts of our nature, including the scientific faculties, is developed by an evolutionary process. This does not affect its authority. When developed, it is here. We must, however, be allowed to challenge the claim of the germ-plasm to prepotency and finality. The germ-plasm is the starting point of a development which, carried forward and moulded by a variety of influences, culminates in Socrates. But Socrates is not a germ-plasm any more than he is a particle in the nebula from which the germ-plasm is an emanation. That man had his foundation in the dust we knew long ago. But conscience, moral aspiration, spiritual affection, the sense of spiritual beauty, idealization, are, if our inner sense does not utterly mislead us, higher in their nature than dust.

Let ultra-materialism prove its case, and we accept it, little welcome as it may be. But let it distinctly prove its case. We are just now in the rush of the great Darwinian discovery. We want a little time and reflection to see what the limits of that discovery are.

GOLDWIN SMITH.

INDUCE

Your Neighbor to Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Now is the time to extend the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. It will contain Occult and Spiritualistic news with which every one should be familiar. No other paper published on this earth contains such a vast amount of matter so well adapted to enrich the mind. Send in a subscription now.

THOMAS PAINE—COL. INGERSOLL.

A Desire to Have Them Specially Honored.

To the Editor:—I thank you for giving out my suggestion to honor the memory of Thomas Paine and Robert G. Ingersoll, with bronze statues. If the plan could be carried out I think it would assist some in counteracting the influence of the pope of Rome in this country.

Societies should be organized in different parts of the United States to raise funds to place these statues where they would do the most good, or where the largest number of people would see them.

I see it stated that our government contemplates bringing the mortal remains of John Paul Jones to this country for burial. Would it not be wise and proper to bring the body of Thomas Paine on the same flagship, and bury the two side by side?

In my judgment this country has a better claim on Thomas Paine's mortal remains than any other. I wish ten thousand people would write President Roosevelt and urge him to take up this matter, and have the remains of Thomas Paine brought to the United States in the name of the people of this great nation.

WM. B. KETCHAM.

Mendota, Mo.

"Love—Sex—Immortality." By Dr. W. P. Phelon. Price 25 cents.

THE ETERNAL TREND.

Live who may and die who must,
The work of the world goes on,
And the right will rule, we hope and trust,
When we to our graves have gone;
Though sin may vaunt herself in her might
And surfeited lie and yawn,
The evil is only the span of night
And right is the pearly dawn.

Live who may and die who must,
The work of the world stays not,
And even our acts of hideous lust
Are a part of the greater plot;
And whether or no we fit in the plan
That a higher pow'r hath wrought,
The evil of man devised by man
But cometh at last to naught.

Live who may and die who must,
The work of the world rings true,
And dark and light in the web is thrust
The things that we mortals do;
And the pattern is wrought by him who sees
As the shuttle glances through,
And the evil is changed to good with ease
And roses are born of the rue.

Live who may and die who must,
The work of the world is done,
Or ever the workers lie down in the dust
They are used and every one;
For the master weaver is above it all
And sits in the blazing sun,
And those who rise and those who fall
Are used, for he wasteth none.

—Chicago Chronicle.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

ALL THE HONEST MEDIUMS IN CHICAGO RECEIVE THE CORDIAL ENDORSEMENT OF THE ILLINOIS STATE SPIRITUALIST ASSOCIATION, WHETHER ORDAINED OR NOT. AS THERE ARE NUMEROUS FRAUDS IN THE CITY, IT WOULD BE WELL FOR ALL CAMP OFFICIALS TO BE EXCEEDINGLY CAREFUL AND WRITE TO DR. GEO. B. WARNE, 4203 EVANS AVENUE, FOR INFORMATION, IF THEY DESIRE ANY PARTICULARS. SUMMER CAMP-MEETINGS, WHEN PURE IN SOCIAL CONDITIONS, ELEVATED IN MENTAL AND SPIRITUAL TONE AND CONDUCTED ON STRICTLY BUSINESS METHODS ARE POWERFUL AIDS IN SPREADING THE TRUTHS OF SPIRITUALISM. IT MUST NOT BE FORGOTTEN THAT THEY ARE ALSO THE HARVEST TIME FOR THE FAKIRS, BECAUSE THEY COME TO THE RALLYING CENTERS FOR NUMBERS OF PEOPLE, MANY OF WHOM ARE HUNGERING FOR PHENOMENA ALL THE REST OF THE YEAR AND READY THERE TO PART WITH THEIR MONEY WITHOUT PRUDENCE. SPIRITUALISTS AND THE PUBLIC AT LARGE LOOK TO EVERY ONE OF OUR CAMP OFFICIAL BOARDS TO PROMOTE DECENCY, ELIMINATE TRICKERY AND RECOGNIZE ONLY HONEST MEDIUMS. THEY SHOULD PROTECT THE NOVICE AND THE GULLIBLE FROM IMPOSITION AND ROBBERY. THEY ARE LARGELY EDUCATORS OF THE PUBLIC. CAUTION, CANDOR, COURAGE AND DISCERNMENT ARE REQUIRED BY THESE OFFICERS.

Mrs. Dan M. Davidson, 192 N. Gratiot avenue, Mt. Clemens, Mich., writes: "I wish to extend an invitation to all friends contemplating a visit to this noted summer resort, to call upon and receive a hearty welcome from your humble servant, at 192 N. Gratiot avenue, Mt. Clemens, Mich., for they will find the people of this city very narrow—so much so that we are just starving to meet a brother or sister in the cause we all love so well."

W. J. Colville is now lecturing in Odd Fellows' Hall, San Francisco, Sundays, at 3 and 8 p. m.; also Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, at 8 p. m. His present address is 1649 Everett street, Alameda, Cal., where he lectures Mondays and Fridays at 8 p. m. during May.

Frank T. Ripley has the last two Sundays in June which are not engaged. He will lecture and give messages for any society on reasonable terms. He is engaged at the Chesterfield (Ind.) camp-meeting for the whole season. Write all letters to Louisville, Ky., care of General Delivery, until May 28, after that all letters to Tipton, Ind., care of General Delivery.

Guthrie Okla.—Detectives are scouring the Territory and adjoining states for Florence Mae Hayden, a traveling fortune teller, who is alleged to have married four Oklahoma men within the past eighteen months. According to the detectives, she is one of a league which has operated in Oklahoma City for the purpose of marrying unsophisticated and wealthy old men to get their money. The last victim of Mme Hayden was Captain G. W. Mouldin of Marshall. Two months ago the woman went to Marshall, opened headquarters at the main hotel, and announced herself as a clairvoyant. Mouldin was a widower of eight months, past sixty years of age and had $5,000 in bank, owned a quarter section of valuable land near Marshall, numerous town lots and considerable property in Cripple Creek, Colo. Within three weeks after meeting her in Guthrie, but, failing in her alleged attempt to get Mouldin's money and property, she left him. It is alleged that Mrs. Hayden also operated dor the name of Florence Mae Ferrer. It is charged that she married three times in Oklahoma and never secured a divorce. Mouldin is also preparing for divorce proceedings.—Chicago Examiner.

Mrs. Alla McHenry is now located in Excelsior Springs, Mo., at the Saratoga Hotel, and will be pleased to meet all who are interested in occult science. Demonstrations of spirit power, test circles and inspirational lectures on any subject given at hotel parlors or private homes by appointment.

H. Brady, of Thorpe, Iowa, wants the address of Mrs. Alexander, materializing medium, formerly of Muncie, Ind.

Clair Tuttle-Yerance, daughter of Hudson Tuttle, writes: "Mrs. Marian Carpenter, the popular lecturer, has recently returned from her winter home in Cuba and is filling engagements. She was greeted by a large and appreciative audience in Sandusky, Ohio, May 7, where she is a great favorite, and is always warmly welcomed."

Maggie Henry writes: "On last Sunday evening, at the Universal Occult Society we had a fine meeting. Some very interesting questions were asked by the audience, and instructive answers given by the guides of our speaker, Evangelist F. M. Stoller. The meeting was so harmonious that it was easy for the spirit friends to give messages to the psychics, and Madame Lucile De Loux gave quite a number of loving messages to their friends. We hope ere long that every seat will be occupied in the hall. Strangers welcome. On next Wednesday evening Madame Lucile De Loux will hold a test social in her parlors at 2952 Cottage Grove avenue. Many psychics and palmists will be present to give tests, messages and short readings. Refreshments served. All who wish to spend a pleasant evening attend."

Mrs. Nellie S. Baade writes from Detroit, Mich.: "I would like permission to say through the columns of the best Spiritual paper published, The Progressive Thinker, that we have closed our meeting for the season in Detroit. I officiated at the closing service for the First Spiritual National Church of this city. A large audience greeted me, while the mediums present seemed at their best, and many regrets were expressed that we should not meet again until September. I am going to confine myself to the interests of Spiritualism in this city, and at home during the entire summer, but will be free to officiate at funerals at home or abroad, upon reasonable terms whenever called upon. I will be pleased to make engagements for the fall and winter season. Those desiring my services will notify me in the near future so as to arrange dates accordingly. My permanent address will be 411 Vermont avenue, Detroit, Mich."

Mrs. Virginia Bryan, one of our most eloquent trance mediums, will lecture at Star Lodge Hall, 378 South Western avenue, each Sunday evening. Mrs. Bryan's address at present is 748 W. Harrison street.

Maurgerite Mac writes: "Att the residence of Mrs. La Londe, 624 West 63rd street, on Wednesday afternoon a very interesting christening service took place, Mrs. Jeffery Burland officiating, assisted by Mrs. Lincoln. Richard Thomas, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, the candidate for baptism, was baptised in the usual way, with flowers, the flower especially chosen for him, the lily of the valley, which is symbolical of purity and happiness. Tests and spirit messages were given by quite a number of psychics. Refreshments were served and all had a pleasant time, and wish the young man a long and prosperous journey through life. On Thursday evening, May 25, Mrs. Burland will hold her regular monthly social in her parlors at 3019 Vernon avenue. All are invited to come and have a jolly good time. Good psychics are always present to give spirit messages and tests, and Mrs. Maggie Henry is always present to read the lines in your hands. Then Mrs. Burland always has something nice to eat as well as a good cup of coffee."

Brother Curts writes from Hutchinson, Kansas: "The First Spiritual Church of Hutchinson held a very interesting service at the home of one of its members May 14, the medium being Mr. Hugh Burroughs, the trumpet medium. He was securely held by members of the circle and the voices were loud and clear; the guides sometimes using two trumpets at once and many personal tests were given that were highly satisfactory. The fire test was given after a searching examination by three physicians present who noted physical changes in the medium that could not be done by trickery, and the handling of blazing lamps was a very satisfactory demonstration, the heat being greater than anyone else present could bear."

A friend of the Cause writes from St. Louis: "On Sunday evening last, a very good audience assembled at Howard Hall in this city, where the Spiritual Society of Truthseekers hold their meetings. After the opening exercises the president of the society and pastor, Rev. Josie K. Folsom, introduced Dr. Herman W. Faber, a prominent physician of the city, a devoted worker in the cause of Spiritualism, and one of the vice-presidents of the Missouri State Association, who had been invited to address the society. Dr. Faber took for his subject "The angels rolling the stone away," and for thirty minutes he held the audience enchained with his eloquent remarks in which he showed that science is the true angel that is rolling the stone of ignorance from the grave where superstition and priestcraft have buried the human race, and that there is a universal resurrection taking place. Every one was pleased with the Doctor's efforts and many expressed a desire to hear him again. After a few remarks by C. W. Stewart, who emphasized the fact that Spiritualism is a perfectly natural thing, whose proper place is in the category of the natural sciences, Mrs. Folsom proceeded to give a number of her wonderful spirit messages."

Ella Dare writes: "The Progressive Thinker finds its task arduous, in these crucial conflicts upon which Advanced Thought has entered, for surely the sifting time is here. The baskets are ready for the grain, and when the way is cleared, the sowers will go forth with the clean seed, and the fruitage of truth will bless the world."

O. M. Ambler writes; "It seems strange to me to see how indifferent the masses hereabouts seem to be to spirit communion and the laws governing spirit in the unseen and the seen. I for one wish to learn all I can pertaining to the spirit side of life before I pass over. Old Theology has lost its grip on the rank and file, and many pews are for sale and some churches without a pastor, and many pastors are almost minus a congregation—from 20 to 50—and a hundred a big crowd. Some go out to drum up recruits, like commercial travelers, but with little success."

Mrs. Kirchner writes: "The services Sunday afternoon, May 14, of the Rising Sun Mission, were as usual well attended, and the thoughts given out by Brother Randall and Dr. Greer were well received. I make no mistake when I say that Spiritualism has taken hold of a great number of church people who attend our services, as numerous comments were made as to our philosophy and phenomena being so clearly defined, as to convince the most skeptical. Sister Weaver and Brother Thompson gave some grand demonstrations of spirit return, all of which were recognized. In the evening our hall was well filled, and all who attended were well paid for their visit, as our speaker, Dr. J. H. Randall gave one of his grand lectures. Spirit messages were given by Sisters Kirchner and Trafton, and Brother Thompson; those who received them were more than pleased to have such accurate communications from the spirit side of life. Our choir, as usual, enlivened the services by rendering some fine selections. Quite a number of strangers were present; among them a Spiritualist from Milwaukee who commented on the grand meeting we had. We welcome strangers and visitors to our services, every Sunday afternoon at 3, evening at 8, at Mission Hall, Peoples Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt streets. Our speaker for May 28 will be Mrs. V. Darby. Our dancing classes take place every Saturday night in the Pleasure Hall, and our lectures on Social Economics, every Saturday night in Mission Hall. Everybody welcome."

Mrs. M. L. Elliott writes: "I thank you and ask especial blessings on you for your generosity in giving us such grand premium books. I have them all, and enjoy reading them over again and again. I have just read Art Magic again and understand it much better than I did at first."

Mr. Hasman, president, writes: "The Sunday meeting of the North Star Spiritual Union was held in their hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue. The lecture was delivered by Dr. P. M. Esser. Subject, 'Strike and Brother Love.' After the lecture the Doctor laid hands on the sick in waiting. The second speaker was Dr. Koehler, who ably handled his subject, 'Modern Spiritualism.' Tests were given by Mr. Solomon Rennau. The society has sent in its incorporation papers to Washington, and soon will be able to stand pat with any spiritual union. Please become a member."

Lydia F. Stouffer writes: "Recently we have had with us Dr. Coon and wife of San Francisco, Spiritualist evangelists. They held two services in the Masonic Hall, at Cottage Grove, Ore., one at 3 and one at 8 p. m. The evening service was largely attended. Dr. Coon is an able speaker. His lecturers were followed by tests by Mrs. Coon."

Mrs. M. Theresa Allen, the noted inspirational speaker and message medium of Springfiled, Mo., will deliver a course of lectures in the near future at Millersville, Mo (Cape Girardeau county). She would like to hear from other points in the state and vicinity where her mediumistic services are desired. Address her until June 6, at Millersville, Mo., care of Geo. H. Miller, or at the home address, 651 So. Grant street, Springfield, Mo.

O. Merritt writes from Genoa, Ill.: "We have had two very interesting and instructive meetings at Genoa, under the auspices of our local association; the first was on April 12, when Mrs. M. A. Burland of Chicago was with us. She took her subject from the audience, which she handled in a masterful manner, pleasing to all. The lecture was followed by tests, all of which were fully satisfactory. On May 10, Mrs. Georgia G. Cooley delivered a grand and impressive lecture, which stirred the audience to many happy and interesting observations pleasing to hear. Her lecture was also followed by ten as satisfying tests as were ever given in this village. We expect to have a lecturer here once a month at least from now on, and we hope for and believe we see great signs of an awakening to the truths of Spiritualism."

Isabella Powderly writes: "The Englewood Spiritual Union is holding meetings every Sunday evening; also Thursday afternoons, at McDermott's Hall, Halsted and Sixty-sixth streets. I. M. Powderly will address the meeting Sunday evening, the 21st. Mr. T. S. Russell, former president of the Union, will lecture the following Sunday evening, May 28. Everybody welcome. Tests and messages will follow each session."

Harriet N. Crafts writes: "I have taken The Progressive Thinker from its first number. There is more meat and soul-food in one number than all the other papers I ever have taken. Long may you live to send out the glorious sheet."

The official board of the Indiana Association of Spiritualists adopted a program for the annual camp-meeting at Chesterfield. Levi Mock, of Bluffton, president. Political celebrities, sought for as drawing cards in former years, are barred from the program adopted, the talent engaged being of Spiritualistic faith or inclined to it.

Brother Brady writes from Thorpe, Iowa, speaking in high terms of the mediumship of W. E. Harvey. His phases of mediumship consist of hand materialization, writing, and trumpet speaking. A sister came with the glad tidings that she had been released from the grasp of spirits who had continually harrassed her. Other relatives came and fully identified themselves. In conclusion, Mr. Thorpe says: "Our love and very best wishes follow Mr. Harvey to Fort Dodge, Iowa, to which place he journeyed on the 9th inst. We are all rejoicing to-day in the happy conviction that we have communed with many of our dear spirit friends, some of whom we never met before. Long will we remember this season of happy reunion."

Mrs. C. Kirchner, assisted by several other mediums, will hold a circle on Friday evening, May 26, at No. 22 Jackson Place, for the benefit of the Sunflower Club. Admission 15 cents. All the mediums present will be most excellent and a good time is expected.

Mrs. Cella Hughes has removed from 69 Thirty-first street to 124 Thirty-first street, where she will be glad to see her friends.

SPIRITUALIST MASS-MEETING.

We have been notified that there will be a mass meeting of the Spiritualists of the state of Kansas at Topeka, June 9, 10 and 11. The following well known speakers are engaged for the occasion: Dr. G. B. Warne, vice-president of the N. S. A., a forcible and eloquent speaker; Mrs. Virginia Hryan, well known throughout the state as an excellent lecturer and message-bearer; Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, a splendid test medium, the daughter of that veteran, Capt. E. V. Wilson; Mrs. Lull, a fine speaker and message bearer. Other able lecturers and mediums will be present. The musical programme will be under the supervision of Prof. Worrel.

You are invited to the May Party and dance given by the Spiritual Alliance Society, at Vincennes Hall, 3514 Vincennes avenue, near corner 35th street and Cottage Grove avenue, Saturday evening, May 27. Eight little children in May pole dance, one of the enjoyable events. Music by Prof. Norton, the best in the business. Tickets 25 cents. Wardrobe free.

J. L. Foster writes: "To be called to the bedside of your darling child, all bathed in blood and her brains scattered over her face is indescribable. I thought I would die in my grief and loneliness, but at the end of about eight months the beautiful doctrine of Spiritualism dawned into every part of my being. How happy I was when I could realize that she was not dead, but was with me, around and about me. It is this experience and her influence that pushes me forward. I love the truth and I love to defend it. I cannot testify even that spirits can float a trumpet, because I can not see in the dark; but I know and can testify that they can and do talk through them in daylight in the hands of a little 10-year-old girl, as plainly as any mortal can speak. I have also heard their voices outside of any mediums. There is no doubt in my mind, but what Spiritualism is on the eve of a grand shaking up! It will be all for the best without a doubt."

E. R. Kidd writes: "Mrs. Nina D. Challen, our honored and respected medium, whose permanent address is Toledo, Ohio, but whose headquarters have been in Canton, Ohio, for some weeks past, will return to Toledo this week for a short time. While in this section of Ohio, Mrs. Challen, between Canton, Massillon and Akron, has been kept quite busy. In addition to her platform work she is an excellent trumpet medium and her controls are truthful and of a refined order. She has also developed trumpet talking in the light and under conditions that preclude any possibility of fraud. In speaking of this, I do not wish to reflect upon her dark circles, for they, too, are of a high and refined nature. The messages received by the writer and others in the light were, while in a whisper, distinct and characteristic of the spirit friends who delivered them. As message bearer she will follow the speakers at Lake Brady this season: July 30, (Cleveland Day) Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond; August 6, Lyman C. Howe; August 20, W. J. Colville. In addition to these engagements she expects to be at Lake Brady the greater portion of the camp season."

Correspondent writes: "On Sunday, May 28th the Spiritual Alliance Church will dedicate its new home in Vincennes Hall, 3514 Vincennes avenue, near the corner of Cottage Grove avenue and 35th street. A splendid program has been arranged for this occasion—good talent, speakers, music, singers and mediums. Afternoon service opens at 2:45 sharp, with musical selection by Prof. Morton, followed by songs; vocal solo by Ray Brown; psychic readings by Ada Zazelle; tests and messages by Prof Ray; greetings and messages by Mrs. Elmo. Evening program opens at 7:45 sharp. Special musical program by J. A. Bliss, and Prof. Norton; vocal solo by Mrs. Graham; dedication by H. F. Arnold; test and messages by Mrs. C. Kirchner, Mrs. Mary E. Weaver, Ada Zazelle, Dr. Burgess and Mrs. May Elmo.

H. W. K. writes from Defiance, Ohio: "The Church That Pleases God holds regular meetings each Sunday at 7:30 p. m., at 506 Clinton street. On last Thursday evening we held a special service in memory of our departed friends, with a lecture, which was very appropriate, delivered by our pastor, Mrs. Clara B. Wagner. After the lecture refreshments were served and a general good time was had by all present. We also have a lyceum with fifteen members and have good attendance. We use the Progressive Lyceum sheet. Both young and old receive good lessons from it. Edward Wagner and Manford Klein furnish music on the violin for our church and lyceum."

Emma J. Whitney writes: "The fifty mile post of wedded life was passed Wednesday, May 10, by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas S. Kizer, who celebrated their golden wedding at their home, 531 N. Mercer street, Wednesday afternoon and evening. They were married May 10, 1855, at Waynesville, Ill. Mr. Kizer was born in Shelby county, O. His wife, then Miss Mettlin, was a native of Pennsylvania. Wednesday afternoon was reserved for the old people, who called to congratulate Mr. and Mrs. Kizer. At noon dinner was spread for twenty guests, and as many more at supper. During the afternoon and evening ice cream and cake were served to the guests. A number of people from out the city attended the celebration; among them were Mrs. Feldman and Son, and James and William Snarr of St. Louis, Mrs. Mary Stickel of Casner; A. Mettlin and wife of Beardsdale; Mrs. Tho. Sheridan and Son of Joplin, Mo., and Mrs. Emma L. Whitney of Forrest. Mr. and Mrs Kizer kept a small album at hand in which the guests wrote a line expressing their best wishes and congratulations. Pictures were taken on the lawn of friends and relatives. In the evening vows of wedded life were renewed. The ring service was used; both ring and service were presented by Mrs. Sheridan in a pleasing manner. The gifts were varied and beautiful. Among the presents were gold to the amount of $65. Two sons, Ralph and Harry Kizer, with their wives and four children, were present. The guests departed at a late hour after a delightful evening, wishing Mr. and Mrs. Kizer many years of happiness in earth life. Sister and Brother Kizer have devoted their life to the cause of Spiritualism; have been among the faithful few and deserve love and congratulations from their many friends."

D. G. Hill writes: "Sunday, May 14, was another day of enjoyment to the attendants at the services of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, the speaker for the afternoon being that veteran worker, James E. Coc. His lecture was of deep interest, and will be long remembered. It was followed by messages by Mrs. Schumacher and Mrs. Mary McIntyre, which carried conviction to the doubting. The speaker for the evening was the Hon. Ex-Judge W. L. Snell. The ability of your correspondent would fail to do justice to his masterly address; suffice it to say that he is ever a welcome speaker on our rostrum. The message bearers were Mrs. Alice Sexsmith and Mrs. Nora E. Hill. The beautiful music and singing as rendered by our choir is a marked feature of our services, and has much to do in producing the harmony that brings the best inspiration to the workers. The speaker for Sunday evening, May 28, will be Dr. C. A. Burgess, at O'Donnell College Hall, So. Paulina street, between Washington Blvd. and Park avenue. Don't forget the grand drawing and entertainment, Saturday evening, June 17."

Society of the Psychic Forces. Rev. Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt, lecturer; Mrs. Isa Cleveland, medium, Wilcox Hall, 361 E. Forty-third street, three blocks west of Cottage Grove Avenue. Conference meeting at 3 o'clock, and lectures every Sunday evening at 8 by Rev. Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt. Learn the truth: "If a man die shall he live again?" This question is positively answered in the affirmative at all the meetings through trance messages.

D. H. writes from Casnovia, Mich.: "May 14, we again had with us Miss Emma Gibbs, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Mrs. Georgiana Pierson of the same place. At a previous visit they had swung the gates ajar, and set the people to thinking, and the increased attendance at this meeting showed the interest they had aroused. The lecture by Mrs. Gibbs was listened to with marked attention, and, and the seances given by Mrs. Pierson were well attended. All were so well pleased that we have engaged them to be with us again in two weeks. So Truth goes marching on, Truth and veracity go with them, and we would recommend them to any society who are desirous of genuine, earnest workers."

The annual convention of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, May 26, 27 and 28, 1905, at Ashtabula, Ohio. Business sessions, G. A. R. Hall, corner Main and Spring streets. All evening and Sunday meetings, City Hall, corner Main and Division streets. First-class mediums and speakers. Among those who will be present and participate in the program will be: Address of welcome by the Honorable Mayor of Ashtabula, Ohio; George B. Warne, of Chicago, Ill., president Illinois State Association; Mrs. Carrie Firth-Curran of Toledo, O., president Ohio State Association; Mrs. Laura G. Fixen of Chicago, Ill., vice-president Illinois State Association; Mrs. Dr. Caird of Boston, Mass., message medium; F. D. Dunakin, Cecil, O., treasurer Ohio State Spiritualist Association; C. A. Sollinger, Cleveland, O., recording secretary Ohio State Spiritualist Association; Mrs. Anna E. Baird, of Elyria, Ohio, corresponding secretary Ohio State Spiritualist Association; Harry E. Boerstler of Columbus, O., first vice-president O. S. A.; Mrs. Hattie G. Webster, of Columbus, O., second vice-president O. S. A.; W. V. Nicum of Dayton, O., trustee O. S. A.; Thomas D. Bellis, of Cleveland, O., trustee O. S. A.; Mrs. E. Schauss of Toledo, O., missionary O. S. A.; I. W. Pope of Cleveland, O., missionary O. S. A.; Mrs. A. H. Talcott of Ashtabula, O., musical director. Friday, May 26, 10 a. m., music, short address and appointment of committee on credentials and rules. 2 p. m., business session. 7 p. m., City Hall, lecture and messages. Saturday, May 27, business session, 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. Lecture and messages, City Hall, 7 p. m. Sunday, May 28, City Hall, lecture and messages, 10 a. m., 2 p. m., and 7 p. m. We urge that every Spiritualist in the state be represented at this convention, either in person or by delegates. A most cordial invitation is extended to the Spiritualists and Liberalists from other states as well as from our own to be with us. Good music. Reception of delegates, Thursday, May 25.

J. A. Toren writes: "A Decoration Day entertainment and concert will be given by the Society of the Psychic Forces, Tuesday, May 30, at Wilcox hall, 361, 363 E. 43rd street, corner of Champlain avenue, three blocks west of Cottage Grove avenue. An excellent program has been arranged for both afternoon and evening. Rev. Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt will deliver the address in the afternoon, and all old soldiers are especially requested to come and hear him. Mrs. Isa Cleveland and other mediums will give messages at both meetings. General admission, afternoon at 3:00, 15 cents; evening at 8; adults, 25 cents; children, 15 cents. Don't miss it."

W. F. Schumacher writes: "The attendance at the Spiritualistic Society, Students of Nature, at its Sunday evening service, 1565 Milwaukee avenue, increased, and much good has been done to enlighten the minds among the orthodox brethren. Dr. Koehler, M. D., with Prof. Hunt, assisted the pastor. May 28 will be the closing service for the season. Prof. Lynn, the Hindoo, with many mediums will give messages. Prof. Hunt with his juvenile orchestra will be present, the youngest being six years of age. Recitations by elocutionists will add interest to the occasion."

LETTER FROM LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Another Hale Storm Burst Forth on the Calm, Serene Atmosphere of Truth Seekers, in Los Angeles, the City of the Angels.

A report of the boy medium, Milton Baker's expose has no doubt reached you ere this, and for the benefit of Mr. and Mrs. Gullible-at-large, I hope for its reproduction in the columns of your paper.

It seems a bitter experience for the body of Spiritualists (Truth Seekers) who employed this sixteen-year-old boy and his mother, yet when those in the lead, including the president of the organization, as also the treasurer, Mrs. Nettie Howell, who was instrumental in bringing them here, refuse to investigate and test their demonstrations, after being given the warning, they must expect results, for people are demanding truth, not deception, and are unwilling any longer to pay an admission fee to witness fraudulent manifestations, as was done in this case.

While I was one of the taken-ins the first evening, accepting what was supposed a test, yet, before leaving the hall I was fully convinced that though only a sixteen-year-old boy, his "spirit" manifestations were not genuine. I so informed Mrs. Howell, and asked her, since he was to hold seances in her rooms, also to serve at the camp of which she is head, to investigate his methods before allowing him again to appear before the public. I also 'phoned the president, Mr. S. D. Dye, the following day, expressing what I felt could be proven, and his reply was, "Yes, I had my doubts at once last evening, and agreed that it was a disgrace to a speaker and worker, as is Mrs. Lillie, to have her lectures marred and services concluded by such exhibitions."

The following Sunday, however, the boy was again announced in the papers, and the mother was on the platform to offer an invocation (what a farce!) to a large audience, gathered to witness the unexpected. For Mr. Hale, the one person in Los Angeles that all fakes coming this way need fear, had arranged an Easter program to nip in the bud the blight which ever and anon alights on the pure lily of Spiritualism.

I am told the expose was complete. They, the Bakers, held on to their slates, refusing even after Mrs. Lillie requested them to allow them to be handled by the audience.

Mr. Kratz and also myself found the false bottom to the slates in handling them after the services the Sunday previous. Milton Baker grabbed them from us, saying, "Please don't handle those slates." But the truth had already spoken.

A few more Mr. Hales in every community wherein Spiritualism is being advocated would result in its being purified. If there are any such intending to visit our coming camp, I will sound the note of warning, Beware, materializers of the fake order. Leave at home your music boxes, for they are now considered a suspicious part of your paraphernalia. In visiting this center of "Hale" storms, it would be fitting if every member of the organization of Truth Seekers of this city were to hang this motto in their homes, "After Hale, Sunshine," for had it not Haled, the investigating public and Mr. and Mrs. Gullible of the Spiritualists of this city, would have had three months of rank deception given them. This mother and son, I am told, hied themselves to San Francisco, there to tell their side of the story, as all do, and find the easily taken in ready to believe and accept them.

Demand to handle the slates, both on the table and those he passes through the audience; also that the slates be left on the table, instead of him and another holding them, and you will not hear spirits at work—which was produced by scratching with finger-nail underneath the slate. Hold on to the black cloth that he so cautiously places on the rostrum, after placing slates on the table.

In fact, cease to be fools, be men and women.

The writer tried to find consolation in the bible quotation, "A little child shall lead them." Yea, how little it takes, after all, to satisfy the hunger of our souls for communion with those who have preceded us. Is it any wonder we have the supply for tests at our very doors?

We have Mrs. Lillie with us as as speaker for the Truth Seekers' organization; a truer and more noble worker for the cause never lived. She is at her best at all times, and a capable speaker on all subjects; helpful to mankind.

Why supplement her efforts with such exhibitions? If the public must have slate-writing or some exhibition of test work, let them seek mediumship in private. Two-thirds of the public work given to prove immortality, is a perfect farce.

Rev. B. Fay Mills, of evangelistic fame, has organized in this city what is termed the Los Angeles Fellowship. The organization is but a few months old, and counts over one thousand members. Many from every state in the Union have sent their names as members, and great preparations are being made for a world's congress this summer, such as held in Chicago during the World's Fair, at one of our beaches. Some of the brightest minds of the world, liberal, and I presume otherwise, will be in attendance. Scientists of Europe, among them those who shall give to us their results in the search for truth in the psychic realm.

Dr. Isaac K. Funk, of Widow's Mite fame, will also be with us. They are bringing Spiritualism to the people.

I find many of the Spiritualists of Los Angeles have become members of the Fellowship, Mr. Mills giving us each Sunday food for thought on subjects of interest. We can at least avoid the friction and inharmony manifested in so many of our Spiritualist organizations.

Our departed sister and co-worker, Mrs. Dr. G. Hilligoss, then of Anderson, Ind., truly said: "I am teaching a harmonious philosophy to an inharmonious people." Grant that her sweet spiritual influence might lead us out of all this gross material demand for more than honest mediumship can produce, into that field of receptivity where the soul shall be fed, and the eye discern the beauties of that home over there.

M. EMILIE KRATZ.

Los Angeles, Cal.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life at Canton, Ohio, at the age of 67, May 8, Griffith Dishart, an avowed Spiritualist. The services were conducted by Mrs. Nina D. Challen, and her funeral sermon was attentively listened to. Four-fifths of those who attended were not Spiritualists, but nevertheless were greatly interested.

E. R. KIDD.

On the 10th day of May, at the parents' home in Greenfield township, Mich., the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Everetts was born to the higher life, leaving this life in peace, surrounded by his friends of earth, while his angel friends soothed him with their presence and bore him gently away. Angels love such as he. Earth has lost a noble soul, while spirit life has gained a treasure. Services conducted by Mrs. Laura Crawford.

COR.

Mrs. Ida H. Davis passed to spirit life from her home in Elyria, Ohio, on Saturday morning, May 13, 1905. She was 51 years old, and had been a life-long Spiritualist, and was a noble woman. She was married to Fremont Davis in 1891. She was born at Milan, Erie county, Ohio, but the most of her early life was passed at Liverpool, in Medina county, Ohio. She leaves a mother (Mrs. Hauk), a husband, a brother and a host of friends to mourn at her departure, but not as those who have no hope of a continuity of life, and a belief in the spirit communion. The writer was called to officiate at the funeral, assisted by Rev. Cadmus, of Elyria, Ohio.

Ransom Pratt entered into life immortal on May 14, 1905, at his home in Lowell, Ind., in the 73rd year of his earthly embodiment. A native of New York State, he served in its 148 regiment of volunteers during the civil war, settling afterward in Indiana. He was a man liked by all who knew him, commanding respect for his sterling worth and honorable dealings with his fellow men. He was for many years an infidel in belief. Spiritualism came to him as an evangel of the glad tidings upon whose complete fruition he has now entered. He leaves a widow who was his bride of thirty-two years ago, a grown-up son and two brothers, the last named residents of the Empire state. Mrs. May Elmo of Chicago conducted the funeral services on the 17th inst., and on the following morning his body was brought to this city for cremation in compliance with his own direction. His going leaves another vacancy in the circle of neighbors, friends and family as well as in the local household of our faith.

FRIEND.

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, May 28, 1905, S. E. 58: "Story the Apple.

Gem of Thought:—

In the heart of the seed, buried deep, so deep,
A dear little plant lay fast asleep.

"Awake," said the sunshine, "and creep to the light."
"Awake," said the voice of the rain-drops bright.

The little plant heard, and awoke to see,
What the wonderful, beautiful world might be. —Selected.

For information concerning The Progressive Lyceum, authorized lesson sheet of the National Spiritualists Association, address John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

OUR TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

And lastly, our latest premium book, "Letters From the Spirit World," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea.

All these TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.75 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family,—an achievement only accomplished by the Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

WHAT SHALL WE EAT?

The Food Question from the Standpoint of Health, Strength and Economy.

Containing numerous tables, showing the constituent elements of over three hundred food products and their relations, cost and nutritious values, time of digestion, etc., indicating best foods for all classes and conditions. By Alfred Andrews. 120 pp. Price, leatherette, 50 cents; cloth binding, 75 cents.

To many people there is no question of greater importance than the one asked in the title of this book, and no more satisfactory effort to answer it has been made than is to be found between the covers of this practical volume. It opens with a consideration of the purposes for which we eat, and how food material is converted to our needs, and is used in sustaining life.

A very important feature of the work is found in the numerous tables given, showing the results of some 1,500 analyses of food products to determine the constituent elements, comparative food values, time required for digestion, etc.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give what ever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

L. D. Rouse: Q. Why did not the spirit controls of the clairvoyants and others who attended Winans' exhibitions expose him? I am 83 years old and have taken all the spiritual papers published since 1852.

A. This is a very pertinent question, and applies to many other cases. It involves the reliability of such clairvoyants, and incidentally casts a shadow on that phase of impressibility. Really it shows how strong the influence of the circle is on the impressible minds present. There has yet been no means of surely detecting the source of an impression, whether received from a spirit or mortal. Thought vibrations are received and their intrinsic character is the only evidence of their origin. They may come with such vividness that the recipient will accept them as objective and fully believe that he sees what is only a mental impression. Had there been a clairvoyant present, who was strictly speaking, "independent," the truth would have been seen and spoken.

It has been written by spirits who have the cause in highest regard, that frauds have been unexposed by them because necessary to break down the superstitious veneration for spiritual beings, leading to acceptance of everything communicated by them as infallible authority, and above all things self-reliance, and discrimination is demanded for the formation of the best character. The more sensitive a clairvoyant is, the more irresistible would be the impressions from a circle where credulity and skepticism, mingled with crass curiosity.

If we stop to think of it, every member of such a seance, has just as large opportunity to detect fraud and expose trickery, as the spirits who may be present.

C. F. Short: Q. Is it not true that the physical body may be beautiful, strong, symmetrical, or puny and dwarfed, by our conduct, habits, etc.? Does this relatively affect the spirit body for better or worse? So much is said on how to grow a perfect body, is it not of even greater importance to develop the spirit body, for all time, and how can this be done?

A. Theoretically, a perfect physical body is the outward expression of a perfectly formed spirit. But environments make this an exception and failure the rule.

Nor is perfection of form essential, the healthy activity of the organism being the more desirable, as giving the spirit greater power and opportunity for expression.

The body may be dwarfed, or distorted, and yet the spirit be beautiful, and so show itself through features glowing with its excellence.

When freed from the physical body, the spiritual body will perfectly respond to, and represent the quality of the mind. To cultivate the physical body, in order to perfect the spirit, is to put the coach before the horse;

To cultivate the spirit—that is the spiritual qualities of the mind, will by reaction give strength and true beauty to the body.

Whatever cultivation is given the body, as such, has only a temporal relation to its conditions and surroundings. Possibly such cultivation may be detrimental to spiritual excellence. It may result in mere animal perfection. The spirit may become a dwarf in the body of an athlete.

G. L. Reynolds: Q. Why, when a light snow falls on a stone sidewalk, and on a board walk, does it melt almost as fast as it falls on the stone, while it does not melt on the boards?

A. Stone is a better absorbent of heat than wood, and hence becomes warmer throughout its whole substance. Being a better conductor when brought in contact with a cold body, as snow, it not only yields its heat more readily, but has more to yield. Apparently this is a simple question, but it involves a profound principle which has world-wide application.

Mrs. F. E.: Q. Is it possible for a medium to send his spirit band, suppose this is formed of Indians, to interrupt a circle? We have had an experience which appears to favor this view.

A. A medium who would resort to such practices, would probably have for companions a class of spirits as selfish and grasping as himself. His claim that he can develop the faculty in others, and efforts to prevent holding home circles, shows him to be unworthy of attention.

This correspondent says in explanation, that the medium offered for pay to develop the members of this circle, and threatened if they did not employ him, he would send a band of Indians to break them up. They continued their seances, and the Indians came and through their partially developed medium, gave nothing but nonsense and lies.

The threat of this rascal, was the means of its own fulfillment. The suggestion disturbed the minds of the circle, and was sufficient to disrupt communication, leaving the "Indians" out of the case.

Let the members demand the best, and hold steadily for the right to determine the order of intelligences which are allowed to come into their sphere. To have "Indian controls," one must talk of Indians, think of them and thus call them.

The same applies to all kinds of "obsessing" spirits. It is obvious that a spirit can not have more influence than a mortal. They can in the nature of things have a great deal less influence. If a villain come into one's home, he would have a better opportunity to obsess some inmate than the same villain as a spirit. Yet how weak an extenuation to say we yielded because of "undue influence!" The villainous spirit out of the body can be turned out as readily as while in the body, and there is no excuse for yielding or submitting.

There is no more danger of "obsession" of Indian spirits, than of a Indian Massacre. A campaign of education is needed to relieve a multitude from the hoodooism recently cultivated by a revival in the ranks of Spiritualism of a kind of devil worship.

D. L. Haines: Q. What is the creed of the Salvation Army? Are they opposed to Spiritualism?

A. The Salvation Army, founded in 1865, by William Booth, has no distinctive creed, but its doctrines have a general resemblance to that of the evangelical churches, more nearly, perhaps, that of Methodism. Its form of organization is the principal difference. Its military organization, with high sounding official titles, and insignia of office, are exceedingly effective in catching the crowd of ignorant and vicious. Its hurrah method is wonderfully successful with the unlettered and excitable, and that it has been a blessing to many can not be doubted. It does not appeal to the cultured, nor to the reason. It aims to excite the emotions; at the heart, not the head.

Yet Spiritualists should not criticise this astonishing movement, which really is of spiritual origin quite as strongly as their own. Wisely the spirit leaders controlling it, have confined themselves to the purely psychic manifestations—impressional speaking, guidance, and hypnotic control—they have made it a great spiritual movement without giving it the name.

The rank and file of the Army are too ignorant to know whether they oppose Spiritualism or not, or to distinguish it from their own beliefs. The leaders are scarcely better informed as to the source of their power, and usually are bigoted and narrow.

They are further from Spiritualism than the orthodox ministers, and being drawn from the uneducated are not over refined in their expressions of disapproval.

THE SOUL COMPASSIONATE.

When you stand for truth's high meaning,
You must bear the shock and stress
Of the blinded hosts that wander,
Famished, lost and comfortless.
Swayed by ancient superstitions,
Fearing, hating, through the world,
By each impulse of fierce passion
Into deeper darkness hurled.

Blench not when the envious fingers
Seek to tear away your crown;
Shrink not from the vengeful voices
Roaring up to drag you down.
Know, when you are bruised and broken
By the many's malice banned,
Cyril's hatred stoned Hypatia
Cast her beauty to the brand.

Give them back both peace and pardon
From the Truth they desecrate;
Blessings stronger than their cursing,
Love more powerful than their hate.
Yours the mission to enlighten;
Lift and comfort, help and lead,
From the bondage of their blindness;
By the greatness of their need.

Yours to teach, in faith unshaken,
Of the vast eternal plan,
Harmony of God and angels,
Brotherhood of man with man.
From your heights of truer wisdom,
To the brothers held in thrall,
Give with both hands love and blessing
Pardon, pity, peace to all.

BEATRICE ST. GEORGE.

Oak Park, Ill.

THE PINE TREE.

Beneath a giant pine I stood,
A marvel in its height,
A stately monarch of the wood,
A tree of massive might.

How straight the line it marked in space,
In towering toward the sky,
It builded strong its dwelling-place—
The lowly and the high.

In sunny Southland stood the pine,
Its needle plumes in air,
Serene in poise and strength divine,
Majestic, grand and fair.

Its silence smote upon my soul,
And held me in its thrall;
I seemed to see the ages roll,
I seemed to hear them all.

"O, Spirit of the Pine," I cried,
"Thy story tell to me,
The years have come, the years have died—
Unfold their mystery!"

Through tasseled top of waving green,
There swept a pulsing tone,
A breath of fragrance, like a dream,
A melody its own:

"God thought of me, and here I am,
A pine tree, straight and strong,
He gave me to the earth, and man;
To them I sing my song!

"The shifting sands are 'round my feet,
My plumes in upper air,
Where friendly winds about me meet,
With greetings sweet and fair!

"Of time, or age, or sweep of years,
I make no mark or note;
These are, for men, but floods of fears,
On which their sorrows float.

"I love the air," the pine tree said,
"The sun, the earth, the sky;
By living forces I am fed.
I love the low, the high."

'Tis love, I learned, that builds the tree—
This monarch of the scene—
God's sign of strength and majesty,
High crowned in living green.

Austin, Ill. ELLA DARE.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth, $1.50.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

Emotional Religion and Lack of Morality.

Prof. S. C. Bronson, of Garrett Biblical Institute, once said some very plain things to the Methodist ministers. During the course of a paper the speaker spoke very frankly of what he thought are some of failings which are frequently found in the ministry, referring to the ease with which men are allowed to enter the ministry, to the minister's lack of commercial integrity and those who become hopelessly involved in debt and at times repudiate their obligations. He said that he was led to speak from the deepest conviction, because he loved the ministry and was committed to its service.

He said: "A matter which is of frequent embarrassment to the ministry relates to the minister's commercial integrity. It is, of course, closely associated with this carelessness of which I have just spoken; but it is more than that. There are many things which make one fear that the cultivation of the religious emotions is often accompanied with a certain moral obtuseness regarding some very plain business principles. How else can you account for the fact that oftentimes the great trust funds of the charges are appropriated by ministers, to be made good, of course, before the reports are rendered at the quarterly conference? Such a thing as that, if it should occur in the business world, would subject the offender to immediate discharge; and of case of failure instantly to make good the funds, would send him to jail. I think that we are too lenient with those ministers who are hopelessly involved in debt. In all of our conferences we have such men, not many, but some; and there ought to be a cleaning up of this class."

Many who have heard me lecture on ethics and religion will remember the great emphasis which I have put upon the fact that genuine religious emotion, as well as sincere religious belief, is entirely consistent and often co-exists with the undeveloped or degraded moral character. When I was a young man, still in my teens, I was, from personal observation and against all I had been taught to believe, convinced that the religious feelings may be strong and the moral disposition weak, that a man may be sincere in praying to God, in exhortations to a religious life, in practicing religious ceremonies, and yet be morally unreliable, addicted even to the worst vices, and not above committing the worst crimes.

I noticed that some of those who were the most excited, the most zealous, during religious revivals were among the most dishonest and immoral persons in the community, that some of those who were the first to yield to the excitement of a revival, and who were most affected by it, were, in disposition and in habits of life, the most faulty, and the most open to criticism, judged by the universally accepted moral standard.

When in those days I mentioned these facts, I was sometimes told that a counterfeit implied a genuine coin, and that spurious conversions implied genuine ones, and the hypocrites used religion as a cloak to conceal their wickedness. But I was never deceived by these remarks; for I saw that such persons as those referred to were sincere, in manifesting their emotions, that they were, in some cases, on the verge of insanity, so great was their excitement, and that they gave the most undoubted proofs of having undergone the experiences known as "conviction" and "conversion"—experiences real beyond doubt, and believed by them to be the "operation of the Holy Ghost" upon their hearts.

The conclusion was unavoidable, that sincere religious belief and genuine religious emotion were compatible with the absence with those high moral ideals and convictions, and that moral course of life which were observed in many who were unsusceptible to religious excitement and took no part in religious revivals.

I became satisfied early in life that religious emotion has a real basis in man's nature, that it is excited by natural causes, and not by any supernatural influence, that it is not a moral quality, that the religious man may be or may not be moral, that his character and conduct and the manner in which religious emotion is manifested depends upon his intellectual and his moral nature. This ground I took in a lecture I gave in my first in the winter of 1857, when a great religious revival prevailed throughout the United States.

This view I now hold to be correct. Religious emotion and moral deficiency are often about equally conspicuous in the same individual. This fact was illustrated in the life of Guiteau. The notorious James brothers are said to have been very religious, as were their father and mother, and, at the same time, unscrupulously and criminally inclined. This is true of a large proportion of the criminals in our jails and penitentiaries.

Rev. Dr. Schaff mentions the fact that among the negroes of the South, religious "infidelity" is unknown, but that unchastity and theft are very common among them. Religious revivals are frequent among them; but the effect is not to give them loftier moral ideas or to raise them to a higher moral life. Indeed religious emotion when intense often arouses the sexual nature, and, by inflaming the passions, increases licentiousness. Physiologists like Maudsley have noted this fact, and commented on it; and it has long been a matter of observation and comment by those who are familiar with the old-fashioned camp-meeting.

In ancient Rome, as Mommsen tells us, the most unchaste women were the most regular in observing religious rites. The unfaithful wife prayed to the gods for the favor of her paramour; and the man who had resolved to commit a crime prayed at the same time for success and for forgiveness. In Italy, bandits kept a priest with them that, at the approach of death they might confess and have their sins absolved. How many millions in Christendom have lived persistently immoral lives with the expectation of being saved by taking advantage of the atonement scheme! Without a moral disposition, without moral aspirations, they have lived and died, merely submitting to certain so-called religious rites, not for a moral purpose, but to enable them to escape the torments with which the priests threatened them in case of non-compliance.

Men in whom the moral nature is strong are disposed to do right, to live morally, whatever their religious belief and whether their religious emotions are strong or weak. But men may be disposed to do right, and yet do wrong. The founders of the Spanish Inquisition thought that they were doing right in torturing and in killing people in order to extirpate heresy, and so thought the priests when they instigated the expulsion of the Moriscoes, a remnant of the Moorish nation, from Spain. So thought the Catholics when they murdered the Huguenots of France, and the New England Puritans when they persecuted Quakers and put old men and women to death on the charge of witchcraft. So thought the murderers of Bruno, and Calvin when he encouraged the death of Servetus, whom he could not silence by argument.

A moral man with false ideas and having power may be more dangerous than one in the same position without rigid morals. Of this history abounds in illustrations, and Buckle proves it very convincingly in showing the deplorable effects of intellectual error. True conceptions as well as the disposition to do right are essential to moral conduct.

Here science has conferred inestimable benefits on mankind. Its discoveries and its inventions, increasing the means of travel and of communication between nations, annihilating, as it were, space and time, destroying hoary-headed prejudices, exploding mischievous superstitions, broadening the views and the sympathies of men, have educated men practically, as no amount of preaching or theorizing could do, and have in a large measure rescued the world from the curse of persecution which has tortured and destroyed in Christendom scores of millions of lives. The diffusion of rational views of life, of humane sentiments in regard to the treatment of criminals even, the decline of belief in the authority of the priest and in supernatural interferences in the affairs of men, and the large and increasing knowledge of Nature and of her laws, are everywhere accompanied by better and higher conceptions of human rights and duties than were possible in the past.

A few words in regard to Professor Bronson's remarks touching the lack of "commercial integrity" in the clergy. The clergy naturally are as honest as are other men. They are, I believe, for obvious reasons, freer from some of the common vices than are men of other professions and avocations, for instance, intemperate drinking and the use of tobacco. If in paying their debts and in keeping their word in regard to business matters or in disregarding rules and customs which other men regard as binding, ministers are below the ordinary standard, the explanation of this fact will be found not in the characters of the men, but in the methods and the privileges of the profession.

The minister usually has but little business to do, and does not acquire business habits. In money matters he is favored more or less by all classes with whom he deals. He travels on the railway at half-rates, he receives papers, periodicals and books at a discount; he passes free where others pay; he is treated leniently in situations in which others are severely dealt with by business men; his parishioners are ready to condone his shortcomings in business matters on the ground that he lacks business knowledge. In a hundred ways he is favored as other men are not.

He is expected to maintain a high standard in most respects, to deport himself correctly; but punctuality and fidelity in business transactions are not considered of prime importance in a preacher as they are in a banker, in a merchant or in a mechanic. The minister thus becomes a privileged character, not to be treated as other men are. It is but natural that he should come to think that he should not be held strictly to the same rules to which others are held. He grows careless in meeting obligations, knowing that he will be tenderly treated, that perhaps the debt will be cancelled. These careless habits become confirmed with age until the minister sometimes is extremely unreliable and unscrupulous in business transactions, though in other respects above reproach.

So long as privileges which came down from a time when the office of priest was regarded as sacred, and when the priest was not to be tried by secular law, nor to be held accountable to the people, are still accorded to the clergy, the "lack of commercial integrity" in that profession will continue to exist. As the profession becomes more modernized the "exceptions to the rule," now numerous, will increase in number, and the clergy will become more and more like other people in their business habits.

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

A BACONIAN POEM.

Farewell, ye gilded follies, pleasing troubles!
Farewell, ye honored rags, ye glorious bubbles!
Fame's but a hollow echo, gold pure clay;
Honor the darling of but one short day;
Beauty, th' eye's idol, but a damasked skin;
State but a golden prison to live in
And torture freeborn minds; embroidered trains,
Merely the pageants for proud-swelling veins;
And blood allied to greatness is alone
Inherited, not purchased, nor its own:
Fame, honor, beauty, state, train, blood and birth,
Are but the fading blossoms of the earth.
I would be great but that the sun doth still Level its rays against the rising hill;
I would be high, but see the proudest oak
Most subject to the rending thunder stroke;
I would be rich, but see men, too unkind,
Dig in the bowels of the richest mind.
I would be wise, but that I often see
The fox suspected, while the ass goes free;
I would be fair, but see the fair and proud,
Like the bright sun, oft setting in a cloud;
I would be poor, but know the humble grass
Still trampled on by each unworthy ass;
Rich, hated; wise, suspected; scorned if poor;
Great, feared; fair, tempted; high, still envied more.
I have wished all, but now I wish for neither;
Great, high, rich, wise, nor fair; poor I'd be rather.
Would the world now adopt me as her heir;
Would beauty's queen entitle me the fair;
Fame speak me fortune's minion; could I vie
With India's sages, with a sparkling eye
Command bared heads, bowed knees, strike justice dumb,
As well as blind and lame, or give a tongue
To stones by epitaphs; be called great master
In the loose rhymes of every poetaster;
Could I be more than any man that lives,
Great, fair, rich, wise, all by superlatives;
Yet more I freely would these gifts resign
Than ever fortune would have made them mine,
And hold one minute of this holy visure
Beyond the riches of this empty pleasure.
Welcome pure thoughts; welcome ye silent groves;
These guests, these courts my soul most dearly loves;
Now the winged people of the sky shall sing
My cheerful anthems to the gladsome spring;
A prayer-book now shall be my looking-glass
In which I will admire sweet nature's face.
Here dwell no hateful looks, no palace cares;
No broken vows dwell here, nor pale-faced fears;
Then here I'll sit and sign my hot love's folly,
And learn to effect an holy melancholy;
And if contentment be a stranger, then
I'll ne'er look for it but in heaven again.

This poem was first published in Izaac Walton's "Complet Angler," and again at a later time. It was successively ascribed to Dr. Dunne, Sir Henry Walton, Sir Kenelm Digby, and Sir Walter Raleigh. The original MS. was found in 1889 by Dr. Alexander Grosart, who announced his intention to print it, not knowing of its early publication. And perhaps he was also deterred from publishing it lest "the crazy Baconians" should rejoice over it. I date its composition about 1641, for in my tract, "Light on Freemasonry," I have proved that Lord Bacon died only to the world in 1626, and was driven into exile by the secret society he himself had founded, called "Rosicrucian," the parent of Freemasonry. And I affirm that he lived in exile until about 1641, having passed his eightieth birthday.

WM. HENRY BURR.

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

"Wedding Chimes." By Delpha Pearl Hughes. A tasty, beautiful and appropriate wedding souvenir. Contains marriage ceremony, marriage certificate, etc., with choice matter in poetry and prose. Specially designed for the use of the Spiritualist and Liberal ministry. Price 75 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms and Ceremonies for the Use of Liberals." Price 25 cents.

BOOKS FOR ALL SPIRITUALISTS TO PERUSE.

A Conspiracy Against the Republic. By Judge C. B. Waite, author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200. Price 25 cents.

A Few Words About the Devil. By Chas. Bradlaugh, the great English freethought leader, with a story of his life as told by himself and a history of his Parliamentary struggles. Price, 50 cents.

After Her Death. The Story of a Summer. Pervaded with pure and sublimely spiritual thought. Something to make the reader pause and reflect almost to entrancement. By Lilian Whiting. Price $1.

Age of Reason. Being an investigation of true and fabulous theology. A new and complete edition, from new plates and new type; 186 pages. By Thomas Paine. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Ancient India, Its Language and Religions. Translations of the articles "Religion of the Veda," and "Buddhism." The Study of the Sanskrit. By Prof. H. Oldenberg. Price 25 cents.

A New Catechism. By M. M. Mangasarian. A book suited to express the thoughts of men, women and children living in the new times. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Angell Prize Contest Recitations. To advance Humane Education in all its phases. A book especially adapted to Lyceums. Full of enthusing ideas. By Emma Rood Tuttle. Price 25 cents.

Antiquity Unveiled. Ancient Voices from the Spirit Realms. An intensely interesting work, carrying one deeply into the mysteries of the past. By J. M. Roberts. Price $1.50.

A. P. A. Manual. A complete exposition of the principles and objects of the American Protective Association, with a vivid description of Romanism as it is to-day. Price 15 cents.

Apocryphal New Testament, being all the Gospels, Epistles, and other pieces now extant, attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, His Apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. Translated from the original tongues, and now collected into one volume. Price, $1.50.

Apollonius of Tyana. Identified as the Christian Jesus. A wonderful communication, explaining how his life and teachings were utilized to formulate Christianity. Price 15 cents.

Around the Year With Ella Wheeler Wilcox. By Ella Ruddy. Price $1.

Aryan Sun-Myths. The Origin of Religions. A valuable compilation of historical facts relating to the ancient conception of the necessity for saviors. By Sarah E. Titcomb. Price, cloth, $1.

A Scientific Demonstration of the Future Life. By Dr. Thomson J. Hudson. Price $1.50.

A Sex Revolution. By Lois Waisbrooker, author of "Helen Harlow's Vow," "The Occult Forces of Sex," "Perfect Motherhood," and many other works. Price 25 cents.

As It Is to Be. By Cora Lynn Daniels. This is a most spiritual book and gives a beautiful account of the process of dying. Price, $1.

Asphodel Blooms and Other Offerings. A book of short poems by Emma Rood Tuttle. Neatly bound in blue cloth with silver letters. Price $1.

Astral Worship. With a chart in the front cover with signs of the Zodiac. By J. H. Hill, M. D. Price $1.

Atlantis, the Antediluvian World. By Ignatius Donnelly, is a book of rare thought, proving the existence of a continent by the name of Atlantis having existed years ago. Price $2.

Auras and Colors. An Esoteric System of Teaching Concerning Halos, Aureolas and the Nimbus. By J. C. F. Grumbine. Price, 50 cts.

Automatic or Spirit Writing, with other psychic experiences of the author. A book well worth the price, for its valuable suggestions to others wishing the phase. By Sara A. Underwood. Price, cloth, $1. Paper, 50 cents.

Behind the Veil. Written by a spirit in a most interesting manner, and describing his life in the spirit world. Price 75 cents.

Beyond the Vail. A Sequel to Rending the Vail, given through the mediumship of W. W. Aber. Price, $1.50; postage 25 cents.

Bible Marvel Workers, and the wondrous power which helped or made them perform mighty works and utter inspired words. Personal characteristics of prophets and apostles. By Allen Putnam. Price, 75c

Bible of Bibles, or Twenty-seven Divine Revelations containing a description of twenty-seven bibles, also a delineation of the character of the principle personages of the Christian Bible, and an examination of their doctrines. By Kersey Graves. Price $1.75.

Big Bible Stories. Placed in the crucible of Mathematics, they are made too absurd for anyone who can count on his fingers, one, two, three, etc. New and unique. By W. H. Bach. Price, 50 cents.

Can Telepathy Explain. By Minot J. Savage. Price $1.

Celestial Dynamics. A normal course of study in the Astro-Magnetic Forces of Nature. Just the book for mental healers or students in the science. 107 pages. Price $1.

Character Building, Thought Power. A dainty little book and helpful. By Ralph Waldo Trine. Price, 35 cents.

Conflict Between Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper. Price, $1.75.

Child Culture. A small book giving a treatise on how to rear children according to the laws of physiological psychology, and mental suggestioni By Newton R. Riddell. Price 65 cents.

Children's Progressive Lyceum. A manual, with directions for the organization and management of Sunday-schools. Something indispensable. By Andrew Jackson Davis. Price, 25 cents; postage, 5 cts.

Christs of the Past and Present. By Rev. Moses Hull. A valuable book. Price, cloth, 35 cents; paper, 25 cents.

Clairvoyance. A book of 109 neatly-printed pages, pertaining to a system of philosophy of clairvoyance, its law, nature and unfoldment. By J. C. F. Grumbine. Price, cloth, $1.50.

Common Sense. A book of the Revolution, and yet adapted to the present day. A book to inspire the reader to love his free America. By Thomas Paine. Paper, 15 cents.

Concentration. A series of six symbol cards and a valuable pamphlet on concentration, meditation and inspiration, with instructions how to conquer yourself and develop your innermost faculties. By Laura G. Fixen. Price 50 cents.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood, the well-known lecturer. Those who have had the privilege of hearing Prof. Lockwood lecture will understand and appreciate the character of this work. Price $1.

Contrasts in Spirit Life, and the Recent Experiences of Samuel Bowles. Given through the mediumship of Carrie E. S. Twing. Price, 50 cents.

Cosmian Hymn Book. A collection of original and selected hymns for liberal and ethical societies, for schools and the home. Compiled by L. K. Washburn. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

Crimes of Preachers. This book is just what its title indicates—a thorough exposure of the inner life of those elect of earth. A very interesting book. Price 25 cents.

Cultivation of Personal Magnetism. By LeRoy Berrier. Price, 50c.

Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer. Price 50 cents.

Death Defeated, or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young. By Dr. J. M. Peebles. Cloth bound. Price $1.

Death, Its Meaning and Result. By John K. Wilson, a member of the Pennsylvania Bar. Cloth. Price, $1.25.

Dictionary of Dreams. One Thousand Dreams and Their Interpretations. By Dr. Robert Green. Price, 25 cents.

Discovery of a Lost Trail. By Chas. B. Newcomb. A book that will help you see the beauty and joy of life. Price, $1.50.

Echoes from the World of Song. A collection of new and beautiful songs, with music and chorus, in book form. By C. P. Longley. Price, $1; postage 15 cents.

Edith Bramley's Vision. A thrilling appeal to all who are interested in learning how the great forces of the Roman Catholic church are seeking to prevent the progress of liberalism. Price 15 cents.

Elsie's Little Brother Tom. An interesting story for children. Allen Thurber, author. This book fills a need for literature for small folks as there are but a few books, and we recommend this as being interesting and instructive. Price, 75 cents.

Encyclopedia of Biblical Spiritualism, or a concordance of the principal passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism. By Moses Hull. Price $1.

Evolution of the Devil. The most learned, accurate, scientific and philosophical analysis of His Satanic Majesty ever published. By Henry Frank, the independent preacher of New York City. Price 25 cents.

Esoteric Lessons. A valuable book by Sarah Stanley Grimke, Ph. B. Cloth cover. Price, $1.50.

Every Living Creature, or a heart-training through the animal world. By Ralph Waldo Trine. Cloth. Price, 35 cents.

Father Tom and the Pope and the History of the Pope's Mule. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth 50 cents.

Fasting, Hydropathy and Exercise. By Bernarr Macfadden and Felix Oswald, A. M., M. D. Cloth bound. Price $1.

Fifty Years in the Church of Rome. A book that has done more to enlighten the world of Catholicism than any other two published. By Rev. Chas. Chiniquy, ex-priest. Price $2.25.

Force and Matter, or the Natural Order of the Universe, with a System of Morality Based Thereon. A very popular scientific exposition. By Prof. Ludwig Buchner, M. D. Price, cloth, $1.

From Dreamland Sent. A book of poems. Verses of life to come. By Lilian Whiting. Price, $1.

Leaves From the Diary of a Spiritualist Medium

An Interesting and Instructive Narrative from the Pen of that Talented Lady and Excellent Medium, Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vermont.

"Vivian Blind," she exclaimed, "How many times have I told you to let such trash as that alone? Hand me that book this minute."

The girl's cheeks were flushed, her lips quivering and her eyes brilliant with excitement when we entered the room, but as she listened to her mother an expression of angry defiance came over her face and she made no move to obey. Mother and daughter looked at each other for a moment and then Mrs. Blind caught her daughter by her arms and pulled her upon her feet, and snatched the book when it fell to the floor and threw it into the fireplace where a few coals were burning. The girl screamed, shriek after shriek, and then threw herself across the bed which was near and poured out a flood of words and phrases which told plainly what sort of mental food she had been feeding upon.

Mrs. Blind stood over her daughter commanding, threatening and exhorting but her efforts only added strength to the fury of the tempest, and at last she sank into a chair and looked helplessly at me.

As I stood, uncertain whether to remain or go, I saw a dark form standing beside the girl, a female figure whose face was marked by evil passions and she seemed to gloat over the girl with a sort of malicious triumph and satisfaction. I then understood something I never had before. Then there appeared beside me the grandmother and she looked sorrowful and seemed uncertain what to do. I glanced up and there flashed before my vision in letters of light the familiar words: "Love conquers all things," but they came to me with the force of a new revelation. I went to the bed and clasped the girl's hands firmly in mine and looking at the spirit I said—as near as I can recall my words: "You poor soul, do you not know you are bringing sorrow and pain upon yourself?"

The spirit looked at me as if surprised, but the power of discernment was mine and I went on: "When you were in the flesh, dear soul, the world seemed all against you. You struggled bravely for a time, how bravely no one but yourself knows, but at last you grew discouraged and said, "There is no use trying.' You saw your most cherished hopes blighted, those you trusted proved unfaithful or unworthy, the love you sought was denied you and no one drew near to speak a helpful or loving word! Oh, the long, dreary hours of loneliness, heart-hunger, bitterness and despair! Lady, I see them all and my soul goes out to you in sympathy and love. But these things are all in the past and exist no more except in your memory. Yet them go, dear soul, and memory. Let them go, dear soul, and now gain if you will—friends, happiness, beauty, love are all yours if you will take them. Love is waiting for you. Will you not go?"

The spirit bowed her head and wept and I said, "Look up, lady!" She lifted her eyes and saw what I saw, a beautiful female figure clothed in garments of shining white and upon her forehead one brilliant star, and with her was a little child with sunny curls and eyes of heavenly blue. The poor spirit gave a cry and her dark face lighted with the light of a great joy, and the star-crowned spirit put out her hand and said, "Come sister," and the child laughed and—they were gone. Love has conquered and one more soul has passed from darkness into light. Blessed are they who know the power of Love.

I then turned my attention to the sobbing Vivian and said gently but firmly, "Miss Vivian, this is the last spasm of this sort you will ever have. Now listen to me; you are a young and beautiful girl and you look forward every day to a time when you will be free to do as you please and you are building grand castles in the air, and are planning about the wonderful things you are going to do and that are going to happen to you, but Miss Hox, your neighbor across the street, was once just as beautiful as you are and dreamed just such beautiful dreams of future grandeur and happiness as you are now dreaming. Yesterday you were laughing about her, and telling how ugly and disagreeable she is. Do you want to know what has made her so? I will tell you; it is selfishness, outbreaks of passion caused by lack of self-control, and thinking thoughts she would shrink with terror from having her friends and neighbors hear expressed in words, yet all those thoughts have been printed upon her soul, her character, her face, and all who have eyes to see can read them. Now, Miss Vivian, you are going to turn over a new leaf and nevermore indulge in thoughts of any sort that will be a disgrace to you when they are made known, and let me tell you that a few more such outbreaks of passion as you have just indulged in will entirely ruin your beauty, which is only skin deep now and will spoil easily, and then if that handsome young man you spend so much time dreaming about should come along later on he will find you so ugly he will not look at you but once."

From every standpoint I have ever been introduced to, my last remarks were the most unorthodox I could well have made, but they hit the mark as I intended, and made a deep impression that will last until a higher and less selfish suggestion can find lodgment in her mind.

As soon as I had finished speaking I beckoned to Mrs. Blind and we left the room.

"Give your daughter good, entertaining, wholesome reading in abundance, see that she learns how to work, that she takes abundant outdoor exercise, and get her interested in the welfare of others, and set an example by being yourself what you want her to be, and you will have no cause to complain of her hereafter."

Mrs. Blind dropped into a chair and began to sob. "O God, help me, I never saw myself before. O, if I only had known years ago—"

"The past is past," I said kindly, "so let it rest in peace, but the present is yours to do with as you will, so begin anew this moment. You can completely transform yourself, your life, your surroundings if you will."

"I will," she said earnestly "and, oh, I am so thankful to my mother for sending me to you; I am so thankful for this beautiful light that has come to me. God bless you, Mrs. Drury, for all that you have done for me and mine; but, dear friend, there is one more now—I mean Lenore."

"I do not think there is the least thing the matter with her more than a morbid condition of the mind. Perhaps we had better visit her room as we intended.

The room was large and ought to have been sunny and pleasant, but the shutters were closed and the atmosphere was gloomy. Pictures of saints and martyrs hung upon the walls, and religious publications with startling and sanguinary titles lay scattered about. I picked up several books and glanced them through and found as I expected that they were abnormal productions wherein the young girl heroine suffers everything but actual martyrdom from the members of her family, and finally gets so ultra human that she has to die and go to heaven where nothing human ever enters. In one of these books I found a slip of paper upon which was written in a delicate girlish hand:

"I can see the light a shining
On the pearly gates above;
Soon I'll leave this world so dreary
For those scenes of peace and love.
Come, beloved, claim the maiden
'Whom the angels name Lenore'—
Come and bear my spirit o'er
From this dark and dismal shore."

I closed the book. "Mrs. Blind," I said, "Lenore is by nature inclined to be religious and sentimental. If she is carefully trained she will develop into a refined, useful and lovable woman, but at present her mind is in as unhealthy a condition as one might expect it to be after feeding upon such trash as that," and I indicated the Sunday-school books. "Do not, I beg of you, allow any more of them to be brought into your house, but put something bright and cheerful in the place of them. I have discovered that Lenore is very fond of pets. Let her have them to her heart's content, and give her books upon the proper care of them, and see that she does care for them properly, without seeming to interfere. Of course you will see that she does her share of the work, the same as her sister. Be observant, patient, firm, but gentle always, and you will soon have order established out of chaos, joy in the place of mourning and beauty where formerly you saw only ugliness and desolation. Remember the desert will blossom as the rose if you will make the conditions right. If we want to find happiness we must make the most of all the bright and beautiful things that come to us, and the best way in the world to help others is to let alone their bad qualities and make the most of their good ones. Goodness grows more rapidly by cultivation than is usually thought. We do untold harm to ourselves and others by throwing out suspicions and suggestions of evil. Many parents take it for granted that their children are going to do every undesirable thing that they—the parents—are smart enough to think of, and as soon as the children fulfill their expectations they blame the children, when if they had kept their minds free from evil the children would have done the same. A friend once told me about a neighbor of his who had to leave several young children alone for a short time, she she gave them a bag of beans to amuse them. Just as she was leaving the room, an unfortunate idea seized her and she said, 'Don't you children put any of those beans in your noses while I am gone.' When she got back she found every nose full of beans. It is my conviction that 'Don't' has rushed a vast number to ruin. Allowing that there is such an individual as the Devil, he is deserving of the greatest sympathy. Poor old Devil! I tell you anyone would be just as bad as he is if treated for ages in the same way he has been. Just think what a dreadful thing it would be to never have anything but evil expected or required of you, and as age after age went by never to receive a kind word or thought from anyone!"

Mrs. Blind burst into a hearty laugh for the first time while I was there.

"It is very pathetic and very dreadful I have no doubt," she said, "but you do beat all the women I ever saw when it comes to charity. You have pitied every old sinner in this town since you have been here and now you wind up by being sorry for the Devil. However," she added soberly, "you have preached me an excellent sermon, and I needed it badly."

The next morning I came back home. I guess it was time.

(To be continued.)

Gone to His Reward.

To the Editor:—Your paper sent to Mr. William Davis reached here just after his departure to spirit life, which took place April 11. He was a true exponent of Spiritualism, living while here for the life to come. He was one of the pioneers of Spiritualism, being converted while a Mormon elder in Utah, by the then only believer in Spiritualism among them, a trance medium, Dr. Wiseman, nicknamed Dr. Death, and ridiculed by the church in general. After leaving the church fold he was thrown into the river by the "Destroying Angels," a band of church members organized for the purpose of doing away with all apostates. His property was confiscated by the church, and he was left penniless.

Being a sailor by profession, his thoughts were not clothed in the best of language, but what he said came from a true soul, and in every case went home to all kindred spirits. When upon the high seas and the storm was raging, he would sit upon his bench and communicate with his loved one, and many valuable messages were given to the captain and crew, which were fulfilled, to their astonishment, silencing their scoffings.

He many times told the writer in his last days on earth that he had fought the good fight, and was waiting for the rosy door of death to open that he might be free. He had reached the ripe age of 76, passing away peacefully.

It was his wish for the old casket to be laid away under spiritual rites, but his daughter being a Salvation soldier, had the body laid away under their supervision.

He was a warm friend of The Progressive Thinker, enjoying all the good things therein contained.

The tent is folded and laid away in the clay, so to speak. Let us not wish him back into this cold world where storm after storm arises over the dark way. May we enjoy his spiritual presence from time to time, as when he was here is the wish of his many friends and the writer.

Memorial services were held in his behalf at the Progressive Thought Society, corner Pearl and Franklin, Sunday, May 7, where many touching things were said of the departed friend and brother. F. S. CORNISH.

Cleveland, Ohio.

The Progressive Thinker.

A Paper that Never Falters, Never Pauses in Its Effort for the Greatest Good to the Cause of Spiritualism, Science, Morality, Higher Thought, and a Better Life. Never Lacking for Life and the Dissemination of Most Important Mind-Food.

Give Us the Truth, the Whole Truth, and Nothing but the Truth

Spiritualist Meetings.

It is important when a meeting is suspended, that notice be given us, so that inquirers may not be mislead. We want new notices of all meetings being held here in public halls at the present time.

First German Spiritualist Society on the West Side. Meetings every Sunday at 3 p. m. in Garselman's Hall, corner Ashland avenue and W. 13th street.

The North Star Spiritual Union holds services at Perl's Hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, every Sunday at 7:30 p. m. Mrs. Johanna Roennaw, test medium.

Central Spiritual Church holds services each Sunday afternoon at 2:30, at Fasking's hall, 30th and Archer avenue. Conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Howes.

The Light of Truth Church will hold services in Hopkins' Hall 528 W 63rd street, near Stewart avenue. Conference at 3 p. m. Lecture at 7:45. Messages at each service. Midweek meeting Thursday 3 p. m. Mrs. Jeffery Burland, pastor.

The Englewood Spiritual Union is now located at McDermott's Hall, 6603 South Halsted street. Meetings every Sunday evening at 7:30. Ladies' Auxiliary every Thursday afternoon at 2:30.

Chicago Spiritual Alliance Church, in Vincennes Hall, 35th and Cottage Grove avenue. Mrs. May Elmo, pastor, assisted by Hugh S. Fraser. All welcome. Services at 3 and 8 p. m.

Spiritual Church of All Souls, in Hope Hall, No. 220 Western avenue, between Jackson and Van Buren, Sunday evenings at 7:30, conducted by Mrs. R. Squire.

The Kenwood Spiritual Church will hold services every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at Kenwood Hall, Nos. 4308-10 Cottage Grove avenue. Good speakers and music. Mrs. Grace E. Aitken, pastor and test medium. Come and bring your friends.

The Progressive Society holds services every Sunday at 183 East North avenue, corner Burling, at 3 and 8 p. m. Good speakers, tests and messages at every session. Mrs. Hilbert, pastor.

The Church of the Psychic Forces holds services at Wilcox Hall, corner Champlain avenue and 43d street, every Sunday. Conference at 3 p. m. Lecture at 8 p. m. The hall number is 361-363 East 43d street. Conducted by Mrs. Isa Cleveland.

Church of the Spiritual Truth holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7:30 at 962 Milwaukee avenue, near North Paulina street. Mrs. J. DeLong, pastor.

Spiritual Science Society meets every Sunday from 2 to 10 p. m., at Arlington Hall, N. W. corner of 31st street and Indiana avenue. Admission to afternoon meetings, free; evening service, 15 cents. Mrs. Dixon and her daughter, the child wonder, will always be in attendance. Others will assist. These meetings will be continued all summer. Dr. Beverly, president, No. 44 East 31st street.

A Spiritualist Temple has been opened by Mrs. Schwann, at 523 Belmont avenue. Services held every Sunday and Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. Tests and music at every service.

The Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature will hold Sunday evening services at 1565 Milwaukee avenue, corner Western avenue. Mrs. M. Schumacher, pastor.

The Universal Occult Society meets every Sunday at America Hall, 77 East 31st street, at 3 and 8 p. m. R. Gilray, pastor. Evangelist F. M. Stoller will preside at all meetings during the absence of Brother Gilray.

Lake View Spiritual Union holds Sunday afternoon meetings at 3 p. m., at Wells Hall, No. 1629 North Clark street, corner Fletcher, conducted by Dr. and Mrs. Carl A. Wickland. All cordially invited. Residence 616 Wells street.

Church of the Soul, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, pastor, meets every Sunday in room 309 Masonic Temple. Service 11 a. m. Sunday-school 10 a. m. Superintendent of Sunday-school, Mrs. S. J. Ashton. Pastor's address, 3802 Ridge avenue, Rogers Park. Day at home, Friday.

Meetings every Sunday at 10:45 a. m. at hall 210, Masonic Temple, under the auspices of Walter DeVoe, the well-known lecturer. Miss Cora M. Nafe, soloiset.

The Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission holds regular services every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at the People's Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt streets. The Rising Sun Lyceum meets at 2 p. m.

The German-English Society Bund der Wahrheit No. 18, holds services every Sunday evening at 7:30 in Brandt's Hall, 152 E. North avenue, between Halsted and Clybourn; and every Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock sharp, at the National, formerly Garfield Turner Hall. Mr. Frank Joseph, medium.

Church of the Soul Communion holds meetings every Wednesday evening at 8 oclock and Sundays at 8 p. m., at 207 Lincoln avenue, between Garfield and Webster avenues. Lecture, messages and tests. R. S. Ray, pastor.

The Christian Occult Church, United Brotherhood Hall, 3245 State street. Every Sunday evening at 7:30. Test messages given by good mediums. Good speakers in attendance.

The Golden Rule Spiritualist Society will hold meetings every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at O'Donnell College Bldg., South Paulina street, between Washington Boulevard and Park avenue. All cordially invited.

Temple Light and Truth, 370 Wabansia avenue, near Robey street and North avenue. Sunday-school 10:30 a. m. Lectures and spirit messages given at 3 and 8 p. m., by Mrs. T. Loll, pastor, every Sunday, in German and English.

The Hyde Park Occult Society holds regular Sunday evening services, 7:45 o'clock, at 319 E. 55th street, between Kimbark and Monroe avenues. Jackson Park cars pass the door. The best talent available will be secured for all meetings. To spread the truth is the object of this society. Address all communications to Miss Eva L. Stewart, corresponding secretary, 543 E 55th street. Entrance to hall, 319 E. 55th street.

The Chicago Spiritualists' League holds its meetings the first Tuesday evening of each month, at Kimball Hall, 243 Wabash avenue. Dr. Geo. B. Warne, president; O. E. Kropp, 5481 Kimbark avenue, secretary. The League wishes every Spiritualist society of the city to send in the names of all their mediums, stating their particular phase of mediumship. Address all communications to the secretary.

The Spiritual Association of Sixty-ninth street and Wentworth avenue, meets every Sunday at Alberta Hall, 6922. Hon. D. Gilmour will address the meeting at 7:30 p. m. Conference at 2:30 p. m.

The Society of Spiritual Unity holds meetings every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue, under the direction of Mrs. Nellie Kusserow.

Mrs. Virginia Bryan, one of our most eloquent trance mediums, will lecture at Star Lodge Hall, 378 South Western avenue, each Sunday evening.

R. S. RAY, Psychic and Natural Clairvoyant. Readings by mail, $1.00. 607 Lincoln ave., Chicago, Illinois.

READINGS BY MAIL.—Lock of hair, $1.00, and stamp. Mrs. R. Newman, 710 18th st., S. E., Washington, D. C.

Annie Lord Chamberlain's Card.

Dear friends, you can greatly help me care for my blind sister, Jennie L. Webb, one of the earliest mediums now in the form, by writing a letter to a spirit friend. Send it to me with $1, and I will try and get reply by independent writing or whispers. Address Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, Milford Mass.

MYSELF CURED I will gladly inform anyone addicted to COCAINE, MORPHINE, OPIUM OR LAUDANUM, of a never-failing harmless Home Cure. Address MRS. M. F. BALDWIN, Box 1212 Chicago, Ill.

MADAM THERESE SHAGREN, Is the most gifted medium and psychic in the world to-day; her testimonials from all parts of the globe speak of her as a marvel; call and read them and receive a free life reading, or send lock of hair, date of birth and 3 stamps for free reading by mail, with answers to 3 questions; or full life reading, 50 cents in stamps. Address 19 Ewing Place, B., San Francisco Cal.

Free Psychic Diagnosis.

J. A. Marvin, Psycho-Medical and Magnetic Healer. Sterling, Ill., cures asthma, bronchial troubles, goiter, paralysis, rheumatism, brain, spinal, stomach, liver, kidney and female troubles, where others have failed. For diagnosis send name, age, married or single, with lock of hair (no symptoms), and six cents in stamps.

TO THE SICK.

I extend my Brotherly hand and earnestly request that each and every reader of this paper write for my Free BOOKLETS, on Cures by NATURE'S FORCES. I have cured thousands in all parts of the United States, and nearly every port and entry in the world. I have good news, for 30 days only, to all sick people—whether rich or poor. Write this very minute, as this opportunity may never come to you again.

Address DR. M. ROGERS, V. D., Union City, Mich., U. S. A.

PLEASE READ THIS.

If sick write me; will give you a free examination and surely cure you. I cure when all others fail. Nervous exhaustion and lost vigor of both sexes successfully treated. Great success with diseases of children. Write in own handwriting, giving name, age, sex, weight, leading symptom, and five 2-cent stamps, and receive a correct diagnosis, worth dollars to you. For children send lock of hair.

FRANCES L. LOUCKS, 85 Warren St., Stoneham, Mass.

To Every Reader of This Paper:

Do you want to obtain the spirit of Knowledge and Wisdom? Do you desire the gift of Healing? Do you wish to become a Prophet or Seer? Do you wish to be a Discerner of Spirits? Do you wish to become a True Master and Medium? If you want any or all of these things we have an important message for you. Write us at once.

The Philosophers of the Living Fire. Union City, Mich.

FRED. P. EVANS,

The Noted Psychic for Independent Slate Writing and Clairvoyance,

Has recently left New York, and is now located at 1112 Eddy St., San Francisco, Cal. Send stamp for circular on Mediumship.

BODY AND SOUL

BY J. CLEGG WRIGHT.

This volume consists of a course of lectures delivered in the trance state, and is certainly no small contribution to the study of the soul. It is a good work to open the eyes to the difference between the deductive and inductive process of mind. Bound in cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

Sheet Music. Three Beautiful Spiritual Songs.

"We Are Passing But Once This Way." Song and refrain, by P. O. Hudson; price, 25 cents.

"Satisfied." A reverie. By A. J. Maxham. Price 25 cents.

"The Light of Reason." English and German words; sung to the tune of "Lead, Kindly Light." Price 25 Cents.

LISBETH An Interesting Story of Two Worlds. Elevating, Fascinating and Instructive Throughout.

This work by Carrie E. S. Twing is exceptionally interesting. She well says: "These characters which have brought out the highest and lowest in different religious beliefs, have moved me, not I them." The whole book is interesting, fascinating, and instructive. Price, $1.00.

JIM, or The Touch of An Angel Mother.

BY CARRIE E. S. TWING.

Her dedicatory lines are sufficient to show the spirit of the book as well as the author, it reads, "Because my own children are all under the tender care of the angels, and my heart is hungry for the love of the young, I most lovingly dedicate this book to the children of the world." This book is full of soul elevating and interesting thought. Price, cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

A MASTERLY WORK.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth

By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual conscious selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth, $1.00.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.

Series one, two and three. By Lilian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

The Myth of the Great Deluge.

By James M. McCann. A complete and overwhelming refutation of the Bible story of the Deluge. Price, 15 cents.

Self Contradictions of the Bible.

One hundred and forty-four propositions, theological, moral, historical and speculative; each proved affirmatively and negatively by quotations from Scripture, without comment. Price, 15 cents.

The Religion of Spiritualism.

Its Phenomena and Philosophy. By the Rev. Samuel Watson. This work was written by a modern Savior, a grand and noble man. Price, $1.00. A valuable book for the money.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.

Historical and critical review, with replies to an objection. By G. W. Brown, M. D. Price, 15c.

ANDREW B. SPINNEY, M. D. Who has had

Forty Years' Experience in the Study and Practice of Medicine, Two Years Prof. in a Medical College, Ten Years IN SANITARIUM WORK,

and is a Natural Clairvoyant. He never fails in diagnosis. He has given special attention to eye, ear, throat and lung troubles, also all forms of nervous diseases of both sexes. Never fails to cure piles. If you would like an opinion of your case FREE, write just how you feel with your own hand and hold the letter in your hand five minutes. Enclose stamp for reply.

Address, ANDREW D. SPINNEY, M. D. Prop. Reed City Sanitarium, Reed City, Mich.

TRUMPETS.

The infallible fibre trumpet is insulated top and bottom; shell, enamel, cardinal color finish, $1.50. Guaranteed, better than metal or any other material; very light in weight; absolutely tangible with spirit forces; warranted perfect or money refunded; cases with handles, $1.50. Booklet for all kinds of development, 12 cts, sent on receipt of price.

JAS. NEWTON, 423 Dorr St., Toledo, O.

DR. J. S. LOUCKS

Is one of the oldest and most successful Spiritual and Magnetic Physicians. His cures are marvelous; his examinations are free to all who send him name, age, sex, and lock of hair, and 6 cents in stamps. He doesn't ask for leading symptoms. He treats nervous exhaustion of both sexes with wonderful success, at reduced prices. A trial will convince you. His practice extends all over the land. He cures you in your own home.

Address, J. S. LOUCKS, M. D., Lock Box 1203 Stoneham, Mass.

Academy of Higher Sciences

And College of Fine Forces.

Teaches new and wonderful methods of cure. "Fast becoming of world-wide fame."—H. Tuttle Light, Color, Electricity, Magnetism, Mind, Baths. Its beautiful Diploma confers title, "D. M." Doctor of Magnetics: can be gained at College or at one's home. Books and instruments furnished. Send stamp for catalogue to

E. D. BABBITT, M. D., 62 East Ave., Rochester, N. Y.

AN ASTONISHING OFFER

Send three two-cent stamps, lock of hair, age, name and the leading symptom, and your disease will be diagnosed free by spirit power.

Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker,

230 North Sixth St. San Jose, Cal

A Wonderful Spectacle, Restores Lost Vision. Write for Illustrated Circular showing styles and prices and photo of Spirit Yarma, who developed this Clairvoyant power in me. I can adjust my Molted Pebble Lens Spectacle as perfectly to your eyes at your own home and send by mail, as if you were in my office. Thousands will testify.

E. F. POOLE. 43 Evanston Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mr. Poole:—Your spectacles are perfect. I can say perfection, I shall recommend them to my friends. Ever your friend. E. B. Robertson, Los Angeles, Cal.

STARTLING PHENOMENA.

By my SYSTEM you acquire, in an incredibly short time, the SECRETS and MYSTERIES of OCCULT SCIENCE and the Law of Development. Would I have hundreds of students if what I teach failed to produce results. I give more than value received. My SYSTEM cannot fail to unfold your mediumship and psychical powers.

Whatever your previous training, your failures, age, you can succeed. Let me help you. H. Glasoe, Portland, Oregon, wrote a day or two ago; "I have read a good deal of Indian Occultism and Spiritual Philosophy, but I have found more knowledge in the few lessons you have sent than in all I have read on the subject." Send for my Prospectus and terms at once.

BOOKS ON MEDIUMSHIP,

Clairvoyance. Cloth, 150 pages, by J. C. F. Grumbine. Teaches how to read the future, practice telepathy, penetrate the veil between the seen and the unseen, converse with spirits, know the mysteries. It is a revelation. The only practical book of its kind ever published. Lilian Whiting, Henry Wood, Mind, Light, all adepts endorse it. Price (reduced from $2.00), $1.50.

Auras and Colors.—How to read the atmosphere of persons and understand the appearance of halos, auras and nimbus. Contains a color dictionary. Paper, price 50 cents.

Psychometry. Teaches how to get at the soul of things. Paper, price 50 cents.

Send $2.25 for a large crystal for crystal reading. Address J. C. F. Grumbine, 1265 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, Mass.

The Devil and the Adventists.

An Adventist attack upon Spiritualism repulsed. By Moses Hull. Price, 10 cents.

Force and Matter By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

THE LIFE RADIANT.

BY LILLIAN WHITING.—In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration. Price, cloth, $1.00.

A Very Interesting Book for All.

Philosophy of Spiritual Intercourse. This work contains a graphic account of the very wonderful spiritual developments at the house of Rev. Dr. Phelps, Stratford, Conn., and similar cases in all parts of the country. This volume is the first from the author directly upon the subject of Spiritualism, and has stood the test of many years. Cloth, 80c.; postage 10c.

AFTER HER DEATH.

The Story of a Summer. By Lilian Whiting. Pervaded with pure and beautiful spirituality of thought. Instructive and helpful to all who love and seek the higher and finer ways of spiritual experience. Price, $1.00.

What All the World's a-Seeking.

RALPH WALDO TRINE.

Each is building his world from within; thought is the builder; for thoughts are forces,—subtle, vital, irresistible, omnipotent,—and according as used do they bring power or impotence, peace or pain, success or failure.—From Title-page.

The above books are beautifully bound in gray-green raised cloth, stamped in deep old-green and gold, with gilt top. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

Three Remarkable Books

"The Divine Pedigree of Man."
"The Law of Psychic Phenomena."
"A Scientific Demonstration of the Future Life."

The Divine Pedigree of Man, or the Testimony of Evolution and Psychology to the Fatherhood of God. By Thompson Jay Hudson, LL. D. A most remarkable work, demonstrating the existence of the Soul and Future Life. It is scientific throughout. Price $1.50. Dr. Hudson's work on "The Law of Psychic Phenomena" is also valuable. Price, $1.50. His "Scientific Demonstration of the Future Life" should be read by all. Price $1.50.

HEROES AND HERO WORSHIP, AND THE HEROIC IN HISTORY.

By Thomas Carlyle.

"A remarkable book by a remarkable man. Marked by terse strength and vigor, deep thought, philosophy and dramatic tensity of earnestness. A notable literary effort. A fine edition in cloth. Price 50 cents.

LIST OF CAMP-MEETINGS.

Send In Your Dates and Name of Secretary at Once.

Interest in the various Spiritualist camp-meetings has commenced, and secretaries of the same should report at once to this office, so that proper announcement as to dates can be made.

MT. PLEASANT PARK, CLINTON, IA.

The twenty-third annual camp-meeting at Mt. Pleasant Park, opens July 30 and closes August 27. The very best talent has been secured for the season, and Opening Day promises to be a red letter day in the history of the camp. Programs and information given to all who write to Mrs. M. B. Anderson, secretary, Clarksville, Mo.

ONSET CAMP.

Onset camp commences its twenty-ninth annual meeting, July 23, and closes August 27. Onset is one of the most beautiful seashore resorts in the world, and is in close proximity to other noted summer resorts. It is connected by a bridge with Point Independence, and close at hand lies Monument Beach, and beyond Gray Gables, formerly the summer home of Ex-President Cleveland, and at the head of the bay is located "Crow's Nest," owned by Joseph Jefferson.

The water supply, introduced by the Onset Water Company from Sandy Lake, could not be purer or better.

No summer resort is better supplied with well-regulated hotels, with rooms and board at reasonable rates. Also rooms can be obtained at cottages, and meals at either hotels or restaurants in close proximity.

Letters addressed to the proprietors of the following hotels, Onset, Mass., will be promptly answered, giving full statement with regard to prices of rooms and board: Hotel Onset, Glen Cove Hotel, Glen Echo Hotel, Union Villa, Washburn House, Bullock's, Hotel Marcy, Highland House, and Mrs. Ronald's.

CHESTERFIELD, CAMP.

The official board met at Camp Chesterfield, April 9, to perfect arrangements for the coming camp session, beginning July 15 and ending August 27. The grounds are in fine condition and we want to make this the best camp ever held here. We have secured the very best talent and will have them well advertised. The programmes will be ready for distribution in a month. Mrs. Lydia Jessup, secretary, Anderson, Ind.

SUNAPEE LAKE CAMP, N. H.

Sunapee Lake Spiritualist Camp-meeting Association will hold its 28th annual meeting at Blodgett's Landing, N. H., commencing July 30 and closing August 27. We have a good list of speakers and test mediums. Address all letters to Thomas Burpee, Sutton, N. H., or the secretary, Lorenza Worthen, Hillsboro Br., N. H.

VICKSBURG, CAMP.

Vicksburg camp, Mich., opens July 30 and closes August 20. For full particulars address Mrs. Jeannette Fraser, Vicksburg, Mich.

MINERAL PARK CAMP, CAL.

The Spiritualists of Southern California have engaged Mineral Park, the camp grounds in the Arroyo Seco, just below Garvanza, for their annual camp-meeting, from June 25 to July 25. Many improvements are to be made at the park, and fourteen cottages will be erected. Mrs. Nettie Howell is the head of the executive committee. Address her for programmes.

NEW ERA CAMP-MEETING.

The New Era camp-meeting begins July 9, and continues over four Sundays. We will have with us during the meeting those grand workers, Harry J. Moore, Mrs McCoy, Mrs. Ella Royal Williams, sure, and hope other good workers will also attend from all parts of the compass. We expect many of the lecturers and mediums from the coast (and we have many good ones) to attend during the meeting. Everybody come and help make this coming camp-meeting a grand and glorious one. The hotel will be under the management of the president, and everything possible will be done for the comfort and welfare of the guests. Camp ground is only 22 miles from the great Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland, Oregon. Address Rev. G. C. Love, president, 354 College street, Portland, Oregon.

EDGEWOOD CAMP, WASH.

The annual camp-meeting of the Spiritualists of the state of Washington, will be held at the Edgewood camp-grounds on Surprise Lake, commencing July 30 and ending August 20. These grounds are owned by the state association and can be reached either from Tacoma or Seattle by the Interurban electric cars. The annual state convention will also be held at the same place on August 21 and 22. Spiritualists from the East who intend to visit the Lewis & Clark Fair at Portland, should time their visit so as to stop over for a day or two at the camp, where they will find a hearty welcome from their western co-workers. All railroads give stop-over privileges at the different Sound cities. GEO. E. KNOWLDEN.

Tacoma, Wash.

CENTRAL OHIO CAMP.

This camp opens Sunday, June 4 (and closes Sunday, June 25), at Bueleh Park, eight miles southwest of Columbus, directly on the B. & O. railway, and Columbus, Grove City and Southwestern Traction Lines; one-half hour's ride from Columbus and 20 minutes from Morgans; will land everybody at the park. Many talented speakers engaged. All are welcome. Officers: H. E. Boerstler, president; L. M. Lydy, vice-president; A. W. Dennis, treasurer; Hattie G. Webster, secretary. For further particulars, address the secretary, 55 McDowell street, Columbus, Ohio.

GRAND LEDGE CAMP, MICH.

The Grand Ledge Spiritualist Camp-meeting opens July 21, 1905, and closes Aug. 21, 1905, with Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly as presiding chairman. As the programs are now being printed they will be distributed as soon as possible, and all those wishing further information regarding the camp, address J. W. Ewing or W. R. Divine of Grand Ledge, Mich. The association extends a cordial invitation to all.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., CAMP.

The Liberal, Educational and Spiritualist Camp-meeting will open at Mineral Park, June 25, and close July 25.

THE ASHLEY, OHIO, CAMP.

This camp opens August 6 and closes August 27. For further particulars address Will Randolph, secretary, Ashley, Ohio.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

After a period of two or three years deprivation, the Spiritualists of Los Angeles are this year to enjoy another Camp, unitedly with all else that is good, as the name implies: Liberal, Educational and Spiritual Camp-Meeting. With our own Mrs. Nettie Howell in charge, it goes without saying, success awaits it. From June 25, to July 25, beautiful Mineral Park (a five-cent ride from the city), will echo and resound with the music of aspiring lives, in harmonious association; with the ringing voice of truth-inspired lecturer, speaker, message-bearer and singer, shedding forth the thoughts that educate, unfold, heal and otherwise bless the many listeners who will no doubt be there to receive all those blessings.

Already assured is the presence and help of Mr. Harrison D. Barrett, President of the N. S. A.; Mrs. R. S. Lillie, true messenger of light and love; Mrs. Cowell, of Oakland, well respected here; Messrs. W. J. Colville and B. Fay Mills, whose very names inspire thousands to listen and learn; Mr. John W. Ring, the Lyceum builder and children's friend, and a host of others, especially some choice local talent. Among these may be mentioned G. P. Sullivan, the revered old worker and medium, Mrs. Weeks-Wright, Mrs. Lettie Allen, and Mrs. Boyce, also Dr. George Carey, scientific chemist, and Dr. Clark of the Psychical Research Society, also Mrs. Harmon, and many more, especially naming Mrs. Baldridge, who, as one of our home mediums, is especially good.

Mrs. Howell is providing an especial tent to be known as Lyceum Temple. The Children's Fraternal Home will be especially represented by members and the little ones gathered, up to the present.

The beautiful grounds of the park are being renovated and put into fine sanitary condition, the pavilion being enlarged to a further seating capacity, of a hundred, making now ample room for large-sized audiences.

A first class restaurant, managed especially by Mrs. Howell, will be one of the essential attractions and blessings.

There are twenty cottages permanently located in the park, and tents galore already arranged for. Everybody interested is more than hopeful of a grand good time, and with the infusion of light and life from the "liberal" and generally recognized "educational" element, there should be a grander than good time awaiting the fortunate visitor there, while the Southern California Camp-meeting should be so thoroughly established as to never again be known to "pass by default." Good music provided. NELLIE F. SULLIVAN.

Matron C. F. H.

CAMP PROGRESS.

Camp Progress, Moreland Park Grove, Upper Swampscott, Mass., opens Sunday, June 4, 1905.

This association has been reorganized with the intention of making it the leading camp for the summer season of 1905. We ask your co-operation and hope you will visit us and help along the cause of Spiritualism. This is not a money-making business, our only object is to promote this grand cause. All Spiritualists are eligible to membership in this association.

The grove contains about eleven acres of woodland very pleasantly situated in Upper Swampscott. Lynn and Salem electric cars pass the main entrance which should make it the resort of all Spiritualists of Eastern Massachusetts.

The grove meetings are a great help to all mediums who may take part, as it tends to establish more engagements for them during the winter season.

It is the intention of the directors to select first-class mediums each Sunday and would solicit correspondence from such.

Miss Annie Foley of Haverhill, is engaged for the opening Sunday.

Benj. H. Blaney, 150 Elm street, Marblehead, Mass.; Geo. D. Merrill, Lynn, Mass.; E. P. Cooley, 205 Eliot street, Boston, Mass., board of directors.

OCEAN GROVE CAMP.

This camp is located at Harwich, Mass., and opens July 9, and closes July 23.

WINFIELD (KANSAS) CAMP.

The Winfield Camp Association will hold its twelfth annual camp-meeting, commencing July 15, and ending July 25. We have secured the best of talent, and expect to make this camp one of the most interesting of its history. All get ready to come the first day and stay until the last. We have secured Max Hoffman, Will J. Erwood, Isa Wilson Kayner, Bessie Bellman, Mr. and Mrs. Aber. These are all excellent workers as most everyone knows. There will be many local mediums on the grounds. Address Mrs. Maud K. Gates, 807 North Manning street, Winfield,

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32 CHICAGO, ILL., JUNE 3, 1905. NO. 810

WHAT IS DEATH.

There Are Many Views in Reference to the Change Called Death That Are Entertained in Common by Spiritualists and Theosophists.

The materialist says that death ends all; the Roman Catholic tells us of time spent in purgatory, and then eternal bliss; the Protestant decrees that death is the open sesame to everlasting happiness, or to never ceasing punishment. And no matter to which class one may belong, he is aptly described by the remark of the shrewd old scrubwoman, who said, "Even when folks is sure of gettin' to heaven, it seems as though they'd ruther stay in Chicago."

Theosophy gives a different and more cheerful conception of death. It is based on the ideas we have already touched upon, viz: Reincarnation and Karma. From them one gains the idea that the dead are inhabitants of the astral plane for a score of years, more or less, preparatory to entering higher and more glorious spheres of existence. Being deprived of his physical body, a dead man is more keenly alive to the emotions of his loved ones, and it may happen that the only trouble that awaits a good man after death is the impossibility of being able to soothe their grief at his loss. If he has passed through a long illness before death comes, it is a joy to find that pain and fatigue do not exist for him on the astral plane. Has he fondness for good literature? The finest libraries of the land are open to his visits. Does he take pleasure in traveling? It takes about five minutes to go in the astral body, from New York to London. And a lover of good music can easily hear every fine concert given in Europe and America, provided no two are given at the same time.

With a knowledge of the astral plane and a belief in its existence, one comes to feel the nearness of loved ones after death. We never know the repeated efforts they make to show us they are still with us and would not wish us to mourn for them. If we imagine for a moment our feelings if we were walking with a friend and he were suddenly stricken blind, and said despairingly, "I cannot see you. I have lost you," it may help us to think how a dead man feels, who is certain he is as much alive as he ever was. He perceives that it is our limitation which makes our loss, and he mourns our materialism; for, surely, all love that is worthy of the name is given for something higher and more enduring than the physical body.

This does not imply that all are immediately happy when death comes. The suicide brings by the act of self-destruction much misery for himself on the lower sub-planes of the astral world. Those who lived largely in the gratification of the senses, as the glutton, the drunkard, or the sensualist, for a time suffer acutely when deprived of the physical body. This is one reason why the great teachers of the world have always taught temperance and moderation.

What absorbed a man in his physical life is at first going to interest himself precisely as much after death. If a devoted mother dies, for instance, she is constantly watching over her orphan children, putting into the minds of friends the idea of giving them pleasure in some way, and she often is so bound by her love to them that she does not pass on to the heaven world until they are grown; or, in other words, the emotion of love keeps her on the astral plane, which is the plane of emotions and desires. If a man in his lifetime sought to aid and benefit mankind, he keeps right on in his work. He is watching those who have at heart the same object, and gladly lends them some of his own power and force.

In the heaven world is reaped the harvest of all pure thoughts generated during earth life, all intellectual and moral efforts and aspirations, and of all useful work given to the service of humanity. Selfish animal passions cannot enter this plane, as there is no material with which they can be expressed, and, though the scantiness of the harvest of good deeds and thoughts during life may render the heaven life very brief, any good which has been expressed in life by the most depraved soul is there given an opportunity to grow into wider and fuller expression during the next earth life.

The soul that is somewhat advanced studies over his past life and learns to see the mistakes he made and how to avoid them in the coming earth life. He also enjoys all the inexpressible privileges of the heaven world in the proportion that he has prepared for such pleasures on earth. Is he a student in any particular direction? Opportunities are given him to learn much more rapidly than is possible in lower worlds, and from those opportunities he may bring into his next incarnation the ability to discover some new fact in the world of art or science. And after centuries passed thus profitably and pleasurably the cycle swings round again and life on the physical plane is once more begun.

CLARA S. HENDERSON.

FIRM IN HER FAITH.

She Believes That Her Pet Dog Will Meet Her in Heaven.

Confident that dogs have a future existence, Mrs. Annie K. Proudman of 227 West One Hundred and Third street, New York, has had a monument erected over the grave of her pet pug.

Her companion for seventeen years, "Wrinkles" died last January. Mrs. Proudman grieved greatly over his death, and she never tires of recounting her pet's virtues. She believes dogs have feelings and sentiments similar to those of human beings, and she is sure that she will be greeted in the hereafter by the beloved "Wrinkles."

The dog was buried with all ceremony in the Hartdale cemetery, in Westchester county, where about 1,000 pet animals are interred. Mrs. Proudman, who is wealthy, sent memorial cards among her friends. The monument, which has just been set up, bears this inscription:

"In loving memory of 'Wrinkles,' a little pug dog, who died Jan. 7, 1905. For seventeen years a faithful friend and constant companion, he will never be forgotten by his sorrowing mistress. Our close connection of many years proves this beyond all doubt a truth to be:

"The passing of that little life
Ends not alone in memory;
Say what you will, he was, he is
A part of the infinite in me.
Not annihilation, but living still,
He waits and watches in eternity.
"A. K. P."

MATERIALIZATION.

An Old and Forgotten System for Spiritualists to Consider.

(Continued from last week.)

If space allowed we could bring in a long string of evidences in the form of sayings attributed to Jesus that can never be correctly understood until this system is fully understood and applied. But some will say that Jesus was only a mythical character representing certain ethical and moral principles. Very well, if you want it that way, you only transfer the knowledge of facts to some one else, namely the one or ones who wrote the gospels, whoever they might have been; if so, then they must have understood these facts. The proposition is just as broad as it is long; the facts are there just the same.

Now please remember that we do not refer the bible statements for the purpose of proving our explanation of psychic phenomena to be true, but simply to show what people in that age and at that time thought of these things, for the positive proof of the truthfulness of the explanation of any phenomenon exists in the law inherent in the base upon which the phenomenon and the explanation rest. If the foundation is a solid fact in nature, the conclusions arrived at will be in harmony with nature and must be true.

The Trend of Events.

According to the trend of events in the field of Modern Spiritualism and the evolutionary movement of this mighty power, with its co-ordinate upheavals of moral sentiments tinctured with love for that which is true, we must have come to the point where these facts should be applied in a new method of producing psychic phenomena.

But it has been said: "There is nothing new under the sun." If so, then this system must be old enough to have been forgotten during the intervening centuries when the human mind was shackled by the then dominating priestcraft.

A Hindoo Philosopher.

We will here introduce a spirit message purported to have come from a Hindoo philosopher who lived many years ago in India, in which he says that this system was taught in India long before the Christian era; that his successors taught this system to Jesus when he was in that country seeking knowledge, but Jesus having the Jewish religion to deal with modified and mystified their teachings, thinking thereby to be better able to amalgamate this system with the doctrine of the Jews; no doubt actuated by a desire for notoriety as a teacher among his countrymen.

We at one time submitted a colored chart for inspection by the Hindoo cabinet chemist of Prof. E. J. Hoyt (in Arkansas City, Kans.) materializing seance, who after examining it, handed it out of the cabinet, saying that it was correct in all its details.

This system consists in forming circles according to nature's laws, embodied in the principles of the musical scale. This is exemplified astrologically by the great circle of the twelve zodiacal signs with earth in the center, forming that grand circle for evolution, are spiral sweeps of the constellations.

Again are the same principles presented in mythology by the twelve sons of Jacob, six on each side comprising the twelve tribes of Israel. In the same way does the chromatic scale represent all the different characteristics and temperaments of all nations on earth. When forming a circle according to this system each person should be selected according to his or her multiple relation to each note on the chromatic scale, joining the two extremities with low and high C together as a neutral point, and open the circle at F sharp, with a medium at the pivotal point on F. sharp; that would fill the requirements of a sensitive instrument, with a perfect individual electro-magnetic balance, and correspondingly developed soul powers to insure a perfect vitalization process. Such a medium would constitute a natural focal point for the concentration of all the forces in the circle, to be transformed into power.

A circle so formed would indeed be a veritable human horseshoe magnet on the physical plane, with the medium in the electro-magnetic field between the positive and negative poles indicated by the notes G and F. The flow of the vital electro-magnetic force from the junction of the lower and higher C along both arms of the circle will reach the medium on the focal point on F sharp in a perfectly balanced condition, and in a concentrated form ready to be transformed into power to be used by a skilled spirit operator in the work of lowering or reducing a high vibratory motion to the prevailing rate of molecular activity in tangible matter, which our physical organs or vision may readily respond to by virtue of laws governing reflection of light, which again sets up vibratory action in the brain cells, that is recognized and interpreted by the mind and transmitted to the realm of consciousness, when the human soul entity sees the object that has been "reduced to a former state of matter."

If we should undertake to explain psychic phenomena to result from physical causes only, our explanation would be one-sided and only partly true. Having in a short time explained the formation of the human horse-shoe magnet or battery, as a chromatic circle on a certain level or octave on the physical plane, it becomes necessary by the very nature of the case, to go into the invisible realm and closely examine the spirit horse-shoe magnet or battery organized upon the same plan and law of harmony inherent in the musical scale.

Each spirit being forming the spirit chromatic circle or battery is selected according to multiple relation to the notes on the chromatic scale on the octave upon which the organization is to be effected, with the spirit medium or instrument on F sharp. This spirit medium on F sharp necessarily is in perfect harmony with the physical medium on F sharp on the lower octave, hence by virtue of the law of harmony a perfect blending process becomes possible in which the two mediums become as one in polarity. Strike F sharp on any two octaves on your piano and have this blending exemplified. The blending of the two mediums constitutes the focal point for the concentrated forces of the two circles or batteries, the visible and the invisible. Just as modulation in music is the bridge on which harmony and discord meets in polarity, so is mediumship the bridge upon which the positive and negative forces and elements meets in polarity.

P. PEARSON.

(To be concluded.)

RECLAIMING THE WAYWARD.

The Wonderful Potency of Spiritualizing Suggestions During the Hours of Sleep.

Can inebriety be cured by suggestion? This is a question which has been asked many times and satisfactorily answered in the affirmative, says Public Opinion. But the question of practicing suggestion while the patient sleeps is a different proposition and, therefore, a recent article in the Journal des Debats of Paris, is of interest. The experiments in question were conducted by the well known psychologist, Dr. Paul Farez. "The man under observation refused all offers of treatment, but notwithstanding his refusal, against his will and unknown to him, the man was cured and has remained so for four years. The patient was twenty-five years of age, married, of sound constitution and average health. He commenced drinking when he was seventeen years of age and his wife had married him in order to reform him. After his marriage, however, he drank as before. His daily ration was two quarts of wine with his meals, and during the day several glasses of brandy, rum, vermouth, absinthe, etc. Ordinarily the man was quiet, but when he had taken more absinthe than usual he became violent, abused his wife, broke everything within reach, and surrendered completely to his frenzy. The day following his delirium the man remembered nothing, but when told of what he had done he wept, promised to become sober, etc. The scenes, however, were soon repeated.

"Dr. Farez decided to try, with the approval of the family of the patient, suggestion during natural sleep. The treatment took place four or five times per week, and although the patient did not know what was going on, there was slow and steady improvement. The treatment commenced in January. Up to April the man had been intoxicated only three times. In April and May there were no acts of violence; in June and July slight intoxications on two occasions; in August and September a trip to the country, but no wine during this time, only beer. Returning to Paris, the man did not go to a cafe, but drank a little absinthe and less than a quart of wine for all of his meals. After a year the only thing taken was a little absinthe taken on Sunday and Saturday and from this time the patient has not touched wine and has only taken a little absinthe one or twice a month and at home. He is no longer irritable, but happy and a regular worker. The treatment had to be continued for eighteen months, but the result is complete and the patient entirely transformed. He has gained control of his will and is gentle and affectionate."

WORLD'S WISDOM.

Beat the world with a tyrant's sword
And it crouches at your feet!
Teach it with Christ-like tenderness
And a bitter doom you meet.
Labor to lighten its ignorance,
It nails you fast to the cross.
The flame and the fagot shall be his meed
Who parts the gold from the dross!

Rush with the vultures to share the feast
And your way shall be made plain.
Check their greed with a holy thought—
And meet with their cold disdain.
Show them a road to gain or fame
And your name shall be adored.
Seek to lead them to purer heights—
They bar your way with the sword!

For the eagles that love the mountain air
Must bear with its solitude,
Since the madness of Self has cursed mankind
And their very souls imbued.
Yet strive—though your way be marked in blood
And your earth-wrought castles reel,
There are goals far higher than happiness,
Still strive for the fair ideal.

Strive on, though the world be deaf and blind,
It must listen and see at length.
From the salt despair of calamity
Gather the future's strength.
Bear this for your certain staff of help
As your labor toward that day:
No path is trod by the multitude
Until some soul marks the way!

BEATRICE ST. GEORGE.

Oak Park, Ill.

ASTRAL BODY IN COMMONS.

Strange Vision of Sir Gilbert Parker Corroborated by Sir Arthur Haytor—Conversation With Campbell-Bannerman Recalled—Other Instances of Kind Cited—Discrepancy in Vote Thirty Years Ago Explained.

London, May 17.—Sir Gilbert Parker, who claims to have seen the astral body of Sir Carne Rasch in the house of commons while the latter was ill in his home, is receiving corroboration of his extraordinary vision. Sir Arthur Haytor writes as follows:

"I beg to say that I not only saw Sir Carne Rasch, myself, sitting below the gangway, but called him to the attention of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, with whom I was talking on the front opposition bench. I said I wondered why all the papers inserted notices of Sir Carne's illness while he was sitting opposite apparently quite well. Sir Henry replied that he hoped the illness was not catching."

It seems that this is not the first instance of the sort that occurred in the house. In 1897 Mr. O'Connor, an Irish member, went to Ireland to be present at the deathbed of one of his parents. Swift McNeil saw his wraith in his usual seat on the third opposition bench. It was also seen from the press gallery.

Thirty years ago a member who went abroad, suffering from an acute malady, received an urgent five line whip. He replied that he would attend the house at whatever cost to his health. The house was divided on the matter at issue, and on division the lobby tellers saw the member and counted his vote. The next day it was found that the number of votes recorded by the division clerks was one less than that given by the lobby clerks, and on the lost of the former this particular name did not appear, as it did on the list of the latter. At the time the division was taken the member was dead.—Chicago Tribune.

Do what good thou canst unknown; and be not vain of what ought rather to be felt than seen.—William Penn.

Labor without pleasure is like life without consciousness. The real industry does not sadden.—W. F. Barnard.

WAS IT OBSESSION?

A Curious Case Where a Man Is Led to Commit Murder, Unconscious of Himself, by Apparitions Which Were Real to Him.

Somerville, N. J.—[Special to the Chicago Tribune]—Three men, as fantastic and evil as villains in fiction, but portrayed with a fidelity which brought them forth as actual beings, were introduced to-day to the jury in the criminal court, which is hearing the trial of George H. Wood for the murder of George Williams on Mount Horeb, February 2.

Samuel Swackhemer, counsel for the prisoner, told the jury all three characters are flesh and blood to Wood. They have come into his life at frequent intervals for several years. They have lured him on to acts which have blighted his career.

If Wood killed Grocer Williams in his sleigh, Swackhemer asserted, it was three devils holding him in their power for nearly a week which drove him to do murder.

Ignorant of His Guilt.

He opened for the defense this afternoon with the following words:

"I am in an extraordinary position, representing a deranged man, a man unable to make a defense like one in possession of his normal faculties. I can neither deny nor admit the circumstances of the crime.

"The defendant knows nothing of what transpired in the interval from January 31 to February 2. He cannot recall his whereabouts or his actions during these days.

"We will endeavor to show you that on February 2 the prisoner was unconscious of his acts. If he killed Williams, it was not through a guilty motive, nor for gain, nor because of animosity.

"This defendant on Jan. 30 started out, as he thinks, with two men—Henry Wolf and Mack. Mack was introduced to Wood by Wolf. Both are beings born of insanity. Wolf has been Wood's evil genius for years. He first came to the defendent one day, claiming to be an illegitimate son of Wood's father.

Lead Him From Home.

"Wood had forsaken job after job to escape the houndings of this apparition. He was in terror of the man, for human he was to the defendant.

"Wolf appeared January 30, and, while talking about business affairs, told Wolf a man named Mack would help him. Mack had agreed to obtain $1,000 from his father and to give it to Wood it would be necessary to go to Scarsdale, Pa., for the money. Wood goes home, and is met there by Wolf, and the latter conducts him to a barber shop, where he introduced Mack. There plans were made for the trip.

"Wood tells how, with his two companions he crosses the ferry and takes the Pennsylvania railroad train. He recalls vaguely disembarking at a junction, having dinner, and tells even what the party ate. While sitting at a table the surroundings became obscure. In this haze Wolf and Mack disappear and Wood finds himself with a little dark man at his elbow.

Black Man Becomes Guide.

"This man becomes his guide and together they set forth. Wood seems to be moving in a rush. Something drills it into his mind that the little black man took him aboard a train. Dreamy sensations numb his brain until he returns to consciousness when the keeper at the Tombs asks him on Sunday, two days after his arrest for the murder of Williams, if he wishes to attend religious service.

"At the time when this evil genius, Henry Wolf, appears he takes control of Wood. The defendent's life then is without a guide or rudder. Wood is not a criminal but a lunatic."

ROGER AND I.

"Well, Roger, my dear old doggie, they say that your race is run;
And our jolly tramps together up and down the world are done;
You're only a dog, old fellow; a dog, and you've had your day,
But never a friend of all my friends has been truer than you alway.

We've had glorious times together in the fields and pastures fair;
In storm and sunny weather we have romped without a care;
And however men have treated me, though foul or fair their deal—
However many the friends that failed, I've found you true as steel.

That's right, my dear old fellow, look up with your knowing eye,
And lick my hand with your loving tongue, that never has told a lie;
And don't be afraid, old doggie, if your time has come to go,
For somewhere out in the great Unknown there's a place for you, I know.

Then don't worry, old comrade, and don't you fear to die,
For out in that fairer country I will find you by and by;
And I'll stand by you old fellow, and our love will surely win,
For never a heaven shall harbor me where they won't let Roger in.

When I reach that city glorious, behind the waiting dark,
Just come and stand outside the gate and wag your tail and bark.
I'll hear your voice, and I'll know it and I'll come to the gate and say:
'St. Peter, that's my dog out there, you must let him come this way.'

And then if the saint refuses, I'll go to the One above
And say: 'Old Roger is at the gate, with his heart brimful of love;
And there isn't a shining angel of all the heavenly band
Who ever lived a nobler life than he, in that Earthly land.'

Then I know the gate will open and you will come frisking in,
And we'll roam fair fields together, in that country free from sin.
So never you mind, old Roger, if your time has come to go;
You've been true to me, I'll be true to you—and the Lord is good, we know.

You are only a dog, old fellow, a dog, and you've had your day—
Well, I'm getting there myself, old boy, and I haven't long to stay.
But you've stood by me, old comrade, and I'm bound to stand by you;
So don't you worry, old Roger, for our Love will pull us through."

—Animals' Defender.

Great memories, which retain all indifferently, are the mistresses of an inn, and not the mistresses of a house.—Mme. Necker.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Are We Gaining Demonstrative Proof of Immortality?

In the San Francisco Examiner of April 30, an editorial writer seems to doubt that belief in immortality can ever be replaced by actual proof of it, for the reason that:

"Spirits return no longer to this earth, except in the grotesque exhibitions of impostors and mountebanks."

An assertion of this kind would prove satisfactory alike to bigot and unbeliever if it were wholly true. But it is not. That spirits do sometimes return, quite outside of fake-shows of impostors, is a fact of almost daily demonstration to the favored few. Probably, when the controlling conditions of such apparitions shall be better known, the truth of them will become so prevalent that the majority will accept it without doubt or hesitation, but neither the legerdemain of humbug mediumship nor the fanciful illusions of credulous dreamers will ever suffice to bring about such a result. It will require demonstrative proof which shall successfully appeal to the calm judgment of competent observers. Yet, it is by no means necessary that everybody shall be able to actually see the proof. Nobody doubts the established fact that water may be produced from apparent nothingness—that is to say, from two imperceptible gases. But, although the conditions are known, the intimate processes involved in the production of water are quite as inscrutable as the processes of ghost production.

It is absurd to suppose that cognition of the immaterial may be reached by material sense-perception without radical changes somewhere. If we knew just what those changes were and how to bring them about, the demonstration of spirit return would become as simple and sure as demonstration of the union of oxygen and hydrogen to produce water. There exists no line of demarcation between the material and the immaterial. Sir Oliver Lodge, principal of the University of Birmingham, states it as a fact of science that an aggregation of a million millions of atoms of substance is only barely visible with the higher power of a microscope, while it must be a million times bigger still to become visible, as a mere speck or granule, to the naked eye. Sir Olivers' statement goes a long way toward proving the contention that the material is simply a modification of the immaterial and, therefore, of necessity there can be but a single elementary and ultimate basis for both.) Therefore, in its ultimate analysis, the human body is quite as imponderable as the human soul. Indeed we may well ask whether changeful activity in a single ultimate element will not only account for both soul and body but for everything else in existence. But we really know so little of the matters that it is not to be wondered at if skeptical observers should attribute apparently successful indications of spirit return to trickery or illusion, and honest failure to the inherent necessities of the case. Nevertheless, the world does move, and success is sure to be reached by the favored experimentor. It only remains for him to learn why he meets with either failure or success and thus become able to prove at any and all times the truth of spirit return. In other words, to demonstrate the fact of immortality. O. O. B.

San Francisco, Cal.

Experiences After Death.

When shortly after the death of an acquaintance whom we had known to be deeply interested in Psychical Science as his name was written, we asked, "Will you tell us what were your individual experiences when you awoke from earth-life—what were your emotions?"

Ans.—"Crying out with joy when I found my spirit so strongly buoyant, so free of physical hindrance. I realized at once that death—or freedom from mortal sense imprisonment, was freedom for all that was best in me. But still I longed to be able to shout my joy into the ears of the denser friends still buried in the accursed flesh wherein the grub must change to spirit with free activities."

Ques.—"Will you tell us something about that change?"

Ans.—"Spirit, when freed from the physical form is at once born into this new higher existence, and if the atom of being thus changed has been that of one who has had time and opportunity for thought on the great problems of life and conscious mentality while still in the flesh, then the questions which on earth perplexed and troubled his soul because no sure answer came, are here shown clear exposition, when spirit consciousness awakens. To those who have not been thoughtful on spiritual lines the answer comes more slowly after teaching by higher ones."

Ques.—"What do you mean by higher ones?"

Ans.—"By higher ones I mean such as have been appointed guides to earth-born souls. These are the chosen teachers of babes born from earth life into this higher sphere. They wait our awakening and answer our childish queries when we recognize the new conditions."

In an article entitled "A Contribution to the Study of Psychic Phenomena," by Rev. W. G. Todd, in the Arena some years ago, the following descriptions of the change death makes were given through the Ouija Board:

Ques.—"How did you feel at the moment of death?"

Ans.—"Lighter and lighter. It was I, and yet not I. I was freed."

Here a little child softly asked her mother, "How can people climb up to the other world?" Immediately was written the answer:

"Sweetheart, going is as easy as going asleep. You just float out and away, and leave the old heavy body behind you. The body has helped you get a start, and was a good body while it was needed."

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Quincy, Ill.

Resentment seems to have been given us by nature for defense and for defense only; it is the safeguard of justice, and the security of innocence.—Adam Smith.

Philosophy, in the final analysis, seems to consist of convincing one's self that it is easier, on the whole, not to want things than it is to get them.—Puck.

When a man has not a good reason for doing a thing, he has one good reason for letting it alone—Thomas Scott.

Make life a ministry of love, and it will always be worth living.—Browning.

ANOTHER MEDIUM.

He Is Giving Free Seances at Rochester, Mich.

A young optician and jeweler, Louis E. Palmer, Jr., a resident of this village, is developing as a most wonderful materializing medium. Dark cabinet seances are often held for the demonstrations that may be given through his medial agency.

Grand surprises at every seance are suddenly sprung upon the attendant observers. For instance, when sitting unconscious in his trance sleep, he will often be raised from his chair and carried bodily above the floor, and sometimes over the table. At a seance lately, in the dark room, he was lifted by his invisible manipulators as high as seven feet and put onto the top of a little cupboard-closet, back to the far corner, up near the upper ceiling. At the top of the closet was a row of large nails on which to hang clothing, yet he was not hurt by that sudden and apparently so dangerous performance. It was quite a task to get him down from the top of that cupbord, just under the upper ceiling.

Up there, upon awakening, he asked, "Where am I?" He then called for a light and assistance. The seance was given at the village president's residence.

One night, later, while eight of us with him were sitting around a table, having our hands joined upon it, he was suddenly lifted over the table and dropped onto the laps of three sitters, yet no harm to any of us resulted from this apparently reckless demonstration. We were patted upon our heads by materialized fingers. The bell was brought by the spirit hands that were ringing it, from the dark curtained cabinet, into the sitters' apartment, and then placed upon the table about which we were sitting with hands joined.

Startling thunder-claps of noise were made upon the table. Several times the wooden door of the cabinet-room slammed shut with a fierce and loud racking vengeance. A window shade was taken down and dropped upon the floor, and then rolled up and thrown out of the cabinet, into the room of the sitters. His hands were tied together back of him, by the invisible wonder-workers, and he was then taken from his chair and dropped, but yet without injury. Materialized hands reached down from over the seance-table and shook hands with the sitters. Once the medium was carried from his chair, taken to the window, and the window was then raised, and the the magicians were going to throw him out through a shoofly screen outside the window-way, but the medium awakening and resisting their further movements, he prevented their finishing of the comic tragedy.

This worthy young medium is very desirous to have doubters and scorners come to his seances and witness the wonders, and thereby become converted into knowers and welcomers.

The doubting Thomases are becoming converted by means of these free seances given by this young, intelligent, moral and industrious Louis F. Palmer.

PROF. W. CHAM ELIOT.

Rochester, Mich.

SEEKING THE CRIMINAL.

Clairvoyant Opposed by Spirit of Child's Mother—Sees Child Playing at Corner of House; Then Sees Him Struck Severe Blow on the Temple—Body Near House.

Danbury, Mass.—The coming of Mrs. Nellie Titus, the Lebanon clairvoyant, upon the scene early this morning, awakened the hopes of scores of the residents of this town and Grafton.

Faith in her power had lessened a little as the days went by, and no word from her, but her appearance to-day, accompanied by her husband, was taken as a certainty that she had come to make some definite statement.

Many people from the adjoining towns have consulted her for years in matters of importance. They place implicit reliance in her, but not one of them expected the sensational announcement which the woman made today after going about the Braley farm.

Had Talks on Tucker Case.

A score or more followed her about from early morning until she returned toward her home to-night. These remembered that she had found the body of a missing young woman of Enfield when all other search had failed, and not a few of them still believe in the innocence of Charles Tucker of Auburndale, because Mrs. Titus insisted that her spirit friends had told her that the real murderer of Mabel Page had yet to be apprehended.

Selectman Augustus Herit drove the woman over to the Braley farm. First she asked to be taken to the School pond, the little body of water into which it was feared that the body of the murdered boy might have been cast.

For a few moments she stood upon the shore, her eyes fixed across the water but gazing into vacancy.

After a few minutes of breathless suspense to those who were waiting and watching, she said: "He is not here; he is not in water anywhere. He is not so far from his home. I cannot see any water anywhere in connection with him. All I can see anywhere is the woman and she is opposing me."

Mrs. Titus then went to the Braley house where she remained indoors for several hours.

Saw Him Struck Down.

When she had finished her thought trance she said that the boy had been shown to her playing at the northwest corner of the Braley house.

"And there," declared the clairvoyant, dramatically, "I see him struck a severe blow on the temple—I see him fall—it is near a pile of spruce logs, and those logs have been moved several times since then!"

Mrs. Titus will return here to-morrow. Before leaving Danbury to-night she said to a Journal representative:

Spirit of Child's Mother.

"This is one of the hardest cases I have ever undertaken, because I find myself opposed by the spirit of the child's mother, and until I can conquer that spirit my investigation will be seriously hampered.

"In my investigation of such matters in the spirit world I am compelled to pass through the same sufferings which my objects have been subjected to, and that is the reason of my sickness and the cause of my delay in reaching Danbury."—Boston Journal.

I do not meddle with what my friends believe or reject, any more than I ask them whether they are rich or poor.—Lowell.

MEDIUMS' RELIEF FUND.

Letter From N. S. A. Home Office, Washington, D. C.

To the Editor:—It gives me pleasure to inform you that, as we have still quite a sum to raise before the thousand dollars for the Mediums' Relief Fund is secured, our kind friend who promised the other thousand, has extended the time limit to July 1, by which date, however, the fund will absolutely close. With this concession and the aid of our generous friends who have not as yet contributed to the fund, but who may do so by the last of June, we believe the full amount called for can be secured. Now, dear friends, those of you who have not yet sent your donations, please do so as soon as possible; remember we have but one month in which to succeed, and that the poor mediums need your aid; a little from your purse can go a great way in helping the unfortunate and forlorn; we count upon you, all who have been blessed by the spirit world, we appeal to you to send in your mite and your blessings will be increased a thousand fold.

As our missionaries say this Mediums' Fund is not as widely understood as it should be—it would be if Spiritualists more generally read the papers—it may be in order to hereby state that it is the aged and well nigh helpless who are on the pension list of the N. S. A. Some of our pensioners are cripples, one blind and two others nearly so. The monthly pensioners are, Mrs. A. L. Chamberlain, Mrs. Jennie L. Webb, Mrs. A. Angell, Mrs. M. E. Wright, Mrs. E. Cutler, Dean Clarke, Abram James, Mr. and Mrs. Jaqua, Lyman C. Howe, B. F. Clark, Belle Bush—from June last. These dear, aged veterans have all seen many long years of hard service for the spirit world, most of them have passed seventy-five years and a number are over eighty. In addition, the N. S. A. supports Henry Slade at a Michigan Sanitarium, paying for his board, medical and clothing.

With the record of the N. S. A. and its management, it would seem that no defense of the uses made of the Mediums' Fund is necessary, yet it is cruel to hear remarks from some who give nothing to the fund, that if they knew the money would go to the mediums they might give something—this raises the question if they really would give, or if they but thus excuse themselves for not giving to the poor. Our books and reports are open to the public; the financial accounts are given at every convention and printed in the spiritual papers; the editors of those papers are friendly to the N. S. A., and contributors to the Mediums' Fund; is it likely they would aid in any nefarious work or help any cause they had no confidence in? Our board is composed of honorable people, who, themselves contribute largely to this benevolent work.

The following little list belongs to that printed last and completes the report to May 1: F. M. Whorlly, $1; Fred Bruner, $1; W. W. Hawkins, $1; Adele M. Porter, $1; Mrs. A. P. Osborne, $1, and later 35 cents; Chas Holkirk, $1; Mrs. A. Chidester, $1; Jacob Nowark, $1; Friend of the Mediums, $1.

The list from time of our last report to July 1 will be printed in full when the list closes.

With cordial greetings to all friends.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.

600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C.

HOPE THAT TRIUMPHS.

Hope forward leaps, with dauntless, eager face,
Whose speaking joy illuminates and charms;
While dreams enwrap, he hastes at quickest pace,
Nor slightest heed e'er pays to shrill alarms.

Within his path wide yawns an open pit,
Yet naught he sees but skies of golden red;
He blindly steps, though Nature's torch is lit,
And, tumbling, falls, inertial as the dead.

He dormant lies awhile in stupor's sleep,
Then moaning sounds of heartfelt anguish rise;
Now virtues true o'er him their vigil keep;
For righteous hope must win—it never dies.

Though crushed by foes and trampled in the mire,
Or buried deep beneath a mass of wrong,
The right survives all strife of ill desire,
Triumphant hope chants then its gleeful song.

Base hope shall die—'twas cursed before its birth—
The seeds of death were planted strong and sure;
But pure desire prevails beyond the earth—
Its perfect bliss forever shall endure.

ALEXANDER SPENCER.

George Meredith on the Woman Question.

A writer who has recently interviewed George Meredith reports him as saying:

"I have not studied women more than I have men, but with more affection a deeper interest in their enfranchisement and development, being assured that women of the independent mind are needed for any sensible degree of progress. They will so educate their daughters that these will not be instructed at the start to think themselves naturally inferior to men because less muscular, and need not have recourse to particular arts, feline chiefly, to make their way in the world.

Since I began to reflect I have been oppressed with the injustice done to women, the constraint put upon their natural appetites and their faculties generally, much to the degradation of the race."

Whoever thinks that men might have full sympathy with their fellows, while lacking all sympathy with inferior creatures, will discover his error on looking at the facts.—Herbert Spencer.

I would rather play a corn-stalk fiddle while pickaninnies dance than build of widows' sighs and orphans' tears a flimsy bubble of fame, to be blown adown the narrow beach of time into eternity's shoreless sea.—W. C. Brann.

Our affections are our life. We live by them; they supply our warmth.—Channing.

Court of Inquiry.

Crisis Pending in the Ranks of Spiritualism.

THE SITUATION AS VIEWED BY DR. H. A. CROSS.

The case of C. E. Winans, of Edinburg, Ind., a so-called materializing medium in whose possession were CONCEALED wigs, false whiskers, and maybe other artificial toggery, as brought to light and exposed by Mr. F. C. Boving and others, seems to be receiving more attention in print than such a case deserves.

I am heartily in favor, however, of bringing to the light of common honesty, common decency and truth, for exposure everything that is defiling our cause of beautiful Spiritualism, but it is a painful surprise to me to see how ready some people are to take up their pens in defense of such work and practice as that of the said Winans.

The fact that he may have been before the public at the camps and otherwise for a term of years without his wigs and false whiskers having been discovered, proves nothing in this case beyond the fact that a guilty man went undiscovered and unpunished for that same period of time. It would appear from the published circumstances attending his final undoing by the discovery of his CONCEALED paraphernalia which he had used to deceive the unsuspecting ones for so long a time, that controlling forces of the better sort in the spirit world, by a concerted effort, did so control and influence the events in the life of this man at the time when he took up his abode in the home of Mr. Boving, as resulted in his final exposure.

From our childhood days to the present time goodness has been exhibited in the light of long-suffering. The long-suffering goodness of a pure and controlling influence of the spirit world seems to have allowed this man to run his course, and use his wigs and false whiskers, etc., by the aid of that class of spirits of whom we have read so so much of late, the obsessing and defrauding ones on the invisible plane, thus giving time for the mending of such ways, but "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther," seems to have been spoken to this man Winans and his debased spirit guides and controls in such tones as are being heard all around the earth, and into the spirit world as well.

The published statement of Andrew C. Dunn to the effect that artificial toggery is a common and universal adjunct with all physical mediums for the phase called materialization, is the most astounding and dumfounding statement ever made by any one professing ordinary intelligence, or common honesty and respectability.

One of Mr. Dunn's arguments calculated to prove that this man Winans is not guilty, but rather, is a sort of angel of light and purity among his fellow creatures, is the suggestion that Mr. Winans, being under control during the time of his holding his seances, would have no knowledge of the disposition of his body at such time, and if wigs and false whiskers are used by his spirit guides and controls, Mr. Winans should not be held as guilty, because, he being unconscious, under control, would have no knowledge even that his physical form had been thus decorated, therefore Mr. Winans must be declared guiltless and innocent.

Such profound logic as this is astounding, especially so coming as it does from the pen of a lawyer. Let me inquire just here how it happens that Mr. Winans is willing to conceal artificial toggery in his music box, or anywhere else, for the convenient use of a mortal or spiritual confederate? How much better does it serve humanity, WHEN THE CONFEDERATE IN THE FRAUD AND DECEPTION HAPPENS TO BE A SPIRIT GUIDE OR CONTROL, INSTEAD OF A MORTAL?

Does not the fact that Mr. Winans had his wigs and false whiskers CONCEALED prove his guilt? If there be no wrong in using artificial paraphernalia simply because the deception is practiced by a debased spirit, why did Mr. Winans CONCEAL his wigs and false whiskers? Why did he not exhibit those things the same as he openly made use of his cabinet, and explain to his patrons that all these things are necessary aids in producing the phenomena called materialization? The fact that he had his wigs and false whiskers CONCEALED proves his guilt. I wish to go on record as saying that CONCEALING ARTICLES THAT ARE USED FOR DECEPTION IS POSITIVE EVIDENCE OF GUILT.

When persons advertise themselves as materializing mediums and hold seances and announce to their patrons that their bodies are sometimes used to impersonate, why do they not advertise themselves as impersonators also? That does not sound well. It would not look well on their advertising card. It is a word that implies DECEPTION on the face of it.

Honest and well-meaning people being attracted by the teachings and claims of Spiritualism, start out as investigators, not suspecting that wigs and false whiskers and other paraphernalia are ever used in connection with the demonstration of Spiritualism, regarding it all as too sacred to admit of anything in the line of deception, are an easy prey for such methods as is practiced by this man Winans, and others of his ilk, both male and female. We are all of that class to a greater or less degree at some period of our lives when we begin the investigation of the phenomena of Spiritualism, and the phenomena usually precedes the philosophy, which by the way, is not the wisest course to pursue, for during that early period of investigation commonly called the gullible period, one is so liable to be deceived by just such false be-whiskered individuals as this man Winans.

In this controversy over Mr. Winans, no one has denied the fact that he was the possessor of wigs and false-whiskers, and that he had them CONCEALED in his music box. What peculiar articles they were for an honest, upright materializing medium to carry about with him, and what a peculiar place is a music box for keeping such things in.

CONCEALED is the word to use in this connection, and I imagine that Mr. Dunn's arguments and logic will not suffice to convince Spiritualists at large of the honesty of purpose of this man Winans.

Mr. Dunn writes like an amateur, not only of things pertaining to Spiritualism, but in logic as well. He writes as follows: "IT MAY BE THAT I AM WRITING MYSELF DOWN AS A FOOL OR AS A DEFENDER OF FRAUDS AND FAKES." I see no chance for an argument there. I think the average reader will be content to let that statement go unchallenged.

In Mr. Dunn's reference to Professor Crookes and his experiences, and experiments with the medium, Miss Florence Cook, and the spirit Katie, mention is made of the fact of Professor Crookes haping clipped a lock of hair from the head of the spirit Katie while in materialized form, and suggests that from the fact that said clipped lock of hair did not dematerialize when the materialized spirit body of Katie dematerialized, it might be regarded as evidence of fraud and deception on the part of some one unknown in the case. This to my mind is not to be thought of for a moment, for Prof. Crookes was dealing with the whole problem in his own home when the possibility of a confederate being present, was entirely out of consideration. I would regard it as a relative question just here, to inquire what reliable evidence have we from any source tending to prove that a lock of hair clipped from the head of a spirit while in materialized form, or that a piece of lace or other fabric clipped from the materialized garment of a materialized spirit body, is always, or even in any instance ever dematerialized, either at the time when the spirit body with its garments is dematerialized, or subsequently. I know of no one competent enough, or sufficiently presumptuous to undertake to read to us the universal law governing such things. It is outside the pale of argument. This case cited from the experiments of Prof. Crookes has no bearing whatever upon the Winans case.

By rights the Winans case is unworthy of mention in connection with such valuable evidence that comes from the remarkable experiments of Prof. Crookes. The one case is that of an eminent scientist gathering valuable knowledge for the benefit not only only of himself, but for his fellow-man. The other is that of a shameless creature who conspired to deceive and defraud his fellow-man for the sake of shamelessly gaining a few dollars.

When any medium advertises himself or herself as a materializing medium, and when their patrons have gathered together at a seance, and the seance is about to commence, and the medium then announces that sometimes there is impersonation by making use of their bodies, it should be regarded at once as a loop-hole to admit fraud and deception, and the seance should be broken up before it begins, if I may thus express my sentiments.

Impersonation should be given, if given at all, at a seance by itself; and materialization should be presented by itself. There should be no such mixing up of the two phases as is so common a practice. A certain class of mediums always surround themselves with a whole string of loop-holes which admit of fraud and deception. Such loop-holes are termed "conditions." While any intelligent Spiritualist knows that certain conditions are necessary in order to obtain a manifestation of spirit phenomena, at the same time I maintain that no conditions should be tolerated either by the sitters or the medium which admit of the introduction of fraud.

Even trumpet mediumship can be demonstrated in a subdued light, and for the sake of avoiding every appearance of evil, every medium for that phase should demand that condition of the spirit forces. It were better that humanity get along with less manifestation of spirit power, if need be, rather than receive it under such conditions as will admit of all sorts of deception.

Chicago, Ill. H. A. CROSS.

Genuine Phenomena, Or None at All!

To the Editor:—Like Banquo's Ghost, the fraud question will not down, and presents itself for review once more. While it is an unpleasant "bon mot," I hope it will not be entirely disposed of until it is settled right. I trust, in accordance with the spirit of the foregoing truism, it will keep bobbing up until Spiritualists have established their equilibrium to the extent that genuine mediumship and phenomena shall be sustained universally, and the spurious article discredited everywhere.

While I was, and am sorry that conditions necessitating such steps as the recent exposure of materialization exist, I feel that we should congratulate the cause upon having some adherents who love truth more than the prestige of any medium; and have the courage to speak out when the artificial toggery which is sometimes passed off for the genuine article, is found. A demonstration of truth belongs to the people, and wherever found should be given out, and I feel that a good thing has been accomplished by the proof recently offered of the nefarious work in so-called materializing seances.

Unfortunately, however, there are myriads of people who assume to be Spiritualists, who decry the exposures with all the eloquent ability at their command, and continue to make a fetish of the word mediumship, as they have already done in the past; a tendency which supplies a fruitful field of operation for those who are not averse to supplying the spirit world with the necessary feathers, daggers, and gauze, in which to make up for their personations(?). Why so many dislike to have the truth made known I cannot see; especially do I fail to see why it is that those who fight bitterly against the fraudulent in every other walk of life, are content to argue that: "A little fraud won't hurt" when it comes to the seance room."

Some recent conversations, and communications that I have had, have revealed the fact that it is again time to sound the slogan: "GENUINE PHENOMENA" OR NONE AT ALL, and to sound it as it has never been sounded before. The matter of spurious phenomena presents itself as never before. A medium, old in the ranks, approaching the time in life when legitimate and genuine mediumship, and its possessor, should be tenderly cared for, has been brought into the lime-light of exposure, with the attendant ills, and has delivered into the hands of others the apparatus wherewith simulations of spiritual phenomena were manufactured; in other words "the counterfeiter's tools have been secured." What, then, is to be done?

A hue and cry has been raised throughout the United States among the Spiritualists: "Why did they do it? Why did they not go quietly to him, instead of publishing it in the papers?" These, and a thousand other queries have arisen, and parallel the expressions that I have heard from Wisconsin to Missouri. I am informed by citizens of Milwaukee, whom I personally know to be reliable Spiritualists of the best order, that under similar conditions they did go quietly to the medium—but did that put an end to the practice? Not so.

Even I have heard it argued: "The medium was not aware of the fraud, and if such really did take place it was the controls who did it. Such work is legitimate (?) because it is personation, and the medium always announces that personation is liable to occur; the strength and conditions were not such as to allow absolute materialization to take place, and it is better to help out that way than to cut the spirit off from communicating."

Think of such sophistry, Mr. Editor, coming from people who claim to be Spiritualists, and who claim to want the truth. Is it not enough to make the angels weep?

Faugh! Such argument makes me weary and heartsick. As well might we say: "The making of counterfeit dollars is perfectly legitimate because it is "personation," and prevailing conditions will not permit the production of the genuine article which bears the seal of the government; and it is better to have the counterfeit than to have none at all." Or, when we are given spurious letter and slate-writings—such as have been prepared by the medium (?) beforehand, we ought to shut our eyes and say: "It is legitimate because there was not force enough to enable the spirits to write, personally, hence it was necessary for the medium to do it for them, and besides all of that, it is personation, and that is permissible always; furthermore the medium announced that the spirits are liable to personate."

I would like to know why this is not as legitimate in one phase as in another? Where stock tests are used, why not say: "Oh, it's all right! The spirits could not give anything, so, of course, we had to give a little that was not direct from them—it was necessary to supply the material, as it were—and then it was personation, you know. What is the use of all the hue and cry of "Genuine phenomena or none" if we are to meet such arguments as I have met in the last few weeks—I might say in the last few years, and as the above?

Is personation legitimate? Under one circumstance, yes, I believe it might be—but that circumstance is always this: when the spirit desiring to reveal its identity, controls the medium, and the announcement is made—not before the seance begins but when the event is actually taking place—"this is the medium personating." Is the use of paint, feathers and cheese cloth or gauze legitimate? Never! in my estimation. The spirit personates through the average trance medium without such addenda as the above mentioned articles. I have seen the faces of mediums so changed, as to have no semblance of their natural contour, without the aid of any material appliance whatever; nothing but the exertion of spirit influence. Let them do the same in the seance room.

In spite of all the cry "the medium did not know anything about it," it is quite manifest that they were not so blissfully unconscious of the matter as to be unaware of the presence of the toggery or its hiding place. If there is no intention of fraud, why hide it away in music boxes or tubes, or other places of concealment? Why not say, "Ladies and gentlemen, it is sometimes necessary to supply paraphernalia with which to give the effect desired, and it has been secured and lies before you," etc?

For my part, I want no turkey feathers and luminous paint; I would much rather have the good old-fashioned trance medium! who, under the divine afflatus of spiritual power, gives me some word or phrase which reveals the characteristics of "loved ones gone before," than to clasp the hand of some muttering individual, whose hands have been dipped in cold water—to give them the necessary chill—or who has been decorated in cheap feathers and phosphorus.

I would not be unjust to anyone, but I think of all the crimes in the category the SIMULATION OF SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA IS THE WORST AND THE HARDEST TO OVERLOOK. Just a few days ago; the old shopworn argument was presented to me: "Leave them alone; if the Spiritualists only won't patronize them they will soon quit the business." I heard that argument ten years ago—it still serves, and I fail to see the abatement. I wonder why they don't quit? I'll tell you, Spiritualists! Simply because there are so many who are willing to argue: "Sometimes it is necessary to help the spirits out." As long as we are willing to allow such barefaced simulations of spiritual phenomena, we will be infested by such charlatans.

I believe in being fair; I think there should always be charity shown for the shortcomings of others, but I do not think it is charity or justice to allow such work to continue. Spiritualists, for truth's sake, look this matter square in the face; you claim to love the cause; you say you want genuine phenomena; you tell us you like Spiritualism because it will not tolerate such fraudulent practices as characterized the earlier religious concepts! Then, for the sake of humanity—both spirit and mortal—remove the frauds by showing them you will not submit to their practices! Encourage the genuine by showing that you want truth, not sensationalism.

When a bone-fide exposure is made, why do you attribute it to jealousy and an inordinate desire to persecute mediums? Cannot you see the true Spiritualist is the one that wants the truth no matter how it hurts? Cannot you see that it means something to all of us to know that the phenomena are being tampered with? Lastly, can you not see that the welfare of Spiritualism as an organized movement depends upon straightforward, genuine, soul-inspiring spiritual phenomena and philosophy, and that these turkey-feather combinations cannot but do us harm? It is the law of self-preservation that demands "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

Yours for genuine phenomena, no matter how insignificant, in preference to the spurious, no matter how sensational.

WILL J. ERWOOD.

St. Louis, Mo.

Dr. George L. Lane.

The following was written nearly two months ago on reading Dr. Lane's personal experience in The Progressive Thinker of March 4.

Blessings be upon George L. Lane! One fact is worth a multitude of theories sustained by specious sophistries. It is not argument that we want, but simply the truth—facts that have been proven to be facts, not negative assertions from those who have not witnessed the facts, or never come to a knowledge of the truth upon a given subject. No special pleading can dispossess any one of a knowledge that has been gained by experience.

How thoroughly Dr. Lane corroborates in his own experience the strongest statements in Dr. Peebles' book, Obsession, or Demonism of the Ages. If its publication had done nothing more than to bring before the public the instructive array of facts that have appeared in The Progressive Thinker of late it would have been a useful document.

Ignorance of these things has caused many persons to go back to their churches declaring they will have nothing more to do with Spiritualism. One woman told me: "They got my husband away from me. He seemed altogether like another man after being with the Spiritualists awhile. From a kind husband and father he became indifferent and brutish—didn't even manifest love for his little boy he had formerly idolized."

Much unjust odium has been thrust upon Spiritualism for want of knowledge. Believing that only the spiritual-minded come, or that only the evil-disposed can manifest, are equally erroneous. All is not good, neither is all bad. Believing that all is correct that comes from disembodied spirits is an open door for imposition. Believe not every spirit.

No, we do not want to believe in obsession, any more than we want to believe in war. But ascertaining the facts in both cases, we are obliged to accept them. No doubt some persons are too credulous, imputing to spirit influence some things that could be explained another way. But what about the multitude of cases that can be accounted for in no other way? W. J. Colville says there are sensitive persons whose sensitiveness is uncertain and often attended with general debility, they have not learned the science of self-mastery; that is why they are dominated by extraneous influences when they should be able to select their unseen comrades." This is a condition very desirable to be attained.

What has been accomplished can be done. Let us weigh the thoughts of experienced leaders and appropriate what our common sense and reasoning faculties can digest and assimilate. No two persons can have the self-same experiences, only similar ones. By adding together what we know or think we know ourselves and what we read of others' views, we can get the spirit or essence of the whole condensed in a believable, scientific shape.

MRS. C. K. SMITH.

San Diego, Cal.

TO WOMEN WHO DREAD MOTHERHOOD

Information How They May Give Birth to Happy, Healthy Children Absolutely Without Pain Sent Free.

No woman need any longer dread the pains of child-birth, or woman's children. Dr. J. H. Dye has devoted his life to relieving the sorrows of women. He has proved that all pain at childbirth may be entirely banished, and he will gladly tell you how it may be done absolutely free of charge. Send your name and address to Dr. J. H. Dye, 151 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y., and he will send you postpaid, his wonderful book which tells how to give birth to happy, healthy children, absolutely without pain; also, how to cure sterility. Do not delay, but write to-day.

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland. Interesting, instructive and helpful; Spiritually uplifting. Cloth bound; price $1.

"The Constitution of Man." By Elizabeth Towne. Gives a clear and practical presentation of advanced mental science and embodies many new and original ideas, and the fullest teaching extant as to the nature, control and direction of desire. Price 50c.

Pacific Coast Journeyings, by Moses Hull.

Let me see; where did I leave off? I am too busy a man; I have too much to do; my sins of omission are even greater than my sins of commission, all for want of time to do all the work I plan. This letter is written in St. Paul, Minn., May 20, 1905. I have no data to tell when and where I wrote to The Progressive Thinker last, nor what was and what was not in that letter. All I am positively sure of is that I have spent most of the time since it was written in Seattle, Wash., and Portland, Oregon. Mattie was the most of the time in one city and I in the other; thus a good work was being carried on in each of them.

An immense pressure has been brought to bear to have us remain at least for several months west of the Rockies. As desirable a place as the west is in which to work we could not think of remaining at the present time. Should we remain in the flesh a couple of thousand years more and should traveling expenses come down fifty per cent or more, we may visit it again, either together or separately, and resume the work which is now under way. Our traveling expenses, hotel bills, etc., during the last sixty days has been between three hundred and four hundred dollars. I will say to "the fearful and unbelieving," that not one cent of it came out of the Morris Pratt Institute. That much more would have gone into the Institute had not these bills come upon us as a tariff for presenting the truth to the people. As it is, if one tenth of the Spiritualists will unite and do as much in proportion as the two "Ms" are doing, the Institute will not need to send us out on another mission of the kind we are now closing.

As far as the west is concerned, I will say I hear of many mediums and lecturers, good, bad and indifferent, who are to visit the Lewis and Clark Exposition. Some of them will succeed and some of them will not.

To begin the real history of our work from the time of my last report, I will say that on our return to Seattle we found a great revival of so-called religion, enjoying the most insane phases of its development. Somehow I felt to challenge Rev. Mr. Chapman, the chief thimble rigger in this performance, to a controversy on the question as to whether the work being done was a revival of real religion. I believe that such revivals are more likely to recruit the candidates for lunatic asylums than they are to increase the inhabitants of heaven. I put a clause in that challenge allowing other able and worthy ministers of the city to accept the challenge providing Rev. Mr. Chapman failed to defend the work he was doing. None of the orthodox clergy accepted, but Rev. Mr. Hayward, an Adventist minister, and pastor of a Seattle church, instead of accepting my challenge, challenged me through the Seattle Daily Times, to meet him in public discussion. He was ready to show that the Bible was dead set against Spiritualism. Through the same paper I accepted his challenge providing he was an able, and a representative man among his own people.

He and some of his brethren, at my request, met Walter Hall, the president of the oldest local society in Seattle, and Mr. Campbell, secretary of the state Spiritualist association, and myself. The Adventists were very prompt in all they did; the first of which was to withdraw their pastor from the arena and substitute Eld. A. W. Steers, of Vancouver, B. C., a great debater, to take Rev. Mr. Hayward's place. As Bro. Hayward was particularly interested in having me well whipped, he himself favored, and I believe started the move in that direction. They said that when we had beaten Mr. Steers, they were down.

Well, to shorten my story, we had a four session debate, each session lasting two hours. Brother Steers was a good man, and an able and gentlemanly debater. It is thought by Spiritualists and by very many others that the Elder lost heart from the very first, and never regained his courage. The Elder's brethren were quite as gentlemanly as he was; they behaved very well and took "their medicine" like little men and women. Rev. Steers thought that, in many instances wry faces would be made at the portions he was prepared to make me swallow, and several times intimated as much, but nary a wry face; when his bitterest doses came—the doses which were to render me hors du combat, to their chagrin they were to me "milk and honey." His strongest texts were among my strongest proofs.

If he quoted, "The dead know not anything," I found the same text putting an extinguisher on all Adventist hopes by asserting that "Neither have they any more a reward nor a portion forever in anything that is done under the sun." If he quoted the law against necromancy, I showed him that necromancy was talking with the dead; and that if the dead cannot talk nor communicate, then his God was guilty of legislating against an ignis fatuus. I then showed that the law was "added," as Paul said, "because of transgression," that is because people were going to the dead for knowledge. Here, if anywhere, was the place for God to have explained to his people just how dead the dead were. I next showed that the law was a very natural and very good law, made for an especial occasion, but like many other laws it necessarily died when the occasion for it had passed.

I also showed that if the law was binding now, then it was all binding now; that would require him, not to debate with me, but to come with his pockets full of rocks, and stone me to death; but nothing that I could say or do could induce him to obey his part of the law. The result was that when he found me violating God's law I only had to quote Paul at him, "Thou art inexcusable, O, man, whosoever thou art that judgest another, for thou that judgest doest the same things." He, himself violated the same law he accused me of breaking.

The Spiritualists and the Adventists were all, so far as I knew, well pleased with the behavior of each other. The mists cleared away," and they "know each other better." Spiritualists and others said the debate was the best thing that ever happened for Spiritualism in Seattle. In some respects the debate was more of a symposium than a debate.

Our meetings before and following the debate were very large.

While we did not do a great deal for the Morris Pratt Institute's immediate benefit, we are sure that we have placed the school where, from one year on, we shall have less worriment and care over its financial outlook than for it in any other direction. Hereafter the school will undoubtedly be able financially to allow me to remain at home, or it will be prepared to let me go out and work in its interest when necessary. It can select one of the graduates of the Homiletic class to take charge of the Bible studies in my absence.

The outlook for the Morris Pratt Institute was never so bright as at present. We hope within a year or two years at the longest to take a few poor young men and women every year and graduate them without charge, to anybody.

Mrs. Hull put in two more weeks including Sundays at Portland, and I one. The time was well spent. The work in the west, north of the California line, was never in a better condition than it is now.

Before I say anything about our journey westward it seems to be my duty to give one "Rev. Dr." A. M. G. Wheeler the benefit of one more free advertisement. I do not do this to injure said Wheeler, but to save people from being victimized by him. Mr. Wheeler carries credentials from societies and people, as a minister, medium, etc. These credentials are supposed to all of them be forgeries. His main credentials—those he shows first are from a society or church in Kentucky. The fact is, I know a thoroughly honest and responsible Spiritualist who got into the confidence of this Wheeler, and thus has been admitted into "the "inner circle," where he has seen the seal and other paraphernalia of the church where, I believe he claims to have been pastor. This was purloined from the church. Now this Wheeler is issuing ordination papers to anyone who will pay him from ten dollars up. He asks, and sometimes gets twenty-five dollars for his documents thus forged in the name of this Kentucky local society. This man of whom I speak has seen two of these ten-dollar documents and one twenty-dollar document issued by Wheeler. If ever a person deserved a place in a state prison, it is one who would forge such documents as this man is doing. There can be no doubt but that it is the duty of the Spiritualists, in self-defense, to expose such men.

On Sunday night, May 14, Mrs. Hull, after speaking twice in Portland, boarded the 11:45 train, via Seattle, and over the Canadian Pacific road, home. Twenty-five or thirty of the Spiritualists went to the train at Seattle to see us off. The Spiritualists brought plenty of supplies for our "commissary department." Some of the good Spiritualists shed tears at parting. Perhaps we would have done the same thing if we had not known that we would meet other good friends on our way, and especially at the end of our journey. Our over forty hours' journey in the Canadian mountains caused Mrs. Hull to make one continuous exclamation of "O—o—o—," and I believe that is about the only way I can describe the scenery along the Kicking Horse and Columbia Rivers. If I never see the foreign Alps until I describe the Alps of British Columbia, then farewell to my hopes in that direction. At attempt to describe these mountains is like holding up a rush light by which to view the noon-day sun.

Our first and only halting place on our way home was at "The Twin Cities," St. Paul and Minneapolis. We had arranged to go right home without any stops, and did not know of this stop over until after midnight Sunday, hence there was no way to do but to start Monday as we had arranged. That got us into St. Paul on Thursday night, about 8 o'clock. We found good quarters at Hotel Windsor, where we secured more rest than we had since we left home. We told nobody of our advent into the city, but took our fill of rest—perfect rest.

Home, May 23.

"Be it ever so humble there is no place like home."

What a long spring Mrs. Hull and I have had; I think it was the 9th of March that landed us in Boise, Idaho. Since that we have enjoyed a perpetual spring. Now we are at home, and as we witness farmers planting their corn and view the newly made gardens, and the fields of oats just springing into real life, it seems like one perpetual spring. After putting in a large day's work in St. Paul and Minneapolis, and a night and another half day's travel, and spending another half day in opening and reading letters, and answering such as could not be put off nor longer set aside, we are at home again even in our feelings.

At the close of our big day's work Sunday, we were accompanied to the train in St. Paul by Brother Whitwell and Brother and Sister Sauer, where at 11 o'clock we started on the last division of our long journey. We arrived at home in due time, and were met by all there is left of the school. We found a large dinner in waiting at the Temple for us, all nice and hot. The principal ingredient of the dinner was fowl, and we partook of enough of it to give us fowl stomachs. As the fowls were females they "laid" on our stomachs, and we are happy.

Well, on Sunday, the first thing of importance we did was to attend the Progressive Lyceum conducted by Brother Whitwell. Brother Whitwell has good helpers in the persons of his wife, sons and daughters, and Mr. and Mrs. Sauer and a few others whom I cannot mention by name. The lyceum is small, especially at this season of the year, but it is a model lyceum. I wish that every Spiritualist in the United States could see Brother Whitwell's method of conducting a Sunday school. He seems to have a method of bringing out of every student all there is within. Besides that he has the faculty of keeping all interestded in the lesson.

Mrs. Whitwell is a good speaker, and Mrs. Sauer, a platform test medium of much more than ordinary ability. From the lyceum Mrs. Hull and I went to the home of Mrs. Ives, in Minneapolis for dinner. I will say in passing that Mrs. Ives is one of the women from whom the world will hear. For years she held a lyceum in her own house in which she always taught the young folks lessons calculated to lead to higher and better lives. When I was in St. Paul fourteen years ago, I ordained her to the work of the ministry; she worked very little at the work to which she was ordained before she imagined herself unfit for the work. She had graduated in the high school, and I think also in the normal school, but she felt her lack of the particular education needed for her work, so she went to the Columbia School of Oratory and graduated there. In that school she got enough to know that there was something lacking yet, so she has just finished a two years' special course of studies in the Chicago University and is now ready for work. She has always been a medium of fine ability and is educationally as well prepared for the platform of the Spiritualistic field as any lecturer on our platforms.

From Mrs. Ives' we went to a 3 p. m. entertainment given by the Masonic Temple Society. This entertainment was fine. The music and singing were exceptionally good, so were the strawberries and cream.

At night Mrs. Hull spoke for the Band of Peace Society, and I returned to St. Paul and lectured before the Spiritual Alliance. I have not inquired particularly as to Mrs. Hull's audience or speech. I had a good audience of as deeply interested hearers as can be found anywhere.

Since Spiritualism has undertaken to purge itself of frauds and fakes it seems to be rising as it has not risen in many a day. If it will keep on in the way it is now going there is no doubt that it will gain the respect of the world.

MOSES HULL.

CANDIDLY

The World Has Never Seen the Like Before

Read This Offer:

Truly, the world has never seen the like before. Search the annals of history, ancient and modern; critically examine the history of Spiritualism; look here and there, in every nook and corner of the world, and you cannot find a parallel to the offer made in reference to these twelve remarkable Premium Books. They constitute a wonderfully valuable Spiritualistic and Occult library, and are furnished at a nominal sum. All are substantially bound and neatly printed, and those who purchase them are delighted with them. The last one to appear, "LETTERS FROM THE SPIRIT WORLD," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea, should be in every library. Read the following carefully:

We have now TWELVE magnificent Premium Books, and you can select from them as follows:

Any one of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price 25 cents. This is the price, remember, when you order only one book in connection with a yearly subscription. The paper, one year, and one Premium Book, $1.25.

Any two of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price 70 cents.

Any three of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.75.

Any six of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.05.

Any seven of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.

Any eight of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.65.

Any nine of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.90.

Any ten of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $3.10.

Any eleven of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $3.40.

Lastly, all of these TWELVE Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.75, something never before equalled in this country or Europe.

Bear in mind that every order for a Premium must be accompanied with a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker. We repeat that the world has never seen the like of it before.

OUR TWELVE REMARKABLE PREMIUM BOOKS FOR $3.75.

The following is the list of titles of the Twelve Premium Books:

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.

2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.

3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3. These three volumes have been prepared by J. R. Francis. They contain invaluable data.

4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.

5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.

6—The Next World Interviewed, by Mrs. S. G. Horn, a most remarkable medium.

7—The Occult Life of Jesus, by Alexander Smythe, a medium of rare gifts.

8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Translated by A. Farnese, a wonderful English medium.

9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science, by Hudson Tuttle.

10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

12—Letters from the Spirit World, written through the mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea.

Each Spiritualist should at once commencing forming a Spiritualist and Occult library.

When ordering a Premium Book, one or more, you must send in a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker.

WOMANLY BEAUTY

Of Form and Feature—The Cultivation and Preservation of Personal Beauty Based upon Health and Hygiene.

By twenty well-known physicans and specialists. With 80 half-tone and other illustrations. Edited by Albert Turner. A handsome volume, 250 pages, bound in cloth and gold.

In this volume the editor has brought together the teachings of those who have made a study of special features of the subject, and the result is a work that is unique and practical, not filled with a medley of receipts and formulas, so often found in books on beauty.

Fully illustrated with pictures that mean something to the reader, not of so-called "beauties," closing with chapters of "Hints in Beauty Culture" and "Hints in Health Culture," which, if followed, would alone be worth many times the price of the volume in securing health and good form, which is possible to all. Price $1.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

Brought in Touch With Spirit Life.

C. C. Davis, a venerable Spiritualist of Hartland, Vermont, Illustrates many beautiful truths in connection with Spirit Return. These Spirit Manifestations seemed to occur spontaneously, independent of any Mediumship that he or others possessed.

I haven't any recollection of my father. The last we heard from him were some kind, affectionate letters written by him to my mother many years ago when I was a mere lad.

My mother would often state that my father's spirit communicated to her at various times, and I would laugh and scoff at such an idea, as it seemed to me an utterly impossible and improbable thing.

I would often remark that if I could see my father it would give me the greatest pleasure of my life.

One evening while resting upon my bed in my home at LaSalle, Ill., many years after I made the above remark, a spirit appeared in the space before me. As I lay watching it for a few minutes, it said: "Do you wish to see your father?" As I continued to watch this figure it seemed to disintegrate slowly.

Thus was revealed to me the truthfulness of my mother's teachings.

One morning shortly after my arrival in Vera Cruz, Cal., as I was strolling down Pacific avenue, I noticed this sign, "Mrs. Reed, Medium," upon one of the houses. A short time after this while passing this same way, I entered her house, walked along the hallway, knocked at a door. A voice from within said, "Come in." I opened the door, passed into the room, where I saw seated in an old-fashioned chair a lady. I said, 'How do you do?" Then I gazed at the lady, wondering what I had come in here for. She looked up. I remarked, I do not know why I am here, but the medium answered: "I do. A spirit of a sister who is now on the other shore wishes to see you."

Now I had buried several sisters. As I was wondering which one it might be, the medium explained, "She is coming, and another is close behind her, and they look exactly alike; yes, are twins, and one is looking over your right shoulder."

I had not thought of these twin sisters (who were born five years before I was) for months or perhaps years, as one had died at the age of six months and the other had grown to be a young lady, then passed away. This seems to me a strong proof that Spiritualism is true, inasmuch as I was a stranger to this medium, and was three thousand miles from home, no one being acquainted with me or my family, in this locality.

While living in Barre, Mass., in the Col. Robinson house, situated on Harrison Hill, one afternoon as I was sitting in the large sitting-room I saw extended toward and about two or three feet from my wife, who was reclining on a couch, a beautiful white hand of a lady.

In the afternoon of the next day, in the same room, as I lay resting upon the couch, my wife reading a newspaper, I discovered the form of a lady standing behind the chair in which she was sitting, looking over her shoulder, and appeared to be reading the news from the newspaper. I recognized this figure as a sister of my wife, who had passed away in Chicago, Ill., about a year previous to this appearance.

My sleeping room joined the above sitting-room, and as I prepared to retire at night I drew the double portieres, leaving a space of perhaps a foot in the center. One morning I was awakened at the break of day. While wondering what had awakened me, I discovered at the left of the bed, standing in the middle of the room, a beautiful young lady dressed in white. I was so much surprised and amazed that I could not frame words to speak at first, but in a few moments I said, "Hullo," but did not receive any answer. The figure turned and glided softly across the floor and passed through the space between the portieres without moving them, not even the sound of the brass rings from which the portieres were suspended upon the rod which holds them in place.

Watchfulness of Our Guardian Spirits.

Many years ago, when a resident of Winchendom, Mass., I was very much troubled about a sum of money that was due me. I could not drive this thought about the money from my mind, it worried me day and night. A lady medium told me one day that her spirit guides had informed her that I would surely receive this money in due time.

A short time after this I was awakened from my slumber one night by the feeling that a presence was around me in my room. Soon a sweet-voiced lady whispered in my ear, "It will come." In a few weeks I received the full amount of money that was owing me.

One spring, while living in Bradford, N. H., at the residence of Frank Hemphill, I was very ill and not expected to live.

We had used a coal heater in our sitting-room during the winter, but as the Spring opened we had exchanged it for a wood heater which failed to supply the room in which I was sick, with the proper amount of heat.

My daughter sent a man with a gasoline heater, telling him to place it beside my bed and light it that I might be made warm and comfortable, but he did not light it. My life was at a very low ebb, and as I lay shivering with the cold, the same sweet-voiced lady whispered in my ear, "Tell them to hurry." Meaning that they must hurry to heat the room for my safety, as it is very dangerous to allow a person in my condition to lie in an unheated room. This made it plain to me that my spirit friends were still guarding my life, although I was very near the other shore at this time.

I was seated at a table one evening where a spiritual circle was being held. As I listened to the different people relating the many ways in which they had received special demonstrations from friends in the spirit world, I poohed at their conversation and made the remark that if there was any truth that spirits came to this world, they should visit me this very night.

That evening after I had retired to rest alone in that same room, I was suddenly awakened by something falling on my chest, the weight of which seemed to me as heavy as a peck of shelled corn, and struck with such force it must have fallen a distance of several feet above me.

Thus it was revealed to me that the spirits are the ruling power of the world and can make their presence manifest whenever they so desire, and I was made to believe the truth of my friends' conversation in the earlier hours of the evening, although I had been sure that their stories were merely imaginary. This taught me the lesson that it is not best to jest or ridicule the ideas of others, until we are certain that they are untrue.

While living in Amherst, N. H., being the only occupant of the lower floor of the house, I was frequently awakened by the bed clothing being pulled off my body toward the foot of the bed. One evening while the clothes were being slowly removed, I said, "I wish the spirit would make a plainer demonstration of their presence." The next evening I was awakened to consciousness by two hands being placed under my body, which raised me gently and slowly in an upward direction about a foot from the bed, then in the same manner placed me back on the bed.

I said, "Repeat it, please," then I was raised again in the same manner to the same position, but when descending the second time the strength in the two hands seemed to fail, and allowed me to fall to my former resting place on the bed.

Although I had received my visitations from the spirits at different times, this was the first time anything of this nature had been revealed to me by my own request.

One Sunday afternoon while living in LaSalle, Ill., I was walking in a pasture in which cows were kept, following a narrow, well-beaten path made by the cows through the pasture, when a feeling flashed through my system that I must stop, which I did. As I looked around, enjoying the beautiful scenery, not a living thing was in view, but I noticed a beautiful little tree standing a little way from where I was standing. I stepped toward the tree, took my knife from my pocket, cut the tree close to the ground, walked back to the path, trimmed it, then placed it in my hand as a walking stick, then I thought: I do not need a cane to assist me in walking; I would feel ashamed to have anyone see me walking with the aid of a cane. I looked in all directions to be sure no one was in sight, then resumed my journey along the same narrow path. I discovered in the path about a yard in front of me a copperhead, a deadly venomous snake, lying in a coil about the size of a six-quart pan, with its head raised, its mouth open, and its tongue pointing toward me. Had I attempted to step over it, its tongue would have touched my body as I was clad in thin summer garments; even a touch from that venomous snake would have caused my death before I could have reached home.

I struck at the snake again and again until I had killed it with the stick which I had cut only a few moments before.

Again my life was saved by the watchful care of my spirit friends, who seem to be ever-present to warn me of any danger that may beset my pathway through life.

While en route from San Francisco, Cal., to New England, accompanied by my young daughter, upon reaching New York City, we took passage on the steamer "Providence," for Boston, at 5 o'clock p. m. About 8 o'clock p. m., everything about us was enveloped in a dense fog, so the steamer cast anchor and we betook ourselves to our berths to avoid seasickness.

The berths are arranged in sets of two, one above the other, the only chance to approach them being at the front side. As I was sleeping soundly in the lower berth, and my little daughter in the berth above me, I was awakened by hearing three distinct raps directly over me and underneath the berth occupied by my little daughter. She said, "Papa, did you hear that?" and I replied, "Yes; be quiet please." The first thought was of robbers, as I had money and our passage tickets in my possession. But I knew there was no chance for anyone to enter as the door was locked on the inside. I put my hand on the door, to be sure that it was still securely fastened. I felt something pulling the clothes at the foot of my berth, and I knew no one could be there, as the foot of the berth was a straight wall. While talking with my little daughter about this, I heard a commotion outside and upon opening the door I discovered that all the passengers were hurrying from the steamer. I called to my little daughter to hasten or we would be left alone on the steamer. The steamer not being able to make her journey in the usual time, on account of the fog, had anchored at the terminus of the Old Colony railroad, on Long Island Sound, and in a few minutes would be speeding back to New York and we would have been carried with it only for this timely warning from my son George, who had passed from earth about one and one-half years previous to above incident.

My son George entered into rest February 5, 1882, in San Francisco, Cal. The following April my family and I came to the home of my brother in Amherst, N. H. The evening of our arrival there, as I lay calmly sleeping alone, I was awakened by something pulling the clothes down to the foot of the bed, off my body. At first I tried to hold the clothes in place with one hand, but soon I needed to use both hands to keep the bed clothing in its proper place, then I felt something fall on my chest, and I asked, "Is this you, George?" The answer was a guttural "uh," then I felt his arms encircle my body and my arms his body, although I was conscious at the same time that my arms were lying by my side.

The next evening, as I was resting alone in the same place, a figure appeared before me which I knew at a glance was my son George, who, when living upon the earth was deformed, owing to an injury received when but a child. As I watched him I noticed he was slim and straight and appeared to be about five feet tall, which was about a foot taller than when he was living. Thus I was blessed with two successive visitations from my son George.

During the winter of 1881-82 I was boarding in St. Albans, Me., with a family by the name of Fairbrother. The sleeping room assigned to me was the parlor bed-room, or guest room on the lower floor of the house. I was aroused from my slumbers by what seemed to be a child patting my ankle, the patting continued along my leg until it reached my knee, when I exclaimed, "Oh!" and it ceased.

As I lay thinking about the above visitation I discovered in the corner of the room an old-fashioned arm chair in which was seated an elderly lady whose face was turned from me, dressed in black, with a poke bonnet on her head of the style of a century ago.

This all seemed very strange to me, so in the morning I related the experience I had the night before to "Aunt Foss," an aged lady who sat knitting by the open fire-place.

She listened attentively to my story and then replied that those spirits were of a mother and daughter who had passed away in that room and had visited several different people who had slept in that room.

One afternoon, while living in Amherst, N. H., being the sole occupant of the house, I lay resting upon a bed, with my eyes open, when suddenly there appeared above the footboard of the bed the head and face of a man with iron-gray hair, and as I watched the pleasant, intelligent features of the figure, methought it was one of the ancient statesmen. Just then the word "Pericles" sounded in my ears, and I knew that it was the most accomplished statesman of ancient Greece, born of distinguished parentage 495 B. C. His father was that Xanthippus, who won the victory over the Persians at Mycale, 479 B. C., and his mother, Agariste, was the niece of the great Athenian reformer Cleisthenes. Pericles received an elaborate education; but of all his teachers the one whom he most reverenced, and from whose instruction he derived most benefit, was the philosopher Anaxagoras. Pericles was conspicuous all through his career for the singular dignity of his manners, the "Olympian" thunder of his eloquence, his sagacity, probity and profound Athenian patriotism.

While a resident of Illinois, I was walking along a cart-road in a pasture one dark night, so dark that nothing was visible around me. I remembered the last time I passed this way that the bridge which I was approaching which spanned a mad torrent rushing through a channel lined on either side by jagged rocks, was minus one plank, as I dropped on my knees to creep across the bridge, a large ball of fire appeared above me, making everything about me as plain as though the sun was shining and I discovered that the bridge had been removed. This wonderful light or ball of fire seemed to pass from the sky in an oblique line to the earth, then disappeared, having performed its mission of saving my life.

When a resident of Winchendom, Mass., I retired to rest as usual one evening, and dropped to sleep, being the only person on the lower floor of the house.

Suddenly I was aroused and as I became conscious of my surroundings I realized that something was hovering over me. Just then I felt a pressure on my right knee, and putting my hand there I discovered that it was the foot of a small child. As I placed my hand over the foot the palm of my hand covered the ankle and my thumb rested on the ball of the foot, which was warm and natural as life to my touch. I was amazed and said, "What is this, and who is it?" "DeWolfe," was the answer. Then I thought and studied for several minutes, but still I was not any wiser, for I did not know anyone by that name.

I was talking with a friend of mine a short time after this about the visitation. She said, "I know who it was," a tiny girl who had recently been called to our All-Wise Father, in a neighboring town.

In the morning when I awoke I found that the clock had stopped at ten minutes before three, a thing which it has never done before or since that time, showing to me that it was done by the same influence that had visited me.

C. C. DAVIS.

I Cured Myself

I Will Gladly Send Anyone My Discovery FREE TO TRY If You Have

Consumption

Catarrh, Bronchitis, Tonsilitis, a Chronic Hacking Cough or Sore Throat, Sore Lungs or Any Other Deadly Symptom of Consumption.

Send Your Name Today.

I'll send you by return mail my new Ozonized Lung Developer, together with my new 3-fold Rational System of Treatment, which is producing such marvelous results in making new lungs. Instantly checks the breaking-down process, and develops new cell tissues just as you develop muscles. Creates resisting power, circulation, appetite, flesh, health.

J. Lawrence Hill, A. M., M. D.

Try my discovery free. Then if you are satisfied with the benefit received, you can send my my special price, $2.50. If not, keep your money. You decide after you try my treatment, and you can see that I couldn't afford to make this offer if my discovery was not a complete success. Write today to Dr. J. Lawrence Hill, X03 Hill Laboratories, Jackson, Mich. Send no money—only your name.

The Arcana of Spiritualism

A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker are already acquainted with character of this book. It is intended by its assisting, inspiring spirit-authors to furnish a compendium to the student of psychic laws and manifestations. It has been more than thirty years in preparing and contains all that has been received by me through inspiration and research during that time on the subjects it treats. Few questions will arise in the minds of investigators that are not answered in its pages. Price, $1.25 postpaid.

Address all orders to

HUDSON TUTTLE,
Berlin Heights, Ohio.

FREETHOUGHT AND LIBERAL PAMPHLETS

These pamphlets were published by Mr. Green in the Freethought Magazine and are all by eminent and able writers. The price on most of them has been reduced.

Roscoe Conkling. Memorial Oration. by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price 3 cents.

Thomas Paine. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price 3 cents.

Voltaire. An address by Prof. Emile Pingault. Price 3 cents.

Abraham Lincoln. His Religion. By Robert N. Reeves. Price 3 cents.

Burns and Whittier. Some of Their Likenesses and Differences. By Prof. Charles G. Brown. Price 5 cents.

Religion in the Republic. By Mrs. M. A. Freeman. Price 5 cents.

Rational Worship. A lecture delivered before the Chicago Liberal Society by Dr. T. B. Gregory of Chicago. Price 8 cents.

Why I Am Not a Christian. By D. D. Stedman. Price 8 cents.

Genesis to Revelation. Free Thought Commentary on the Whole Bible. By Judge Parish B. Ladd. Price 10 cents.

Revelation Under the Microscope of Evolution. By Prof. Daniel T. Ames. Price 10 cents.

Life and Career of Charles Bradlaugh. By George Jacob Holyoake. Price 10 cents.

Religion and Science. The "Reconciliation Mania" of Dr. Paul Carus of The Open Court. Analyzed and Refuted by "Corvinus." Price 10 cents.

Free Thought Past, Present and Future. By Prof. Thaddeus B. Wakeman. With his portrait and life sketch. Price 10 cents.

The Priest and the Church—What Have They Done for the World? By Judge Parish B. Ladd. Price 15 cents.

John Tyndall Memorial. Ten short sketches of the life of this great man. Price 10 cents.

Cosmology Against Theology. By Vindex. Price 10 cents.

Church and State. The Bible in the Public Schools. The New American Party. A Criticism by "Jefferson." Price 10 cents.

Standing Up for Jesus; or What the Editor of the Freethinkers' Magazine Thinks of Jesus. Price 3 cents.

"Why An Expurgated Bible?" By Rev. E. H. Keeas. Price 3 cents.

Progress of Evolutionary Thought. The opening address before the Congress of Evolutionists, held in Chicago, Sept. 28, 29 and 30, 1893. By B. F. Underwood, the chairman. Price 3 cents.

Christianity; Its Impeachment and Decadence, Also Demands of Liberalism. By Dr. F. E. Abbot and Prof. T. B. Wakeman. Price 3 cents.

Myth of the Great Deluge. By James M. McCann. Price 15 cents.

The Evolution of the Devil. By Henry Frank. Price 20 cents.

Prayer; Its Uselessness and Unscientific Assumption. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

Liberalized Christianity. By Henry M. Taber. Price 5 cents.

The Republic in Danger. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

In Place of Christianity. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

BOOK REVIEW.

Unseen Forces and How to Use Them. By S. R. Maxwell.

This book of 355 pages is a daring attempt to grasp the unseen forces which originate and sustain the human spirit. If the author succeeds in this, he achieves what no one before him has accomplished. He is of the "New Thought," and yet not of it, for his New Thought is unlike that of the cult. although advanced in views beyond dogmatic religion, he makes Jesus Christ the corner stone and God the all in all of his system.

Christian Science he dismisses with a sneer. He ranks it with a bad lot: "Taking all these things into consideration, and comparing what the founder of Christian Science has claimed and accomplished, with what Joe Smith, Ann Lee, Mrs. White, Alexander Dowie, Mohammed, Susanna Southcote and others have claimed to accomplish, I can see no difference at all between them."

The full scope of the work is expressed in the following:

"I propose to assist the reader in obtaining an intelligent understanding how the spiritual man assimilates the truth as given by Jesus; how the spiritual man by the operation of certain laws, weaves the life of Jesus into the warp and woof of his character. I propose how he can obtain self-mastery; how he can master all the forces of his own mind and utilize them; how he can master the forces of his own body, cure disease and establish the habit of health. I propose to show him the marvelous extent of the "kingdom within," the infinite resources of that kingdom; how to develop these resources and utilize them for the benefit of himself and others. I propose to show him how to reach the richest unfoldment of the soul; how to master adverse circumstances and utilize favorable, and thus fulfill the design of his creation."

The reader asks, is this exalted promise fulfilled? It is in one way. To do all this one must be like Jesus. "He is pre-eminently the man, and the system he has given the world is perfection itself." * * * "No man can reach a condition of perfect peace until the Christ spirit within rises and lifts him into the realms of the highest and urges him forward to the realization of his ideal." Then he can say: "I have found my true center."

The main reasoning of the author is founded on the conscious, and subconscious brain. About every human action above the normal he refers to the latter, and yet he does not clearly define what this subconscious brain is, or where located. Surely this nervous structure which explains all that is mysterious, "occult," and hitherto unknown, ought to reveal itself in anatomy. To make this clear, is vital to the main contentions of the author. The major part of his affirmations rest on the functions he asserts for this subconscious brain. He speaks of these two brains as though they were absolutely distinct, and one may act entirely independent of the other and the conscious brain may not know what the other is doing.

He takes the existence of this subconscious brain as granted, makes not the least attempt to prove his assertion. This he should have made particularly strong, for there is great doubt about there being any such division of brain. The brain is a unit in structure, completely united with nerve fibres. The mind is a unit, and there is no division into conscious and unconscious mind.

Joining the cerebellum or base brain is the spinal cord, interwoven with it by nerve fibres. Every vertebra encloses a ganglion or mass of nerve cells, from which nerve filaments are sent off to certain vital organs, ending in plexuses of filamentous nerves. As a whole the nerve substance of the spinal cord forms a distinctive, yet dependent brain, for the supply of nerve force to the organs in discharge of their functions. In the amphibia, as the turtle, this spinal brain is so largely developed that the head or cephalic ganglia may be cut off and life will be preserved for an indefinite time. The office of the base of the cephalic brain appears to be a central station to preserve the unity of the spinal stations. The involuntary activity of the body is directly referable to the spinal brain. It is the seat of all the unconscious or involuntary actions. By it the organs secrete, the stomach digests, the heart pulsates, the lungs expand. All the reflex actions go no farther than the spinal ganglia. In the skull, itself formed of consolidated vertebrae, the several ganglia of the senses, the cerebellum, and the especial ganglia of thought (the mind) are concentrated. Outside of this cerebral mass, there is no consciousness. This is the briefest synopsis of the anatomy of the nervous system, extended sufficiently, for an understanding of the machinery of vital activity and mental manifestation.

Its comprehension is essential to an understanding of this mooted problem of the conscious and unconscious self. In the amphibia is presented beings in which this subconscious activity predominates. They are creatures dominated by the spinal brain. They furnish examples of the sub-conscious. Is this subconscious superior to the conscious? Are they especially endowed with mentality? They should be if this "subconscious self" theory be true.

In the higher orders or animals, especially in man, there is laid on top of this lower stratum, a brain, the cerebrum, with massive nerve substance for the especial purpose of all the phenomena called mind. Whether we regard it as the organ manifesting intellect, or as the organ through which spirit manifests the wonders of thought, is inessential in this discussion. This superior brain, is united by nerve filaments with every spinal plexus, and is the controlling power. There is but one mind, one consciousness, and to bring up the "sub-conscious" as distinct, and superior, is to ignore the anatomy and physiology on which the manifestations rest. The theory comes from metaphysics, speculation, started in ignorance of the structure of the animal body, and not from the actual study of organic life.

This is a wide digression from the matter before us, and yet so much has been said of the wonders of the "subconscious self," so much stress is laid on it by this author; so much of his conclusions depend thereon, it seems essential that an outline, at least, be given of the structure and functions of the nerve system, on which anything like a comprehensive understanding can be based. It is evident from this preliminary study, that in the sense the terms "sub-conscious self," and "sub-liminal self" are used by the theorists, they have no existence except in the imagination of their supporters.

If the reader is a believer in the infinite qualities of Jesus, and sees God imminent in the world; and the Bible as holy scriptures, he will be pleased with the book, for it is written in a sprightly style, and is instructive. As the author is a minister of the gospel, his leaning toward theological views, and the constant trend that way, while his facts and logical conclusions lead in the opposite direction, is pardonable, and he should be congratulated that while retaining such a strong hold on the old religious beliefs, he has grasped so much of the new.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

IN SUCH GOOD COMPANY.

A Trenchant Note From the Veteran Lecturer, Will C. Hodge.

To the Editor:—I have not been invited to mix in the "scrap" regarding the fraudulent practices of mediums, but like the Irishman at Donnybrook Fair who could not keep out of the fight, but whenever he saw a head, hit it, I am constrained to put in my oar and take a hand in the fight. It does me good to see the 'bretheren" strike right out from the shoulder in handling this question. If the cause can't stand the discussion, THEN LET IT PERISH. I have no fears, however, and would like to see a fight to a finish in eliminating every fakir and every dishonest medium from the ranks of Spiritualists. You will remember that at the time of the Ben Foster episode in Chicago, I stood pretty much alone in my straightout convictions and expressions, and it does me good that I am now in such good company.

WILL C. HODGE.

San Diego, Cal.

"The New Life." By Leroy Berrier. Eminently suggestive along the lines of "new thought." Excellent in tone and tendencies. Price, cloth, $1.

"Child Culture, According to the Laws of Physiological Psychology and Mental Suggestion." By Newton N. Riddell. A most excellent work for all who have the care or training of children. Price 65 cents.

SAYS THEY ARE FAKES.

Dr. Burdette Denounces Trumpet Speaking Mediums.

To the Editor:—My attention has just been called to an article, "Important Notice," signed Geo. B. Warne. Mr. Burdette was in Peoria about two weeks ago. He gave a "fake" seance to a few old Spiritualists and they were so well pleased with his work that one of those present sent to the Herald-Transcript of March 19, the following:

"Dr. C. A. Burdette, the professor of psychology who taught a class in hypnotism here last spring, is again in Peoria, visiting his former pupils. On Friday night he demonstrated to a few friends how so-called spirit lights and spirit forms can be produced in the dark by fake methods.

"His work was simply wonderful and WOULD HAVE DECEIVED ANY ONE OF THE OLD SPIRITUALISTS THAT WERE PRESENT, HAD THEY NOT KNOWN THAT THEY WERE THERE TO HEAR HOW THOSE THINGS WERE PRODUCED. When the light was turned on the professor exhibited his apparatus and explained how the tricks were worked. He also illustrated how spirit trumpet-speaking and slate-writing were produced. THE PROFESSOR DOES NOT CLAIM THAT THERE IS NO GENUINE PHENOMENON, but he does claim to have in his pocket proof positive that the Peoria trumpet and materialization mediums are fakes.

"Next April the professor will again visit this city, and on that occasion he will be pleased to demonstrate, free of charge, to any one who will furnish a suitable hall, how these tricks are played."

I would be pleased to hear what Mr. Warne finds in this that is detrimental to the welfare of Spiritualism. We have had many fakirs in Peoria of late. Does Mr. Warne think it would be well to keep the thing secret? Mr. Burdette has told some of us how to detect the "fakes." I wish to God Mr. Warne and all other officers of the different Spiritualist associations would do the same.

Peoria, Ill. G. P. BENEZET.

An Easy Way to Make Money.

I have made $560.00 in 8 days selling Dish-washers. I did my housework at the same time. I don't canvass. People come or send for the Dish-washers. I handle the Mound City Dish-washer. It is the best on the market. It is lovely to sell. It washes and dries the dishes perfectly in two minutes. Every lady who sees it wants one. I will devote all my future time to the business and expect to clear $4,000.00 this year. Any intelligent person can do as well as I have done. Write for particulars to the Mound City Dish-Washer Co., St Louis, Mo.

MRS. W. B.

"The Attainment of Womaly Beauty of Form and Features. The Cultivation of Personal Beauty, Based on Hygiene and Health Culture. By twenty physicians and specialists. Edited by Albert Turner." Of especial interest and value. Price $1.

The Baby Barrett Spread.

The transition to spirit life of Baby Barrett necessitates a slight change in our plans. We have decided to continue to receive names for the book, which will be sent with the spread, and all the letters to Brother and Sister Barrett in memory of the risen little one. This book will be open through the month of June, for any names accompanied by the dime for each name sent.

Three-fourths of the fund will be divided between the Morris Pratt Institute and the Mediums' Relief Fund, one-fourth remains with the ladies who made the spread, who pledge to use their share to advance the cause of Spiritualism.

We have received, up to date, $13.99. Have forwarded to the above institutions, $5.00 each.

Now, friends, let's have a "silver shower," through the month of June, and raise a large amount for these worthy causes in the name of Baby Barrett.

Mrs. Anna E. Baird, of Elyria, Ohio, has taken the spread to the convention at Ashtabula, and will get names and money on it during the convention. With her endorsement of us, you have no need to doubt our honesty. We are opposed to fraud and dishonesty in every form. As Mrs. Gott is a dressmaker, and very busy, send all future communications to,

MRS. MARY SKOGLAND.
Box 575, Wellington, Lorain Co., O.

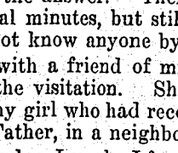
Dr. Henry M. Barker Passed to Spirit Life.

Dr. Henry M. Barker, a prominent Spiritualist and healer, passed to spirit life at the mines, in Trinity county, Cal. Heart failure was the cause of his untimely demise. He was the husband of Mrs Dobson Barker, whose name is a household word among all Spiritualists, she being so well and favorably known. Funeral services at the Hall in San Jose, were held May 19, and were conducted under the auspices of the First Spiritual Church. Mrs. Nettie Pease Fox eulogized the departed comrade, and an obituary poem was read W. D. J. Hambly.

The grand army post conducted the final military honors at the grave. The Walter and B. P. Schuler, of Los Gatos; O. A. Whitney, D. P. Simmons, and S. C. Baker, of San Jose.

A touching feature of the ceremony was the presence of L. Benedict, who fought through the civil war at the side of Dr. Barker, and who came from Oregon to follow his comrade's body to its grave.

The exercises at the grave were especially impressive. Sixty comrades were at Eagle's Hall, a large number of whom went to the cemetery in a chartered car, accompanied by many ladies of the G. A. R. Circle. The flag service was rendered at the hall, and the E. O. C. Ord Post conducted the G. A. R. ritual at the burial, after which the usual rites of the First Spiritual Church were rendered. During the burial a beautiful song was also finely rendered by the choir, which also sang at Eagle's Hall.



NEVER DESPAIR.

Fight your way on through each storm and privation;
Make of each barrier a power to uplift;
E'en as the vine in its dark desolation
Throws out its arms to each bright sunny rift,
Making a ladder of weed and of bush,
Up which to heaven it may struggle and push.

Fight your way on through each grief and each burden;
Sweet are the blossoms which patience unfolds;
Time in its archives guards safely thy guerdon;
Tighten thy tendrils which faith sweetly holds.
Dark though the day be, and darker the night,
Never a darkness but yielded to light!

KATHARINE H. TERRY.

A $1. Package FREE TO TRY If You Have PILES

Send your name today and get by return mail my new 3-fold Treatment which is curing thousands.

To every person answering this advertisement at once I will send—Free to try— my complete new three-fold absorption cure for Piles, Ulcer, Fissure, Prolapse, Tumors, Constipation and all rectal troubles. If you are fully satisfied with the benefit received, send me one dollar. If not, send nothing; you decide after a thorough trial. I am curing even cases of 30 and 40 years' standing; as well as all the earlier stages. Act now and save yourself perhaps untold suffering. My three-fold treatment cures to stay cured because it is constitutional as well as local, and I want you to try it at my expense. One dollar is little to pay if cured. My valuable new Pile Book, (in colors) comes free with the approval treatment, all in plain package. Send no money—only your name—to Dr. Van Vleck Co., X03 Majestic Building, Jackson, Mich. Write today.

"Origin of Life, or Where Man Comes From." "The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter Through Organic Processes, or How the Spirit Body Grows." By Michael Faraday. Price 10 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms and Ceremonies for the Use of Liberals." Price 25 cents.

"Right Generation the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth." By Dr. M. E. Conger. An appeal to reason and man's highest aspirations. A plea for justice and equality in all the relations of life between men and women. Cloth, 75 cents; leatherette, 50 cents.

"Social Upbuilding, Including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennoblement of Humanity." By E. D. Babbitt, LL. D., M. D. This comprises the last part of Human Culture and Cure. Paper cover, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street,

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year	$1 00
Six Months	50cts
Thirteen Weeks	25cts
Single Copy	5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE:

☞ At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1905.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Any person donating one dollar to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., will, if desired, receive one set of spiritual tracts and one copy of "Violets," a booklet of choice spiritual poems. One contributing two dollars to the fund will also receive a copy of "Leaves of Truth," a cloth-bound book of instructive spiritual matter.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.
600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C.

Theological Fogyism.

Non-progressive biblical fogyism was recently well exemplified by the speakers at the American Bible League Convention in New York city. As stated by the daily press, higher criticism of the bible was condemned as an "insidious disease," the book of Jonah was declared to be historical rather than a parable and the claim was made that archaeology has proved beyond question the historical worth of the book.

Speaking on the topic, "Effects of the Higher Criticism on the Ministry," Rev. Dr. E. Fitch Burr of Lyme, Conn., declared that the so-called higher criticism, like a deadly disease, runs through various phases till it brings the destruction of all distinctively Christian dogma.

He believed that if it came to prevail generally among the ministers and the public it would do infinite mischief. It would lesson the number of ministers, dwarf their message and scatter their congregations. "The higher critics have not only taken away the old views," said he, "but they have added new views of man and his needs. They give us a new theology. We call it heresy."

Rev. John Urquhart of Glasgow, Scotland, replying to the question, "Is the book of Jonah history or parable?" maintained that Jonah was a historical character and that the scripture stands or falls with the historical character of the book of Jonah.

The "deadly disease" is spreading beyond the control of old-school D. Ds., in spite of all their efforts to stay its "insidious" infection.

These very orthodox teachers, it seems, are able to swallow Jonah, whale, vomit and all, without a single grimace or indication that the medicine or pabulum tasted otherwise than good and wholesome, digesting well in the orthodox stomach.

Decline of the Ministry.

Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, in a recent issue of the "Outlook," puts it this way:

"That the ministerial profession has been losing ground; that the theological schools, regardless of denominational lines, are in a bad way; that the churches have lost, or are losing their old time leadership, are palpable, demonstrable facts. This break between the practical conditions of the churches and the higher ideals of the community has led to numberless social improvisations that undertake to administer piecemeal interests which can be separated only by a fatal process of vivisection. These improvisations of the spirit for the conservation of ethics, the renovation of society, and the salvation of souls, have crowded out the churches on their own chosen fields to an extent little realized by the average friend of the church.

"Social settlements, women's clubs, men's clubs, fraternities, secret societies, study classes, Christian temperance unions, Chautauqua circles, summer assemblies, Young Men's Christian Associations, Young Women's Christian Associations, civic federations, voters' leagues, industrial unions, university extensions, and, above all, the reach for universal education through the common schools, seem to render the church obsolete and justifiably to enlist the interest, time, energies, lives, of the noblest young men and women our noblest universities can contribute, and to absorb the time and prime resources of the up-to-date home-makers of this generation."

Such is a view by the man up a tree. It must be correct.

Children's Rates.

It has been a standing joke on tailors for many years, that it takes nine of them to make a man. A higher estimate is placed on preachers by railroads, two of them, if well authenticated, being equal to one man. They travel on children's fares, at half price.

Many Spiritualist lecturers seem willing to bear the odium of Reverend, and are willing to be addressed as such, provided they can travel at half rates. Well, it is not our funeral, so we do not complain.

A Japanese Methodist on Religion.

A Methodist journal bearing the name "Gokyo," is published in far-away Japan. It is edited by Dr. Takagi, the name indicating that he is a native. In a recent article from his pen it seems apparent the same facts in regard to the decline of Christian faith exists there as in America and throughout Europe. He was replying to a correspondent who was complaining that "the learned world has always treated Christianity with indifference," a proposition all know to be true who have turned their attention in that direction. But the Doctor's reply does not help the matter. He says:

"The indifference is not to religion, but to the church. * * The prevailing idea throughout the 19th century was that science is all-sufficient. Religion waned; philosophy failed to attract. Science was the all in all to the educated world throughout Europe and America. * * * It is the duty of Christian scholars to reconstruct our theology. This no doubt will be done in time, but in the meantime the lack of teaching suited to the age is felt throughout all our churches. * * Psychologists, scientists and other specialists, approach the subject of religion from their various standpoints, and throw a good deal of light on it."

Doctor Takagi closes by saying:

"If preaching is out of harmony with the spirit of the age it will most certainly lose the support of discerning people. This is the precise situation to-day."

The Doctor wants Christian scholars to reconstruct theology. That is what we all want. Let them begin by eliminating an eternal and fiery hell from their creed, a thing already done so far as all thinkers are concerned. Then repudiate the silly story of the fall of man; and don't outrage commonsense any longer by teaching that man is totally depraved. Relegate the idea of a scapegoat, on whom is piled the sins of the world, to its heathen ancestors. This done and no "son of God" is needed to atone for other men's sins; and the idea of a virgin giving birth to a God will appear as ridiculous as is now the teachings of childhood that roosters lay the small eggs in the nest.

Then teach that he who serves man best, serves God most; that the golden rule of the Chinese philosopher, Confucius, "Do not to others that you would not have others do to you," is as good for us of the 20th century, as it was for the heathen two thousand five hundred years ago. Teach that special favors cannot be gained by prayers to the Monarch of all worlds; neither can his greatness be magnified by praise; and that an immortal life is an inheritance which cannot be avoided, neither can wrong escape punishment proportioned to guilt. These, followed by lesser additions, such as virtue, morality, fidelity and truth as standards of thought and action, then we will have a religion all can tie to, and even intelligent heathen cannot and will not repulse it.

What say you, good reader?

The Past a Guide for the Future.

Mosheim, the learned German Protestant, in his Ecclesiastical History, Tenth Century, Part I, Chap. II, Sec. II, says:

"Christian princes [during the 10th century] exerted their zeal in a terrible manner, proclaiming capital punishment against all who persisted in the worship of the pagan deities. This dreadful severity contributed much more toward the extirpation of paganism than the exhortations of ignorant missionaries."

In the last section of the preceding chapter Mosheim related the condition of that period:

"Whole legions of bishops and abbots, girded the sword to the thigh, and went as generals, volunteers, or chaplains into Palestine. The priests and monks who had lived under their jurisdiction, and were more or less awed by their authority, threw off all restraint, led the most lawless and profligate lives, abandoned themselves to all sorts of licentiousness, committing the most flagitious and extravagant excesses without reluctance or remorse."

These licentious and highly criminal wretches were in reality the founders of the present dominant religion, while through their hands came the Bible and what pretends to be the early history of the church. How much was forged can never be known with certainty. Flouting an eternal hell of liquid flame as the penalty for all who did not obey their demands, these leaders rode rough shod over the nations. Restrained to some extent in later times by the advancement of civilization they could no longer retard, they now assume to voice "peace on earth;" but again clothed with power the fangs of the tiger will reappear, while the Inquisition with its ghastly horrors will be re-enacted, even in our own loved America.

It will be well to keep this in mind while noting the Catholic countries of Europe pouring her uneducated and priest-led menials into our favored country, with the view of ultimately subordinating people and government to the Pope of Rome.

A Saint's Bones vs. Heathen.

It is all up with Japan! Further contention and sacrifice of life are useless! The newspapers report that the Czar of Russia has determined on a pilgrimage to the tomb of St. Serafin, at Strafsbaya, with the object of imploring the saint's bones to save the Russian army in Manchuria from defeat. A grand idea. Serafin was a priest, of great influence two centuries ago. If his bones can't save Russia from impending defeat, what is the use of sacred bones? Japan, being Buddhistic, depends on the bravery of its defenders in mortal combat, and so far have been victors. But the bones of a saint enlisted against them, now comes the tug of war.

Bigots Not All Dead.

That unreasoning bigots are not all dead is evidenced by the fact that a Sabbath Association exists in Illinois, and in a convention recently held in Chicago, they determined to send a letter to President Roosevelt requesting him to stop the delivery of all mails on Sunday, and to cease paying men laboring on the Panama canal on Sunday. If men of that ilk had the power they would stop all the processes of nature on Sunday. The sun would cease to shine, the birds cease to sing, the flowers cease to bloom, the rain to fall, the rivers to flow, and so on to prohibit every natural phenomenon. They forget they are living in the 20th century, and seem to suppose the barbarism of Babylon, where the Sabbath originated,—not among the Jews, as is generally supposed—still prevails.

Some Queer Ethical Notions.

Some rather peculiar, not to say cranky ideas pertaining to ethics, and which will excite mental action in our thoughtful Spiritualist readers, were advanced at a meeting of the Sunrise Club of New York City, at a recent meeting. As stated in the Chicago Tribune's report, the club attempted to settle the question of right and wrong, good and evil.

The most remarkable views of the evening were those expressed by the Rev. Hugh O. Pentecost. He said:

"I tried in my youth to read and understand philosophers and metaphysicians. I gave it up. It was too hard for me. Then I settled it all for myself. Right and wrong, good and bad, moral and immoral ought to have no meaning for me. The happiest moment of my life was when I found I had eliminated my conscience root and branch and had no moral sense whatever.

"I got there by this process: I went back to nature. I found that one single principle exists in the universe—seeking the line of least resistance. We simply always do the thing which it is easiest to do under given circumstances.

"Good and evil are all gammon and spinach to me. From the martyr at the stake to the most abject criminal on the gallows we are all doing the things we do because it is impossible for us to do anything else.

"If you would get rid of conscience and all that tommyrot you would have a solution for every problem in life. I have no fear of God or devil. I have no desire to go to heaven and have no dread of going to hell. Every temptation I have in the world I yield to—every one. And I am not a bit different from all of you. I have not a lighter nature at all—nor any lower in nature. I propose to yield to every temptation. I only have to be sure it is a temptation. If it is—good-by, I'm gone.

"If I wanted to get drunk I'd get drunk. If I wanted to beat my wife I'd beat her. If I do not, it's because I had rather not. It's more comfortable. Shall I blame another man who drinks and beats his wife because it gives him joy?

"Character? There's no such thing as character. Those persons have good character to me who have those desires which I consider beautiful desires and act on them."

James F. Morton, Jr., free love advocate and philosophical anarchist, said the world was troubled by conventional views of right and wrong, but that to say there is no right and wrong at all is to throw out the baby with the bath.

"What is right?" he asked. "That which is in accordance with the process of evolution. We say good egg and bad egg. We mean exactly the same thing when we say good man and bad man. Good egg? It is an egg which fulfills the mission of egginess, the egg which is every inch an egg. Bad egg? We mean by that an egg not expressing itself on the plane that belongs to an egg. That's a definition of right and wrong as it belongs to human beings. If an act is in accordance with the broader movement of the universe from incoherent to coherent, from indefinite to definite, it is right."

The Rev. Pentecost's quality of ethics may be strictly anarchistic—indeed we think it is so—but there is a striking failure in the philosophic aspect of his views. In reality there seems to be no shade or shadow of ethical principle in the composition of the mental and moral make-up of his ideal man.

To follow out the line of action he advocates, he would, if so tempted, rob, steal, murder, slander, commit any crime against person, life or property.

His ideal man would be the man without a conscience, without moral sense—in fact, a something, a being lower than the devils in an orthodox hell.

His views, if put into practical effect, would quickly turn this world into a hell outranking, if possible, in hellishness, the hell portrayed by olden orthodox theologians and revivalists.

To cast aside all thought of right and wrong, to ignore moral principle and moral law, to obey the behests of blind passion, to yield obedience to desires that, if gratified, imbrute and curse mankind—to follow whither "temptation" beckons, without regard to moral sentiment or laws of right—or ethical principles—such seems to be the "law" or governing principle set forth by this apostle of anarchism.

Such views seem better adapted to appeal to the judgment of the inmates of an asylum for hopeless lunatics than to people of sane minds.

A soul actuated by such principle would be a derelict floating, without anchor or rudder, on the infinite ocean of life and being, driven hither and thither at the mercy of the winds of passion and the waves of temptation.

A Thought.

Did Spring, awakening from the long sleep of Winter, with springing blade, the bursting bud, the melody of birds, the joy of all life, suggest the original idea of existence beyond the grave? As the seed is planted in the earth, to sprout, send forth shoots, and in due time swell into the majestic oak, so it was thought man after the lapse of ages would come forth rejuvenated, and fitted for another state of being. Considered in the light of the revelations of Spiritualism it must be conceded it was a happy guess, if that was all the early believers had on which to base hope. Certain it is, seed buried in the ground, germinating, then bursting into full life and blossoming in beauty, is strongly suggestive of another state of being for mortality.

Need Chaplains to Keep Them in the Faith.

Our Liberal friends object to the appointment of chaplains to minister in penitentiaries and penal institutions generally. Statistics show the occupants of such institutions are largely orthodox, and almost wholly persons who have been educated in Sunday schools. Chaplains are really needed to keep the convicts in the line of thought in which they were reared and educated. Taught that Jesus paid all the debt they owe, no sooner do many of them leave the prison doors than they engage in new crimes. In doing so they feel secure, trusting implicitly in what the chaplains have taught them that the Dear Master is the scapegoat for the sins of the world.

Spiritism and Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's Theories in Regard to It. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey. Demonstrates fallibity and inadequacy of Hudson's explanations of spiritual phenomena. Price 25 cents.

"ARISEN."

A Tribute to the Memory of a Beloved Father.

I write this word of my beloved father, Levi P. Barrett, of Canaan, Me., who re-entered the world of souls, May 13, 1905. It was a painful shock of surprise to receive in far-away Texas, a telegram announcing his triumph over the body, and the grave on the day in question, and I would not at first believe the news to be true. He was so young in spirit, so full of strength, so active and so hopeful in all things, it did not seem as if he could leave us now. But so it was; the blow fell suddenly, swiftly, and the strong man passed from the waking dream of what men call life into the eternal real of the soul.

Levi P. Barrett was born in the very house from which his silent form was carried by loving hands only a few days since, 76 years, 5 months and 18 days ago. He spent his entire life upon the old homestead, with the exception of eight years which were passed in Rhode Island one year; New York two years, and Minnesota five years. He returned to his native heath, April 30, 1860, and for forty-five years has carried on the old home farm. He married Miss Lucetta J. Merrow of Canaan, July 30, 1855 with whom he has lived most happily for almost half a century. Their golden wedding would have been appropriately celebrated July 30 of this year.

My father was a man of wide reading, and a most original thinker. Through illness, he was deprived of his hearing, but it did not sour him. He made choice books, advanced periodicals and reform journals his companions, and stored his mind with a rich treasury of facts upon which he could draw at will, when in an argument with friends. In some respects, he possessed the most powerful and retentive memory of any man I ever knew. Especially was this true of local history, economics, political history and the ages of his friends.

He was a born reformer and at an early age identified himself with the temperance and abolition movements. He believed the Maine prohibitory law to be just and right with his whole heart up to the very day of his transition. He regarded negro slavery with horror, and vigorously opposed it with pen, voice and vote until it was overthrown forever. In fact, all kinds of slavery were equally repugnant to him—industrial slavery, slavery of fashion, religious slavery, were all objects of his detestation and he opposed them with all of the ardor of his great soul. He loved the principles for which Fremont and Lincoln stood, and advocated them throughout his life.

About thirty years ago he became interested in Spiritualism, and about ten years later espoused the sunny gospel of angel ministry. He was possessed of psychical powers of a rare order in the way of healing, and had he developed them he would have been a power for good in this special field. He was not half-hearted in anything he did. He put his soul into his work, whether it were paring apples, or writing an article upon political matters, or upon Spiritualism. He loved an argument, and was never so happy as he was when he had driven his opponent into a corner. He talked his religion and his political views with equal freedom wherever he went. His sincerity was a matter of remark to all, and everyone who knew him noted his deep love for the convictions of his soul.

He may have been ambitious for name and fame, but I never saw any special evidence in that direction. He was ambitious to live a true, white life—to be a good citizen, a faithful husband and father—and to pay one hundred cents on the dollar. He never wronged man or woman out of one penny knowingly. In all my life I never heard him use an obscene or indecent word, nor relate a story that was even slightly risque. He abhorred profanity and carefully refrained from its use. He never used liquor in any form, nor touched tobacco, so far as I know, in all his life. Such a life is a credit to any man, and the community in which it is spent is better therefor. Father is one of the few of the old Puritan stock who had not succumbed to the petty vices of the present age.

He taught all of his children to be honest for honesty's sake, and bade us all be on our guard against the false gospel of "policy in honesty." Truthfulness, sobriety, progression were his watchwords. He loved to do good, and no one was ever the wiser from his numerous benefactions. He was kindness itself to the widows and orphans of the little village where he lived, by whom he will be greatly missed. He had a pleasant smile for all whom he met, and never failed to extend his hand to any one who accosted him, rich or poor, high or low. Every one knew him, for he was always going about to see what he could find to do for those in need. No man in the place will be more generally missed than he.

In 1877 he became a member of the I. O. O. F., and has never faltered in his allegiance to it. He was an early worker for the Grange movement, and for twenty-four years has been an active member of that order. Large deputations from both organizations attended the funeral services. He never sought, nor would he accept a public office of any kind. He preferred to remain a quiet citizen in his own home, to the emoluments of office, or the excitement of public life. He took a deep interest in town, state and national affairs, and cast his ballot with as much consideration as he would had he known that the fate of the nation depended upon his act.

Personally I shall miss him sorely, because of his frequent sunny letters to me while out in the world at my work. He encouraged me, soothed me, instructed me, advised me, and helped me over many a rough place in my life's roadway. I cannot put into words what I owe to this good man who has returned to his home in the spheres of the soul. He took pride in me and my public work, and he followed me everywhere with his loving thoughts and prayerful wishes. If I have done even a modicum of good in the world, much of the credit therefor should be given to my arisen father. He was and is one of nature's noblest men.

He always wished to take leave of earth suddenly, and his desire was gratified. He was in his usual health, full of hope for the future, planning with care his daily duties while taking a short ride with his son-in-law and a grandson, when the call came. Without a murmur, without a spasm of pain, he passed from earth. The stroke may have been apoplexy, or heart failure, we do not know; we only know that he did not suffer, and that the end was as he had always wished it to be. The sweet smile that settled upon his features told us that his form was at rest, and that his soul was once more free. He had never been an old man in life, and his form in its last sleep looked like that of a man in middle life. He had lived so quietly, so purely and so truly that he could not grow old in any way.

The funeral services were held in the old village church in Canaan, May 19, at which I spoke such words as were given me to the multitudes assembled. This was in harmony with his oft expressed wish in the past, and we carried it into effect so far as we could. While we miss him sorely, there is no sense of death in the old home—none of the usual gloom that accompanies the departure of a loved one. Thus far, mother, sisters and I, all feel that he is with us, and that his loving spirit is inspiring and comforting the dear ones he has left behind. Three children had preceded him in the world of souls, and my dear mother, three sisters and self are left on earth for a few years longer. We are all Spiritualists and on this occasion, in this severe trial, our religion has enabled us to triumph over our pain, even as he has conquered seeming death and the yawning tomb. "He has fought a good fight, he has kept the faith, he has won a glorious victory." Peace be to the memory of our loved one. He lives in a happier clime, and we have the real legacy of his life—"a life full of usefulness, a soul full of joy," to cherish until we are called upon to greet him in the higher spheres.

A tribute of love from his son,
HARRISON D. BARRETT.
Canaan, Maine.

AN ARISEN FATHER.

Respectfully dedicated to the arisen Levi P. Barrett, father of Harrison D. Barrett.

Another grand old man has passed away; has gone to rest,
And left sad souls upon the earth their grief to manifest.
'Tis death, so-called, 'tis true; but then,
'tis not the journey's end;
Just the passing from our sight of a father and a friend.

Another noble father gone the way of all the race;
Another traveler rushing on to find a better place.
Another friend and counselor has left
a vacant chair;
But love will bring his wiser thoughts and tender words from there.

From there, we say, from conscious life,
where consciousness is free;
Where man immortal knows his own,
that is, and is to be.
And with that quickened father mind
no doubt that he can reach
The kindred here who need advice, and higher knowledge teach.

How kind of nature that we know so little of the grief
That is to be; that we see not the future is relief.
Could we stand here today and count
ahead the clouds of woe,
'Twould make us live our lives just twice in hell down here below.

How grand is love, and truly grand are they who love possess;
How grand is life, and truly grand are they whose lives express
The highest type of manhood here, and high is his estate
Who lives and loves with all his soul, and undefiled by hate.

How great a blessing to arise when once our work is done;
How kindly Nature offers rest whene'er
our race is run;
How true is Time, who calmly toils
throughout the night and day,
To cut us down and pass us on the higher, better way.

Let's raise our hats and bow our heads
as Time and Nature pass
In evolution's rhythmic tread, with all their human mass.
Let's smile and cast our flowers there before the spirit's flight,
And sing our songs to cheer them on and make their pathway bright.

DR. T. WILKINS.

EDITOR-AT-LARGE N. S. A.

Report for Quarter Commencing March 1, and Ending June 1, 1905.

To the Executive Committee N. S. A.—Respected Sirs:—I have during the past quarter contributed the following articles to the various secular and Spiritualist journals named:

What Evidence is There That Ghosts Exist? Reply to Prof. Garrett P. Serviss. Banner of Light and Sunflower.

Frauds and Follies. Sunflower.

Events and Their Significance. Banner of Light and Sunflower.

The World Moves: Advance of Ministers and Laity. The Progressive Thinker.

Prof. Larkin's Expose of Spiritualism. Philosophical Journal.

Will His Crime Be Punished? Answered by Emma Rood Tuttle in Sandusky, Register, Sandusky, Ohio.

Presentation of Spiritualism, Portland Examiner, Ind.

"Humbug and of the Devil." Reply to Evangelist Daniels. Galesburg Evening Mail, Ill.

Passing Events. The Progressive Thinker.

Reply to Father Sherman. (Under stress of Catholic influence this article was refused admission into the paper which published the report of the sermon of this renegade American.)

Is Spiritual Existence After Death a Myth? Some thoughts suggested by the lecture of Dr. Taylor. The News and Leader, Richmond, Va.

Messages From the Dead Declared to Be Impossible—Are They? Reply to C. S. Towne. Record-Herald, Chicago.

Review of Passing Events. The Progressive Thinker and Banner of Light.

Dr. Hillis and Dr. Abbott. New York Globe and Sunflower.

Notes on American Spiritualism. Two Worlds, England, and Harbinger of Light, Australia.

Reply to George Allen White. Searchlight, Waco, Texas.

Reply to Rev. E. E. Neil's paper read before the ministerial association, Elwood, Ind. Elwood Press.

Second Reply to George Allen White. Searchlight.

After answering all attacks sent by the friends, made in the secular press, I found there was an opportunity to do something in a needed line of work by reviewing passing events, those more directly related to Spiritualism and hence of interest to its believers. Copies of these articles have been given to the Spiritual press, and encouraging letters of approval from many prominent workers have been received. So much encouragement, in fact, that I intend to continue the series. Respectfully,

HUDSON TUTTLE.

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

A FAMOUS NOVELIST'S DEPARTURE.

HAMLIN GARLAND'S GREAT NEW NOVEL

The Tyranny of the Dark

Hamlin Garland, who has been an investigator of spirit phenomena in connection with the American Psychical Society, of which he served as president two terms, has just written a new novel, the plot of which is based on the results of his experiences in this field.

The heroine is a Western girl, possessed by a strange psychic power which she does not understand. In New York she becomes the centre of a heated controversy between her followers and men of science. Completely in the power of this strange "Tyranny of the Dark," she is the unwilling medium in startling manifestations which baffle all explanation on the part of her lover and other skeptical investigators.

The unusual and astounding events here recorded, which make this book a striking departure from current fiction, are within the personal experience of Mr. Garland. It is a strong story in a strange and wonderful setting, and it presents to the public the problems of psychic mysteries in a way that cannot fail to create a profound impression.

ILLUSTRATED, $1.50

HARPER & BROTHERS, - - NEW YORK

ORDINATION USAGES

And Other Rites in the Religious Services of Spiritualism, Issued by the National Spiritualists Association.

Sec. 5. When any person in the Spiritualist ministry has been proven unworthy, with reference to conduct unbecoming a minister, his name shall be erased from the list of ministers kept at the headquarters of the National Spiritualists Association, and all Spiritualist churches shall be notified of said action by letter, by the secretary of the National Spiritualists Association.

Lay Ministers or Licentiates.

Section 1. Spiritualist churches, or societies, may at their discretion elect some one of their members to the office of lay minister, whose duty it shall be to lead the meetings of the church, act as speaker in the absence of the minister, when occasion requires, and follow such line of study and of work as will best fit him for full service in the ministry. All such elections shall be reported to the state Spiritualists association having jurisdiction over the state, or, where no state association exists, to the National Spiritualists Association, whereupon these bodies, as indicated, shall commission said parties as lay ministers or licentiates.

Sec. 2. All persons thus elected and commissioned should be chosen with strict regard to their ability to progress in the work, their educational fitness, and moral worth. No one can be elected and commissioned a lay minister who has not been a member of some Spiritualist church in good standing for one calendar year. After one year of service as lay minister, or licentiate, providing sufficient progress has been made in the line of education and unfoldment as a speaker, full ordination may be granted according to these rules and usages.

Sec. 3. No licentiate has the right to perform the ceremony of marriage, nor can he exercise the full prerogatives of a minister, until he has received legal ordination at the hands of a state association of Spiritualists, the council, or conference of the Spiritualistic churches called for the purpose, or by the ordination commission appointed by the National Spiritualists Association, as set forth in the usages of ordination on page 3 of this work.

Mediums.

Section 1. All mediums for the production of physical phenomena and all others who depend upon seances or private sittings for a livelihood, who are members in good standing of some Spiritualist church and are known to possess psychical powers of a genuine nature, shall constitute the Associate Ministry of Spiritualism. None of these mediums under the law of the state are eligible to full ordination, but they may be commissioned by the state association having jurisdiction over the state, or, where none exists, by the Ordination Commission of the National Spiritualists Association as Associate Ministers, whose duty it shall be to render every possible assistance to the churches of which they are members and to administer spiritual consolation to those who may seek their aid.

Sec. 2. The faithful discharge of these duties shall, under their commission, entitle them to the protection of the local church, or society, to which they belong, the state association of their state, and to the National Spiritualists Association of the United States of America, in case of persecution, prosecution, or any injustice or indignity offered them because of their legitimate use of their mediumship. No medium of any phase shall be eligible to this branch of ministry unless he or she is a member in good standing of some Spiritualist church, or society, and has been in full practice of mediumship for two calendar years.

Sec. 3. The satisfaction given by the exercise of their powers, as psychics, shall determine the fitness of mediums to receive commissions as associate ministers from the proper sources. This satisfaction shall depend upon the decision of a committee appointed by the official board of the state association having jurisdiction, or by the official board of the National Spiritualists Association. Each seance shall be judged by itself, and no medium shall be condemned as unworthy because of one failure to produce phenomena of a positive character.

Sec. 4. Whenever a medium shall make use of his or her commission for personal gain only, or shall resort to fraud and deception, or shall be guilty of inebriety or some infringement of the moral law, his (or her) commission as associate minister shall be at once revoked by the state association, or, where no state association exists, by the official board of the National Spiritualists Association, who shall, through the secretary of the National Spiritualists Association, make the fact known to all Spiritualist churches, or societies, by letter.

A Veteran Worker Run Down by an Auto.

It appears from the Los Angeles Examiner, that the veteran lecturer D. W. Hull, 72 years old, was left quivering in the street, badly hurt, by autoists who crash into his bicycle from the rear. While riding his bicycle homeward from a professional call, he was struck from the rear by a large touring car on Pico street, near Normandie, and hurled senseless forty feet away in the road. The four men occupying the automobile saw the aged man quivering in the dust, but the chauffeur gave his machine additional power and it disappeared towards the city.

Mr. Hull, after lying in the street for fifteen minutes in a semi-conscious condition, was driven to his home, at 1410 Kellam avenue. His back is severely wrenched and his face and body bear numerous cuts and bruises. He will probably be kept in bed several weeks.

The owner of the auto or its occupants are not known, as none who witnessed the accident noticed the number of the machine. A boy said he thought it was number 1250, but no such number appears in the city clerks register of automobiles. Members of Mr. Hull's family will institute criminal proceedings if the identity of the party becomes known.

A MESSAGE FROM COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Given in Independent Spirit Writing, in Full Electric Light, Under Absolute Test Conditions, at Howard Hall, St. Louis, Mo., Through the Mediumship of Rev. Josie K. Folsom, April 30, 1905.

"Dear, Kind Friends of Progress:—Permit me to give you a word from my Book of Knowledge. When in my body I thought that the angel of Death would let down the curtains of sunset, bring the autumn, and pronounce a benediction upon all that was. I thought he would gather the years into his arms and cast them into oblivion. Now I find the angel of life has planted a germ in the heavens, and warmed into life by the power of Love, a Universe of Eternal Life.

"ROBERT G. INGERSOLL."

SPIRITUALIST MASS-MEETING.

We have been notified that there will be a mass-meeting of the Spiritualists of the state of Kansas at Topeka, June 9, 10 and 11. The following well known speakers are engaged for the occasion; Dr. G. B. Warne, vice-president of the N. S. A., and president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, a forcible and eloquent speaker; Mrs. Virginia Bryan, well known throughout the state as an excellent lecturer and message-bearer; Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, a splendid test medium, the daughter of that veteran, Capt. E. V. Wilson; Mrs. Lull, a fine speaker and message bearer. Other able lecturers and mediums will be present. The musical program will be under the supervision of Prof. Worrel. This meeting is not intended to create any antagonism; on the contrary, its main object is to thoroughly harmonize and combine the diverse conditions that exist in the state, and put Spiritualism where it properly belongs before the people, as a harmonious working body. In order to accomplish this desired end, there should be a large attendance from all parts of the state.

The Commandments Analyzed, price 25 cents. Big Bible Stories, cloth, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

DISSOLVING VIEWS.

No political party, no religious institution, no government ever purifies itself. It may have that appearance, but it is only temporary, transient and limited. Radical reforms always come from some disturbing element, which changes and upsets the general order.

All the marked changes and reforms in the religions of the world have had their inception in a single man. "The reforms are always begun by some great man, who, seeing, or imagining error in the old system, undertakes to correct it. * * * Thus Zoroaster rebelled against the impure worship of the corrupt religion if his country and founded Parseeism; thus Confucius gathered together some of the traditions and sayings of the ancient writers, added to them a great many teachings of his own and founded Confucianism; thus Gautama, the Buddha, convinced of the inability of the ancient Hindu faith to help the world's sorrow or heal its wounds, founded Buddhism; and thus Mohammed felt himself called of God to wage a war against idolatry, and so he founded the Moslem faith."

Stagnation means death—action, life. Whatever remains motionless dies. Human organizations observe this law. A new invention, if it affects a considerable body of people, has to fight its way to recognition because it disturbs the old order. It takes time to adjust and harmonize any innovation with the existing conditions. Society dislikes to be disturbed. We had rather belong to the same party, attend the same church, read the same line of literature that custom and habit have forced upon us.

Individuals and communities move in grooves. Evenly balanced minds generally float with the current. "Thus a great reformer and a great criminal are both abnormal in the sense of diverging much from the average or normal man." The world has produced but few heroic souls capable of proclaiming a doctrine against the universal belief. Newspapers publish what the people want, not what they ought to read. It is difficult to determine in which capacity the press are most proficient—in their effort to enlighten, or in their desire to deceive the people. "Moral influence," says one writer, "is legal tender with only a small tenth of the people who read newspapers. The other nine-tenths want something more lively, and more entertaining to them, than truth and morality. They do not read for information and improvement, but for excitement, and fiction generally fills that bill better than truth. If it is truth it takes better when highly colored with sensational imagination.

"The days of Horace Greeley journalism, and William Cullen Bryant journalism, were passed years ago, in fact came to an end while Greeley and Bryant were still delving upon the Tribune and Evening Post."

The person who only reads one side of a question, whether it be on religion, politics, or social problems, is worse off than if he read neither,—he is bound to be deceived, for a partisan is never truthful.

We cannot divest ourselves from environment. Friends, literature, surroundings,—all help to make life and character. We get impressions from reading even that which we do not clearly understand. It is impossible to see or feel the mental and spiritual mood in which an author writes. He may not fully comprehend himself. We do not know what strange forces beat upon his mind as he wrote. We cannot say under what fierce light, or amid what darkness and gloom he did his work.

"I charge you," said Walt Whitman, "forever reject those who would expound me, for I cannot expound myself." How can we interpret another's life when we are unable to solve our own? Much has been written explaining Emerson's philosophy; it is nonsense—no one knows. Knowing is tentative. A man's opinions today are not binding on him to-morrow. Emerson, in his belief, stands alone;—he neither copies nor imitates. Greatness is always isolated; it is the child of solitude. It is not born in the busy mart, nor in the crowded street, nor in the centers of civilization, but in the solitudes.

In the silence God speaks to men's souls. Sheep go in flocks, cattle in herds, horses in droves, but the lion, king of beasts, roams abroad solitary and by himself. Neither wealth, aristocracy, nor royalty ever gave the world prophets. The cruder the people, the purer their morals. Communion with nature is holding fellowship with the Creator. Nature is truthful.

"Yea, let the heathen be thy teacher who adoreth many Gods, for there is no widespread error that hath not truth for its beginning." For every belief and for each condition of society there is a reason. No great leader ever appeared until his cause was ready and his presence demanded. To understand a legend, an institution or a teaching we must go back to its source.

The archaeologist sees history written upon ancient language, monument, painting and sculptured stone; the astronomer finds it stamped upon the sky; the geologist reads it in the deepest strata of the earth. All events in history are related. Connecting links join races, times and conditions. There are no isolated facts. the universe is one. Life is an artist and, out of material which in its elemental state, science cannot distinguish, it fashions plant, bird, beast, reptile and man.

"Nature is the chart of God, mapping out of all his attributes;
Art is the shadow of his wisdom, and copieth his resources."

Art is only an imitation or reproduction of what the physical world suggests. Man vies with nature in the performance of miracles. He strives to imitate all her operations. "There is not a device known to architecture or mechanics which is not found in the human body." Even the insect world has suggested to the inventor and the mechanic some of the most useful hints in mechanical and other devices.

Instinct in animals is akin to reason in men. Life in the lower order of creation is the same as in the higher. What is the difference between the principle of life in a tree or a plant and the principle of life in a human being?

Man is naturally barbaric. Grant the public any privilege and they will convert it into a nuisance, unless the strongest safeguards are prescribed. There are always two forces at work in society; one bearing it forward and the other backward. Agitation purifies social organizations the same as it does air and water. Dissatisfaction is everywhere chronic. No man is satisfied with himself or his neighbors.

The world is one huge kaleidoscope—the scene is continually changing. "Creation is on wheels." The universe is held together by the battle of opposite forces. Every magnet has its positive and negative pole. Each community has its positive and negative men. The latter accomplish nothing—the former move the machinery of politics, science, religion and government. A thousand men believe a thing to every one who is able to demonstrate it.

A man is not necessarily false because his doctrine is unsound. If he was, some of the greatest religious teachers of the world would fail to stand the test. Carlyle in his lecture on Mahomet said, "He is by no means the truest of prophets; but I do esteem him a true one. * * * Our current hypothesis about Mahomet, that he was a scheming impostor, a falsehood incarnate, that his religion is a mere mass of quackery and fatuity, begins really to be now untenable to any one. * * * The word this man spoke has been the life-guidance now of a hundred and eighty millions of men these twelve hundred years. * * * A greater number of God's creatures believe in Mahomet's word at this hour than in any other word whatever. * * * A false man found a religion? Why, a false man cannot build a brick house! If he do not know and follow truly the properties of mortar, burnt clay and what else he works in, it is no house that he makes but a rubbish heap. It will not stand for twelve centuries to lodge a hundred and eighty millions."

The day has not yet come for infallibility of belief. Who are the custodians of truth, of science, of philosophy, morals and religion? There are none; each individual must speak for himself and none other. Worlds disintegrate and turn to dust; civilizations come and go; great moral, spiritual and physical forces reach a culminating point, recede, diminish and die out. The eternal recurrence of all phenomena is nature's law. "No race or nation of which we have any record has avoided a recrudescence of barbarism for a hundred generations."

Discarded philosophies and religions will again come to life. Magic, palmistry and astrology are already claiming attention. There is nothing new. Christ was not the author of the sentiments expressed in the Sermon on the Mount; they had existed in scattered phrases hundreds of years before. Moses did not originate, only compiled, the law to the Hebrew people. It was gathered from the wisdom of the ages.

All conditions of society are temporary. Philosophies, religions, and systems of government rise, flourish and decay. Their origin no man knows. That which is considered proper and in good form in one age becomes absurd and ridiculous in the next. Mighty warriors, able statesmen, renowned law makers have sought the aid of the Gods in their professions, callings and undertakings. Christian men, leaders and founders of religious thought have believed in witchcraft and its punishment. How people's ideas in regard to space and time have changed in a hundred years;—so has our view of geology, astronomy and the Bible.

"We are now going through the greatest revolution of thought the world has ever seen. It means nothing else than a new universe, a new God, a new man, a new destiny." Nothing moves in a straight line. Whichever way you take, if continued in a direct course, will bring you to the starting point. Christ was crucified, Socrates compelled to take the poison, Servetus and Bruno burned, Galileo imprisoned, Lovejoy murdered, Garrison and Phillips mobbed, Charles Sumner beaten in the halls of Congress because of their opinions, doctrines and teachings. The germ that produced these outrages exists in human natures to-day. The range for independent expression of thought is again narrowing.

Each year legislation is more stringent and arbitrary. What men can say and do are being more literally proscribed. Yet every restrictive law passed is an advertisement for the act prohibited. Crime lies dormant in thousands of people's minds and only requires suggestion to put it in operation.

Mental suggestion can create disease and cure it, and in like manner it can produce crime and prevent it. Everything is contagious. One suicide duly published makes way for a dozen others. All changes in nature, and life, and in the social order are foreshadowed. Magic foreshadowed science; astrology, astronomy; mythology, religion. Signals are continually being displayed but only the trained eye can observe them. The Indian places his ear close to the ground in order to hear the approach of distant objects. A man standing on a molehill cannot be expected to see like the one whose vision is from a mountain. It is the master-workman, not the hod-carrier, that keeps in mind the form of the structure they are creating. There are those who can speak in prophecy, while others must adhere to a literal translation. Some can only state a bare fact; they have no imagination, no sentiment, no feeling; all thought—comes unembellished. Everything is symbolic;—a manifestation of some reality. A government is only a symbol of the people.

A single man sometimes stands as a symbol of the spirit and essence of the times in which he lived, of the feelings, beliefs, hopes and intense desires that predominated in his age. Even then we may be uncertain as to the individuality of the person, of his ever having been a real living presence. We often mistake the symbol for the thing symbolized.

Heaven and hell, while not literal facts, are terrible spiritual realities—but to the dull mind they have to be materialized. It is not the value of the gift, but the giver, that we appreciate; the most trifling token from one we love outweighs the costliest treasure from an indifferent source. The attributes of the soul cannot be weighed by scales and balances;—yet all feeling, sentiment and mental states are realities. Thought is substance. The mental and the spiritual world is mapped out with the same accuracy of detail as the physical and there are times when the subjective mind sees the former as clearly as the objective mind does the latter.

Many things like poetry, eloquence, beauty are interpreted by the heart and not by the head. The most sublime poetry ever written affords no depth of thought or beauty of sentiment to some,—they can only see metre and rhyme. Intellect is cold, dull and unresponsive in comparison with the finer, spiritual qualities of man. The soul is as real as the body and suffers far greater misery. There are tragedies in human histories more stirring and tragic than the imagination ever conceived; there is a sadness that has never been given voice; a sorrow which the mind sees but cannot translate into words.

"Not by the page, word painted,
Let life be banned or sainted.
Deeper than written scroll
The colors of the soul.

Sweeter than any sung
My song that found no tongue.
Nobler than any act
My wish that failed to act."

HENRY MORRISON TEFFT.

Norwich, N. Y.

and Spiritualism is and will be the beacon star of all progress. Thus let us rally once again in local, state and national work, always being kind and prayerful, but demanding the best, and satisfied with nothing else.

ELIZABETH HARLOW.

Columbus, Ohio.

REMARKABLE INVENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342R, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS.

Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address

DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

NEW INVENTION!

Write for new booklet, Special Offer this month. Our new Quaker Folding Vapor Bath Cabinets, finest produced. Everybody delighted. Enjoy at home for 2c each all the many luxuriousness, invigorating, curative effects of the famous Turkish Baths. Open the 5,000,000 skin pores, purifies the entire system. Beats Hot Springs. Prevents disease. Saves Dr. bills. Cured thousands. Nature's drugless remedy for colds, grip, rheumatism, aches, pains, blood and skin diseases, kidney trouble children's diseases and female ills. Guaranteed. Sent on 30 days' trial. $100 to $300 a month, salesmen, managers, general agents. Big profit. WORLD MFG. CO., 82 World Building, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

810

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

Magic, Sorcery and Witchcraft

A Comprehensive Analysis of Magic, Sorcery and Witchcraft, by a New Zealander, in the Message of Life, a Spiritualist Paper Published There.

To the average understanding there is something terrible in the associations that are connected with the terms Magic, Witchcraft and Sorcery, and the uninstructed or uninformed shrink from all those who are supposed to be possessed of powers in either of these directions. This shrinking is the outcome, in nearly all cases, of ignorance,—ignorance of the powers and forces that are utilized by those who are what might be called adepts in either of these departments; for generally people are ignorant of the fact that all that can be done by the witch, the magician, or the sorcerer, are possibilities to everyone else besides, to the unfortunate so-called victim as well as to the seemingly so-called more fortunate masters.

Magic may be accepted as the supposed practice of the higher forces of the magician's power. Sorcery may be accepted as the lower manifestations of the like power, while witchcraft gives us the disorderly manifestation of sporadic spiritual phenomena transpiring among certain portions of the human family, who are to-day known as mediums, but whose powers are under the more or less orderly control of spirits. Bearing distinctly in mind the superstitions associated with what is now known as Spiritualism, in the earlier days of civilization, you will be the better prepared to accept what we are now about to present for consideration.

We have in the matter of magic three separate planes of operation. In the first place it might be inferred that the operations would all pertain to this world's life, its selfish desires, its individual peculiarities and necessities, and most likely would belong to those matters which are dark, degrading, and possibly undesirable. Here, then, we shall likely find all the superstitious forms of invoking and evoking, by weird and strange processes, these alleged spirits of earth, air, fire, water, etc.

Startling stories are told you of occult gatherings where under mysterious oaths in magical circles, with peculiar odors, with strange and curious symbols, with many peculiar personal preparations, you are introduced to that magic chamber where these mysterious entities are, and by such processes they are brought to you and made your servants. But fearful oaths of silence are imposed upon you, and you are forbidden for your life to step outside of the charmed circle wherein you have been placed for safety.

We have very little hesitation in saying that while the phenomena are perfectly true, the interpretation of them is decidedly erroneous, and that this phase of magic is strictly possible of interpretation in accordance with the ordinary laws of life, both in nature and yourself.

When we step out of this lower circle of operation into the intermediate, where the magician is more on a level with the spiritual intelligences he invokes, then we leave the lower orders of alleged quasi-spiritual entities outside,—we come out of the spirits of the earth, the water, the air, witches, and what not—and come into the class of spiritual intelligences who are really disembodied intelligences, the people who have lived in this world or alleged intelligences who have never lived in this world, but who in either case are intelligent, rational personalities. They may be appealed to for comfort and for aid, but are supposed to be more or less in harmony with and under the influence of, these magicians who call them.

In the higher planes there is so much that you are already acquainted with in spiritual communications that but very little explanation is necessary from us on that point. You appeal to the highest spiritual intelligences, you ask them to come to you, you desire their presence, and you invoke their aid and counsel as has been done in the world for thousands of years past.

Now, to show you how clearly all this may be properly interpreted and a true light cast upon it, let us call your attention to sundry facts that Spiritualists are familiar with. In the formation of your spiritual circles you have all the elements that the magician has in the formation of his mystic circle; but you do not burn incense, you do not mix magical compounds and set fire to them, you do not draw a circle upon the ground and mark signs therein, you do not feel that you are going to draw up hell to minister to your evil deeds, or make sprites, gnomes, or fairies obey you, or go out of the earthly life yourself, or call down the great ones of the world beyond and command them to be your ministers; but, instead, you feel you are forming a circle for the purpose of the evolution of spiritual phenomena. You are virtually and practically embodying and obeying all that magicians have been able to do in the past; and the real result of circle holding, when scientifically attended to, is a reduction of the magic of antiquity to the orderly and lawful expression of spiritual phenomena in modern times—neither more nor less.

Then you will ask, Why are these incantations necessary? Why these mystic surroundings? Why this gloom? and why this wonderful personal preparation? They are all indicative of certain essential laws and principles that, when better observed in the light of an intelligent understanding of to-day, will always assure your spiritual circle a far greater measure of success than would be the case by ignoring them.

There can be no harm, and possibly much good, in the preparation for attending such circles by bodily purity, both in the outer person and inward character,—in the cultivation of meditation, spiritual aspiring, and of the finer and better graces of nature. There can be no harm in being purer outwardly, inwardly, physically, mentally and spiritually; no harm in your assembling in a room especially charged with the vitalic forces of those who are to constitute the "magic," or spirit circle; no harm to prepare and form the conditions by which you can supply force and power which the intelligences on the other side can use; no harm in opening these circles in unity of mind and harmony of purpose, which enables the invisible to enter into your presence; no harm in aspiring for the highest and best to hold communication with you; no harm in having pleasant and comfortable surroundings, and due consideration to the solemnity of the deep relationships between the two worlds, of which you distinctly partake.

There can be nothing objectionable, we repeat, in all this: because much good may come from it. In obeying these requirements faithfully, then you will be, in these modern times, in harmony with the character of your present civilization, and in accordance with the exigencies of your own necessities—you will reproduce the essential and really valuable part of magical services and incantations; but you will not have the spirits of the earth, the air, the water, or the fire, or any such entities, though you may draw down by the preparations and processes wise and intelligent spirits who have once lived in human life,—who shall counsel with you, and perhaps under certain conditions be able to attract to you certain cunning workers in psychological forces, who can do strange things, create lights which float around you, etherealize forms and figures which float before you, make strange sounds, move bodies, entrance the members of the circle, and do a hundred and one things you have heard of in magical circles in olden times.

When we have to deal with the effects magic is said to produce upon other people, we have to consider the sorcerer. Let us turn our attention to the operations of the sorcerer for the "evoking" of spirits, "the casting of spells," the giving of life and the bestowing of health;" the individual who claims to do this and that for you, who has a monopoly of influence, who can give you half the world if necessary, or aid you to accomplish some great purpose. Do you believe such things? Do you believe that one individual, made like yourselves, organized and constituted like yourselves, having powers that you possess, has been permitted by the Almighty Intelligence to exercise such powers while here in this world, and arbitrarily interfere with all the laws and purposes of nature and God? If so, you believe things that are supremely silly, altogether beneath contempt, when viewed in the light of experience and the known laws and principles of the universe.

The effect produced by the sorcerer in three-fourths of cases, depends upon the fact of the victim's knowing that the power of the sorcerer is being exercised against him. If you take that simple element out of the proposition, the power of the sorcerer is reduced in the same proportion. When the power of the sorcerer affects a result without the victim knowing what is being directed against him, you can then put it down that a mesmeric or psychological power is being directed by the sorcerer towards the person. Take out these two elements and sorcery becomes impossible. But, of course, you are far too intelligent to believe in such a thing as evoking his Satanic Majesty,—you have discarded all such opinions.

All this question of "Sorcery," supposed to be associated with the lower races of mankind, is but a blind and indefinite searching after, the spiritual powers which you possess,—is one of the expressions of spiritual growth, just as the exercise of magic is one of the expressions of psychological growth of the power to use the psychological elements of your nature. They are indications of what a man is going to do and become by and by; indications all upon the lowest plane of individual development,—and when bereft of the superstitions that surround them, they are resolved into the simple facts of nature that in your larger experience you are familiar with to-day.

We now come to the question of witchcraft. You have been bewitched by a laughing eye, a merry voice, a twist of the hair, a turn of face, a charming manner,—oh! by these you have been bewitched beyond power to resist; a spell has been cast over you which you have felt for years afterwards, and you have thanked God for such bedevilment—for it brought you all the happiness you had in life!

Here you have the secret of witchcraft,—the influence of one individual upon another. It may be laudable and good, or disgraceful and injurious; it may kindle into action the higher and better parts, or arouse all the lower and baser elements of you; may make you akin to the very angels themselves, or forge chains which shall bind you down to the lowest elements of sensuous life.

Work out the problem on that line. All the witchery and bewitching resolves itself into psychological influences; the psychologist makes his subject believe that a gold coin is red hot, that a gentleman's walking stick is the embodiment of the evil one, and by a thousand different things bewitches the intelligence and faculties and judgment of his subject, who, for the time being, is under a spell that compels him to do whatsoever the controlling mind desires him to do.

But the time was when these things were not understood, when those who were capable of exercising an influence upon other people were called "witches," were looked upon as devilish, and, mayhap, have paid for it by being roasted alive, as a burnt offering to heaven, as, indeed many were so treated. So then, when we take witchcraft in this light, think of how many thousands of your fellow-creatures in this world have suffered pains and penalties because they possessed powers which God himself gave them, for the exercise of attributes with which you are familiar to-day, and which pass unchallenged in the community at large.

Magic, sorcery and witchcraft then, in this light, bring themselves in line and harmony with the laws of nature and the possibilities of man; they are "uncanny" subjects only when you fail to understand what they involve; they are dreadful and horrible things to deal with when you are led into them blindfolded, and introduced to them in the dark; but when they come out to you in the bright light of day, when old associations fall from them, they stand out as prophecies of the powers that you are to-day personally acquainted with.

A Prominent Spiritualist Passed to Spirit Life.

We learn from a San Diego (Cal.) paper that Dr. Henry M. Barker, a prominent Spiritualist of that city, has passed to spirit life. He died near Carrville. The remains were taken to San Diego, and the funeral services took place May 20. The news of his death reached Mrs. Dobson-Barker at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Cora D. Ringlep, 230 North Sixth street, on Monday morning. The affliction is a severe blow to the entire family, coming without a previous intimation of the doctor's illness, and much sympathy is manifested for them by the numerous G. A. R. comrades and other friends at Los Gatos and in San Jose. The arrangements for burial services were made by the Commander of the E. O. C. Ord Post, in which Sheridan-Dix Post and Ladies of the G. A. R. most heartily co-operated.

INDUCE

Your Neighbor to Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Now is the time to extend the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. It will contain Occult and Spiritualistic news with which every one should be familiar. No other paper published on this earth contains such a vast amount of matter so well adapted to enrich the mind. Send in a subscription now.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations, of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. A very remarkable book. Large, octavo, 500 pages. Price, $1.75.

Prof. Lockwood's Article.

To the Editor:—In regard to Prof. Lockwood's article in The Progressive Thinker, No. 792, entitled "Ancient Doctrine of Theurgia the Basis of all Ecclesiastical Religions," etc., I desire to call the attention of those who have not read it (especially the class who may be truthfully termed paradoxical-orthodox Spiritualists and who tenaciously cling to "religious" rites and ceremonies), to its many clear, logical demonstrations of immortality, based upon infinite law, rather than vicarious atonement and paltry, fictitious saviors.

It is not probable that one of Mr. Lockwood's scientific attainment needs recommendation or fulsome eulogies to sustain his conclusive argument against theosophy and a horde of fallacious "religious" fads and fancies, but I make this reference hoping those who have not read his essay may look it up and study closely its pointed truths. They are expressed in so clear light that none can refute, and reasonable, logical minds, upon due consideration, must necessarily accept them.

He brings conclusive evidence that wars are based upon "religious" beliefs, each nation contending for its respective god, or gods, and not only in the past, but to-day, the same terrible scenes of butchery are enacted over and over in their defense through the ignoble power of bigoted "religious" doctrines and their puerile belief in the personality of a Supreme Being, rather than in scientific law as the ruling power of the universe. This so-called "religious" influence has been transmitted from past generations, and with it is hopelessly mixed inhuman greed and inordinate love of conquest. It would seem that mankind have always been ready to give themselves up to the dark, debasing influence of mystery and superstition, rather than delve into the intricate recesses of Nature's laws—the study of which, alone, can give us real facts and set our blundering feet apace upon the path of scientific evolution and divine harmony with all nations.

Is it not barely possible that Prof. Lockwood is the man that shall wield the golden hammer of Truth (cleansed from the scum of all past religions) which shall crack the adamantine nutshell of ignorance that enshrouds and promotes the fallacies of thousands of religious people?

In this connection I am constrained to ask the liberal, enlightened writers who contribute to the columns of The Progressive Thinker, if it would not be appropriate to substitute some other word than "religion" to symbolize, or represent the great universal element of Morality, Justness and Goodness which all true souls seek to obtain with their utmost power?

This word "religion" has done service throughout the centuries as cloak for many phases of hypocrisy, and having been the leading, ruling power of every grade of humanity in the moral and commercial world, I am deeply impressed that it should, (that it practically can, as the mind sufficiently unfolds) be erased from the vocabulary of learning, and other more humanizing language substituted to represent the element of purity and spiritual progress which unfolds naturally in the human soul through inevitable evolutionary processes.

All hail! to Prof. Lockwood for the light he is casting across the threshold of darkened minds.

BURR CHAAPEL.

Waverly, N. Y.

"Spirit Echoes." My Mattie E. Hull. This pretty volume contains fifty-seven of the author's latest and choicest poems. Neatly bound in cloth, and with portrait of the author. Price 75 cents.

THE CAUSE AT COLUMBUS, OHIO.

Elizabeth Harlow's Work, and Views of Things.

The season for the winter's work is over, and every one now is preparing for the parks and camps. I wish to say it has been a most successful season for the Sixth Street Church of Columbus, Ohio. I came here last fall and have been with them all the season. We have not had crowds, for we have in no way catered to the curiosity monger. But we started with a determination to put Spiritualism on its right footing and keep it there, which is education; and there has steadily grown an intelligent interest, so we have very good audiences of the best people of the city.

The interest has become such that there has been an enlarging of the working force of the church, which has in the immediate past been run by the board of trustees who have the building in charge. John D. Arras is chairman of this board, and he has worked long and faithfully for the cause in this city. But now we have another board, which is called the working board. This board will work with the old board, and have the active work in full charge this coming season. The chairman of this board is Mr. A. L. Frank, the secretary is C. A. Delaney, and the treasurer, Mr. Maxson. The new board has twenty members. Through this we hope to carry on the work more successfully and accomplish much more. It was the unanimous vote of both boards to have its present speaker return for next season. So I shall only leave for my summer work, returning the first of October.

I feel more hopeful for the cause in its real mission to the world than ever before. One can see signs all along the lines where the people are waking up to common sense. Spiritualism had drifted almost into a superstition, but now I feel it will be redeemed. If one follows The Progressive Thinker he can see where we stood, and where we may hope to stand. To read the Open Courts arouses the most credulous and gives hope to the thinkers.

It is something most dreadful, when we realize to what an extent the intelligent mind of a man can be carried to believe in the workings of spirits no matter what.

We have criticised the superstitions of other religions and especially the thought of popes, but when one reads Judge Dunn's defense of Winans, one can easily see how we drift into superstition. And the Judge is a fair representative of a host of others, who make popes of any one that will pretend to trot out spirits at a dollar a head. But usually these same people fly into a fury when asked to contribute a dollar a month or year towards spreading the philosophy. If we would uphold the philosophy to the same extent we have the phenomena, we would know more, and would not be satisfied with wigs and illuminated cheese-cloth. And I am sorry, too, that it seems such a knotty question for some, to know how to discriminate in employing for camp-meetings. It seems to me that the only sensible path of procedure is, where there has been positive evidence gained against any one, that one is at least unsafe to put up as a representative in so promiscuous a crowd as a camp-meeting is.

The old cry that possibly some of these may have at times genuine power is no excuse, for if a man or woman will trick when they cannot get the genuine, they are not safe at any time, for you never know what is coming. And I could never recommend such an one.

However, it will all work out right,

In the World Celestial

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance mediums, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness."

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

President Bowles of the National Liberal League, says: "It is one of the choicest pieces of literature of this marvelous age of books."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1. For sale at this office.

A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

By Lilian Whiting,

Author of "The World Beautiful," "Kate Field," "After Her Death," "From Dreamland Sent," etc. With portrait. 16mo. Cloth, gilt. Price $1.25. The writer of this "Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning" has thrown the book into five chapters, with sub-titles as follows:

LIVING WITH VISIONS. "Summer Snow of Apple Blossoms;" Music-Flow of Pindar; Friends in the Unseen.
LOVES OF THE POETS. The Prefigured Friend; Vita Nouva; "One Day. My Siren."
IN THAT NEW WORLD. Pisa and Poetry; In Casa Guidi; Florentine Days; Walter Savage Landor.
ART AND ITALY. Individuality of Character; The Clasped Hands; Kate Field's Records; Mrs. Browning's Death.
LILIES OF FLORENCE. Poetic Rank; Spiritual Laws; Modern Scientific Thought; The Consideration of Genius.

For Sale at this office.

In Tune with the Infinite

By Ralph Waldo Trine.

Within yourself lies the cause of whatever enters into your life. To come into the full realization of your own awakened interior powers, is to be able to condition your life in exact accord with what you would have it.—From Title-Page.

CONTENTS—I. Prelude; II. The Supreme Fact of the Universe; III. The Supreme Fact of Human Life; IV. Fullness of Life—Bodily Health and Vigor; V. The Secret, Power and Effect of Love; VI. Wisdom and Interior Illumination; VII. The Realization of Perfect Peace; VIII. Coming into fullness of power; IX. Plenty of All Things—The Law of Prosperity; X. How Men Have Become Prophets, Seers, Sages, and Saviors; XI. The Basic Principle of All Religions—The Universal Religion; XII. Entering Now into the Realization of the Highest Riches. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $1.25.

MAHOMET

His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

ALL THE HONEST MEDIUMS IN CHICAGO RECEIVE THE CORDIAL ENDORSEMENT OF THE ILLINOIS STATE SPIRITUALIST ASSOCIATION, WHETHER ORDAINED OR NOT. AS THERE ARE NUMEROUS FRAUDS IN THE CITY, IT WOULD BE WELL FOR ALL CAMP OFFICIALS TO BE EXCEEDINGLY CAREFUL AND WRITE TO DR. GEO. B. WARNE, 4203 EVANS AVENUE, FOR INFORMATION, IF THEY DESIRE ANY PARTICULARS. SUMMER CAMP-MEETINGS, WHEN PURE IN SOCIAL CONDITIONS, ELEVATED IN MENTAL AND SPIRITUAL TONE AND CONDUCTED ON STRICTLY BUSINESS METHODS ARE POWERFUL AIDS IN SPREADING THE TRUTHS OF SPIRITUALISM. IT MUST NOT BE FORGOTTEN THAT THEY ARE ALSO THE HARVEST TIME FOR THE FAKIRS, BECAUSE THEY COME TO THE RALLYING CENTERS FOR NUMBERS OF PEOPLE, MANY OF WHOM ARE HUNGERING FOR PHENOMENA ALL THE REST OF THE YEAR AND READY THERE TO PART WITH THEIR MONEY WITHOUT PRUDENCE. SPIRITUALISTS AND THE PUBLIC AT LARGE LOOK TO EVERY ONE OF OUR CAMP OFFICIAL BOARDS TO PROMOTE DECENCY, ELIMINATE TRICKERY AND RECOGNIZE ONLY HONEST MEDIUMS. THEY SHOULD PROTECT THE NOVICE AND THE GULLIBLE FROM IMPOSITION AND ROBBERY. THEY ARE LARGELY EDUCATORS OF THE PUBLIC. CAUTION, CANDOR, COURAGE AND DISCERNMENT ARE REQUIRED BY THESE OFFICERS.

L. H., of Oil City, Pa., writes: "Mrs. E. J. Demorest of Pittsburg, Pa., is with us and doing a grand work in the cause of Spiritualism. We hope she may be successful in organizing a society while here. She is giving general satisfaction."

Voodoo rites involve the shedding and drinking of blood, presumably to placate evil spirits. Many children, particularly young girls, have been sacrificed in mountain orgies, when the fanatics throw aside all pretense of civilization and commit every atrocity in a frenzy of devil worship. "I have had voodoo men many times at my house in the country," said a Port au Prince business man. "They drink and then chant and dance almost incessantly for several days and nights, swaying to and fro rhythmically while others are going around. In their patois they keep on singing and praying to the spirits and when they swing their knives as they circle about a fire they are really horrible. On these occasions they sever the heads of chickens and then seize the bodies to drink the warm blood. They pull out the heart and certain other organs, which they deem sacred and devour them raw. There are many children who disappear and who are sacrificed, but there are very few prosecutions as a result."

Dr. B. L. Eskelson, Mt. Carroll, Ill., was in the city last week. The Doctor is doing an excellent work through his lectures on the Spiritual Philosophy. He is also a healer of remarkable powers.

S. M. Powderly writes: "The Englewood Spiritual Union holds meetings every Thursday afternoon and Sunday evening. Mrs. Priscilla McArthur will lecture for us Sunday evening, June 4. Do not fail to hear this lecture. 6603 S. Halsted street."

Wilson Duncan writes from Council Bluffs, Iowa: "I sang 'Sweet Home,' with violin obligato, two Sundays ago in our meeting. An Omaha lady was entranced, and standing she addressed words to our meeting that brought tears to many eyes. I asked her who it was. She pointed to Wm. McKinley's picture, and said he was her control to speak, and had caught her unawares as she listened to that beautiful music."

Miss Elizabeth Harlow has closed a very successful engagement at Columbus, Ohio, and has now returned to her home at Haydenville, Mass.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond has been duly appointed and has official credentials as delegate for the National Spiritualists Association to the Congress of Religion, to be held the 28th, 29th, 30th and 31st, at the new "Settlement" building connected with the church of Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Langley avenue, Chicago. Eminent speakers will be in attendance. Mrs. Richmond is also fraternal delegate from her own church in this city.

Titus Merritt, the veteran Spiritualist of New York, writes: "The glorious cause of Spiritualism has made rapid progress in this city during the past winter. The secular press has almost daily published something pro and con to the subject, resulting in increased attendance at our meetings, at Tuxedo Building under the able ministration of Mrs. Margaret Gaule Reidinger, with the First Association of Spiritualists of New York, of which Mrs. Henry J. Newton is still president. Mrs. Helen T. Brigham holds her own nobly and well with the Spiritualand Ethical society at the Builders' League Hall, and in Brooklyn at the First Church of Spiritualists under the ministration of Mrs. May S. Pepper."

Mr. Hassman, president, writes: "The regular Sunday meeting of the North Star Spiritual Union was held in their Hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue. The attendance was satisfactory. Prayer and opening lecture was given by Dr. P. M. Esser on Healing Power, a blessed gift manifested through him in a remarkable manner, and which is administered free at the meetings. The same gift was again demonstrated through Dr. L. C. Koehler, a physician of this city. Tests were given by Mrs. Johanna Rennau. May 28 will be the closing meeting of said society in the above hall, and no meetings will be held until the first of September, except the regular business meetings which will be held at Brother Long's residence, 33 Upton street, once every month."

Eugenia Roubie writes from Watertown, N. Y.: "We are glad to tell what a grand and noble work Mrs. Amanda Coffman has done in Watertown. Our society is in a more prosperous condition than when she took it in charge. Our active membership has increased. The packed houses that have always been such a rarity are now quite the ordinary thing. The people who come to scoff, went away satisfied that we had a good reason for our belief - and returned with the spirit of an interested investigator. Prominent people of our city, skeptics until they saw Mrs. Coffman's work, now champion our cause. The people at large are treating our arguments with more deference than usual. Our officers and members are so well satisfied they regret the close of the season is so near at hand. It seems Mrs. Coffman has made personal friends of them all, and how could it be otherwise when she has made every service an event? Such has been her success and we are not surprised for her three previous engagements were equally satisfactory."

L. M. H. writes as follows in reference to the death of Dr. Wm. M. Hammond: "He was conscious to the last and recognized the spirit friends who came to bear him away. It was a scene well worth narrating, and I have written an account of it to all his relatives, who are mostly church members. The Christians are so fond of narrating the deathbed scenes of those who die in their faith, and claim that those outside of the church have nothing to sustain them in the hour of death, that I think it behooves us to show them to the contrary when such an event occurs. His memorial was largely attended and by many who were not Spiritualists."

Mrs. L. D. Shorey writes from Maine: "The Progressive Thinker to me is the best Spiritual paper printed. It takes a firm, decided stand for right and truth."

A telephone by the side of her relative's grave is what one woman in this city who believes in Spiritualism contemplates. The unusual request to make an estimate on a telephone which would be set at the head of a grave in one of the local cemeteries was received by a local telephone company today and strange as it may sound the woman was in earnest. Some time ago a relative of her's died and as she is a firm believer in Spiritualism she has held numerous conversations with the relative since the time when the relative passed to the great beyond. It is her belief that she cannot talk to the one departed unless she is at the grave and for that reason a great deal of her time is taken up in trips to and from the cemetery. The thought suddenly struck her that she would have a telephone installed at the grave and in this manner converse with the departed kin without the trouble of making the frequent trips.—Columbus (Ind.) Republic.

D. G. Hill writes: "The increasing interest in the meetings of the Golden Rule Spiritual Society gives encouragement to its promoters for the labor they have given towards its development, and incentive for greater effort for the future. The attendance for Sunday, May 21, was large at both services, and made up of intelligent inquiring people, and we were favored by the presence and help of such untiring workers as Mrs. Nellie Kusserow, Mrs. Virginia Bryan Lyons, Mrs. Mary McIntyre and others besides our speakers, Mrs. Martha Price, for the afternoon, and that ever faithful worker, Mrs. Isa Wilson Kaynor, for the evening. With such an array of talent and willing work, we do not wonder that seekers after truth find comfort in their attendance at our meetings, and we extend thanks to all who so ably assist us. Our speakers for June 4 will be for afternoon, Mrs. Isa Wilson Kaynor, for the evening, Mrs. Nora E. Hill. Remember the entertainment and prize drawing Saturday evening, June 17. A fine program has been arranged to conclude with ice cream and cake, at O'Donnell College Hall, So Paulina St., between Washington boulevard and Park avenue. Yoy are cordially invited.

W. W. Aber, the materializing medium, has part of July and August open for camp engagements. Address him at 3422 East Tenth street, Kansas City, Mo.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond was recently a guest of Mrs. E. B. Harbert at the summer home of Judge and Mrs. Harbert, Williams Bay, Lake Geneva. There were eight ladies in the party, and the occasion was one long to be remembered. The informal committee meeting took the form of a social and ethical club, and as it was during the recent peace conference at the Hague, many "best thoughts" for universal peace went forth like white doves from the Lake Geneva party. While there, Mrs. Richmond visited Dr. Chainey's "School of Interpretation," which is close at hand. "Mahanaim," as the school is called (the meeting of heaven and earth) is an ideal place, a beautiful home, and a true fraternity. The inmates practice ideal co-operation, all the work being shared by the inmates. Lake Geneva is becoming quite famous for its many educational, literary and ethical "colonies" and camps.

A London hypnotist who says he is able to cure the appetite for liquor explains the method as follows: "I merely say, 'You will feel an intense antipathy to wine, beer and spirits;' but, of course this can't be done without their consent. One of our society told the son of a dipsomaniac if he drank he would be sick and for six years he was not touched liquor. It is the same with smoking. This same doctor had a patient who, whenever he was not eating or sleeping, was smoking. He therefore hypnotized him, saying: 'If you ever put a pipe or cigar into your mouth you will be sick.' He then woke him and watched him fill his pipe. He put it between his lips, but he became sick immediately. The patient has not smoked since, nor shown any wish to smoke.

C. H. Mathews, 319 East High street, New Philadelphia, Ohio, writes: "To the first applicant I will send free to anyone who will pay express charges, 50 back numbers of The Progressive Thinker, in years '92, '93 and '97. Sent C. O. D., about 15 or 20 cents."

Will C. Hodge has taken his departure from San Diego, for San Francisco, and Oakland, where he intends to remain for about six weeks. He is engaged for the Edgewood Camp, between Seattle and Tacoma, from July 30, to August 20, and the annual Washington State Convention, August 21 and 22, and with the local society at Seattle, for September. He can be addressed at 1373 Tenth Avenue, East Oakland, Cal.

G. A. K. writes from Lancaster, Pa.: "The First Spiritualist Society of Lancaster, Pa., had the pleasure of hearing Mrs. Etta Wriedt, of Detroit, Mich., here for a week lately, giving trumpet seances."

Corresponding Secretary to the Progressive Spiritualist Society of Smithville, Texas, writes: "The First Progressive Spiritualist Society, of Smithville, Texas, was honored on its first anniversary, Wednesday evening, May 17, with the presence of Mr. John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas. Very appropriate remarks were made by the speaker to the society on its one year's organization, and was followed by a lecture on the subject, "The Spiritualist idea of God." It was very clear and eloquent, and was listened to with rapt attention. Mr. Ring is a speaker of much ability and all who hear him are always benefited thereby. A Lyceum was organized and the society was encouraged. I feel interested in the new work that has been placed with them."

Walter A. Hall, president of the Society, Seattle, Wash., writes: "I note by your progressive paper (and it is well worthy the name 'Progressive') that many of the representative Spiritualistic workers anticipate, this year, visiting the Lewis and Clarke Exposition, at Portland, Oregon. Upon arrival at Portland they will be within eight hours' ride by rail, from Seattle, the metropolis of the Pacific Coast. As President of the Seattle Spiritual Association, I hereby extend to each and all of the lecturers and mediums, who contemplate going to Portland, an invitation to visit our city; and I shall be pleased to correspond with any of the workers who are coming West and arrange dates for appearing before our society. To anyone going to Portland, I would suggest that you buy a round trip ticket to return East by way of Seattle. It will cost no more; and if you come to Seattle, I assure you a royal welcome and liberal financial returns. Address me at No. 2120½ Fifth Avenue."

Dr. B. F. Austin has done a most excellent work in Baltimore, Md. The Baltimore American, with 70,000 circulation reports his Sunday lecture every Monday. He is in touch with many orthodox people there who call and interview him, and they are interested in Spiritualism. By request he gave twenty of them a parlor lecture on his experiences. Wherever Mr. Austin is employed, he leaves an excellent impression for good.

Dr. Lamon of Fitzgerald, Ga., writes as follows of Geo. F. Perkins of California: "We have regarded him as one of the best psychometrists. Some seven years ago, while attending his day circle of 30 or more persons, he took up a letter that I had laid upon the table (among other articles brought there) and said: 'There is a business proposition in it, upon which you desire information as to its acceptance. A spirit influence [perfectly describing my father with his violin] says you had better reject it, as only trouble would result.' I was grateful for the timely advice. I desire to testify to the generous nature of Prof. Perkins, having been an honored guest at his Chicago home, where his dear wife, also a fine psychic, displayed great hospitality and amiability."

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "An exceedingly interesting meeting was held by the Rising Sun Mission, Sunday afternoon, May 21. Our speaker, Sister Briggs, asked for a subject from the audience, and 'Justice' and 'Love' were submitted. Her discourse was brimful of good thoughts which brought out considerable expression from Brother Avery and Sister Sims. Brother Thompson gave some very clear demonstrations of spirit return. Our choir rendered some very fine selections in the evening song service which preceded the lecture. Spirit messages were given by Sister Weaver, Sister Kirchner and Brother Thompson, all of which were readily recognized. Our May hop was a grand success and everybody had an enjoyable time. Our regular dances take place every Saturday night in our pleasure hall, and our lectures on Social Economy every Saturday night in our Mission Hall, Peoples' Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt streets. Our speaker for Sunday, June 4, will be Mrs. J. L. Fravel. Good singing, spirit messages. All welcome."

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, June 4, 1905: S. E. 58: "Band of Mercy."

Gem of Thought:—

"I will try to be kind to all harmless living creatures, and will try to protect them from cruel usage."

For information concerning The Progressive Lyceum, authorized lesson sheet of the National Spiritualists Association, address John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

At the annual meeting of the Band of Harmony, held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Richmond, in Rogers Park, May 4, the members voted to adjourn until the third Thursday in September, unless called together by the President.

Dr. Beverly writes: "The Spiritual Science Society will continue its meetings free for the summer. We find the attendance much larger, and the collections are very satisfactory. The mediums give readings in booths between the meetings at half price, and many come and eat lunch and remain all day for the services, which give food for all. We teach a high spiritual truth that heals the body, purifies the mind and liberates the spirit. This is the object of life, to unfold the powers within and fill our hearts full of love and truth. We have only the best speakers that can demonstrate the truth, and the best mediums that honestly demonstrate their many phases."

Marguerite Mac writes: "Thursday evening at the residence of Mrs. Burland, 3019 Vernon avenue, we had the pleasure of meeting quite a number of friends at the Social. Mr. Fraser was there and gave excellent psychometric readings and clairvoyant visions. Mrs. Maggie Henry, the palmist, gave a few very good psychometric readings, and Violet, Mrs. Burland's little Indian, did good work in tests and messages. She also made the coffee, and it was fine as well as the cake and strawberries."

Secretary writes from Billings, Mont.: "The second annual convention of the Montana State Spiritualist Association will convene in Billings on the 1st, 2nd and 3rd of June, Harry J. Moore, speaker, and Mrs Eva McCoy, Medium. We expect people from all parts of the State and hope for some from other states."

Virginie Barrett writes: "Will the friends please address me at No. 333 W. Colfax avenue, South Bend, Indiana. I would like a few Fall engagements, also for camp-meetings. Terms reasonable. I was pleasantly surprised last week by a visit from Brother Herrick, who has been with the friends in Elpath, and whom I had not seen for many years. He brings with him the same old good cheer, and faithful influence of a truthful, lasting worker in this grand field. I was invited to join in the service Sunday morning. It was with an inspiring heart that I journeyed along to the place; the road-side revealing the beauty of Spring, being dotted here and there with purple lilies and yellow daisies, while the songs of the robins give peace and joy on this beautiful spring day. An interested audience awaited us at the pretty hall. In the afternoon we held a friendly seance. Mr. and Mrs. Wyant, Brother Barnes and self, Mr. and Mrs. Grant, president of Elkhart society. "Tim," the Irish control of Mr. Herrick, came and renewed his acquaintance with us. He is always interesting. I was indeed pleased to again hear him. Brother Barnes had independent voices, and "Jammie," his little control, is always welcome with his tests and cheer. His seances have the desired effect to convince, and the pretty way in which he ends them, with soft music, is charming. May both these mediums be kept busy for the good of the cause."

Clara L. Stewart, Secretary of the Morris Pratt Institute, acknowledges the receipt of $5.00 from Mrs. Gott, and Skogland, the amount realized on the same.

Fred T. Slater writes: "I wish that The Progressive Thinker was read from the Atlantic to the Pacific by the orthodox Christians, for I believe it would do more good and give them more enlightenment than all the church papers and sermons combined. May you be spared for long years to carry on the good work of The Progressive Thinker, and when called to the other side be able to aid and inspire your successor in keeping up the high standard of the paper as you have so nobly done in the past."

Maggie Henry writes: "On Sunday, May 21, at the Universal Occult Society, as usual, we had a very interesting meeting. Many questions on the Spiritual philosophy were answered by the guides of our speaker, F. M. Stoller, followed by messages by Madame Lucile De Loux and others. Strangers are cordially invited to attend our meetings at No. 77 East 31st street, Hall C, known as "Old 77." On last Wednesday, Madame Lucile DeLoux, held a social in her parlors, at 2952 Cottage Grove avenue. All present had a very enjoyable evening. We had messages and tests from Hugh Fraser, better known as "The Boy Medium." We had several selections on the violin by Prof. LaLoude. Prof. Stoller gave many satisfactory psychometric readings. Madame De Loux gave messages. All had a spiritual feast as well as ice cream, cake and lomonade."

E. A. M. writes from Akron, N. Y.: "The Search-light of Truth is with us. Those who have been blind to the philosophy of Spiritualism are awakening. Yes, through the untiring and faithful efforts of our pastor, Mrs. Atcheson, of Buffalo, N. Y., the vail has been lifted and the light shines. Her messages from the immortal side have proved beyond a doubt that life is eternal; that the dear departed do come with loving messages for their friends on the earth plane. Spiritualism in Akron is in its infancy, but we feel with Mrs. Atcheson as our teacher and guide, the light will be made to shine so bright and beautiful that those who are striving and starving for the truth will be made to see the beacon that shines for all."

G. B. writes from Manchester, N. H.: "The Manchester Society Progressive Spiritualists elected the following officers on May 13: President, Fred C. Fearon, 222 Laurel street; First Vice-President, Albert E. Hall, Cypress street; Second Vice-President, Mrs. David Thayer, 160 Bridge street; Secretary, Mrs. Flora A. Francis; Treasurer, Andrew Kay; Collector, Leon B. Page. Meetings are held every Sunday from October to June, and with local talent from June to October."

Secretary Ridley writes from Sheridan, Wyoming: "A vote of thanks was extended by the Spiritualists Society of Sheridan, Wyo., to Mrs. F. D. McCormick, president of the Spiritualists Association, in which it was made possible for us to partake of a treat in listening to the lectures delivered by Harry J. Moore, and the tests given by Mrs. Eva McCoy. Mr. Moore is an excellent speaker and the most skeptical have to acknowledge his excellent logic. Mrs. McCoy's tests were fine. Our association is in its infancy, only four months old. We were organized by Mr. and Mrs. Sprague when on their tour of California, with Charles Menders of nineteen. We have increased our membership to twenty-eight, good, true workers, and we hope in the future to be counted as one of the bright stars in Spiritualism."

John Lord writes from Philadelphia, Pa.: "I was 72 years old yesterday, and my love for The Progressive Thinker, its manager, and our cause, increases with age. May a long life be yours and success crown every effort is my wish."

The hand painted chocolate set that has been donated to the Sunflower Club, to be raffled for at the Fourth of July picnic, will be on exhibition at the League meeting, on Tuesday evening, June 6.

The New York Press says: "Physicians and the public at large will have the benefit of whatever discoveries may be made in the future as to psychical phenomena, Spiritualistic or telepathic, by a society which has been organized by Prof. Hyslop of Columbia University. It is yet in embryo, for the officers have not been elected and the name has not been selected, but a committee was appointed at the initial meeting held on last Thursday night in the Harlem Casino, at which were present about fifty men interested in esoteric research. The avowed purpose of the new society is to investigate all so-called manifestations given by Spiritualists; to expose that which is fraudulent and publicly approve that which is good. It is said that Andrew Carnegie and other wealthy men will help the society when the organization is completed. Dr. Billings and Dr. Zweisohn urged that tests be laid down by the society and that spirit mediums be invited to give their demonstrations according to the society's tests, not their own. Physicians, he said, should be given opportunity to study the mediums and make observations as to their mental and physical condition when in the trance state. Two men, who said they represented two of the foremost mediums in the city, announced that their clients stood ready to submit to such tests."

London is talking of a remarkable seance held in a private house in the suburbs, at which a number of prominent men of letters, scientists, lawyers and physicians were present—most of them in the capacity of earnest believers in Spiritualism. Among them were Sir William Crookes and Sir Oliver Lodge, the two leading scientists of the day, and Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. Correspondence in the newspapers reveals the fact that an unusually large number of public men are Spiritualists, and that large sums of money are spent every week in the attempt to fathom the mystery of the unknown. One of the three gentlemen named above told me in all seriousness yesterday, that at a recent seance he had discovered the important fact that the Japanese and Russian soldiers and sailors who have "passed over" are still fighting their battles and that other spirits who are forced to become unwilling spectators of the ghostly strife are very much inconvenienced and shocked thereby. Furthermore, I am told that the new cult of Spiritualism maintains that when we "pass over" we enter a sort of floating state, in which we are totally useless, apparently unhappy and nervous, with an overweening desire to get into communication with our friends in the flesh by means of any medium that may happen to be handy. They say that when the spirits find out that there is to be a seance they crowd in millions to the place, and only the strongest and most energetic manage to secure lodgment in the medium—Brooklyn Life.

The Boston Globe has the following, which speaks for itself: "Rev. John Scully in his discourse at the church of the Immaculate Conception took up the subject of 'Marriage Impediments.' He spoke upon different causes which rendered marriage null and void and gave instances where, though a ceremony was performed, there was in reality no marriage. He said in part: 'The marriage contract between certain persons is null and void by God's law, natural and revealed. All Christians agree so far. No one holds that marriage between father and daughter, or brother and sister is now valid. But we maintain that the church has power to institute impediments nullifying the contract. The reason is very simple. Marriage between the baptized is a sacrament. Therefore this contract falls under ecclesiastical authority. Just as the state may nullify contracts between minors, so many the church limit the freedom of this sacramental contract. So, too, the state has no power to nullify marriage, although as the marriage formalities affect the public order it may regulate them by providing that the names should be registered, etc.'"

THE CAUSE IN ELYRIA, O.

Going On With New Strength and Courage.

To the Editor.—I take this opportunity to let the world and our friends know that we, "The Progressive Spiritualist Society, of Elyria, Ohio, are not dead yet, or even sleeping. Although we have in the past year passed through a crisis, and although the downfall of our society has been prophesied, and so reported, I am glad to tell your friends and the true friends of the cause, that our little boat has safely weathered the storm, and is about to enter the calm sea, where it will again unfurl its sails and proudly continue its voyage of exploration and missionary work.

While the storm has been a fierce one, and it seemed impossible that the turbulent waves would fail to shatter our craft upon the rocks of envy and selfishness, a few honest souls stood bravely by and encouraged and sustained the skipper with words of cheer and encouragement.

We have fought the good fight, and truth has conquered, as it always will, where the heart does not grow faint.

We send our sympathy and encouragement to others that may, like ourselves, be going through a process of renovation. While we have lost five of our members, two of them through the change called death, besides one we could claim as our own, we have never been stronger than we are to-day, for we are harmonious. And as in unity is strength, we feel confident of doing as great a work in the near future as we have done in the past. Although we have made no effort during our time of trouble to get new members, we expect to add ten or twelve new members, who are true blue, and have signified their intention of casting their lot with us.

On Saturday, May 21, we had those tireless, earnest workers, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, with us and the fact that Sunday evening they were greeted by the largest and most intelligent audience we have had in years, speaks well for their work here, as they are well known to Elyria audiences, having served our society many times for the past six or seven years. They did much good here, as they always have.

Brother Sprague sent many truths home and Mrs. Sprague did unusually well in her message work, giving some wonderful proofs of spirit presence.

I would also speak of the good work Brother Moses Hull did here in February, and also Miss Harlow, who served our society a number of times during the year.

The class of work done by such as the above is appreciated by Spiritualists, skeptics and investigators alike, while some of the work palmed off in the name of Spiritualism, disgusts and drives away the intelligent or sensitive investigator.

Let us renovate our rostrum as well as seance room, and encourage and employ only such as are worthy, true and capable.

FREDERICK W. MARTIN.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

While on my way to my father's funeral, our little baby, who sought us only three months ago to be her earth parents, returned to her home in the soul world. The cause of her transition was pneumonia, and she suffered intensely until she escaped to her home in the land o' the leal. The little form was cremated, May 18. Just why this should be, I do not quite understand, but some day, perhaps, we shall know. The little form was perfect; the smile will never be forgotten, and the void she has left will be most painful for long years to come. Baby is safe—we all know that—but the keen agony of the long-suffering mother, who is but slowly recovering from pneumonia, is something pitiful. She has suffered beyond all words to describe and the loss of this treasure is filling her cup to the brim with bitterness. It is to her to whom all sympathy should flow—all earnest prayers be offered for her recovery. May the dear ones on the other side give her the balm of healing, and bring her face to face with all of her arisen loved ones, that she may drink of the cup of joy while here on earth. HARRISON D. BARRETT.

Passed to spirit life at Lebanon, Missouri, April 18, William Spohn, age nearly 72. He had been a Spiritualist for several years. He leaves a wife who knows that he still lives just behind the veil, and will, with their children, await her coming.

VICTORIA SPOHN.

Andrew J. Henry, a prominent Mason and friend of Spiritualism, passed on, May 10, from his home at Grand Ledge, Mich. He leaves a wife to mourn him, although she has the consolation of our philosophy. Four sisters also remain of his family. The funeral was conducted by the Sir Knights of Lansing, of Grand Ledge and other towns, the discourse being given by Mrs. A. E. Sheets. COR.

Dr. Wm. M. Hammond of Rosedale, Kansas, passed to spirit life, April 27, lacking just one week of being 90 years old. His body was cremated, according to his request. The Spiritual societies of Kansas City, Mo., united in a memorial on the afternoon of May 14, services conducted by Mrs. Baldwin. Dr. Millard F. Hammond, who was traveling, and stopping over Sunday in the city, saw notice of the meeting and came. He was asked to speak, and made the concluding remarks which were much appreciated by all. The deceased was born in the state of New York, and had lived in Michigan, Ohio, Missouri, California, and lastly in Kansas. He had been a Spiritualist over fifty years, and will be remembered as such in nearly all the places where he has lived. His wife, Dr. Loretta Mann-Hammond, who survives him, is also an old Spiritualist. L. M. H.

Elizabeth H. King, wife of Wm. H. King, and mother of Mrs. H. S. Beals, passed to the higher life at the home of her daughter in Sacramento, Cal., April 23, 1905, at the age of 81 years. She was born at Hartford, Conn., and was one of the first mediums and speakers in the cause of Spiritualism. Although she suffered much physically, her work of giving readings continued up to a few hours before leaving this life.

Lester T. Barker passed to spirit life at his home in Minneapolis, May 10, age 78 years. He was born in New York, and there married Mary A. Kenyon fifty-two years ago. He served through the war of the rebellion in a New York regiment, faithful to every duty. Many friends, neighbors and comrades met to wish him God speed in his new life. The service at the house was conducted by the writer; at the grave by Levi Butler Post of the G. A. R. MRS. ASA TALCOTT.

David Thayer, born Oct. 18, 1819, passed to spirit life on May 4, 1905, at 12:30 o'clock. He was a devoted Spiritualist. He had been identified with Lake Sunapee camp-meeting since it was organized; been its president, and for many years held office in the Society of Progressive Spiritualists of this city, and was vice-president at his transition. He had a very wide circle of warm friends who held him in high esteem. He was a medium and under control of an Indian guide of immense strength, and a healer. For two years he had expected the change, and a shining light was often seen glowing on his countenance when speaking of it, and at the moment of his departure from the body, a halo of happiness came and he passed as easily as to sweet repose. The gifted medium, Anna L. Jones, of Lowell, Mass., at his request, spoke words of cheer and consolation at the burial service, May 7, and read a poem written that morning by the author of this sketch. The Spiritualist society attended in a body. Many flowers were about the casket, and the body taken to Valley Cemetery for interment.

GEORGE BUSH.

Manchester, N. H.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism, A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood, lecturer upon physical, physiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the molecular or spiritual hypothesis of nature. Scholarly, masterly, trenchant. Price 25 cents.

"Death Defeated; or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young." By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D. Price $1. 10 cents.

OUR TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

And lastly, our latest premium book, "Letters From the Spirit World," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea.

All these TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.75 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family,—an achievement only accomplished by the Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

WHAT SHALL WE EAT?

The Food Question from the Standpoint of Health, Strength and Economy.

Containing numerous tables, showing the constituent elements of over three hundred food products and their relations, cost and nutritious values, time of digestion, etc., indicating best foods for all classes and conditions. By Alfred Andrews. 120 pp. Price, leatherette, 50 cents; cloth binding, 75 cents.

To many people there is no question of greater importance than the one asked in the title of this book, and no more satisfactory effort to answer it has been made than is to be found between the covers of this practical volume. It opens with a consideration of the purposes for which we eat, and how food material is converted to our needs, and is used in sustaining life.

A very important feature of the work is found in the numerous tables given, showing the results of some 1,500 analyses of food products to determine the constituent elements, comparative food values, time required for digestion, etc. S.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced on a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents: plain, 40 cents.

20th Century Guide TO PALMISTRY

This is the simplest, clearest and yet the most exhaustive presentation this interesting science has yet received. All of the discoveries, investigations and researches of centuries are summed up in this practical, fascinating treatise on Palmistry.

There is no trait, no characteristic, no inherited tendency, that is not marked on the palm of the hand and can be traced with unerring accuracy by following the principles enforced by the presented in this. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, $1.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Kind reader, are you or do you know of those sitting for development? No difference for what phase of mediumship. Send your address with a 2-ct postage stamp. In return I will give my experience and advice free of charge. J. G. HINDERER.

Anderson, Ind.

Can Telepathy Explain?

Results of Psychical Research.

By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage, in this book of 243 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

"The Present Age and Inner Life; Ancient and Modern Mysteries Classified and explained." By Andrew Jackson Davis. We have a few copies of this work by the celebrated seer. Cloth, $1.10.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth, $1.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

John Whitworth: Q. I read a statement in a scientific book that there are 30,000 centers in the human brain, only 1,000 are ever brought into use. If this is a fact, does it not prove there is a future life of progression in order that the other 29,000 may be developed?

A. This correspondent is mistaken in accepting the above as a statement of science. Wherever it was published it is entirely of imagination. The only "centers" of thought in the brain are the nerve cells, imbedded in the grey matter of the ganglia, and around the peripheral extremities of the nerve fibres. Their number it is impossible to determine or even approximately to estimate. They vary in size from .002 to .0003 m in diameter, and have branching appendages one of which may unite with some fibre.

These cells are batteries for the production of vital force, which is a modified form of electricity. Every thought is accompanied with a discharge of this from the cells in some portion of the brain. As different portions have different thought expressions, the region affected thus depends on the character of the thoughts.

In this thought activity, some cells are always destroyed, while others simply discharge. If the activity involves all the powers of the mind, or if the emotions are deeply excited, the vital, or nerve force becomes exhausted, and rest is demanded. In case of the emotions, the exhaustion of the cell force brings on a partial coma, and thus fortunately by its opiate becomes less sensitive. But emotions may be so overwhelming as to so exhaust the vital force of the cells, that there is not sufficient to carry on the organic functions, and death is the result.

These cells are not evenly distributed throughout the brain, but in different portions, they are in greater or less abundance according to the qualities of the mind, but whenever massed in the brain or spinal ganglia, they are the only "centers" of thought. Really they are the keys by and through which thought is expressed or better expresses itself. There are it is true many cells not used, for there is always a vast number in the immature and growing state. But these when developed, become active and take the places of those worn out and absorbed. There is none unemployed except the immature and growing cells.

R. H. Lees, England: Q. This being Nelson's year, can you tell us anything of his present condition in the spirit world?

A. Nelson was one of the greatest, if not the greatest, of the commanders of the old-time battle ships. He was a fighter and pre-eminently successful as a fighter. As to intellectual attainments, culture and those qualities that go into the formation of an exemplary character, he was not superior to the men who braved death under his command. Hence it may be a surprise to the hero-worshiping reader, to learn that the conditions surrounding the great spirit are no different from those of thousands who fought under his command. He has outgrown the war-spirit, and found that the fierce passion which directly and indirectly caused him so much anxiety and pain while on earth, was not abiding in the next sphere, and the sacrifices he made were useless, as far as gain in his present life is concerned.

He is not with a circle of warriors, for he has advanced beyond that stage and although it cannot be said he repents his conduct in war, he takes no pride in it, nor makes mention. His life on earth was for the things thereof, and there was little stored up for the future.

While Napoleon gathered a court around him and maintained a phantom show of pomp and power, few there are who have the prestige and attraction to pursue such a course, or we may say the inclination.

Hence when men like Nelson enter spirit life, they are no more than ordinary mortals, and may be so spiritually dwarfed by their life pursuits, as to be among the least. They as children, have to begin at the beginning.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

"The Jesuits." By Rev. B. F. Austin, A. M., B. D. An excellent pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

Review of Passing Events.

By Hudson Tuttle, Editor-at-Large, N. S. A.

The English Lyceum Work.

In comparing the lyceum work in this country with that of our English brethren, while we are exceedingly glad of their wonderful success, a feeling of sadness cannot be cast of. The more, when we read of the suspension of the Boston Lyceum, which for so many years has been under the devoted zeal of its earnest leaders one of the shining lights.

We cannot impute this state of affairs to our own officers, for a more zealous or able laborer is not to be found than John W. Ring, who reminds of the old apostles, who went forth on their missions with perfect trust in their cause.

Our English lyceumists adopted an effective plan. They made the lyceum the leader. The best men and women gave their time and efforts. They organized in a way that bound them together. They did not stop to quarrel over a creed. It does not take many men like J. J. Morse, Alfred Kitson, Chiswell and Greenwood to make an opposing force that will conquer difficulties.

The report for 1904 gives 140 lyceums in good standing in the Union, a gain of 25 during the year. There are 18 lyceums not in the Union, against 24 last year. This leads to the inference that six non-union joined the "federated," and 18 new lyceums were organized.

There are 158 lyceums in all, three only being in Scotland, and none in Wales! Mr. Kitson in his report regrets this; we may regret, but we ought not to expect a people led into such religious riot as the Welsh, would have taste or inclination for the cool, reasoning method of the lyceum. There could be nothing imagined more different.

There are of the "Federated," 1305 officers and 6928 members. Of the non-Federated (estimated) 132 officers, and 765 members.

If anyone objects to organization, here is an object lesson. There can be no permanent movement without a union of individual effort, and the more self-devoted and zealous this is, the more gratifying the success.

There is one element more, and it has been an important factor. The Lyceum Banner, started by the Morses, and for a time sustained by their self-sacrifice, has been a force to bring union. The report tells us that its circulation has increased by 4,000 copies during the year. How gladly would we record this of our Lyceum Superintendent's Progressive Lyceum.

There should be ten lyceums in the United States to one in England.

The "Holy Rollers."

In Southwestern Ohio there has sprung up a new sect with peculiar rites and ceremonies, which puts in the shade the everyday experiences of the churches.

As the great Wales revival came to a people emotional and ignorant, so this Ohio revival came to the most ignorant and benighted portion of the great state. It began among the hill dwellers of Pike county. Pike stretches along the lovely Scioto river and the inhabitants are divided sharply into two classes. The wealthy class of the valley does not mingle with the uncouth and half savage people of the mountainous regions which fringe the valleys of Southwestern Ohio. It is among the latter that the Roller religion has become dominant. They at first called themselves the Christian Union Church, a sect in good standing to-day although a small denomination.

Two years ago a revival was started and by the frenzied exhortations, some of the converted began to roll on the floor. Then others joined, and all followed until the wildest pandemonium reigned. Men, women and children rolled in tangled masses. They continued to roll, hour after hour, until black in the face and completely exhausted. Some roll in the fields, and the pious believe that one exceedingly zealous man rolled until he rolled himself to pieces, and then the pieces rolled until they came together and united and the man came home safe and sound! Why not? This is a slight miracle to those performed by the founders of Christianity.

Why do they roll? They answer, because they want to, or because they can't resist the impulse.

They lately became subject to the law. It is not usual for the law to interfere in religious services. It protects all in their peculiarities, however crazy they may be. The "Rollers" were not wise. When asked why they rolled, they should have said, "It is a part of our religion"; they did not, but replied, "We can't help it," "we want to," etc., and thereby fell short of a religious sect. An evangelist must earnestly believe in his doctrines to succeed. The authorities saw their opportunity, and undertook to break up these rollers, who were bringing disgrace on the Christian name.

The opportunity came when the Rollers attempted to perform a miracle by restoring sight to a blind girl. They started a meeting at the Town Hall on Monday morning, and continued without interruption until Tuesday morning, twenty-four hours. As the girl's sight was not improved the leaders announced that it was because of her want of faith, and adjourned until Wednesday evening. The Town Hall is a plank shanty, but a good rolling place. The Rollers became more furious and abandoned. They surpassed any former action, and after the three-days' service they were on the eve of collapse. The township officers thought it time that something be done. The rolling had spread along the hilltops during two years like a contagion, and as the Rollers boasted, it was not now the ignorant but many of the lowlands with culture, had joined the ranks.

One of the leaders in the anti-roller movement said to a reporter: "The whole bunch is insane. We had to step in to save them from their own hysteria. If we hadn't broken up their meetings they would all have gone crazy. As it is now, at least four are too near insanity to be comfortable to themselves or others. We are proceeding against it as a public nuisance."

The officers broke up the meeting to save the frenzied people from self-destruction.

Really, there is nothing religious in these performances. They have come from time to time as the result of evangelist exhortations, and are to the spirit what epidemic and contagious diseases are to the body.

Superstition and ignorance prepare the mind, as a hot-bed, for the nourishment of the psychic microbes, and the only remedy is the diffusion of knowledge.

The thoughtful student of this subject cannot but speculate on what the result would have been, if instead of being hedged in by intelligent people, these "Rollers" had been surrounded by people like themselves. Would the whole state have become rolling fanatics, and rolling taken the place of prayer and sermon?

In all such movements, some hysterical person does some strange thing, and thus suggests to others who imitate, then the hypnotic influence strengthened by additions of numbers, becomes more and more intense until the whole assembly is swept before it. But the subject must be prepared, and the thoughtful are immune from such attacks.

A Survival of Hell.

The monstrous forms of the past ages are entombed in the earth's rock-crust: Flying lizards, and saurians whose restoration is a nightmare. They are all dead now and in their tombs of stone. One, "The Old Dragon," a giant man, with horns on his head, and a tail like a prehensile monkey's, lived down to the past generation and then was supposed to die. Henry Ward Beecher thought he was dead. Theodore Parker was sure, and men of science have laboriously performed autopsies on the supposed remains.

The preachers who had for some thousands of years made themselves well acquainted with the "Old Satan," the "Dragon from the "bottomless pit," and held him up as a scare-devil, to drive souls to God, were reticent, and careful how they made their appeals. Their personal devil was refined into an evil principle, and grew thinner and thinner like an evanishing whisp of fog. Now it gives a nervous shock, this declaration from the pulpit that the devil still lives and is active. It remained for a Chicago preacher, Rev. Newell, to go over to Toronto, and proclaim the glad tidings! The professors in Chicago colleges lead the world in their startling assertions. They are nothing if not bizarre! Newell is ahead of his church—or shall we say an hundred years behind? What has Toronto, the quiet Canadian city, done that such a preacher is sent to scare its people?

Rev. Newell is reported as saying: "There isn't a preacher on earth who is faithful to God who doesn't preach hell; he can't be a disciple of Christ and not preach it."

He appealed to Christ for evidence, saying: "There was more of hell on the lips of Jesus than in those of any of his preachers."

He knows all about hell. The dead are clothed in indestructible bodies, capable only of suffering, and all punished and tortured by eternal flames.

He had no time to fool with scientific notions. All the terrible manifestations of flood, earthquakes and tornadoes are directly from God.

The Mont Pelee people, he said, had on the day before the calamity crucified a pig in mock derision of the Cross.

The fear and terror of lost men on their deathbeds furnished strongest argument. "I see into the very depths of hell this very minute," was the exclamation of Sir Francis Newport to his infidel companions just before his death. Tom Paine's screams of terror on his deathbed could be heard half a mile away.

When a man, regardless of truth, and in his bigotry is conscienceless, with a vivid imagination, manufactures "facts" to support his assertions, he becomes a dangerous factor, and difficult to meet in argument. Nobody ever heard of that "crucified pig" before, and if every pig on the island had been crucified, is there an educated man in the world who believes God would care or be so angry as to destroy the people, innocent as well as guilty? Mr. Newell does not believe it. It is his stock in trade. He mouths it as Poll Parrot cries out, "Oh, my sore toe!"

Nor does he believe the infamous story of Thomas Paine. He knows that it was started by Paine's enemies, and although completed refuted by his friends who proved from reliable witnesses that the great thinker dropped away in peaceful sleep, after the terrible physical suffering he had endured, the preachers have gone on repeating the falsehood, until even our strenuous president was so warped in his historical criticism that he wrote of him as a "filthy little Atheist."

This may be thought to be speech too plain for the amenities of refined discussion. There are those who would call a lie, an erroneous statement of the truth, and thus take the force from language. When Mr. Newell, before a "crowded audience," unqualifiedly makes such untruthful statements, knowing that he is shielded by his pulpit from contradiction, does he not open the door for a reply in the same fashion? If the refutation is not made in as strong words as he has clothed his assertions, it becomes weak and powerless.

The gospel ministers claim to be devoted to the truth. If they are, they should carefully inform themselves on the subject they speak of, and if they have done this they know that all the stories they repeat, of "deathbed agonies" of unbelievers, are manufactured lies made by zealots for "Christ's sake."

These lies have been refuted, time after time, yet not the least attention is given to the denials, and the repetition goes serenely on. If the church newspapers should open their columns for a general attack on frauds in their ranks, as some of the spiritual journals have done, it would be amazing reading matter, quite as sensational as anything that has appeared in the latter.

HUDSON TUTTLE,
Editor-at-Large N. S. A.

ONE MORE RIVER TO CROSS.

I have lived in this old body,
Some seventy years or more,
Now I'm waiting for the boatman
Who is drawing near the shore.
Yes, I'm waiting for the boatman
To take my spirit o'er
To the land of light and beauty;
It is there I want to go,
For I see the pearly gates
Are swinging to and fro.
I shall meet my dear, good mother,
And my many friends besides,
When I leave this worn old body,
And cross the great divide.
Oh, how joyfully they'll greet us,
Holding us in close embrace;
Though the grave did once divide us,
Now we meet them face to face.
And we feel their gentle influence,
And the touch of loving hands,
And we know we'll live forever,
In the happy spirit land.

R. S. HARRINGTON.

Corvallis, Ore.

JOTTINGS FROM SEATTLE, WASH.

Moses Hull's Work on the Pacific Coast.

I am inclined to believe this planet, globe, or ball, on which we think we live, is moving and improving. According to the best information we can get upon the subject, the entire universe—with its multitudinous units—is performing a grand promenade through limitless space with tremendous velocity. These units, themselves seem to say as much. How they twinkle and blink at you; look directly at you; and somehow convey the idea that they are "winking the other eye at you," and all the while saying in star dialect, that "there is nothing to be done save to obey the law, and "chasse out" with the rest of the family; "balance across" the skyless space, "all hands 'round" etc.; no confusion and no clashing, though countless ages come and go and the heavenly dance go on forever.

Once we did not believe this. We thought our world was stationary and flat, and the only "real thing" because by us inhabited, while, with superb egotism we supposed the rest of the units were created expressly to dance attendance.

We think differently now. We have somehow discovered that behind or accompanying the planet, there is a force compelling our onward movement, and, by the same token impelling or creating improvement. Under pressure our planet (we call it ours) is becoming refined and on the whole becoming a much better "residence district" than formerly. This improvement seems to be shared by all its products; its animals less gross; its vegetables more nutritious; its flowers more beautiful and fragrant, and its "general deportment" of a higher grade.

We also believe, but cannot prove it, that this same law is operating upon man; impelling him "nolens volens," to become wiser and better; and consequently happier.

Occasionally a Canute plants himself across the route of the advancing tide, but is soon compelled to move on or be submerged. Again, in these later days, there are those who represent the other extreme and rise by sheer main strength; "conscious will-power," making all law submit. We have witnessed a few temporary successes, and a very large number of failures.

Law seems to be supreme, and generally has the best of the argument.

Well, this being true, what are we as Spiritualists going to do about it? Recognize the fact, and adapt ourselves and our methods to it, or halt in our course, anchor to the past and refuse to move? There is a marked tendency in some quarters and in some particulars, to do the latter.

Conservatism has its uses, but it's an easy matter to be too conservative. Basic principles of course, do not change; but methods of expression and of application are changing constantly. Herein lies the problem to be solved, and its solution is not difficult.

Human experience has taught that society must be constantly reformed; frequently reconstructed, and its expressions made to line up with higher ideals and broader standards of measurements. It can anchor permanently to no system, nor be confined, to a set formula of action.

Spiritualism cannot become the exception and maintain its standing. Its advantages lie in well attested phenomena, and a scientific philosophy. Its disadvantages are often found in emphasizing the former at the expense of the latter, forgetting that the world needs analysis as well as evidence. Just at present the cult seems to be clinging most tenaciously to the phenomena. Not long since we learned of a society that refused very strenuously to employ one of our strongest and most effective speakers because she preferred not to give public tests. Ye Gods! and some of these people were seeking "tests" a quarter of a century ago, and we fear will be doing so a quarter of a century hence.

It happens that a large number of old-time workers have been "retired," by the aforesaid method of procedure. Let us hope this kind of verdict may not often be rendered

As in music, art and literature, we can create the demand which we wish to supply. A happy blending of these agencies will best minister to a healthful public sentiment.

This leads us to observe that public sentiment, in Seattle, is generally healthful. This is evidenced by the fact that it required a vast outlay of dollars, numerous bands of music, midnight parades and a combined clergy (they are combined occasionally, not often), to hold the recent Chapman Evangelistic movement in proper form for its brief sojourn here, and further evidenced by an immediate return to normal conditions when the pressure was removed. The people didn't even feel insulted by this ostentatious display of a worn-out and bedraggled system, well knowing its transitory and in this instance, migratory nature. A few cases of insanity and commitments to the state asylum seem to be the only residuum. The movement was below the level of the Seattle church and clergy. They do more and better work when left to their own devices.

This part of the planet is moving on, the appropriate action for the sensationalist, be he orthodox or heterodox, is to move "off."

And now, shall we be open to the charge of "egotism," if we affirm that the Spiritualists of Seattle are doing their work well in this onward movement? We will venture the statement. But we are not alone in our efforts. We have learned how to be assisted as well as how to assist others.

We found a way to draw Moses and Mattie Hull out of their eastern seclusion, and out to the Pacific Coast, and it has certainly been a "feast of reason and flow of soul" for the past two months. Nothing like it in the previous history of this city. Their coming has done more to impress the value of our work upon the minds of the people in general than can now be estimated, or expressed in words.

It is placing it mildly to say that Spiritualism has gained in influence and stability among the various movements of the city. It is making better men and better women of those who listened.

But the crowning event occurred in the closing scenes, in the form of a regular old-fashioned debate between Moses and the leading Adventist divine (?) of the Pacific Northwest. It was a great treat to both veteran and novice and particularly in this discussion, for all did participate either upon one side or the other. One of our largest halls was filled nightly and such a blending of the "old and the new," with Adventism as a base, up through the various strata of liberalism, to the "Cap Sheaf" of them all, Modern Spiritualized Spiritualism, will not soon occur, possibly never again.

The event was a natural outgrowth of conditions created by the Chapman visitation. A challenge was sent to him, but it somehow slipped past him, and fell upon the pathway of our Adventist friends. Whoever knew an Adventist that was not spoiling for a "scrap?" (mental, of course), and who ever knew one that did not feel fully equipped to battle with anything or person, short of Cloven-foot or Deity?

Well, the gladiators met. One representing the ideas of the medieval age, and the other the most advanced of an enlightened scholarship. Briefly speaking, the good Elder Steers was no match for Moses, either in scholarship or originality. Indeed, it was painfully apparent that he could not, or did not, at all times comprehend what Moses was talking about. The good brother was evidently "long" on honesty, but woefully "short" on what is now common knowledge. If, as Moses affirmed, the bible sustained Modern Spiritualism, it is apparent that Elder Steers knows but little about his own textbook. If it does not, his own argument would leave us in doubt as to what it does sustain. But the verdict of the vast audience was unmistakable. Even the Adventists were led to applaud their champion's opponent at times.

It is seldom given that a speaker, and stranger to so many, so completely wins his audience, as occurred in the appearance and argument of this champion of advance thought. After the first evening Brother Hull received an ovation upon his entrance to the hall, and when rising to speak. It reminded one of the enthusiasm created by the appearance in our midst of Bryan and Roosevelt. And what was more important and gratifying to the lovers of Spiritualism, every speech of his did royal service.

Brother Hull never forgets that the "Truth" as we see it, is the end to be achieved. Well, to defeat the opponent, but still better, to build up the Cause the opponent seeks to destroy. According to arrangements he spoke on the negative of the Elder's affirmative, but was constantly affirming the truths of Spiritualism.

The discussion and the sermons given by Brother and Sister Hull, have done much good, and their visit will long be remembered, even after good Father Time shall have folded his loving mantle around them and hied them away across the border.

Personally, we have enjoyed studying anew this grand young man, and his full-orbed, soul-crowned comrade, and helpmeet.

We have queried as to that subtle charm that never tires, and yet ministers in full to the demands of hungry souls.

Unimpeachable honesty, unquenchable thirst for truth, absolute devotion to human interests; these are strong points in the make-up of Brother and Sister Hull, or we fail to read correctly.

Seattle, Wash. R. F. LITTLE.

A TRINITY OF GREAT MEN.

As Presented by John T. Dow, of Duluth, Minn.

Realizing our very limited ability, we hesitate to judge as to the merits of individualities,—but there can be no harm in expressing our opinion, and allow others to judge of its correctness.

It seems to us that for all-around great and noble characters, each in his own field of operation, at this time, three men that we can name stand at the very apex of nobility and grandeur.

The names of this trinity who have reached to near the zenith of human attainment, are, Hudson Tuttle, Rev. Minot J. Savage, and W. J. Bryan.

If our estimation of these men is too high, we will stand corrected when you can show nobler specimens of human greatness anywhere upon the face of the earth.

JOHN T. DOW.

Duluth, Minnesota.

A CREED.

There is a destiny that makes us brothers:
None goes this way alone;
All that we send into the lives of others
Comes back into our own.

I care not what his temples or his creeds,
One thing holds firm and fast—
That into his fateful heap of days and deeds
The soul of a man is cast.

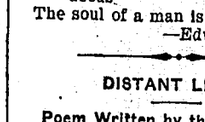
—Edwin Markham.

DISTANT LIGHT.

Poem Written by the Planchette.

A light in the distance breaking
A token of coming day,
To the many sad hearts waiting
Along this toilsome way.

A distant gleam of sunshine
Among the rugged clouds,
Like the peaceful smile immortal,
On the face of the snowy shroud.



A distant echo oft starts us,
Of things we cannot see,
That tells us of life eternal,
And events that are to be.

And West, in the shadows deep'ning,
We catch the whisper of song,
Borne on the evening breezes,
And gently carried along.

A whispered hope and prayer,
For that long-sought land called blest
We close our eyes and fold our hands,
And seek that quiet rest.

IRANO.

A $1.00 PAIR FREE TO TRY If You Have RHEUMATISM

Send your name to-day and get this Remarkable Cure by Return Mail.

To those who answer this advertisement at once will be sent free to try a pair of the Celebrated Magic Foot Drafts, the great Michigan discovery which is curing all kinds of Rheumatism, including even some of the worst chronic cases in the state. These Drafts are worn on the feet (without the least inconvenience), but they cure Rheumatism in every part of the body by absorbing the poisonous uric acid and other impurities from the blood through the great foot pores. Don't think that because this remedy is simple and cheap it won't cure. It will, and already thousands have written us that it has cured them. It will cure you. Send us your name to-day and give the Drafts a trial. If you are satisfied with the benefit received from them, then send us one dollar. If not, keep your money. You Decide. A splendid new booklet on Rheumatism, illustrated with colored plates, comes free with the Drafts. Write to-day to Magic Foot Draft Co., X03 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich. Send no money, only your name.

BOOKS FOR ALL SPIRITUALISTS TO PERUSE.

From Soul to Soul. This beautiful book of beautiful poems is all that the title indicates—profound, sublime and tunefully poetic and restful in its variation. By Emma Rood Tuttle. Price, cloth, $1.

Gospel of Buddha. According to old records. A translation from Japanese, made under the auspices of the Rev. Shaku Soyen, delegate to the Parliament of Religions. By Dr. Paul Carus. Price, $1.

Gospel of Nature. A book filled from beginning to end with spiritual truth of the most sublime and soul-stirring character. In touch with all life. By M. L. Sherman and Wm. F. Lyon. Price, $1.

Great Roman Anaconda, or Thirty-seven and a half years in the Church of Rome. A 32-page pamphlet. By Prof. George P. Rudolph, Ph. D. Price, 15 cents.

Happiness and Marriage. By Elizabeth Towne. Price 50 cents.

How to Grow Success. By Elizabeth Towne. Price 50 cents.

Harmonics of Evolution. A valuable work by Florence Huntley. Cloth. Price, $2.

Health and Power. A handbook of cure and human upbuilding by aid of new, refined and powerful methods of nature. By E. D. Babbitt, M. D. Cloth cover. Price, 35 cents.

Heaven Revised. By Mrs. E. B. Duffey. Price 25 cents.

Heliocentric Astrology and Solar Mentality, with illustrations and ephemeris. By Verno Vedra. Cloth. Price, $1.50.

Heresy, or Led to the Light. By the well known writer, Hudson Tuttle. Paper cover only. Price 30 cents.

Heroes and Hero Worship. By Thomas Carlyle. Price 50 cents.

History of Atharael. Life in the Stone Age. The history of Atharael, chief priest of Al Aryans. Written through E. G. Figley. It is very interesting. Price 30 cents.

History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200. By Chas B. Waite, A. M. Cloth bound. Price $2.25.

History of the Inquisition. Just the book for those seeking information concerning that most damnable institution known in history—the Roman Catholic Inquisition. By Cyrus Mason, M. D. Price 25 cents.

How to Train Children and Parents. By Elizabeth Towne. Price 25 cents.

Human Culture and Cure. Part First. Philosophy of Cure, Including Methods and Instruments. By E. D. Babbitt, M. D. Price, 75 cts. Part Second, Marriage, Sexual Development and Social Upbuilding. Price, 75 cents. Parts Third and Fourth, in one volume, Part Third being devoted to Mental and Psychological Forces, and Part Fourth to the Nervous System and Insanity. Price $1. Part Fifth, The Bodily Organs, Their Diseases and the Great Natural Methods for Their Cure. Price, $1.

Human Personality, and Its Survival of Bodily Death. By Frederic W. H. Myers. Edited by Richard Hodgson and Alice Johnson. Two volumes. Price $12.

Hypnotism. By Albert Moll. Price $1.50.

Hypnotism. By L. W. DeLaurence. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Hypnotism and Suggestion. By C. Lloyd Tuckey. Price, $3.

Hypnotism. An Experimental Study. By Dr. R. von Krafft-Ebing. Price, $1.25.

Hypnotism, Its History and Present Development. By Fredrik Bjornstrom, M. D. Price 75 cents.

Immortality, or Future Homes and Dwelling Places. By Dr. J. M. Peebles. Price, cloth, $1, postage, 15 cts.; paper, 50 cents, postage, 10c.

Inner Life Mysteries Explained. The present age and inner life, ancient and modern. By Andrew Jackson Davis. Price $1; postage, 10c.

Influence of the Zodiac Upon Human Life. This book states the simple principles of the Zodiac in simple terms, and in a manner highly interesting and instructive. By Eleanor Kirk. Price, cloth $1.

Interviews With Spirits. A real visit with friends on the other side of life and a familiar talk. An interesting book. By Carrie E. S. Twing, medium. Price 50 cents.

In the World Celestial. A story of spirit life. By Dr. T. A. Bland. Cloth. Price, $1.

In Tune With the Infinite, or Fullness of Peace, Power and Plenty. By Ralph Waldo Trine. Price, $1.25.

Invisible Helpers. By C. W. Leadbeater. Written in the author's charming style. Cloth. Price, 55 cents.

Jim. A story for young people, teaching spirit guidance. By Carrie E. S. Twing. Price $1.

Joan, the Medium, or the Inspired Heroine of Orleans. This is the most beautiful history of Joan of Arc ever written. Thrillingly interesting and convincing. By Moses Hull. Price, cloth, 40c; paper, 25c.

Journeys to the Planet Mars, or Our Mission to Ento. By Sara Weiss. Cloth bound. Price $1.50.

Just How to Concentrate. By Elizabeth Towne. Price 25 cents.

Just How to Cook Meals Without Meat. A small valuable book on vegetarian cooking. By Mrs. Elizabeth Towne. 25 cents.

Just How to Wake the Solar Plexus. By Mrs. Towne. A book on concentration. Price 25 cents.

Karma. By A. P. Sinnett. Price 50 cents.

Karezza. Ethics of Marriage. A plea for a better birthright for children and a higher development of parentage through the most sacred relations. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Price, cloth, $1.

Kate Field. A Record. By Lilian Whiting. Price $2.

Kingdom of Love and Other Poems. By Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Price $1.

Koradine. A prophetic story, and a valuable book for girls to read. Written by Dr. Alice B. Stockham and Lida Hood Talbot. Price $1.

Koran. From the original Arabic. Price, cloth, $1.

Language of the Stars. This important work is the first practical exposition of the Astro-Magnetic forces of Nature—in relation to man—yet issued. Price 50 cents.

Law of Psychic Phenomena. By Dr. T. J. Hudson. Price $1.50.

'Lisbeth, a Story of Two Worlds. By Carrie E. S. Twing. Cloth bound, with portrait of the author. Price $1.

Longley's Choice Collection of Beautiful Songs. Price, cloth, 60 cts.; board covers, 40 cents.

Life Beyond Death. Being a review of the World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling, Leading to the Question as to Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact, to Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions. By Minot Judson Savage, D. D. Price, $1.50; postage, 10 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine. Illustrated with views of the old Paine homestead and Paine Monument at New Rochelle. By the editor of the National, with preface and notes by Peter Eckler. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Life Work of Cora L. V. Richmond. An interesting book regarding a world-renowned inspirational lecturer, a pioneer worker in Spiritualism. Compiled and edited by H. D. Barrett. Price $2, postpaid.

Light of Egypt, or the Science of the Soul and the Stars. A grand work of profound philosophical deductions, on a theme of great interest to everybody. Price $2.

Mahomet, His Birth, Character and Doctrine. Historically correct. Exact and perfect in every detail and beyond adverse criticism. By Edward Gibbon. Price, 25 cents.

Mahomet the Illustrious. An apology for the life and character of this celebrated prophet of Arabia, containing 118 neatly printed pages. By Godfrey Higgins, Esq. Price 25 cents.

Man and the Spiritual World, as disclosed by the Bible and study along the line of Biblical Spiritualism. By Rev. Arthur Chambers. Price, $1.10.

Man in the Past, Present and Future. A popular account of results of recent scientific research regarding the origin, position and prospects of mankind. By Dr. Ludwig Buchner. Price, cloth, $1.

Mark Chester. A story by Carlyle Petersilea. Price, cloth, 60 cents.

Maurine and Other Poems. By Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Price $1.

Mediumship and Its Laws. A most valuable book by Hudson Tuttle. Price, 35 cents.

Mediumship and Its Development, and How to Mesmerize to Assist Development. An every-day useful instructor in Psychic Science. By W. H. Bach. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents.

Mollie Fancher, or the Brooklyn Enigma. Giving an account of the most marvelous case of spirit control on record. By Judge Abram H. Dailey. Price, $1.50.

Mysterics of the Seance, or Tricks and Traps of Bogus Mediums. By a life-long Spiritualist. Being an expose of how fraudulent mediums perform their tricks. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Myth of the Great Deluge. A complete and overwhelming refutation of the Bible story of the Deluge. A very interesting pamphlet. By James M. McCann. Price 15 cents.

Nature Cure. This is an excellent book for suffering humanity. It simply tells how to prevent and cure the ills of the flesh in a natural way. By Drs. M. E. and Rosa C. Conger. Price, cloth, fancy $2; common $1.50.

Nemesis of Chautauqua Lake, or Circumstantial Evidence. By Hon. A. B. Richmond. Cloth bound. Price, 75 cents.

New Testament Stories Comically Illustrated. By Watson Heston. Price, cloth, $1.50; board cover, $1.

No Beginning. By W. H. Maple. A common sense demonstration of the non-existence of a first cause, thereby identifying God with nature. Price, 75 cents.

Leaves From the Diary of a Spiritualist Medium

An Interesting and Instructive Narrative from the Pen of that Talented Lady and Excellent Medium, Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vermont.

April 7. I have had a beautiful experience to-day and one I shall remember long. Early this afternoon I left the place where I was entertained after the meeting last evening, and to save travel struck across the fields now nearly free from snow, to come to my friend at whose home I am now stopping.

There was life in the air, there was music in the air and sunshine every-where, when I started, but I had not gone more than half the distance when there came up a sudden squall of wind and rain and as I was wholly unprepared for it I was a good deal discomforted, and said to myself, "O dear, what a fix I am in, the flowers on my new hat will be entirely ruined."

Just then I saw a little house, old and weather-worn, snuggled in a tangle of trees and shrubs. A column of smoke arising from the large square chimney told me that it was not deserted, although I have seen scores of better houses that were. Toward this house I directed my footsteps with more haste than dignity. The door opened at my approach and a tall woman, old, thin and wrinkled, clad in a neat gingham gown and apron, and wearing a small grey shawl over her hair, presented herself in the doorway and said hospitably, "Come right in; never mind your rubbers, clean dirt will harm no one." She conducted me to an old-fashioned wooden settee beside the fire-place where bright flames were leaping and crackling and helped me get my wet garments a-drying.

Comfortably seated with my wet feet by the welcome fire, I looked upon my strange surroundings with a sense of rest and satisfaction. The room was low and the furniture old and worn, but everything looked clean and orderly even to the spinning wheel with a bunch of white wool rolls thrown lightly across—well, the lower part of it—a sight I have not seen before since my childhood.

After I had rested for a while, my hostess and I engaged in conversation and I soon found that she was no ordinary woman, if her surroundings were poor and homely. She told me that she had spent the entire eighty-four years of her life there. As she was the youngest of a large family it fell to her to remain at home after her marriage and care for her parents until death released them.

"I do not need to live here in this way," she told me, "for I have a son in the great city who longs to give his old mother everything wealth can buy, but I will have none of it, nor I have no use for it. The wild bird pines and dies when you rob him of his freedom, even though his cage be made of gold—gold means nothing to him. What do I want of jewels and fashion, and pomp and show? It is all emptiness, weariness and vexation. It dazzles the eye for a time but it cannot bring peace, and the happiness that is born of it will vanish before the first rude wind that blows. I have never been a drudge or a slave in my life, and I am not going to begin in my old age."

The woman paused and looked at me keenly, and then said, "When you love your work, love to do everything you have to do, you are mistress of the situation, of every material thing that belongs to you; but when you dislike your work and go to it unwillingly, rebellious or with martyr-like resignation, then your work is the mistress and you are its slave. I love my humble home, I love every rod of ground that surrounds it, I love the trees scraggy and twisted though they are, I love the birds that sing in the branches and the winds that roar among the mountains," and she glanced fondly through the small many-paned window toward the rugged hills now softly veiled in gray mist, and then continued, "The hills call to me in the morning when sunlighted and glorious, 'Be glad, rejoice in the light, for it is of God and shines forever, and when the shadows deepen and night draws its coverlid over the earth, the mountains call to me, 'Rest, beloved, and fear not, for when we are crumbled in dust thou shalt still live.' Oh, I am glad I have got eyes that can see and ears that can hear."

I sat silent and surprised. This poor, lonely old woman whom I was prepared to pity became transformed before me and I was not sure but she was pitying me. After some minutes of silence my hostess said to me, "In the public work you are engaged in you must meet many peculiar individuals, both in their flesh and out of it."

I looked up from my reverie quickly and said, "Then you know me? Perhaps you attended the meeting last evening?"

The woman shook her head. "I do not know your name nor where you came from, but I know a good deal about you. You are surprised and puzzled so I will explain. When my old man came in a little while ago you looked toward the door as if expecting to see it visibly open and close, and when he came and stood beside you I saw by your actions that you recognized his presence, you unconsciously betrayed yourself. I know you are an avowed Spiritualist, because you have used words during your conversation that only Spiritualists habitually use. I know you are accustomed to public speaking, for your style of speech and manner betray you, so I jump at the conclusion that you are a Spiritualist medium and preacher, and I now see I am right. I learned years ago that one great trouble in this world is, people use their mouths too much and their ears and eyes too little. Wisdom comes to us in thoughtful silence and not when we are gabbling.

"People think I live here alone, but I don't, for my old man stays right here with me night and day. When he came in just now he had been out to the barn to look at the cow and I knew by the slow way that he came in that it is well with the cow and so I am saved one journey to the barn in the wet. I did not see him, and I have never seen him but once since his body was laid under those elm trees you see over yonder. I don't need to see him to know he is with me. When he was dying he said to me, 'Viny, you needn't think I'm going to leave you here alone, for I shall not do it. I shall stay right here with you just as long as you stay, and if you never see me nor hear me don't you ever doubt or fear, for I shall be right here. I have thought it all over,' said he, 'and I have made up my mind, and you know, Viny, I am dreadful-set when my mind is made up, and I promise you I'll not go to any heaven until you can go along with me, and there can't anybody make me, either.'

"Those were his last words to me and I have never doubted for one minute. God joined us two together sixty odd years ago, and what God joins together stays together. God is love, you know, and don't ever forget it, child, for it is of all laws and powers the highest."

Just then the room filled with sunlight and I uttered an exclamation of pleasure.

"Yes," said my hostess, "I knew it was coming. When at this time of day the mist rolls up around Scrubby Peak the way it did a little while ago, we always get some sunshine."

She helped me on with my wraps and followed me out into the path. I drew in the sweet-scented air and looked about me with a feeling of exhilaration.

"It is beautiful," I said simply.

"Beautiful! yes," said the woman, gazing fondly about her; "there is beauty everywhere if we have eyes to see it, and there is melody everywhere if our ears are trained to catch it, and if we do not find beauty and harmony we may be sure the trouble lies within ourselves.

"Listen" she exclaimed; "what do you hear?"

"A jay screaming over in that apple-tree," I said.

"What did he say?"

"Say, I don't know as he said anything. I only heard a harsh, discordant sound that is meaningless to me," I replied.

The woman laughed. "Are you sure that your ears are so well trained that you hear aright what comes to you from the spirit world?" she asked.

I was silent, for I did not fully grasp her meaning.

"I will tell you what the bird said," she continued soberly; "he said 'cheese hoop, cheese hoop.' The jay is a very practical bird in spite of his regal robe and crown, and is neither a poet nor a musician, but he is a prophet not to be despised, and when I hear him calling 'cheese hoop,' I know the time has come when the kine low over the calves toddling about them in the pens—or in other words, spring has come. Now you know what the jay says; his voice will never sound the same to you again."

The bird filled his throat and again his cry rang out. "You are right," I said, "for now I know what the bird says; his voice has a ring of melody in it I never detected before."

The woman laughed with girlish gayety, and exclaimed, "Just so! What did I tell you? You have always compared his notes with those of the song birds, those nature has constructed to pour forth melody, which is unfair both to you and the jay. You want to learn to see and hear aright, and then you will receive everything for what it really is, and so receive benefit from it and keep in harmony."

As the woman spoke the deep significance of her words sank into my soul, and I felt a strong desire to thank her for the help she had given me, but she was listening intently and so I listened.

"What do you hear?" she asked.

"A hushed and solemn roar rising and falling far away among the mountains," I answered.

"Yes, you heard, and its message is, another squall is coming,' therefore hasten, or it will reach you before you reach your destination. Now good-bye, and remember these words, 'Let him that has ears hear what the spirit says to the churches.'"

I arrived here at my friend's house just in time to escape a second wetting. Now alone in my room the events of the day stand out before me vividly and I know I have learned much of value. The simple faith of that aged woman appeals to me, and yet her perfect faith is the natural result of her perfect love. I am thankful to-night for my experience, but when I was being led, or rather driven into it I was annoyed and thought only of my new hat—as if a few rag flowers are to be compared with the beautiful lesson I have learned to-day! How shortsighted we are apt to be! Just like children that whine and sulk and kick because they cannot have their own way even though it lead to pain and trouble. My prayer to-night is that I may hear and see aright, may hear what the spirit says—to the churches. Seeing that I speak in one to-morrow night, yes!

(To be continued.)

STANDARD BOOKS,

Cloth Binding, 50c. Each.

The following books by well known and popular writers, we have selected with the thought that they will be of interest to our readers. They are printed on fine paper; perfectly clear, readable type; cloth binding. Good home library edition:

Heroes and Hero Worship, and the Heroic in History. The Hero as Divinity. The Hero as Prophet. The Hero as Poet. The Hero as Priest. The Hero as King. By Thomas Carlyle. 350 pages.

Past and Present. By Thomas Carlyle.

Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer.

Fairyland of Science. By Arabella B. Buckley. This book is written in such a pleasing manner that young as well as old can understand it. Illustrated, gilt top.

Origin of Species. By Charles Darwin.

Descent of Man. By Charles Darwin. These two books by Mr. Darwin, should be in every home.

Karma. A Novel. By A. P. Sinnett.

A Romance of Two Worlds. By Marie Corelli. A most wonderful occult story.

Zanoni. By Bulwer Lytton. A romance by that most wonderful and mystic writer, after a long residence in the East and an exhaustive study of occult lore.

Any one of the above valuable books can be obtained for 50 cents, a miracle of cheapness.

HEROES AND HERO WORSHIP, AND THE HEROIC IN HISTORY.

By Thomas Carlyle.

A remarkable book by a remarkable man. Marked by terse strength and vigor, deep thought, philosophy and dramatic tensity of earnestness. A notable literary effort. A fine edition in cloth. Price 50 cents.

The Progressive Thinker.

A Paper that Never Falters, Never Pauses in Its Effort for the Greatest Good to the Cause of Spiritualism, Science, Morality, Higher Thought, and a Better Life. Never Lacking for Life and the Dissemination of Most Important Mind-Food.

Give Us the Truth, the Whole Truth, and Nothing but the Truth

ty, corner Pearl and Franklin, Sunday, May 7, where many touching things were said of the departed friend and brother. F. S. CORNISH.

Cleveland, Ohio.

Spiritualist Meetings.

It is important when a meeting is suspended, that notice be given us, so that inquirers may not be mislead. We want new notices of all meetings being held here in public halls at the present time.

First German Spiritualist Society on the West Side. Meetings every Sunday at 3 p. m. in Garselman's Hall, corner Ashland avenue and W. 13th street.

The North Star Spiritual Union holds services at Perl's Hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, every Sunday at 7:30 p. m. Mrs. Johanna Roennaw, test medium.

Central Spiritual Church holds services each Sunday afternoon at 2:30, at Fasking's hall, 30th and Archer avenue. Conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Howes.

The Light of Truth Church will hold services in Hopkins' Hall 528 W 63rd street, near Stewart avenue. Conference at 3 p. m. Lecture at 7:45. Messages at each service. Midweek meeting Thursday 8 p. m. Mrs. Jeffery Burland, pastor.

The Englewood Spiritual Union is now located at McDermott's Hall, 6603 South Halsted street. Meetings every Sunday evening at 7:30. Ladies' Auxiliary every Thursday afternoon at 2:30.

Chicago Spiritual Alliance Church, in Vincennes Hall, 35th and Cottage Grove avenue. Mrs. May Elmo, pastor, assisted by Hugh S. Fraser. All welcome. Services at 3 and 8 p. m.

Spiritual Church of All Souls, in Hope Hall, No. 220 Western avenue, between Jackson and Van Buren, Sunday evenings at 7:30, conducted by Mrs. R. Squire.

The Kenwood Spiritual Church will hold services every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at Kenwood Hall, Nos. 4308-10 Cottage Grove avenue. Good speakers and music. Mrs. Grace E. Aitken, pastor and test medium. Come and bring your friends.

The Progressive Society holds services every Sunday at 183 East North avenue, corner Burling, at 3 and 8 p. m. Good speakers, tests and messages at every session. Mrs. Hilbert, pastor.

The Church of the Psychic Forces holds services at Wilcox Hall, corner Champlain avenue and 43d street, every Sunday. Conference at 3 p. m. Lecture at 8 p. m. The hall number is 361-363 East 43d street. Conducted by Mrs. Isa Cleveland.

Church of the Spiritual Truth holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7:30 at 964 Milwaukee avenue, near North Paulina street. Mrs. J. DeLong, pastor.

Spiritual Science Society meets every Sunday from 2 to 10 p. m., at Arlington Hall, N. W. corner of 31st street and Indiana avenue. Admission to afternoon meetings, free; evening service, 15 cents. Mrs. Dixon and her daughter, the child wonder, will always be in attendance. Others will assist. These meetings will be continued all summer, Dr. Beverly, president, No. 44 East 31st street.

A Spiritualist Temple has been opened by Mrs. Schwann, at 623 Belmont avenue. Services held every Sunday and Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. Tests and music at every service.

The Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature will hold Sunday evening services at 1565 Milwaukee avenue, corner Western avenue. Mrs. M. Schumacher, pastor.

The Universal Occult Society meets every Sunday at America Hall, 77 East 31st street, at 3 and 8 p. m. R. Gilray, pastor. Evangelist F. M. Stoller will preside at all meetings during the absence of Brother Gilray.

Lake View Spiritual Union holds Sunday afternoon meetings at 3 p. m., at Wells Hall, No. 1629 North Clark street, corner Fletcher, conducted by Dr. and Mrs. Carl A. Wickland. All cordially invited. Residence 616 Wells street.

Church of the Soul, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, pastor, meets every Sunday in room 309 Masonic Temple. Service 11 a. m. Sunday-school 10 a. m. Superintendent of Sunday-school, Mrs. S. J. Ashton. Pastor's address, 3802 Ridge avenue, Rogers Park. Day at home, Friday.

Meetings every Sunday at 10:45 a. m. at hall 210, Masonic Temple, under the auspices of Walter DeVoe, the well-known lecturer. Miss Cora M. Nafe, soloist.

The Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission holds regular services every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at the People's Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt streets. The Rising Sun Lyceum meets at 2 p. m.

The German-English Society Bund der Wahrheit No. 18, holds services every Sunday evening at 7:30 in Brandt's Hall, 152 E. North avenue, between Halsted and Clybourn; and every Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock sharp, at the National, formerly Garfield Turner Hall. Mr. Frank Joseph, medium.

Church of the Soul Communion holds meetings every Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock and Sundays at 8 p. m., at 207 Lincoln avenue, between Garfield and Webster avenues. Lecture, messages and tests. R. S. Ray, pastor.

The Christian Occult Church, United Brotherhood Hall, 3245 State street. Every Sunday evening at 7:30. Test messages given by good mediums. Good speakers in attendance.

The Golden Rule Spiritualist Society will hold meetings every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at O'Donnell College Bldg., South Paulina street, between Washington Boulevard and Park avenue. All cordially invited.

Temple Light and Truth, 370 Wabansia avenue, near Robey street and North avenue. Sunday-school 10:30 a. m. Lectures and spirit messages given at 3 and 8 p. m., by Mrs. T. Loll, pastor, every Sunday, in German and English.

The Hyde Park Occult Society holds regular Sunday evening services, 7:45 o'clock, at 319 E. 55th street, between Kimbark and Monroe avenues. Jackson Park cars pass the door. The best talent available will be secured for all meetings. To spread the truth is the object of this society. Address all communications to Miss Eva L. Stewart, corresponding secretary, 543 E. 55th street. Entrance to hall, 319 E. 55th street.

The Chicago Spiritualists' League holds its meetings the first Tuesday evening of each month, at Kimball Hall, 243 Wabash avenue. Dr. Geo. B. Warne, president; O. R. Kropp, 5481 Kimpark avenue, secretary. The League wishes every Spiritualist society of the city to send in the names of all their mediums, stating their particular phase of mediumship. Address all communications to the secretary.

The Spiritual Association of Sixty-ninth street and Wentworth avenue, meets every Sunday at Alberta Hall, 6922. Hon. D. Gilmour will address the meeting at 2:30 p. m. Conference at 2:30 p. m.

The Society of Spiritual Unity holds meetings every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue, under the direction of Mrs. Nellie Kusserow.

Mrs. Virginia Brandsone of our most eloquent trance mediums, will lecture at Star Lodge Hall, 378 South Western avenue, each Sunday evening.

"Discovery of a Soul Trait." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth, $1.00.

HELP . . .
FOR THE . . . SICK

Dr. Peebles Institute of Health offers Free Consultation to the Sick and Suffering.

If you are in poor health and wish to be cured, write the Doctors at once. They Can Help You.

Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, has for years made a specialty of treating chronic diseases and by their Home Treatment have cured hundreds who came to them in utter despair because their cases had been pronounced incurable by their local physicians. They successfully treat Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Rheumatism, Kidney and Bladder Trouble, Heart Trouble, Stomach, Bowel and Liver Troubles, all Blood and Nervous Diseases as well as all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to both man and woman.

They employ the latest and most approved methods of treating these disease and if you are not completely cured your stomach is not ruined with strong drugs. If you are in poor health and want treatment or if you do not understand your case and wish to know your exact condition write the Doctors for advice. They charge you nothing for a complete diagnosis and if they find your case is curable their charges will be most reasonable. They will also send you literature fully explaining their methods of treatment.

If sick yourself or if you are interested in a sick friend write them a plain, candid letter and they will tell you what your trouble is and if your case is curable will quote you their lowest terms. Write to-day. Address Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, 28 Main St., Battle Creek, Mich.

R. S. RAY, Psychic and Natural Clairvoyant. Readings by mail, $1.00. 207 Lincoln ave., Chicago, Illinois.

MRS. DR. DIXON—Mail dime and birth date, 3 questions answered; private readings daily, 44 E. 31st St., Chicago.

MRS. DE WOLF RISER, (formerly of Chicago, Ill.) Readings by mail, $1.00, and postpaid, self-addressed envelope. Foster Opera House Bld., 8 and Walnut, Des Moines, Iowa.

HYPNOTISM.

A complete and practical, typewritten course by mail. Price $1.00. Address Prof. E. H. Manning, Kokomo, Ind.

Annie Lord Chamberlain's Card.

Dear friends, you can greatly help me care for my blind sister, Jennie L. Webb, one of the earliest mediums now in the form, by writing a letter to a spirit friend. Send it to me with $1, and I will try and get reply by independent writing or whispers. Address Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, Milford Mass.

MYSELF CURED I will gladly inform anyone addicted to "COCAINE, MORPHINE, OPIUM OR LAUDANUM," of a never-failing harmless Home Cure. Address MRS. M. F. BALDWIN, Box 1212 Chicago, Ill.

Free Psychic Diagnosis.

J. A. Maryln, Psycho-Medical and Magnetic Healer, Sterling, Ill., cures asthma, bronchial troubles, goiter, paralysis, rheumatism, brain, spinal, stomach, liver, kidney and female troubles, where others have failed. For diagnosis send name, age, married or single, with lock of hair (no symptoms), and six cents in stamps.

TO THE SICK.

I extend my Brotherly hand and earnestly request that each and every reader of this paper write for my Free BOOKLETS, on Cures by NATURE'S FORCES. I have cured thousands in all parts of the United States, and nearly every part and only in the world. I have good news, for 30 days only, to all sick people—whether rich or poor. Write this very minute, as this opportunity may never come to you again.

Address DR. M. ROGERS, V. D., Union City, Mich., U. S. A.

PLEASE READ THIS.

If sick write me; will give you a free examination and surely cure you. I cure when all others fail. Nervous exhaustion and lost vigor of both sexes successfully treated. Great success with diseases of children. Write in own handwriting, giving name, age, sex, weight, leading symptom, and five 2-cent stamps, and receive a correct diagnosis, worth dollars to you. For children send lock of hair.

FRANCES L. LOUCKS, 35 Warren St., Stoneham, Mass.

FRED. P. EVANS,
The Noted Psychic for
Independent Slate Writing and Clairvoyance,

Has recently left New York, and is now located at 1112 Eddy St., San Francisco, Cal. Send stamp for circular on Mediumship.

GREAT BOOKS AT LOW PRICES.

Researches in Modern Spiritualism. By the greatest living chemist, Sir William Crookes. New Amer. Ed. 50c. (Eng. Ed. costs $1.50.)

National Memory Training. By B. F. Austin, B. A., Ex-Principal Alma College. "The Kernel of the Memory Systems." Highly commended by educators. 5th edition just out. 10c.

The Living Decalogue. Twelve masterly Expository Lectures by W. J. Colville, the great author and spiritual teacher. Just out. 10c.

Success and How to Win It. 24 New Thought Lessons by Dr. Austin, Editor of "Reason." Worth $25.00, but sold for 25c.

Reason. 48 pp. monthly. (New Thought and Psychic Research.) Edited by Dr. B. F. Austin, 50c. a year.

The four volumes, with "Reason," 1 year, $2.

AUSTIN PUBLISHING COMPANY
Department T, Rochester, N. Y.

Sheet Music. Three Beautiful Spiritual Songs.

"We Are Passing But Once This Way." Song and refrain, by P. O. Hudson; price, 25 cents.

"Satisfied." A reverie. By A. J. Maxham. Price 25 cents.

"The Light of Reason." English and German words; sung to the tune of "Lead, Kindly Light." Price 25 Cents.

LISBETH. An Interesting Story of Two Worlds. Elevating, Fascinating and Instructive Throughout.

This work by Carrie E. S. Twing is exceptionally interesting. She well says: "These characters which have brought out the highest and lowest in different religious beliefs, have moved me, not I them." The whole book is interesting, fascinating, and instructive. Price, $1.00.

New Methods of Cure

Write Today to

DR. C. E. WATKINS,

Giving him your age, sex, and leading symptoms, and he will give you a diagnosis of your case, and very low terms for treatment, during June July and August; and will explain to you his

NEW METHODS OF CURE.

Remember that during June, July and August very low terms can be made with the Doctor.

No Charge for Diagnosing Your Case

DR. C. E. WATKINS,
Hotel Westland,
Back Bay, Boston, Mass.

TRUMPETS:

The infallible fibre trumpet is insulated top and bottom; shell, enamel, cardinal color finish, $1.50. Guaranteed, better than metal or any other material; very light in weight; absolutely tangible with spirit forces; warranted perfect or money refunded; cases with handles, $1.50. Booklet for all kinds of development, 12 cts, sent on receipt of price.

JAS. NEWTON, 128 Dorr St., Toledo, O.

ANDREW B. SPINNEY, M. D
Who has had
Forty Years' Experience in the Study and Practice of Medicine, Two Years Prof. in a Medical College, Ten Years IN SANITARIUM WORK,
and is a Natural Clairvoyant. He never fails in diagnosis. He has given special attention to eye, ear, throat and lung troubles, also all forms of nervous diseases of both sexes. Never fails to cure piles. If you would like an opinion of your case FREE, write just how you feel with your own hand and hold the letter in your hand five minutes. Enclose stamp for reply.
Address, ANDREW B. SPINNEY, M. D.
Prop. Reed City Sanitarium, Reed City, Mich.

DR. J. S. LOUCKS

Is one of the oldest and most successful Spiritual and Magnetic Physicians. His cures are marvelous; his examinations are free to all who send him name, age, sex, and lock of hair, and 6 cents in stamps. He doesn't ask for leading symptoms. He treats nervous exhaustion of both sexes with wonderful success, at reduced prices. A trial will convince you. His practice extends all over the land. He cures you in your own home.
Address, J. S. LOUCKS, M. D., Lock Box 1203 Stoneham, Mass.

Academy of Higher Sciences
And College of Fine Forces.

Teaches new and wonderful methods of cure. "Fast becoming of world-wide fame."—H. Tuttle Light, Color, Electricity, Magnetism, Mind, Bath. Its beautiful Diploma confers title, "D. M." Doctor of Magnetics; can be gained at College or at one's home. Books and instruments furnished. Send stamp for catalogue to
E. D. BABBITT, M. D.,
62 East Ave., Rochester, N. Y.

AN ASTONISHING OFFER

Send three two-cent stamps, lock of hair, age, name and the leading symptom, and your disease will be diagnosed free by spirit power.

Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker,
230 North Sixth St.
San Jose, Cal

A Wonderful Spectacle. Restores Lost Vision. Write for Illustrated Circular showing styles and prices and photo of Spirit Yarma, who developed this Clairvoyant power in me. I can adjust my Melted Pebble Lens Spectacle as perfectly to your eyes at your own home and send by mail, as if you were in my office. Thousands will testify.
B. F. POOLE.
43 Evanston Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mr. Poole:—Your spectacles are perfect. I can say perfection. I shall recommend them to my friends. Ever your friend. E. B. Robertson, Los Angeles, Cal.

STARTLING PHENOMENA.

By my SYSTEM you acquire, in an incredibly short time, the SECRETS and MYSTERIES of OCCULT SCIENCE and the Law of Development. Would I have hundreds of students if what I teach failed to produce results. I give more than value received. My SYSTEM cannot fail to unfold your mediumship and psychical powers.

Whatever your previous training, your failures, age, you can succeed. Let me help you. H. Glasoe, Portland, Oregon, wrote a day or two ago: "I have read a good deal of Indian Occultism and Spiritual Philosophy, but I have found more knowledge in the few lessons you have sent than in all I have read on the subject." Send for my Prospectus and terms at once.

BOOKS ON MEDIUMSHIP.

Clairvoyance. Cloth, 150 pages, by J. C. F. Grumbine. Teaches how to read the future, practice telepathy, penetrate the veil between the seen and the unseen, converse with spirits, know the mysteries. It is a revelation. The only practical book of its kind ever published. Lilian Whiting, Henry Wood, Mind, Light, all adepts endorse it. Price (reduced from $2.00), $1.50.

Auras and Colors.—How to read the atmospheres of persons and understand the appearance of halos, auras and nimbus. Contains a color dictionary. Paper, price 50 cents.

Psychometry. Teaches how to get at the soul of things. Paper, price 50 cents.

Send $2.25 for a large crystal for crystal reading. Address J. C. F. Grumbine, 1235 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, Mass.

The Jesuits Containing chapters on Origin and History of the Jesuits; Principles and Aim of the "Company of Jesus;" Immoral Teachings of the Jesuits; Condemnation of the Order; Expulsion of the Jesuits; Bull of Pope Clement XIV., Abolishing the Society; The Jesuits' Estates Act; an appendix of valuable information. By B. F. Austin, A. M., B. D. Price 15c.

The Devil and the Adventists.
An Adventist attack upon Spiritualism repulsed. By Moses Hull. Price, 10 cents.

Force and Matter By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

THE LIFE RADIANT.

BY LILLIAN WHITING.—In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration. Price, cloth, $1.00.

A Very Interesting Book for All.
Philosophy of Spiritual Intercourse. This work contains a graphic account of the very wonderful spiritual developments at the house of Rev. Dr. Phelps, Stratford, Conn., and similar cases in all parts of the country. This volume is the first from the author directly upon the subject of Spiritualism, and has stood the test of many years. Cloth, 80c.; postage 10c.

AFTER HER DEATH.

The Story of a Summer. By Lillian Whiting. Pervaded with pure and beautiful spirituality of thought. Instructive and helpful to all who love and seek the higher and finer ways of spiritual communion. Price, $1.00.

LIST OF CAMP-MEETINGS.

Send In Your Dates and Name of Secretary at Once.

Interest in the various Spiritualist camp-meetings has commenced, and secretaries of the same should report at once to this office, so that proper announcement as to dates can be made.

MT. PLEASANT PARK, CLINTON, IA.

The twenty-third annual camp-meeting at Mt. Pleasant Park, opens July 30 and closes August 27. The very best talent has been secured for the season, and Opening Day promises to be a red letter day in the history of the camp. Programs and information given to all who write to Mrs. M. B. Anderson, secretary, Clarksville, Mo.

ONSET CAMP.

Onset camp commences its twenty-ninth annual meeting, July 23, and closes August 27. Onset is one of the most beautiful seashore resorts in the world, and is in close proximity to other noted summer resorts. It is connected by a bridge with Point Independence, and close at hand lies Monument Beach, and beyond Gray Gables, formerly the summer home of Ex-President Cleveland, and at the head of the bay is located "Crow's Nest," owned by Joseph Jefferson.

The water supply, introduced by the Onset Water Company from Sandy Lake, could not be purer or better.

No summer resort is better supplied with well-regulated hotels, with rooms and board at reasonable rates. Also rooms can be obtained at cottages, and meals at either hotels or restaurants in close proximity.

Letters addressed to the proprietors of the following hotels, Onset, Mass., will be promptly answered, giving full statement with regard to prices of rooms and board: Hotel Onset, Glen Cove Hotel, Glen Echo Hotel, Union Villa, Washburn House, Bullock's, Hotel Marcy, Highland House, and Mrs. Ronald's.

CHESTERFIELD, CAMP.

The official board met at Camp Chesterfield, April 9, to perfect arrangements for the coming camp session, beginning July 15 and ending August 27. The grounds are in fine condition and we want to make this the best camp ever held here. We have secured the very best talent and will have them well advertised. The programmes will be ready for distribution in a month. Mrs. Lydia Jessup, secretary, Anderson, Ind.

SUNAPEE LAKE CAMP, N. H.

Sunapee Lake Spiritualist Camp-meeting Association will hold its 28th annual meeting at Blodgett's Landing, N. H., commencing July 30 and closing August 27. We have a good list of speakers and test mediums. Address all letters to Thomas Burpee, Sutton, N. H., or the secretary, Lorenza Worthen, Hillsboro Br., N. H.

VICKSBURG, CAMP.

Vicksburg camp, Mich., opens July 30 and closes August 20. For full particulars address Mrs. Jeannette Fraser, Vicksburg, Mich.

MINERAL PARK CAMP, CAL.

The Spiritualists of Southern California have engaged Mineral Park, the camp grounds in the Arroyo Seco, just below Garvanza, for their annual camp-meeting, from June 25 to July 25. Many improvements are to be made at the park, and fourteen cottages will be erected. Mrs. Nettie Howell is the head of the executive committee. Address her for programmes.

NEW ERA CAMP-MEETING.

The New Era camp-meeting begins July 9, and continues over four Sundays. We will have with us during the meeting those grand workers, Harry J. Moore, Mrs McCoy, Mrs. Ella Royal Williams, sure, and hope other good workers will also attend from all parts of the compass. We expect many of the lecturers and mediums from the coast (and we have many good ones) to attend during the meeting. Everybody come and help make this coming camp-meeting a grand and glorious one. The hotel will be under the management of the president, and everything possible will be done for the comfort and welfare of the guests. Camp ground is only 22 miles from the great Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland, Oregon. Address Rev. G. C. Love, president, 354 College street, Portland, Oregon.

EDGEWOOD CAMP, WASH.

The annual camp-meeting of the Spiritualists of the state of Washington, will be held at the Edgewood camp-grounds on Surprise Lake, commencing July 30 and ending August 20. These grounds are owned by the state association and can be reached either from Tacoma or Seattle by the Interurban electric cars. The annual state convention will also be held at the same place on August 21 and 22. Spiritualists from the East who intend to visit the Lewis & Clark Fair at Portland, should time their visit so as to stop over for a day or two at the camp, where they will find a hearty welcome from their western co-workers. All railroads give stop-over privileges at the different Sound cities. GEO. E. KNOWLDEN.

Tacoma, Wash.

CENTRAL OHIO CAMP.

This camp opens Sunday, June 4 (and closes Sunday, June 25), at Bucleh Park, eight miles southwest of Columbus, directly on the B. & O. railway, and Columbus, Grove City and Southwestern Traction Lines; one-half hour's ride from Columbus and 20 minutes from Morgans; will land everybody at the park. Many talented speakers engaged. All are welcome. Officers: H. E. Boerstler, president; L. M. Lyda, vice-president; A. W. Dennis, treasurer; Hattie G. Webster, secretary. For further particulars, address the secretary, 55 McDowell street, Columbus, Ohio.

GRAND LEDGE CAMP, MICH.

The Grand Ledge Spiritualist Camp-meeting opens July 21, 1905, and closes Aug. 21, 1905, with Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly as presiding chairman. As the programs are now being printed they will be distributed as soon as possible, and all those wishing further information regarding the camp, address J. W. Ewing or W. R. Divine of Grand Ledge, Mich. The association extends a cordial invitation to all.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., CAMP.

The Liberal, Educational and Spiritualist Camp-meeting will open at Mineral Park, June 25, and close July 25.

THE ASHLEY, OHIO, CAMP.

This camp opens August 6 and closes August 27. For further particulars address Will Randolph, secretary, Ashley, Ohio.

CAMP PROGRESS.

Camp Progress, Moreland Park Grove, Upper Swampscott, Mass., opens Sunday, June 4, 1905.

This association has been reorganized with the intention of making it the leading camp for the summer season of 1905. We ask your co-operation and hope you will visit us and help along the cause of Spiritualism. This is not a money-making business, our only object is to promote this grand cause. All Spiritualists are eligible to membership in this association.

The grove contains about eleven acres of woodland very pleasantly situated in Upper Swampscott. Lynn and Salem electric cars pass the main entrance which should make it the resort of all Spiritualists of Eastern Massachusetts.

The grove meetings are a great help to all mediums who may take part, as it tends to establish more engagements for them during the winter season.

It is the intention of the directors to select first-class mediums each Sunday and would solicit correspondence from such.

Miss Annie Foley of Haverhill, is engaged for the opening Sunday.

Benj. H. Blaney, 150 Elm street, Marblehead, Mass.; Geo. D. Merrill, Lynn, Mass.; E. P. Cooley, 205 Eliot street, Boston, Mass., board of directors.

OCEAN GROVE CAMP.

This camp is located at Harwich, Mass., and opens July 9, and closes July 23.

WINFIELD (KANSAS) CAMP.

The Winfield Camp Association will hold its twelfth annual camp-meeting, commencing July 15, and ending July 25. We have secured the best of talent, and expect to make this camp one of the most interesting of its history. All get ready to come the first day and stay until the last. We have secured Max Hoffman, Will J. Erwood, Isa Wilson Rayner, Bessie Bellman, Mr. and Mrs. Abey. These are all excellent workers as most everyone knows. There will be many local mediums on the grounds. Address Mrs. Maud K. Gates, 807 North Manning street, Winfield, Kansas.

UNITY CAMP, MASS.

The season's work at Unity Camp, Saugus Center, will open on Sunday, June 4 and continue every Sunday until the last of September. These meetings will be fully up to standard of former seasons, with many added improvements. Good speakers and mediums will be present. Electric cars going direct to camp gate, without change, leave Scolley Sq. subway, Boston every half hour. Visitors cordially welcomed.

LOS ANGELES CAMP, CAL.

To be held at Mineral Park, commencing June 25 and ending July 25. Mrs. Nettie Howell is in charge.

Unity Camp, Saugus Center, Mass.

This popular Sunday resort will open on Sunday, June 4, and the management offer a large array of talent on that occasion. Mrs. Minnie M. Soule, Mrs. A. J. Pettingill, Mrs. Annie L. Jones, Mrs. Dr. Caird, Mrs. Hattie Lewis, Mrs. Dr. Chase, Mrs. Maude Litch, Mrs. Mamie Helyett and many other good speakers and mediums will be present.

Musical and literary specialities will be introduced during the day. Mrs. Mona Belle Welch, the well known teacher of elocution, Miss Abbie Corbin, Masters Cuffe and Popp, Mr. James Singer, vocal soloists, will assist in the exercises. Prof. Harry C. Chase will be in charge of the music, with Mr. W. H. Atherly, cornetist.

Conference will be held at 11; regular service at 2, song service, 4:30; concert 5, and closing service at 6. President Alex Caird, M. D., will conduct the services throughout the day. The association has recently purchased the grove in which the camp is situated, and the services will partake somewhat of the form of a dedication. Refreshments can be procured in the grove, thus enabling visitors to come in the morning and remain through the day. Visitors coming from Boston, can take the electric car at Scolly Sq. subway, and ride direct to the camp gate without change. Cars leave every half-hour. All visitors cordially welcomed.

A. A. AVERILL.

MOSES HULL'S BOOKS.

Encyclopedia of Biblical Spiritualism; A Concordance to the Principal Passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism; together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible. Price $1.

Our Bible. Who Wrote It? When, Where, How? Is It Infallible? A voice from the higher criticism. Price $1.

Two in One, being a combination of the two books, The Contrast, and the Question of the Spiritualism of the Bible Settled, together with a series of startling contrasts between creedal Christianity and the facts and philosophy of Modern Spiritualism. Price $1.

The Spiritual Alps

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32 CHICAGO, ILL., JUNE 10, 1905. NO. 811

THE GREAT COMING TRUTH.

One Primal Elementary Force Underlying Phenomena, and That Force Is Thought—Force Has Intelligence.

As has previously been said [as set forth in the Chicago American], the condition of scientific thought at the present time may fairly be described as chaotic. Working hypotheses, fixed beliefs which for two centuries have been the granite foundations upon which our text books have rested, are being certainly undermined and swept away. This state of affairs was well foreseen and clearly prophesied six years ago by Virchow, Lodge, Fitzgerald and many other great observers. Three years ago their views and prophecies were dwelt upon by the writer at some length in this paper.

It has seemed certain in these six years and now seems more certain than ever that the whole basis of scientific philosophy is destined to be shifted; that the great edifice of Science is to be removed from foundations which have crumbled away and placed upon a new and substantial mass of stone work which will last for a century or so at least. The question is, what is this great new base to consist of? What is the great new truth which is coming to the minds of men?

Any answer to this question can only be found by an examination of the facts and if the facts be arrayed any man can find the answer for himself. They are these:

Ten years ago Professor Fitzgerald came to the conclusion that there was only one primal, elementary force underlying phenomena, and he could only declare his solemn conviction that this force was thought. That one primal force was the mother of all the other forces—light, heat, chemical force, cohesion, magnetism, electricity—that all these forces which we know were not varied manifestations of the great primary force, and that, strangest of all, this great primary force knew what it was doing. That in addition to energy, the idea which we ordinarily associate with force, it had INTELLIGENCE. In short, that the force which animated the wind, colored the lily, armed the man and moved the planets was THOUGHT.

This was ten years ago. Since that time we have discovered the Roentgen rays, the Bacquerel rays, radium and a mass of new and strange phenomena. Explanation of these has been and is being sought with the greatest activity. It may without exaggeration be said that all the great scientific minds of today are coming to Professor Fitzgerald's view; that the underlying force undoubtedly carries within itself the consciousness—if the word may be used—which explains the orderly procession of nature's phenomena, the similarity of the leaves upon the tree, the reproduction of the type from the seed, the unvarying regularity in crystallization in the movement of the planets upon their courses.

The great point, the promise of the great new truth which is coming, lies in this: The intelligence is not in the matter, as we call it, but in the force itself.

Now, when we look about to see if there are any other facts to confirm this great new generalization, we cannot help being astonished at the mass of evidence.

About twenty-five years ago there took place in France, under the highest scientific auspices, a series of experiments which proved that the essential spirits of certain drugs was transmissible. That all the effect of opium, nicotine and sundry well known medicaments could be obtained upon a person without administering the drug. That the effect of the drug could be conducted into the person. In short, that the real power of the drug lay not in its matter, but that its force was non-material. In short, that the reality, the actuality of the drug, lay in what might be called its spirit, its idea, the thought which it represented.

Precisely the same line of experiments, revealing precisely the same truth, may be seen to-day in the hypnotic laboratories of Paris. All there is of the drug, its actuality, its entity, is non-material. The real drug is non-material.

Balzac, half a century ago, worked this idea out so thoroughly, claimed so flatly that will and thought are not only real forces, but are the only real forces, that a reading of his extraordinary views, as lucidly stated as the period permitted, is worth any man's time.

Back of Balzac lies a literature, making claims to the same end and giving instances which are weighty and impressive.

The records of the Psychological Society show authentic cases in almost any desired number, forcing the impartial observer to believe that the real man, like the real drug, is non-material and that the disassociation of the real man with his body can and does take place frequently during life.

Schiller believed and declared that this was so common an event in human life that it was the basic phenomena of sleep.

The probability is that the world is close to the reception and adoption of a truth so strange that at present we have not the words to formulate it properly. This is that nothing exists except as an action of thought. That its essence, its reality, its actuality, is only as an expression of thought. That the reality of all objects, as of all drugs, is absolutely non-material.

H. J. W. DAM.

IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

Spirit Said to Be Eternal Directing Power That Controls All Matter and Force.

A writer in the Battle Ground in the Chicago Record-Herald, says that matter and force are "both eternal;" that is, always have existed and always will exist, and yet he denies the immortality of the soul.

If matter and force are eternal, why is not also spiritual intelligence? The noblest and most divine of all spiritual power must be superior to all other powers, because when intelligently directed it controls all matter, and all material forces. If it were not for intelligence directing matter and force they would both immediately revert to chaos.

We cannot prove the existence of God; neither can we prove the immortality of the human soul. They are both known, if known at all, by intuitional self as to whether it shall have faith in God, and consequently in immortality of the individual soul. Mere intellect, or what we term the "objective mind," can form no conception of God or immortal life. The intellect is loveless, pitiless, soulless.

Immortal life is the survival of the fittest—the morality, intellectuality and spiritually fit. Eternal vigilance is the price of immortality. The desire of immortality is universal. Immortality is conditional; we must intensely desire and work for it or we will never attain it. The man who has no conscience has no soul. Some cowards commit suicide of the body. Reasoning from analogy, it is possible to commit suicide of the soul. By long continued violation and neglect of natural and spiritual laws the soul gradually dies. If we can quench a part of the spirit, and we know we can, we might quench all of it. If we do not use our soul powers we lose them. There is such a thing as total death. The soul is not annihilated, but dissipated, annulled, disorganized, abrogated, rendered powerless to suffer or enjoy anything—blind and deaf and dumb to all the glories which light up this resplendent universe.

Whom shall we believe in regard to a future, immortal life? If there is not a future life, what is the use of this? If we are extinguished at death, better never to have been born. Byron was right when he said:

"When coldness wraps this suffering clay,
Oh, whither strays the immortal mind?
It cannot die, it cannot stay,
But leaves its darkened dust behind."

O. L. HARVEY.

DEATH AND LIFE ETERNAL.

The Fulfillment of the Words of Revelations.

We read in Rev. 21:4, "And there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away."

We have selected this passage because in our days the fulfillment of these sayings are being realized, and after all is said and done, visions of mortal mediums and visitations from ministering angels always did and do now, make up the chief factors whereby the problem of life in all its bearings can be analyzed and rendered comprehensible. John was a medium who had experiences like many of us modern mediums. He speaks of some of them as "being carried in spirit" out of his mortal form or only by his intense and pure thought which formed themselves into wings of ascension, that thus he met on the highlands of spiritual truths his spiritual teachers and saw what he related from the higher points of view, and which things so seen could not be realized on Earth in their fulfillment until in the course of time and natural advancement it would be possible that involved designs could be worked out. This could only take place as man's conception of things by mental unfoldment could be commensurately changed with nature's unfoldments, to grasp said designs.

Modern Spiritualism and its mediums have done a great work, that is, jointly with the heavenly workers, to change men's views of things and to grasp life's true significance; also to show them that it is not Heaven and Earth that are passing away, but simply the former conceptions of them. The view is changed; things are beheld from higher standpoints, disclosing the fact that life is life and cannot die, therefore there shall be no more death, only a change of outer form, to don one more suitable to the plane where, in accordance with each one's fitness, life's journey is pursued.

It is high time that mortals awake to this truth that each one born upon the Earth must make this journey for his own improvement and to some extent only his own better promptings should be followed in order to render in successive order the numbers in life's busy career for which his individual program calls.

We do not wish to be understood that mortals should isolate themselves; nay, association as in families, in labor, in commonwealths, in organizations for general weal, etc., is proper and enhances the privileges as well as enjoyments in the fulfillment of each one's duties.

Then, too, it should be borne in mind, that there should be no crying nor sorrow at so-called death, for the reason that those released from the cumbersome earth-forms and conditions go to prepare homes for the loved ones they leave behind for a short, or even for a long time. But sooner or later they arrive, and oh! the joyful reunion. So you see there are no losses connected with these climatic separations. The immortal worlds are as different climates only, improved stratic planes closely linked with this Earth plane. Soon it will be seen by mortals what should long since have been understood by them, that most of the grief and tears, when friends are separated by so-called death, is selfish grief. Those who are gone are missed in so many ways where their aid and counsel were so helpful. We are not unmindful of the fact that the severing of the ties of love and friendship causes wounds, the heart is torn, but it is not a severing in truth, for it concerns only the outer, material part. Spirit to spirit and soul to soul remains sufficiently attached that there can be spiritual association.

Love and life endure forever, so also all good deeds done while in the Earth-form endure forever in things that can be eternally enjoyed.

Jesus, when the time drew near for his departure from Earth confronted his disciples thus: "I go to prepare a place for you." So, even so, each one's friends are privileged to do, for which reasons there are no losses as to things for real enjoyment. What is missed on Earth because of these separations is many-fold made up in these higher states of life where the loved ones can enjoy it together without fear of being again separated.

The further words of John, "There shall be no more pain," cannot yet be realized by the human family, not until life's problems in their relative bearings are rightly understood. Then, when men live in harmony with their own and nature's constitutions there will be no more pain or sickness; neither want, for all will be supplied and happy.

MRS. M. KLEIN.

Van Wert, Ohio.

THE FUTURE LIFE.

Louis Bacle of Paris Writes a Book That Astonishes Engineers and Theologians—Uses Science as Proof—Says Soul Is a Force and Immortal, as No Force Ever Is Created or Lost.

Louis Lucien Bacle, of Paris, France, one of the foremost mining engineers in France [as set forth in a special dispatch to the Chicago Tribune], and his books on his specialty are held in the highest esteem by experts. But when public attention was attracted the other day by the appearance of a book entitled "The Future Life," by one Louis Elbe, it occurred to no one to suspect Louis Bacle of the authorship. The names of all known theologians and scientists were suggested, since every one was convinced that Louis Elbe must be a nom de plume, no inexperienced man being capable of writing such a volume. And when it was discovered that the author of "The Future Life" was none other than the Paris representative of the Loire iron works, and manager of the Franco-Russian Manufacturies' societies, it is hard to say which expressed the most amazement—scientists, theologians or engineers.

Business Man and Thinker.

When Louis Bacle was questioned about his ideas he was found in a business-like office, but his appearance betrayed the thinker.

"The necessity for reconciling science and religion has long been in my mind," he said, "but I may consider that the genesis of my present work lies in Henry Drummond's book, 'Natural Law in the Spiritual World.'

"All theologians I found write from the purely religious point of view, and their statements consequently have no weight with non-believers. The general question of the immortality of the soul seemed worth treating in its broad aspect, as referring to all men whatever their personal beliefs; and historical and scientific reasons appeared to me in the support of the theory of an after life."

Shows Historical Evidence.

"I do not like to say I prove it, but I certainly have found much interesting evidence. Take the historical consideration. Without exception, all the primitive races who have left on monuments traces of their thoughts believed in the immortality of the soul. Could this uniformity be a mere coincidence? Where, as with the Greeks and Romans, negation came, it was introduced as the fruit of culture in a few peculiarly constituted minds.

"All this is significant, but it would be disregarded nowadays, if experimental evidence were lacking. However, experiments decidedly tend to confirm the existence of the soul. So-called realists oppose the Christian theory of the soul, yet it has as much probability as other scientific facts. The physical scientist, perceiving the light ray, believes in ether, which he does not see. Experiments in demonstrations of energy, of the colloidal state, of the odic fluid, of spontaneous or experimental telepahy, etc., all tend to prove the existence of a soul.

The Strange Odic Fluid.

"The sensitiveness of the odic fluid radiating from the human body has been shown upon screens, and these last have been seen to become suddenly illuminated at the moment of death. Furthermore, sleep, anaesthesia, and torture are accompanied by a complete separation of the odic fluid and the astral body."

"In what condition the soul does exist science is powerless to prove. Just as we find the positive proof that future life must exist, we find the negative proof that science is checked in seeking to establish particulars. But the soul appears to be a force, and for this fact it must be immortal. In nature no force is created and none lost; it is only transformed and preserved. Therefore the soul must be permanent like all other forces.

Religion Must Have Science.

"Such are a few of the many arguments in detail to reconcile science with religion. I realize that if religion is to live it must have science on its side.

"I have been surprised and gratified by the friendly sentiments expressed in most of the religious papers. I expect that some objections will be raised by those who like to argue from the purely religious standpoint, but evidently there are others, and thoroughly orthodox Christians, who find nothing blameworthy in my attitude."

A VISIT IN SPIRIT.

While the Body Lay in Tranquil Sleep.

When living on my farm in Michigan, some thirty-five years ago, I was taken sick and employed one of the best physicians I could find, who doctored me nearly a year. It was given up by the doctor and my friends to die; and a spirit came to me in the daytime, in my normal state of mind, and told me not to take any more medicine and the spirit would take charge of me, and bring me through all right. This spirit stayed with me day and night for about two months, I going by her directions—for it was a lady's spirit—then I was able to take care of myself.

For several years after that I could leave my body asleep, and visit my mortal friends, and on one occasion I visited the lady's spirit in her home in the spirit world. I seemed to light down, as it were, on a spiritual planet, as tangible to my spiritual feet as this material planet is to my material feet. I saw a cottage with the door open. I walked up to the cottage and walked in, and met the lady of the cottage in the reception room. I knew her as the one that came to me when I was given up to die by the physician and my friends, some ten years before this visit. She gave me a cordial welcome, but I noticed it was through the universal language of spirit, and asked me in the same language if I wished to take a walk with her in her flower garden? I answered her in the same language, and as we came out of the door side by side, we turned to the left and went around the end of the cottage into the most beautiful flower garden I ever saw. I cannot find language to describe it. The flowers seemed to be transparent. Then we came back into the cottage.

Then it seemed to me it was time for me to come to earth where I had left my material body, and she came with me to where I seemed to light down in sight of the cottage; there we stood and talked for some time, she pointing with

OUR HOME A MINUTE WORLD

The Grandeur of the Universe as Portrayed by a Master Mind—Psychic Studies Are Wide Spread, and Amazing Deeds Are Being Wrought by the Great Mathematicians of the World.

Our home is a minute world [as set forth in the Chicago American], so small in comparison with its surroundings that, even by comparing, one cannot gain an adequate idea of its littleness. The reader may use the word nothing in speaking of the earth, if he chooses, but this has no meaning, because the brain cannot think of nothing. Next to nothing, infinitely small, smaller than the dust in the air in a room; if one cubic inch contains a million, these, indeed, are smaller than thought can think about, yet they are larger compared to the room than the earth is to space included in a sphere whose diameter is now explored by the huge telescope.

And man! if he is to be gauged by his size, comes out so incredibly minute that brain and sense are overcome by the mere idea of his abject insignificance. Animalculae in one drop of water, whose one million have plenty of room, are larger in relation to the drop than man is to the earth. But the earth is as nothing to space containing many trillions of other worlds.

Thus one hundred million worlds like the earth with all their inhabitants could be instantly annihilated and the universe would never hear of it.

Yet, withal, this utterly abject creature can weigh the sun, tell the distance of some of the stars and also the quantity of matter they contain, and what they are made of. Besides this, by the marvels of photography he stores up their energy on plates; that is, actually records their present appearance, location in the sky and relative brilliance, to be left as a legacy to coming astronomers. Thus the two insects, man and the coral builder, make records, one in salts of silver and the other in carbonate of lime.

More astonishing than this, if possible, man has the power of studying his own mind and those of others. Psychic studies are widespread now. Amazing deeds are also being wrought by the great mathematicians of the world. They are wandering this moment in the most inscrutable labyrinths, weighing suns and electrons.

Men now are literally immersed in infinity. Could the mighty brains of the mathematicians of the past become reanimate, their minds would be filled with wonder at what their successors have done in the way of launching into the deeps of the universe. It is simply astonishing to think of the mental powers now displayed by great mathematicians. And modern chemists, physicists and biologists, what shall be said of their brain energy?

The idea is old that man's brain is capable or will become capable of understanding all things. How often in literature the thought appears the word microcosm is used! That is, man is a micrograph of the universe, his mind being a miniature copy of universal mentality. All departments of nature are now being ransacked; closed corridors, sealed since the solid earth was evolved, now have their rusty doors battered down; long, winding ways, more inscrutable than that in the pyramids of Suphis, are being explored, and new facts discovered hourly.

Man in his microcosmic infinity of littleness rises into the visible world, gazes with startled eyes a moment, and vanishes. While here, if he has time to make a discovery, to seize a pen and record it, or lay hold on a photographic plate and expose it to the new thing, he adds to the store of knowledge. If not, his coming oblivion will be as intense as it was before.

But if a man is "part of the Infinite," as some hundreds of millions say, he may be here again and have another opportunity to make addition to wisdom.

Man's place in space is known; and also his place among the other animals; but his place in the cosmic evolution of mind is not yet well made out. This is due to the fact that during the past ten thousand years men have not studied their own minds, save a few philosophers just south of the Himalayas, in India.

PROF. EDGAR L. LARKIN.

Lowe Observatory, California.

"When you finish your life down there on the earth where you left your material body, you will come here, for this is your home." Then I left to finish my journey on earth.

If my visit will cheer one lonely soul on earth, then my experience written down will no be in vain.

A. C. DOANE.

EXTRAORDINARY VISION.

Bringing to Light a Very Sensational Tragedy.

On the 8th of May, while assembled in our circle with the Band of Mercy, for rescue work on the borderland of the invisible world, the medium saw clairvoyantly a carriage drive past, occupied by a man and a woman; they seemed engaged in a tame sort of altercation, when suddenly the man flourished a revolver, which the woman attempted to turn or to take away, and in so doing the weapon was discharged, and the man, to all appearance mortally wounded, fell over into the lap of the woman. Then all vanished, and some one in the company made a remark about another Nan Patterson Case, but no further attention was given the matter until May 20, when in a trance the medium's control at first seemed somewhat stupefied, but on coming to, inquired, "Is she free?"

He then told us in substance that his name was Ceasar Young, and that just before he was to leave with his wife for Europe, he was having "a good time" with Nan; that they loved each other, and that she did not like to have him go and leave her behind; that she had given him her own revolver to carry while on his journey, and that in a joking sort of way he drew the gun and proposed that both should commit suicide, so they would not have to depart, but that Nan did not like the idea, and thinking that he meant business, tried to prevent its execution, when in the ensuing scuffle the weapon discharged, and he was shot. "It is all my own fault," he said, "and I alone am to blame for it. The poor girl is innocent; but now I am all right again and they shall not convict her—not as long as I live."

When questioned whether he had

THE FUTURE FORETOLD.

In All Ages of the World There Have Been Those Who Could Foresee the Future—Some Extraordinary Cases.

In the year 1891 and old negro lived in St. George's, Grenada, who was supposed by the other colored people to be a wizard. During the course of that year he wrote to the St. George's Chronicle, advising people to avoid going to Martinique "for fortune or through misfortune," as God had decided to destroy it.

A prophecy never came more literally or horribly true, for since the days of Pompeii no place has ever suffered more fearfully than this island did last year.

The fact of the murder of the late King and Queen of Servia having been foretold before its occurrence has many other parallels in history, and some of these prophecies seem strange beyond mere coincidence.

The terrible death of the plucky airship experimenter, Monsieur Severo, is still fresh in the memory of most people. He was killed by the collapse of his great airship La Pax on its first voyage. His end was foretold to him, in a dream which he himself related to his wife. He dreamt that he was in the Pax above a cemetery. Arms were stretched out to him from the open graves, and among the dead he recognized his mother. The accident actually took place above the cemetery of La Parnasse.

President Carnot was warned of his own sudden and violent end many years before it happened. When he was Minister of Finance, and long before he ever dreamt of reaching the presidency of France, a friend of his who had just returned from india presented him with a curious little Indian idol.

He warned M. Carnot that there was a legend connected with the gift.—It was that the owner would attain supreme power in the State and die by the knife.

It had belonged to the tynasty of the kings of Khadjurao, all of whom had perished by cold steel. The prophecy was literally and absolutely fulfilled. Madame Carnot, believing that her husband's death was due to the fetish, has left an injunction in her will that her children are to get rid of the idol.

The record murderess of all time was the Sicilian woman, known as La Tofania, who by means of a solution of arsenic ended the lives of from 500 to 1,000 persons before her career of crime was put an end to.

To this day a solution of arsenic is known as aqua tofana. Before she was executed this woman wrote a prophecy, of which the following is a literal translation:

"In the year 1901 the spirit of the Tofania will return to the world like a gust of wind, and will cause to die many of the people. Beware then of drinking the beer all those who do not wish to fall."

It is, to say the least of it, curious that the great epidemic of arsenic poisoning by beer should have first been suspected in the very year mentioned. The prophecy was made 200 years ago.

A very peculiar incident is vouched for by Monsignor Mace, formerly at the head of the Parisian detective police. He saw the same ring appear upon the hands of no fewer that five different corpses which came to the morgue between 1879 and 1884.

It was a unique ring of curious design, and a prophecy connected with it said that all who wore it should come to a violent end.

The gem was found upon the finger of Count Zhorowski, who, it will be remembered, was killed in a terrible motor accident at Nice in April last.

Gypsy Lee, of Brighton, foretold the future state of the present Duchess of Portland, and the Duchess sent to her a magnificent satin gown as a present when the prophecy was fulfilled.

Almost innumerable similar incidents might be quoted.

A very curious prophecy is connected with the lake at New Hall; one of the homes of the Stacpools. A legend said that the lake would change color if the family ever left the place. They did, and during the tenancy of the O'Briens the water turned a deep crimson hue.

her, but she was always crying so much, and I had to cry, too. It seems so strange that she won't pay any attention to me. As soon as I talk to her she starts to cry, and once when she saw me she ran away from me."

When he was told his wife had married his former partner and gone to Europe, he said: "I know he loved my wife, but I loved Nan best. Such is sporting life—a miserable existence—no happiness unless you make it for yourself by drowning your sorrows in carousing."

On being informed that he had lost his body, he seemed much perplexed, and it took over an hour's time to convince him that his earthly body was buried, and that his spirit was now controlling the body of a lady, and when finally the truth dawned upon him, he felt lost in darkness and despair, saying that his only doom was hell; that there was no hope for him in future; but yielding at last to better counsel and reason, he condescendingly prayed for light and mercy, and promised to follow the instructions of angels' hands extending, to a better understanding of a higher life for eternal happiness, and to undo as best he can the evil deeds of his wild career in the past.

CORRESPONDENT.

Chicago, Ill.

BOY'S VISIONS STIRS COUNTY.

Hundreds Gather at His Bedside to Hear His Strange Experiences.

The strange actions of 15-year-old Chauncey Boyer, son of John Boyer, a wealthy farmer near Lindsey, Ohio, continue to excite and arouse the greatest interest in the northwestern portion of the county. At the Boyer home, several hundred persons, some of them coming a distance of many miles, assembled at the young man's interesting prayer and religious meetings, listening to his wonderful exhortations.

During the last week hundreds have visited young Boyer, listening to the strange things he relates, and as a result not a few have been converted. He claims to be in constant divine contact and tells of visions of God and the angels.—Chicago Chronicle.

We should avoid whatever may display bad feeling, and attend with civility to what may be addressed to us; all hearts are conciliated by politeness and

SPIRIT RETURN.

A Peculiar Case Among the Negroes at Meridian, Miss., Illustrating the Fact That Spirit Return Is Common to All Humanity.

To the Editor:—The following clipping is from the Meridian Star of May 18. This incident has caused no small amount of interest being taken in the matter among the whites as well as the blacks, and if successful in bringing to the surface identification of the missing body, it will be the greatest sermon ever preached in this state.

Meridian, Miss. T. A. MERVIN.

What the Meridian Star Says.

"Zury" is located.

The body of Missouri Larkin is said to be now in Oktibbee creek, and at the same point at which young Rhoshaw was drowned several years ago. Missouri's body has not yet been recovered, nor has it yet been seen by the natural eye, though her spirit has been beheld by the optics of one Mary Jane Harris, and a number of other members of the colored race.

The readers of the Star will remember that during last December an advertisement appeared in this paper for the frau of one Watt Larkin, colored, who had very mysteriously disappeared. Watt's wife, who is no other than the Missouri referred to above, accompanied him to the cotton field one day, as was her custom to do, and although no "chariot of fire" or unusual clouds were noticed by Watt to descend and rise again on that day, nevertheless, his wife, Missouri, vanished from before his eyes, and has not been seen from that day until this.

The home of the darkies is on the Martin place about 1½ miles northwest of the asylum, and it was from a cotton field on that place that the person of Missouri Larkin made its sudden ghost-like disappearance.

Various and sundry rumors as to the whereabouts of the said Missouri Larkin have been afloat among the colored population of Meridian and the surrounding section. Among these rumors is one to which has been given considerable credence by the more superstitious members of the race, and is a story to the effect that on dark nights Missouri is seen promenading the streets of Brown's quarters in the northern part of the city. It is said that Missouri, robed in a snow white sheet extending from her neck to her feet, her head covered with a fly bonnet, also white, and after the style of the one she wore when she is supposed to have taken wings and separated from her husband in the cotton field last December, can be seen on any dark or cloudy night pacing up and down the avenues in the hollow between the Highlands, or the Red Line, and Twenty-ninth avenue. Many negroes have been frightened almost completely out of their wits by this moving and strange object, and for a number of weeks it has been believed to be no other than the spirit of Missouri Larkin.

It is also said that this queer figure has been seen in other portions of the city at night time, chiefly in those districts inhabited by colored people. Until last Friday, however, Missouri, nor her ghost has ever been seen in the neighborhood of her old home. Friday morning there were several negro women hoeing cotton on the Martin place in the same field from which Missouri's departure was made, when one of the women, Mary Jane Harris by name, suddenly dropped her hoe to the ground, and exclaimed:

"O Lawdy, O Lawdy, for my life, dar's Zury!"

Her companions said, "Whar?"

"Right dar standin' befo' yo eyes, niggers, don't you see her? Dar she is, her natural se'f."

The other women stood amazed at the queer conduct of their companion, Mary Jane, and assured her that she was mistaken. Mary Jane, however, insisted that Missouri was right there in the presence of all, and appeared to engage in a conversation with the undiscernable spirit of Missouri.

Suddenly Mary Jane began to walk away from the other women, disappearing among the underbrush of the Oktibbee bank nearby. After an absence of an hour or more Mary Jane returned to the field and related to her companions the following startling story:

In distinct tones Missouri had told her that she was the spirit of the real missing Missouri, and had her to follow her and she would learn the whereabouts of her body. Mary Jane was powerless to resist the command and involuntarily followed the woman to the lake on the Oktibbee creek where young Rhoshaw was drowned a few years after the war.

Arriving at this point, Mary Jane affirms that Missouri commanded her to kneel and pray. This she did, and when her prayer was concluded and she arose, she saw Missouri as plainly as ever in her life, sink to the ground, her body prostrate upon the bank of the creek, and roll off into the water.

Mary Jane's story was told with such emphasis and positiveness that her companions immediately laid aside their tools and proceeded to inform other negroes in the neighborhood of the strange incident.

As a result, within two hours there were gathered on the bank of the lake 75 or 100 negroes, and a search was instituted for the body of the missing Missouri Larkin.

The Oktibbee creek had overflowed, and the waters in the lake were very high, rendering it difficult to drag for the body. In fact, at many points the water was of such depth that the bottom of the lake could not be reached by the means employed by the searchers.

The entire afternoon was spent in dragging the lake, without success, though at one time the negroes claim that the body was brought almost to the surface, but that it came loose from the drag and was never again reached.

After the fruitless effort, which lasted until dark Friday evening, the negroes held a conference, and concluded to adjourn until this morning when it is hoped that the water will have receded sufficiently to enable them to make a thorough search of the lake's bottom.

A gentleman from the asylum neighborhood who was in the city yesterday afternoon states that there will be, without doubt, no less than 500 negroes on the Oktibbee at the point named above this morning, and that nearly, if not all of them will go there firmly of the belief that the body of Missouri Larkin will be recovered. The greatest faith is placed by the negroes of the neighborhood in the story told by Mary Jane Harris of her interview and association with the spirit of the missing Missouri.

A QUERY BY DR. GREER.

Dr. Greer, an Excellent Medium Himself, Has Something Suggestive to Say.

To the Editor:—According to certain recent press reports concerning Elsie Reynolds, a professional spirit medium, telling of her alleged spiritualistic work—for and against—and which press reports are so conflictory, that to many they would suggest the idea, that in the same Spiritualistic field and specialty there were two Elsie Reynolds—a genuine, and a counterfeit—the genuine, for her rich, brilliant display of marvel and miracle, as seen at different times and places, and under different circumstances, by different correspondents, greatly extolled.

The counterfeit, for her bold and brazen sham pretense, seen also at different times, and places, and under different circumstances, by different correspondents, and laying it to spirits, greatly berated.

Thus, from these different conflicting reports it would seem hard to imagine only one Elsie Reynolds.

Here, I am reminded of attending a dark seance, several years ago, in Chicago. There were 25 or 30 of us present, a woman was the alleged medium, and here I will relate some of the ludicrous features of that ever memorable dark seance, and for which we, each (except a few dead-heads) were made to pay an even dollar.

A woman behind a curtain posing in oratory and song impersonating, there, cundry alleged spirits unknown and unseen to any excepting to the woman behind the curtain.

A woman, too, coming from behind the curtain on her bended knees, and in baby twaddle, personating a garrulous little girl tot called "Effie."

A woman, too, before the curtain, having removed from her mouth her artificial bicuspids, personating for a lady present, her toothless old spirit mother; but the lady would not have it, declaring that her mother died when young, besides her mother was not toothless.

Other ludicrous features we will let pass; suffice it to say that this particular spiritualistic seance, advertised for Ghost Materializations was no ghost show, for no ghost, great or small, did at any time put in an appearance; on the contrary, it was transparent legerdemain, pure and simple, from beginning to end.

As I before said, there were in the seance 25 or 30 persons, mostly women, including three reporters, two of whom were Spiritualists, all except the dead-heads expressed disgust. Next day the Chicago press denounced the woman an arrant impostor.

Now, as this woman claimed to be Elsie Reynolds, the question is, was she the genuine, the one so greatly extolled? Or was she the counterfeit, so greatly berated? At any rate, she was tall and elderly, of dark complexion, and with face and voice and manner like one who had more thought for self than love or care for others.

Spiritualistic counterfeits, we know, have followed in the wake of all great mediums. Home, for instance; Slater, and Schlatter, have had their counterfeits; the Fays, the Eddys and the Davenports have had their counterfeits. and why not Elsie Reynolds? It is remarkable, however, that this seance, given several years ago in Chicago, was the last one given here by this aforesaid Elsie Reynolds.

But why spiritualistic counterfeits are by the spirit world tolerated, I do not know. We might as well ask why God don't kill the Devil, the big and the little Devil, and all the Devils, since the world began, or ask why God don't kill the microbes? But I suppose Devils, microbes and all are here to inflict and afflict, and so I suppose, are spiritualistic counterfeits.

One thing, however, I do know, and that is, spirits, like mortals, especially spirits of high degree, are greatly jealous of their good name and reputation, and will not long tolerate being misrepresented without rebuff or retribution.

For instance, immediately after the transition of the celebrated Dr. Newton, several alleged healers claimed him for their spirit control, but many to my knowledge, failing to heal, as he did, were called to time, turned down, and made to get out. Thus for a time, Dr. Newton's reputation suffered greatly. These spiritual impostors did not have even Dr. Newton's simple method. His method was not only simple but beautiful. He did not, like certain alleged healers, have to sweat over his patients by massage, or rubbings. No. Dr. Newton's method was simply a gentle touch of the hand, a word of command, a strong will power, aided by a powerful band of spirits and the good results were, in most cases, instantaneous.

Dr. J. R. Newton was a true representative of a truly typical spirit healer.

Healers, above all other class of mediums, should be careful, honest and conscientious, and not claim service—servile service—from certain great names, for when they do and fail, and patients become disappointed, the failure reflects upon those great names, wounding their sensitive feelings and incurring thereby their sore displeasure.

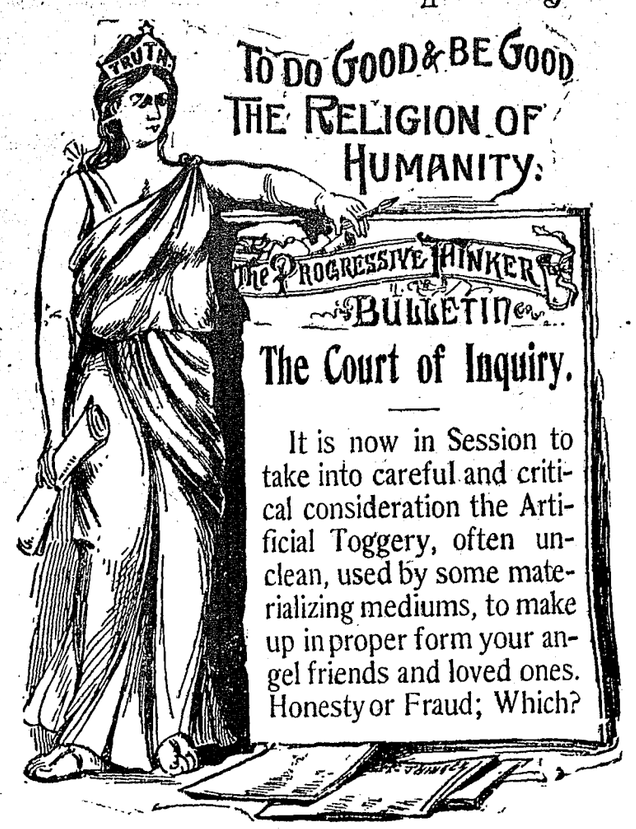
But, Mr. Editor, such unwarranted claims, of great names, are often the great psychological crimes of a great many mediums, and especially so of a great many healing mediums, till turned down.

Spirit mediums cannot afford to simulate spirits. They cannot afford to practice in their profession a single act of deception. If they do, and persist in so doing they will grieve the spirit, lose their grip on the spirit world, become, like others, abandoned mediums and left to themselves severely alone.

Honest spiritual service, which lights the way, is all-important, and from our spiritual viewpoint is of greater worth to the world of mind than all the gold of earth.

DR. R. GREER.

Chicago, Ill.



mented creature, and it is a fact that she was during last December, in the field with her husband, and at an unguarded moment she suddenly disappeared and has never since been heard of.

The scholar who cherishes the love of comfort is not fit to be deemed a scholar.—Confucius.

Bad men live that they may eat and drink, whereas good men eat and drink that they may live.—Socrates.

It is the act of a bad man to deceive by falsehood.—Cicero.

Court of Inquiry.

Crisis Pending in the Ranks of Spiritualism.

SCINTILLATIONS FROM THE HUB.

Ed Lunt Being a Painstaking, Critical Investigator of the Phenomena of Spiritualism, His Wife Being an Excellent Medium, His Views Will Add Interest to the COURT OF INQUIRY.

After a careful consideration of the article contributed by our friend Dunn, of Minnesota, I am impressed with the fact that it is a remarkable one, in many respects. One of these is its palpable inconsistency, judged from the standpoint of logic and common sense. It purports to be a plea for more harmony in the ranks of Spiritualism, and for more charity in our judgment of the work of physical mediums, so-called, in regard to whose methods there seems to be considerable agitation just now, and no little harsh criticism.

The article seems to have been called out especially by the case of C. E. Winans, an alleged materializing medium, whose exposure at Hot Springs, Ark., was recently published in The Progressive Thinker. Early in his article, our friend makes these very significant statements, to which I would call especial attention:

"Now to my mind there is no doubt that all of the material things were found just as stated (referring to the wigs, robes, etc., found concealed in Winan's music box) and that they were concealed from the eyes of any Paul Pry who might be found wandering in forbidden pastures and examining nooks and corners where he had no business.

"And there is no doubt, either, that these same so-called or similar earthly paraphernalia were used by the guides and controls of medium Winans at that seance and have been made use of as the instrument of spirit force, and also that similar paraphernalia is used by other mediums demonstrating spirit force through this phase called materialization."

Thus the main and most vital contention of the lovers of truth and honesty who are striving to free Spiritualism from the terrible incubus of dishonesty and fraud is admitted by this defender and mouthpiece of crooked mediumship, to be true. In his argument that follows, which is the gist of the article, that the use of such paraphernalia by materializing mediums to personate spirit visitors, guides, relatives of the sitters, etc., was made in an unconscious state, and was legitmate and a necessary aid to the spirit "chemists" in their work of building up the said forms, an unwarranted assumption is shown on the part of our Minnesota friend that the readers of The Progressive Thinker, and Spiritualists in general are a set of gullible fools. The idiotic and untenable position taken by the gentleman is not entirely new, but Mr. Dunn, so far as I have seen, is the first to exhibit the nerve necessary in giving it public expression.

If our friend is making this argument in good faith, however, which seems hardly possible, perhaps he will not object to clearing up a few points that seem to conflict with his remarkable ideas. For instance, if the medium is really in a trance or unconscious state at these seances, and is unaware, as claimed, that the said earthly material (robes, wigs, etc.) is being used upon him to personate certain "spirits" and deceive persons into the belief that the forms are actually what they purport to be, when did the unconscious state begin, and when did, or does, it end? If it began with the seance, then the medium must have been in a conscious state before that, when he provided himself with the properties in question. If so, he must, logically, have known for what purpose he procured them. He must have known and intended that the goods so procured were to be used for the purpose indicated, and if he did know it, is he not morally and legally guilty of intentional fraud? And if the unconscious state ended with the seance, did the medium not know that the dollars he received from the patrons of the seance were obtained under false pretenses, and that he was again committing a crime? The attempt to throw the responsibility for a criminal action upon so intangible (in the eyes of the law) a personage as a spirit "guide," will hardly wash in this practical age. What becomes, then, of your "unconscious" theory? What would become of the attorney who would set up such a plea in a court of justice? Would he not be hooted out of court, at least, or perhaps, more likely, subjected to an examination to determine the state of his mental faculties?

But Mr. Dunn says Winans and other mediums always allow and insist upon a careful examination of their cabinet, to see that no fraud is possible, and also explain to the sitters that three forms of manifestation are usually presented—materialization, proper, transfiguration and impersonation, etc., therefore he is not liable for fraud if one phase is mistaken for another. Is it also explained that the robes, wigs, etc., are to be used in certain phases? Not on your life! If our friend's theory is correct, why are they so carefully concealed? Should they not be displayed and their use explained to the skeptical?

Seizures of paraphernalia at materializing seances have been numerous of late years. Among the first notable cases (at Lily Dale) was one in which the claim was strenuously made by the medium and his or her friends that the goods were surreptitiously placed where they were found, by the "fraud-hunters" themselves, in order to ruin the medium. In other cases the same claim was made, and believed by many. Nothing was said about the unconscious theory. Probably there was no astute lawyer there to suggest it. A little later one Mabel Aber Jackman's confederate was caught in one of her seances in Chicago, having on a supply of such paraphernalia. How does the "unconscious" theory work in here? Were the assistants given, by the spirit guide, a dose of celestial knock-out drops, then, while unconscious, transported through the solid walls into the seance room, and there made to do their little stunts? Or were they brought in in a conscious state, then made unconscious, did their turn, restored again to consciousness, and then paid off. If so, did they know what they were paid for? Again, if my memory serves me, one Harry Clifton, who flourished as a materializing medium some years since in Chicago, was found to have used apartments that had been elaborately prepared for the business, being fitted with sliding panels, hinged base-boards, and other facilities for expediting the entrance and exit of his material assistants who personated the spirits. Was the medium conscious, in this case, of the preparations made, or did the "guides" do it all?

I could cite many more cases of like nature, but the space alloted to me will not permit. In concluding I would mention that I have made a study of this question for several years, and attended probably as many seances as our esteemed friend from Minnesota, and I have never yet heard a medium explain to his or her audience just what the difference was between the three forms or phases to be expected, and on very few of the occasions was anything whatever said on the subject. In every case where the medium did not come out personally in his or her own garb, to give some one a special test or communication, the audience were given to understand, by remarks and actions, that the form presented was a genuine materialization. Our friend also says: "I AM CERTAIN THAT IN NO SEANCE I HAVE ATTENDED WAS THERE EVER LACKING THE USE OF PURELY EARTHLY MATERIALS IN DEMONSTRATING SPIRIT POWER," and thus far I agree with him. Indeed, if I were trying this case in court, I would submit the case to the jury on the gentleman's own statements herein quoted, without further argument.

Mr. Dunn further says that he is perfectly satisfied that the mediums who who have been denounced the most in the spiritual press as frauds, including Winans, are endowed with rare psychic powers, etc., etc. This is the same old song so often sung by those who have enthusiastically endorsed the work of certain so-called mediums who have since been detected and thoroughly exposed as miserable frauds. Of course it is humiliating for one to acknowledge that he has been so easily and so extensively imposed upon, and the only way out is to stick to your story and insist that the exposed one has at least some psychic power.

Our Minnesota friend claims he has "seen beautiful flowers plucked from the atmosphere;" and other astonishing manifestations in seances. It is very evident that he has MISTAKEN CLEVER SLEIGHT-OF-HAND WORK FOR SPIRIT MANIFESTATIONS, IN HIS BLIND FAITH, AND HAS ACCUMULATED A LARGE STOCK OF SPIRITUAL "GOLD BRICKS," even though they were so thinly coated with the precious truth that the base filling could not be hidden. It certainly seems to me that a man that possesses such evident ability in other directions should allow himself to be so cruelly humbugged. Understanding, as he says he does, "the philosophy of the materializing phase of spirit force" (probably the only living person who does understand it) he should certainly be able to detect the spurious. He seems gifted with the true spirit of prophecy, too, when he says: "IT MAY BE THAT I AM WRITING MYSELF DOWN AS A FOOL OR AS A DEFENDER OF FRAUDS AND FAKES." But cheer up, brother. There is still hope for you. Do not be guided and influenced by the sophistry and cut-and-dried rules laid down by fraudulent mediums for their own protection and benefit, but investigate as you would any other class of criminals. How would you expect to convict a thief or a murderer if you were to allow yourself to be guided by rules of investigation laid down by the prisoner or his attorney? Let common sense guide you and you will soon see where the fraud comes in.

ED. LUNT.

Station A, Boston, Mass.

"Koradine. By Alice B. Stockham and Lida Holt Talbot." In the form of an entertaining story, it contains lessons which every girl should know. Price, cloth, $1.

ARTIFICIAL SPIRIT TOGGERY

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, One of Our Best Platform Test Mediums and Lecturers, and Always Thoroughly Honest in Her Work, Gives Her Views to the COURT OF INQUIRY.

"There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

We will always find doubting Thomases, and many not understod by untutored minds seemingly to them impossible. If forms of departed spirits were seen through the phases called materialization and etherealization in ages past, why not to-day? "There is nothing new under the sun." The laws of psychic phenomena are little understood by the masses, hence skepticism and doubt prevail.

Sorry indeed would it be for our philosophy if the statement made by your correspondent is correct, as follows:

"I have personally attended many seances for materializing given through the instrumentalities of some of the best known media in the work, some of whom are now on the brighter side of life, and I am certain that in no seance I have attended was there ever lacking the use of purely earthly materials in demonstrating spirit power and spirit presence," etc.

If the spirits can materialize a body, they certainly can clothe the same, and as the intelligence conveyed in the message is generally the proof test of the personality, it little matters as to whether abundance of material is used in clothing said body.

If as the writer says he "has been informed by a gifted psychic that furnishing certain earthly made accessories, such as robes, wigs, whiskers, illuminated dresses, etc., was a great aid" to the spirits, why not have these necessities in a basket, either inside or outside of the cabinet, first explaining to the sitters the desire to assist all spirits who are unable to furnish their own clothing, etc., by allowing them to don such as complied to their various needs or tastes; also do away with the formality of searching the medium and cabinet as a proof that no materials are used otherwise than brought by the spirits, as this is the impression it is generally intended to convey.

Continued exposes may prove fraudulent work in our midst, which I much regret, yet it does not disprove the existence of true mediumship, no more than a counterfeit dollar would disprove the existence of the genuine coin. Many cases of fraud have been laid to a materializing medium's door through the spirit who is unable to form a complete body, using the medium for personating and transfiguring purposes, and if said manifestation is poorly accomplished the sitter readily recognizes the features and form of the medium, and not understanding the method used denounces the medium. This could be obviated by a few words of explanation and warning, given by the cabinet controls, and the doubt of sitters set aside leaving better conditions for continued manifestations.

Honesty on the part of the guides should be demanded by mediums of all phases. True, the best of them cannot help but make mistakes at times under such conditions as confront the average meeting or seance, and I have yet to find the first medium or guide who can be called infallible, notwithstanding one occasionally hears statements made to that effect. When I hear such statements made, either by medium or guide previous to message bearing or the production of phenomena, a pang of pity goes from my heart and a prayer that the veil of ignorance be lifted from the too credulous instrument and over-conceited guides and controls.

Let us not be too hasty in the condemnation of any medium or phase of mediumship.

As a science we must accept the dark as well as the light seance.

As a philosophy we must accept all its beautiful teachings.

As a religion we must be careful. Mediumship has nothing to do with religion, but Spiritualism should be represented by men and women of pure character.

Mediums should ever aim to grow and improve in their work, but only through natural channels, and he or she who is willing to allow the natural growth, never stooping to simulation when conditions are unfavorable, is the man or woman whose mediumship will bear the test of time, though it ever be void of sensation.

This growth can be acquired by holding ourselves receptive to higher forces and thoughts, and positive to lower forces and thoughts. May this be the aim of every worker in the ranks of Spiritualism.

Yours for Truth and Progress,
GEORGIA GLADYS COOLEY.

WINANS AT MT. PLEASANT.

The Spirit Weaving of Lace Pronounced an Unmitigated Fraud.

J. R. Francis, Esq., Editor of The Progressive Thinker, Chicago, Ill.:

Dear Sir:—I have read with much interest the discussion in the Court of Inquiry relative to the methods practiced by Winans, the alleged materializing medium, at Hot Springs, Ark.

I have sat in Winans' seances at Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, two different years, the last time being the year before last. On that occasion I decided he was not a genuine medium. One of his cabinet controls was preparing to materialize lace and was passing around the circle; as he passed very near to me I thrust my face within a few inches of his and got a very distinct look at him; he returned rapidly around the circle and when passing me again said: "Do I look like that fellow there?" I told him I thought he did.

Now please note the following: Winans has a very large moustache, and across the upper lip of this alleged spirit was a swelling, and over it running around the face a band of flesh colored rubber; this rubber set tightly to the face, swelling where it covered the upped lip and the moustache. I am positive of this. I saw it distinctly in a very fair light, and from that time on I set down the spirit manifestations occurring at his seances as unmitigated fraud.

If you desire to please the great body of honest investigators that are now at work studying this beautiful philosophy, you can accomplish no more good than by mercilessly exposing frauds and fakes wherever you find them.

I am Yours very truly,
JOHN K. SCOTT.

Rock Island, Ill.

BOOK REVIEW.

"The Apocryphal and Legendary Life of Christ." Being the whole of the Apocryphal Gospels and other extra-canonical literature which pretends to tell of the life and words of Jesus Christ, including much matter which has not before appeared in English, in continuous narrative form, with notes, scriptural references, prolegomena and indices. By James DeQuincey Donehoo, A. M. 531 octavo pages. The Macmillan Company, New York and London.

The reader who desires to have clear views of the origins of the religions of the past, especially of the Christian religion, cannot afford to let go by the opportunity this book presents of becoming familiar with that mass of writings called apocryphal, which accumulated during the first sixteen centuries and from which the New Testament was selected. No one who has not read these fantastic writings, can form any idea of them. Many collections have been published, one under the title of The Apocryphal New Testament, but these give a faint idea of the mass of matter which has accumulated. Some of these manuscripts are supposed to be as old as the second century, but such conclusions show how training will affect the judgment. If written in the early centuries they should have been composed in pure Latin and Greek, while they are really written in those tongues after being corrupted by barbarian ignorance.

The monks in their convent cells, copied the earlier MSS., and their copies under their imagination became new works. Or they composed fabulous tales, signing the names of favorite authors, or fictitious.

There was a period of intense activity all turned in the direction of fabrication of religious legends.

The author says: "We know that they forged a perfect swarm of writings professing to be the works of Christ, of his apostles, and all other principal characters of the New Testament, as well as the Old." One of the more fruitful sources of legends, was the prophecies. Stories grew up for their fulfillment.

It would be impossible for the general reader to gain access to this mass of literature, and to read it would be a monotonous task, so much is rubbish. Hence the author has conferred a great favor, by selecting and condensing, and relieving the student of the labor while he gives him the result. His plan is a happy one. He gives the life of Christ as told by these books, selecting the most characteristic passages.

These "gospels" go farther back than the father and mother of Christ, the writers saw that it was necessary to make Mary divine, and if Christ was virgin-born, so must be his mother. The Catholic worship of Mary is founded on these apocryphal gospels. As illustrative of how this book is written, this story of Mary's grandmother is taken from the books entitled Protevangelion of James, Gospel of Pseudo-Matthew, Gospel of the Nativity of Mary, Fragments of the Life of the Virgin.

A sweet morsel, from the "Life of the Virgin," is here quoted as a sample, and to give the reader a faint taste. It may or may not provoke his hunger for more.

At three years Mary was devoted to God, being consigned to the priests in the temple with a group of virgins. Of her life there it is written: "And as she grew a little she put from her all vain intercourse, and her heart she turned from all the beauty of this life. There came to her no thoughts of her parents or of this world. She never painted her eyes, nor put saffron on her cheeks, nor plaited her hair. She did not put choice perfume upon her, nor did she anoint her body with ointment. She did not bathe nor wash with water, nor did she put her face outside the door, lest she should see a strange man. Her raiment, which was always of the natural colors, never became foul nor wore out, nor tore; but that her mother put upon her when she gave her to the temple, remained upon her till the day of her death. As regards that, while Mary increased daily, the raiment became greater with her. Nor did she ever see the nakedness of her body; but when she was about to wear a garment she would shut her eyes."

"Mary was of medium stature, and her body was in all respects graceful and well proportioned. She was somewhat delicate in appearance, and her color was that of a ripe wheat. Her face was oval and rather pointed; her hair golden, and she wore it bound up; her eyes were large and piercing, inclining to blue in color; her eyebrows arched and somewhat dark; her nose rather long, and her lips fresh, and full of the loveliness of speech. Her appearance was so beautiful scarcely any one could look into her face, and if any one who was unwell touched her, the same hour he went home cured."

She vowed not to leave the temple, but the law required that the virgins should remain there only until fourteen years old, and the priests decided that she must go and become the wife of some one. How Joseph the old carpenter came to get her is told in "The History of Joseph the Carpenter, and Other Writings." She was bestowed by lot. Every man among the twelve tribes without a wife was to bring a rod, and the one from whose rod a white dove should fly was to have her. Three thousand came, and among them Joseph. He outwitted all the others, for his rod was no common reed. In the words of the historian: "Now Joseph's rod was a short one, but it had a wonderful history. God made it on the sixth day of creation, and upon it was engraven his incommunicable name. Adam received it from his son Seth who brought it out of paradise; and from him it descended to Enoch, to Noah, to Shem, to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Jacob took it down to Egypt, where before his death he gave it to his son Joseph. When after Joseph's death the lords of Egypt spoiled his goods, they carried away the rod to Pharaoh's palace, where it came into the hands of Raguel, a magician, who carried it into the land of Midian, and planted it there in his garden. No one was able to come near it till Moses came, who read the letters upon it and pulled it up. With this rod Moses performed his wonders and finally gave it to Aaron. David received it for a scepter and the prophets sing of the root of Jesse, until it finally came to Joseph and the Messiah."

When the trial came, the other rods were of no account, but from Joseph's rod: "Immediately from the tip of it came forth a dove, whiter than snow, and most beautiful, which after resting on the head of Joseph, and fluttering for a long time about the pinnacle of the temple, at length flew toward heaven."

The books of the New Testament are like those apocryphal writings, but it would seem that they were written with more care for probability, and less abandon to every legend of torrid Oriental fancy. Yet how its component parts were taken and why other books were excluded must ever remain a mystery. It is probable that few of these MSS. are older than the 15th century, though other manuscripts and countless legends came down from entire centuries to be worked over and over again into what is now an inextricable maze of fraud and superstition.

One of the most delightful features of this book is the impartiality, and indefatigable care with which the subject is presented. The New Testament cannot be understood without the reading of this book. There have been innumerable lives of Christ written, from all imaginable standpoints, but this surpasses them all in interest and original information.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Camp-meetings and Other Spiritualistic Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

THE POWER OF THOUGHT,

Its Analysis in Connection With the Affairs of Earth and Spirit Life.

Few think, but many think they think; and if it were possible by some magical art to reverse this condition, the result would at once be apparent. There would be more of justice, honesty, and devotion to the highest ideals of life and less of selfishness, love of sensation, and thoughtlessness for the welfare of others, for it must always be remembered that all advancement has come through the few people who know how to think.

How, then, may one learn to think? By watching the dawning intelligence of the infant we learn that it responds in time to the impacts of outside bodies; it learns what impacts produce pleasure and what produce pain, and from this arises the action of crying when attacked by the pangs of hunger and ceasing to cry when that want is supplied by the mother's milk.

The same experience, only on a larger scale, happens to each evolving soul as long as he lives in the physical body. He feels the need of something, and he exercises all the powers of his intelligence to supply that need. If he does so at the expense of the rights of others he has made a serious mistake, and for this he suffers punishment in the working out of his future karma. This is repeated again and again, for souls are slow to learn, until at last his reason tells him that there is a way by which his wants may be satisfied and the rights of others not infringed upon. And with this great step forward progress becomes a much easier matter.

The instrument by which thinking is accomplished is the physical brain working harmoniously with the indwelling soul. The brain is deliberately taught to respond to certain suggestions. For this purpose concentration and meditation is cultivated. By concentration is meant the ability to turn all the power of thought in one direction—to dwell on one subject; not an easy task at first, for the mind is prone to wander and is impatient of restraint, but by daily practice much may be accomplished.

Then comes the act of meditation, and by this is meant taking a subject and turning it over in one's mind—viewing it from different aspects, and learning to know it in every phase. This is hard work for the untrained physical brain, but if persisted in half an hour a day, clearer thought, quicker perception, and keener powers of observation will be attained.

And when all is said and done, what is being attempted but an effort to do by deliberate training what the great thinkers of the world do naturally?

Edison forgets to eat when absorbed in some new invention, and Hawthorne lived the scene of "The Scarlet Letter" as he wrote the book.

But it is not alone in self-advancement that we may use the power of thought, although all who strive for intellectual development are by their efforts uplifting mankind. One who has reached a condition where clear thinking is natural can do much directly to help others.

Christian scientists and Mental Scientists have materially aided in bringing to the attention of the public the fact that much may be done in curing or warding off diseases of the physical body by intelligent thinking. And many members of the medical fraternity are now convinced that certain lines of thought tend to aid or retard recovery, as the case may be, in certain diseases of the body.

A much larger field lies open to "one who loves his fellow men" in cultivating the ability to help the morally weak at the moments when they are most tempted. It is possible by well-directed thought to steady a man who, being thrown off his balance by the desire nature, is about to make a serious mistake, until he becomes calmer and again permits the higher self to dominate. It is not neccessary that the one who is helped need ever know what has actually happened; he only realizes that he did not yield to temptation and his heart is lighter in consequence.

And quite as much may be done for a dead friend. Suppose he died with bitter rebellion in his heart because he was swept away from a full and happy life. If a living friend be sufficiently advanced he will become conscious in some subtle way of the dead friend's condition, and will turn his energies to helping him. At night when he falls asleep he will try to go to him on the astral plane, filled with calm and helpful thoughts. He may have on waking, a distinct recollection of having seen the one he is trying to help; or he may have nothing more than a feeling that the night was well spent.

Of course, there are possibilities in the way of evil thinking as well, but they are not so certain in their results. A man may send a harmful thought toward one he thinks has injured him, but if that individual is not conscious of doing harm to any one, but on the contrary, is ever seeking to do good, he has panoplied himself about with an invulnerable armor. And then the harmful thought returns to its source, just as does the boomerang of the Australian savage—the simile is appropriate, for hate is more in accordance with his state of evolution than with ours—and waits until some favorable opportunity permits it to do the harm it was intended to do, but the sender himself is injured instead of the one he sought to harm.

CLARA S. HENDERSON.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Ohio Spiritualists, Attention!

The Ohio State Spiritualist Association is very desirous of extending its missionary work, and earnestly solicits all Spiritualist societies in the state of Ohio desiring its missionaries to help them, to communicate at once with its corresponding secretary.

We also wish to hear from every locality in the state where there is an opportunity of organizing a society. We urge Spiritualists to co-operate with us in our work of organization, thus placing our local cause on a solid foundation.

CARRIE M. BARTHOLOMEW.
Cor. Secretary O. S. A.
P. O. Box 267 Geneva, Ohio.

REASON CLEARLY DEFINED

Its Relation to God and Man, and the Conclusions It Leads To.

Reason is a faculty of the mind by which is distinguished truth from falsehood and good from evil, and which enables the possessor to deduce inferences from facts, or from propositions.

Our reason teaches us that our physical lives begin and end on our earthly planet.

The bible teaches that God started the human family by creating Adam and Eve. That he, God, located Adam and Eve in a place called the Garden of Eden where abundance of fruit was produced to supply their physical wants. Adam and Eve were given permission to pluck and eat of the fruit all the trees growing in the garden, excepting one—the tree of knowledge—the fruit of that tree was forbidden them. The serpent (one of God's creatures) persuaded them to eat of the forbidden fruit, and said to them: "For God doth know that in the day that ye eat it, then your eyes shall be opened and ye shall be as Gods, knowing good from evil. And Eve took of the fruit of the forbidden tree and did eat and gave also to her husband with her and he did eat and the eyes of both were opened. And Jehova, God, said: Behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil.

Now, giving the language of the bible a reasonable construction, does it not apper that the reasoning faculty of the mind by which man is enabled to distinguish truth from falsehood, and good from evil, came to us by the serpent's influence and action?

It appears that God created millions of creatures in different forms, and that of all the living creatures of his creation, man alone possesses the power to reason. Without the reasoning power would not man be on the brute plane? Suppose God had said to the ox or horse: "In the center of your pasture is the sweetest grass, but you must not eat of that, if you do you will surely die." Do you think it would have exercised any controlling influence over them? How could it? They could not distinguish right from wrong. They could not comprehend what death meant, even if they possessed reason before, knowledge must come to them through the occurrence of an actual death. The knowledge in the mind comes from and through experience which is treasured by memory.

We have penal laws, but idiots and lunatics are immune from their penalties. But in the case of Adam and Eve (apparently as irresponsible as are idiots and lunatics) their Creator, the great God of the universe, pronounced judgment of death against them and all their posterity. According to the bible our power of reason is a divine prerogative. Here is a good opportunity to use this wonderful power in the way of criticism.

We have a sense of justice to apply to the conduct of man. What would you think of an earthly parent that would put his son to death for disobediently biting an apple against his parent's injunction? If the parent administered severe corporal punishment for so slight a cause, the neighbors would raise their hands and voices to stop it. But God's judgment against Adam and Eve, to the thinking mind, was more cruel and unjust, and was not limited to them, but embraces in its penalties all the generations that followed them. Would you believe it to be just to put to death the innocent children of a criminal parent? Is it just for the innocent to suffer with the guilty, when the innocent are free from fault and utterly powerless to prevent the criminal acts of their parents? If not, then God's judgment against the human family has no love in it, no kindness, nothing of the beautiful, nothing that excites the pure emotions, nothing that calls for worshipful reverence, nothing high, ennobling or reverential, but it has in it everything that we would condemn in the human court as most cruel, unjust and tyrannical.

Again the bible says, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," and I think it further appears that God created everything that existed. All matter, material and substance, and force, spirit and forms, animate and inanimate, he created, and outside of his creation there was nothing, thence it follows there was nothing in Adam and Eve only what he had created. The substance, force and form in them he created; there was nothing outside of God's creation but space, nothing to act on God's creatures but God and the material force and energy they received from God. Now, from what source could Adam and Eve be influenced to disobey God.

Suppose the great inventor Edison should say to his phonograph: "If you repeat what I say to you, I will destroy you," and then the machine is put in motion, and it does just what it is made to do—repeats his very words in the same tone of voice. Would you say that Edison betrayed good sense and judgment in destroying the machine? But, says the theologian, that is a machine, it can only do what it was made to do; with man it is different. God gave man a free will. He can choose to be good or bad. How? If man has a will he did not make it, as he has no creative power, so if he has a will God gave it to him. God also furnished the power to move the will to action. If there are laws to govern matter and force they must have emanated from God, and like Edison's machine can only do those things which God has created them to do.

Man in himself and in all that relates to himself is a mystery to himself. He cannot find out God; he cannot find out the origin of life; no man can do that. The laymen of the churches, the preachers, the bishops, the archbishops, the cardinals and the pope, know no more about God than the humblest mortal. Then how can they teach us God's laws, His judgments and His commandments? Why, the preacher says: "We have the bible containing God's holy words and teachings. We must be guided by that. It is our only proof and authority. We do not question it. We rely upon it. We accept it as authority without question, or doubt. All the evidence they offer is the book itself. No scholar, theologian, or otherwise can trace the bible or any part of it to God. No proof other than hearsay can be furnished that God had anything to do with the production of the bible.

H. H. BLANCHARD.

Janesville, Wis.

"Origin of Life, or Where Man Comes From." "The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter Through Organic Processes, or How the Spirit Body Grows." By Michael Faraday. Price 10 cents.

"The Attainment of Womaly Beauty of Form and Features. The Cultivation of Personal Beauty, Based on Hygiene and Health Culture. By twenty physicians and specialists. Edited by Albert Turner." Of especial interest and value. Price $1.

"The Commandments Analysed." By W. H. Bach. The Commandments are not only analysed, but contrasted with other Bible passages, showing great incongruities. Price 25 cents.

CANDIDLY

The World Has Never Seen the Like Before

Read This Offer:

Truly, the world has never seen the like before. Search the annals of history, ancient and modern; critically examine the history of Spiritualism; look here and there, in every nook and corner of the world, and you cannot find a parallel to the offer made in reference to these twelve remarkable Premium Books. They constitute a wonderfully valuable Spiritualistic and Occult library, and are furnished at a nominal sum. All are substantially bound and neatly printed, and those who purchase them are delighted with them. The last one to appear, "LETTERS FROM THE SPIRIT WORLD," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea, should be in every library. Read the following carefully:

We have now TWELVE magnificent Premium Books, and you can select from them as follows:

Any one of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price 25 cents. This is the price, remember, when you order only one book in connection with a yearly subscription. The paper, one year, and one Premium Book, $1.25.

Any two of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price 70 cents.

Any three of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.75.

Any six of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.05.

Any seven of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.

Any eight of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.65.

Any nine of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.90.

Any ten of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $3.10.

Any eleven of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $3.40.

Lastly, all of these TWELVE Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.75, something never before equalled in this country or Europe.

Bear in mind that every order for a Premium must be accompanied with a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker. We repeat that the world has never seen the like of it before.

OUR TWELVE REMARKABLE PREMIUM BOOKS FOR $3.75.

The following is the list of titles of the Twelve Premium Books:

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.

2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.

3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3. These three volumes have been prepared by J. R. Francis. They contain invaluable data.

4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.

5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.

6—The Next World Interviewed, by Mrs. S. G. Horn, a most remarkable medium.

7—The Occult Life of Jesus, by Alexander Smythe, a medium of rare gifts.

8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Translated by A. Farnese, a wonderful English medium.

9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science, by Hudson Tuttle.

10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

12—Letters from the Spirit World, written through the mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea.

Each Spiritualist should at once commencing forming a Spiritualist and Occult library.

When ordering a Premium Book, one or more, you must send in a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker.

WOMANLY BEAUTY

Of Form and Feature—The Cultivation and Preservation of Personal Beauty Based upon Health and Hygiene.

By twenty well-known physicans and specialists. With 80 half-tone and other illustrations. Edited by Albert Turner. A handsome volume, 256 pages, bound in cloth and gold.

In this volume the editor has brought together the teachings of those who have made a study of special features of the subject, and the result is a work that is unique and practical, not filled with a medley of receipts and formulas, so often found in books on beauty.

Fully illustrated with pictures that mean something to the reader, not of so-called "beauties," closing with chapters of "Hints in Beauty Culture" and "Hints in Health Culture," which, if followed, would alone be worth many times the price of the volume in securing health and good form, which is possible to all. Price $1.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An feicencly interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Price 50 cents.

MATERIALIZATION.

What I Know About It by Experience.

The first materializing seance I ever attended was in 1868. Pierre Keeler was the medium. He went into the cabinet. After several forms had appeared the name of my deceased sister was called. I went to the cabinet, but she was not there. Instead of her I saw a man in shirt-sleeves and wearing a sailor cap. He was the spirit guide, four inches taller than Mr. Keeler; his name was Washington Emmons, a sea captain. I shook his hand and conversed with him. After that I attended many such seances for several years until Mr. Keeler quit holding them.

He gave no more for fourteen years. I deemed it prudent for him to discontinue them and for a good reason. He would sometimes come out of the cabinet in the trance condition personating some one who had passed over. But on returning to the cabinet on one occasion he turned up the dim gas light and then fell violently to the floor. He rose, and being unentranced, exclaimed, "Who did that?" He was slightly hurt by the fall, caused by the turning on of the light. Thereafter whenever he sought to reach the gas light it was guarded by persons present.

My wife, who was very skeptical in regard to materialization, and even other phases of spirit manifestation, became a complete convert after seeing her father's form at his first appearance in fairly good light, every one present could distinctly see the form, she was astounded. He could not then speak. When spoken to by her he put his finger on his mouth. She recognized his features. He held a handkerchief in his hand which she clasped. Such was his habit at times when visited by a friend in warm weather while dozing in his chair with the handkerchief over his head to keep away the flies. She clasped his body, which in a few minutes began to sink. It rose again and then sank down. She saw his head as it reached the floor.

In feeling of his garments she noticed that he had on an overcoat of old-time water-proof cloth. As he had dropped dead while hunting in a snow storm in Dutchess County, New York, she supposed that he was clothed in the fustian suit which he usually wore in hunting. On inquiry from her sister she learned that on that December day he put on his water-proof suit.

Mr. Keeler for the past year or two has resumed materializing seances once a week. I have attended nearly all. Instead of gas light he has a candle in a box at the end of the room, with a thin red screen and a cover which opens and shuts by a cord and pullies. The end of the cord is in the cabinet. The light is thus let on from the cabinet. sometimes it is entirely shut off, but usually when the forms appear more or less light is let on. It is a well known fact that ghosts are generally seen in dim light, and that they manifest themselves frequently in total light, some only in complete darkness.

Mr. Keeler has been holding seances for twenty-five years, three or four times a week, mostly in Washington, D. C. His character is without reproach. I estimate that his coat has come off nearly 3,000 times while his two hands clasped the arm of the sitter in the "battery" next to him. I have been that sitter several times. There used to be an agitation of his person before the coming off of his coat, but for many years past there is scarcely any, often none at all, so that he does not even know it is off until it is thrown over. At a recent seance when I sat next to him in the battery, he promised to tell me when he began to feel his coat coming off; but it came so suddenly that he could not notify me, and if he did not clasp my arm tightly at the moment then I cannot credit my senses. Every sitter can or must say the same.

But this is a digression. I have seen numberless materializations in the last seventeen years, but many at other mediums' seances, and I never detected a fraud—though at one time I was not quite satisfied. Anyhow, the female medium or her spirit control lifted me from the floor several feet and let me down with such violence that in the darkness my wife feared I was hurt. I have been roughly handled at dark seances while the medium was at the other end of the room and not entranced.

When Mr. Keeler resumed the full-form materializing seances I took my violin, as I had often done when his musician failed him at the light circles. A form came out purporting to be one Lozecam, a restaurant keeper whom I never knew, but who was well known in this city. He called for my instrument. I said, "a string has just broken and it is out of tune." Nevertheless he took it, tuned the three strings and played part of a melody quite artistically. Mr. Keeler was in the cabinet entranced. At a later seance Lozecam came and again played a melody. Several times later he came out. Twice did I meet him face to face on the floor. Every time he was in elegant evening dress. I felt of his garments. They were not such as Mr. Keeler wore. To show that he was just like a mortal man he bent his knees and lowered his stature before me.

Several times my wife's father has appeared to me in full form, always the same, with no shirt collar, not elegantly dressed, and with a long grey beard. He it was who told me that Thomas Paine would come and make a speech. The promise was fulfilled and the speech was written down in the cabinet. He spoke so slowly that it could be taken down in long hand. It was printed in The Progressive Thinker. Mr. Keeler and I sat in the battery in front of the cabinet, not entranced. The written speech of 130 words was exactly as spoken. The blank tablet was passed into the cabinet after we were seated. I could hear the leaves torn off, and when the writing was completed they were folded and passed over into my lap. The reporter claimed to be my partner for many years as stenographers.

At these full form materialization seances more than fifty forms sometimes appear, most of whom announce themselves and are recognized. Sometimes there are three or more forms on the floor at once. I have been called up when two forms appeared, my wife's father and his daughter. I have conversed with both. I have often shaken the hand of the father and kissed that of the daughter. Indeed, at the light circles where Mr. Keeler was not entranced, I have many times kissed that daughter. "How does it feel?" said Mr. Keeler. "Just the same as if I was kissing Mrs. Keeler," was my answer. Kissing the ghosts is very frequent at their light circles. "Shall I kiss you?" said my wife to her sister. "No," said she, "I want to kiss a man," and she kissed me twice.

Mr. Keeler knows nothing of what occurs in his two hours' trance. Once at the close of a seance I told him something that was told me by a spirit. He laughed and explained all about it. A certain statesman was to attend a light circle and the spirit requested me to be present. But I have attended most of the seances since and the person named has not been there. How did the spirit learn about the matter? And I have been told things by spirits at these seances which they knew nothing about in earth life.

Visible spirits are a common occurrence. Some are seen only by psychics, but at materializing seances by everyone present. Positive proof that some of them have weight and strength has often been given. Even the change of weight of the medium has been tested on scales. Long ago Prof. Hare, the scientist, tested the changing weight of Mrs. Ross in that way. My friend Geo. A. Bacon (who, by the way, has been lying in bed three months, afflicted with heart disease) once witnessed such a test.

Materialized hands have appeared at nearly all the seances of Mr. Keeler for twenty-five years. I have seen five at a time. Others say they have seen more. At the time when I saw the five it was at a private house. The hands come out through and over the curtain and write messages on a tablet held by the person pointed to. I have often sat in the battery and seen the hand write. Once I was called up and the hand wrote for me, "This is true whether it is in the Sun or under it. Chs. A. Dana." It was a few days after his death. The words "in," "Sun" and "under" were underscored. The last message written for me in that way was, at my request, in German; and I held the tablet on the head of the lady sitting next to Mr. Keeler. I once witnessed such writing on the shirt cuff of Gen. Floyd King, an ex-M. C. from Alabama. It was in good French. All these hands are materializations. A naked human foot appeared at one seance in my presence. At another time a shoe appeared. Sometimes a hand of a colored spirit is shown.

In conclusion let me say that if materialization is a fraud, then I am a confederate of the same, and that Spiritualism has no basis but the phenomena.

WM. HENRY BURR.

Washington, D. C.

"The Constitution of Man." By Elizabeth Towne. Gives a clear and practical presentation of advanced mental science and embodies many new and original ideas, and the fullest teaching extant as to the nature, control and direction of desire. Price 50c.

REMARKABLE SPIRIT VISIT.

Demonstrating the Universality of Spirit Return.

Lady Waterford's death, which has just been announced by cable and which places in mourning her son, Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, who has just returned to England from a visit to this country [as set forth in the Washington Post], has doubtless been heralded in a similar fashion by the supernatural appearance of Lady Beresford, wife of Sir Tristram Beresford, and the ancestress, therefore, of Lord Charles Beresford. Lady Beresford had a romantic affection with the Lord Tyrone of her day, and, filled with doubts and fears as to the value of their religious opinions, they made a solemn promise that, whoever of the two first died should if permitted by the Almighty, appear to the survivor for the purpose of proving the existence of the Divinity. Fifteen years later she came down one morning for breakfast looking very much agitated and with a black ribbon tied around her wrist. Her husband asked her if she had hurt herself? whereupon she earnestly entreated him not to inquire as to the cause of her wearing it, saying; "You will never see me again without it." She then eagerly and anxiously asked whether any letters had arrived, and on being questioned by her husband, remarked that she expected to hear of Lord Tyrone's death, which she declared had taken place on the previous Tuesday. Her husband laughed, but in the afternoon a letter was brought in stating that ing that Lord Tyrone had died on Tuesday at Dublin.

To the astonishment of Sir Tristram Beresford, his wife, instead of manifesting grief, showed feelings of relief, and exclaimed: "I can now give you a most satisfactory piece of intelligence. I am going to become a mother; it will be a boy and an heir to your estates." A son was born within a year, who, in course of time, inherited the Beresford title and estates, and, marrying Lord Tyrone's only child and heiress of all the Le Poer property, was created Earl of Tyrone himself, his father-in-law's title being revived in his favor.

Many years afterward when on her deathbed Lady Beresford revealed to her eldest son and to Archbishop William King, of Dublin, her spiritual adviser and most intimate friend, the reason of her wearing the black ribbon on her wrist. She declared that on the night preceding the arrival of the announcement of the death of the last of the Le Poer earls of Tyrone he had appeared to her sitting by the side of her bed. On her screaming with fright, he exclaimed: "Have you forgotten our promise to each other? I died on Tuesday morning at 4. I have been permitted thus to appear to assure you that the revealed religion is the true and only one by which you can be saved. I am also suffered to inform you that you will, seven months hence, become the mother of a son, who will marry my infant heiress and that you will die in your sixty-eighth year."

Lady Beresford continued, "I begged him for some convincing sign or proof, so that when the morning came I might be able to rely that his appearance had been real and not merely the phantom of my imagination. He thereupon laid his hand, which was as cold as marble, on my wrist, and where the fingers touched it the sinews shrank up and the nerves withered. 'Now,' said he, 'let no mortal eye while you live ever see that wrist.'

After Lady Beresford's death, which occurred precisely as had been predicted, in her sixty-eighth year, her eldest son and the Archbishop of Dublin untied the black ribbon and found the wrist exactly as she had described it, with the nerves withered and sinews shrunk, the discovery being placed on written record by both men, namely the prelate and the first of the Beresford earls of Tyrone.

Lady Beresford lies buried in the Cathedral of St. Patrick, at Dublin, and appears to the Beresford family whenever a death is about to take place among the members of the house. That is the true story and origin of the famous ghost of the Beresford's, the existence of which is known and believed in from one end of Ireland to the other.

Columns more could be written of equally well authenticated instances of supernatural visitations, of family spooks and of "seeing things," so that it is not altogether astonishing that the story of Sir Gilbert Parker and of one or two of his fellow-members to the effect that they had seen Sir Frederick Rasch seated in the House of Commons at the very moment when he was lying ill in bed at his country place in Danbury, in Essex, should be believed by men who nearly all have family ghosts among their ancestral traditions, which they have been brought up to believe as in the Holy Writ.

MARQUISE DE FONTENOY.

THE HERMIT OF THE STORM.

An Inspirational Parable—Spirit the Beginning and End of All.

The sun had sunk below the horizon, and light struggled but faintly against all-conquering darkness, when in the midst of rugged slopes and almost pathless hills I found myself benighted. My horse, which until now had borne up well in the long and toilsome journey, began to show signs of weariness, and no wonder, for I had been in the saddle from early dawn. I had hoped by hard riding to reach my destination before nightfall. But now the sun went down and the dark mantle of night was being spread.

Threatening thunder-clouds gathered and I looked in vain for shelter from the approaching storm. No habitation of man seemed within reach, and my poor jaded, but faithful steed trembled in every limb, as if in anticipation of some impending evil. Mountainous rocks were piled up on my left, while on the right a deep chasm yawned with but a narrow ledge between, and almost pitchy darkness around me.

Now the storm burst, thunders pealed and the mountains trembled, lightnings flashed around me, one vivid glare played for a moment around my horse's head. I felt the mortal shudder that passed through his frame—one spasmodic thrill, then his limbs straightened out and stiffened beneath him. I knew that he was dead. I sprang to the ground—a moment more and it would have been too late. He leaned over to one side and rolled rigid and helpless into the fathomless abyss.

Now I was indeed alone, what shall I do? Whither shall I go? Would that I had never been born! (A mortal's extremity is a spirit's opportunity. Great need awakens great power to save and the unexpected occurs.)

"Come with me," said a voice in my ear, "Come with me and I will do thee good." I started; revealed by a flash I beheld a venerable personage, his long white hair and beard swaying in the wind. By another flash I saw the sweet expression of a heavenly peace reposing on his features. "Surely," I thought, "an angel has come to rescue me."

He clasped my hand and led me away through the darkness to his home, a cave in the mountain. We sat long in silence before the smouldering fire. At length I found voice to thank my aged preserver and shudderingly referred to the storm. "Oh! Father," I cried, "why is the world afflicted thus?"

"That thunder," said the venerable hermit, "is the voice of nature. When interpreted, it means 'forward.' Through her universally operating laws she gathers certain elements and so mingles and intermingles that at length a ball thousands of miles in diameter rolls along the highways of immensity. Action and reaction proceeds—the rocks are shattered—a soil is formed, then come life, vegetable and animal, man and mind, contention and growth, joy and sorrow."

"A wonderful creation, father," I remarked.

"Nature," continued the hermit, "makes her own tools and uses them to accomplish her purposes. Man is her tool in the hand of necessity, and all things are material. 'Behold,' she says, 'I have furnished the raw matter to your hand, go, complete the work.' She takes him forth from the city—from old associations—from all that he so dearly prized! Necessity uses her implement and he tears himself away, he dashes the tear of affection or effeminacy from his eye—he penetrates the primeval forest—an interminable wilderness is before him—the forest trees shut out the sunlight even as the light of hope is often shut out from his heart, but the word is 'Excelsior.' He throws down his bundle—he is resolved. 'Here I will fight my final battle for a home.' Home! home, what sweet anticipations cluster around the word and weave themselves in with the heart-strings of the man. Home! the little white cottage, the peaceful flocks, the lowing cattle, the green fields, but sweetest of all the little cottage with baby faces against the window pane to get the first glimpse of a returning father.

"Sweet spirit of hope," said the hermit, "but, ah! those forest trees, how they bar his progress. What is that which, like an electric shock flashes on the air? The bright axe of the woodman has descended and the giant of the forest has fallen.

"Let us approach and speak to this man.

"'Ho! what art thou doing here, good man?' He wipes the moisture from his brow—his bosom swells with honest pride in his glorious calling, as he answers, 'Brother, I am making a world!'

"Now turn over a leaf in Time's old book," continued the hermit. "The man has accomplished his purpose. Here indeed are the fertile fields, the peaceful flocks, the cottage home. Here is the reality which, in years gone by cast its premonition on the soul of the woodman. But alas! his faculties have grown dim since then—his form is bent—his eyes are looking down into the bosom of his old mother earth—soon he will possess new light in a new home and look down from a lofty eminence upon the world he had helped to make. Nature's command is 'Forward' ever."

The venerable hermit relapsed into silence. "Surely," thought I, "Necessity is an employe of Nature, and man is a tool in her hand."

"But what is civilization, father?" I at length ventured to inquire. "Harmony, peace, concord, is civilization. Standing armies are the triumph of barbarism. A savage heart loves savage deeds."

"Law," he replied, "is universal and unbroken, it is an endless chain binding each to all and all to each. Each link is a perfect circle and each coil an unbroken round. As perfection in any department is approached by man he deviates less from the perfect circle. He takes his external character from the world he belongs to and of which he forms a part. He first dwells in storms, earthquakes, floods, and his character is correspondingly violent and morally lawless. Lastly, he rests in a world of thought—a sphere of peace and true science and his character is correspondingly gentle. There is a correspondence between moral and physical law. When wild beasts and selfish men have ceased to exist the era of civilization will have come. Disorder and self-love and the disregard of life mark the savage, order, suavity and self-control are the marks of gentle society. A civilized individual may exist in a barbarous community, but he is governed from within. General civilization is a long way off. Particular civilization may be here already. Such an one lives the life of the spirit universal, here and now."

A strange light kindled the old man's eyes; he seemed in an ecstasy as he exclaimed, "Storms will cease! Volcanoes will cool. Oceans will be calm. Enthusiasm will give place to thought. Then selfishness will die, brute passion will be subdued, harmony will take the place of war. Harmony is civilization! It exists only when man is a law unto himself. The moral man rules in peace over his subjects of the flesh. Appetite is buried under a dignified self-consciousness. A true man or woman is immortal now!"

The old man bowed his head in thought. The storm still unabated, roared above us, one thunder-clap louder than the rest aroused me to consciousness, for it was all but an evening presentation. The partial triumph of spirit over matter—the soul struggling, upward, against impediments, light contending with darkness.

When we are inquiring for the path of duty and true life enjoyments, let us remember one line from a poet of a hundred years ago, and ever be "Content and—not for praise but virtue—kind."

THOS. HARDING.

Sturgis, Mich.

OPTIMISTIC.

Oh, weary, tired heart, trust on;
The nameless pain must cease
Within thy breast;
Time must bring for thee a day
Of happy rest.
Oh, weary, tired heart, trust on.

Oh, gentle, loving heart, love on;
From out the ambient east
A hand appears,
To guide thy faltering step.
Dry thy tears.
Oh, gentle, loving heart, love on.

Oh, faithful, hopeful heart, hope on;
God sees thy great desire;
He knows all,
Weaves wreaths of joy from chains
That bind and gall.
Oh, faithful, hopeful heart, hope on.

MARGUERITE MILLER.

Rochester, Ind.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth, $1.50.

HUMAN CHARACTER.

On Both Sides of the Death Line It Is the Same.

To the Editor:—The signs are many that a bright, auspicious day is dawning for the lifting of the veil and casting off of the nightmare of ignorance and knavery that have long made difficult and fitful the progress of truth and righteousness on the earth.

Happily the lines are being so clearly drawn that the wayfarer, though not a Solomon, need not mistake the way.

The fact is clear to earnest investigators that he or she who would stand on the walls of our spiritual Zion as watchmen or heralds must attain to a deeper, wider knowledge of spiritual things than merely that death does not end all, and that our departed loved ones can communicate with us. While the value of the knowledge just named is beyond the price of rubies, it is but the a b c of the education urged by the dwellers in upper spheres upon their friends and kindred on the earth plane.

We are autocratically assured by self-appointed wise ones that no system of facts has ever been given by spirits to mortal upon which a theory of life and work in spirit realms could be based that would bear scientific scrutiny.

Ten thousand mediums who have been touched by the divine afflatus know the oracular assurances referred to are untrue. If our minds are in harmony with the sordid, base and groveling elements surrounding us, we cannot at the same time be the recipients of the gentle ministries, illuminations and spirit upliftings from the higher walks and councils of mortal or spirit life.

Think not for a moment, benighted brother, that because the messages that come to you are frivolous and contradictory, all other spirit talk is of the same order.

As well say the gabble of a mixed multitude, or the incoherent wrangle of a saloon gang represents the highest type of the world's morals and wisdom.

There is a loud and pretentious demand that Spiritualism be kept on a "scientific" basis. Science and scientific are sounding terms, often about as clear to the minds of those using them, as was the colored preacher's exposition of the text, "Beware of evil doers." If anything can be settled by evidence, the Open Court has settled for all time that human character on both sides of the veil—the death line—is the same.

This point settled—and it is a settled point with a great multitude of earnest, careful thinkers—fixes a scientific basis for work on the mortal side, the urgent need of which is apparent to all who care for human weal. The work is here and now, how shall we go about its doing? Can it be made productive of good results by telling the oppressor of men—his brothers—to eat, drink and be merry—death for him is certainly an upward step? And to all the unwashed crowd below him in the social scale sing the same mellifluous strain. Character in this life may not count for much on the social stairway, but just beyond the line nothing else will weigh an elder-down.

Let us not forget the gauziness of the veil separating the two forms of the same life. Human spirits, just the same on both sides, amenable to the same laws.

Multitudes on the earthside dress daily in purple and fine linen, who, if justice did not halt, would be behind prison bars. Don't think for a moment that they can escape; gold and bonds may screen them here, but just across the line—and the line is no broader than a state line—cash and bonds are not legal tender. Can we doubt the mission intrusted to us, and the necessary qualifications of real teachers? Great is our hope; the moral wave is surely advancing. But work, faithful work by clean and faithful workers only will bring the longed-for position.

The old conception of future disaster to the extortioner, the vile and the unclean, is not without a basis of solid reality. A great crowd of returning witnesses testify to the truth of this statement, as well as a cloud of mortal testators who have been in painful touch with those awful realities so flippantly scouted by a small army of surface investigators.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter as to the responsibility of those who would stand as teachers of the exalted truths of life in the spirit spheres. Humanity as we know it is to be turned from its evil ways, if not in this life then in the next under great stress of humiliation, pain and sorrow. The warning to the evil man to forsake his way or pay the penalty is no false note. Bonds and imprisonment await the evil doer in spirit life a thousand fold more certainly than in the mortal realm. In that land all thoughts as well as acts are known and read of all the people. The last farthing of evil indebtedness is exacted by the unerring law of compensation. Limited time here, endless duration over there, and there is no escape. These are a few unfashionable, oldtime truths we are to face in the not distant future, unpalatable though they may be to our fleshly minds.

The spirit "guide" either in or out of the mortal form who does not know these things is either ignorantly or wilfully blind, and in either case amenable to enduring law.

Salem, Ore. J. RIGDON.

IMPORTANT QUESTION.

How Shall We Deal With Wrong Doing.

To the Editor:—During the sessions of the Open Court I was a silent though an interested spectator; and now since the Court of Inquiry has begun its sessions, I am impressed to offer some suggestions, as I have had much experience in that phase of mediumship known as materialization, the most interesting and because in a dim light, fraud is the most easily practiced.

One of the most important things in relation to this subject is a calm, cool, serene state of mind. Our views on any subject are more or less colored by our feelings. What we want to be so, we try to make it so; but our wanting it to be so, doesn't make it so.

In regard to this subject, there are many things to be considered; and it is essential that they be well understood; but sometimes what we think we understand, we don't quite understand; and in this case, as old Solomon has it: "And I gave my heart unto wisdom, and to know madness and folly, I perceived that this also is vexation of spirit; for in much wisdom is much grief; and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow."—(Eccl. 1:17-18). So it is wise to go slow, and not be too certain in what we think.

The competent judge on any subject must be one who has traversed the whole matter, and critically examined every point with a tentative eye. From the fact that final conclusions on the same subject, of an opposite character, have been reached, by persons of equal ability, having equal opportunities to investigate, and being equally honest and sincere, warrant the statement that feeling has more or less biased their judgment. We must enter this discussion in that state of mind in which the earnest student is while solving a mathematical problem.

In the case of so-called materialization of spirits—I say so-called—because the word "materialization," in the meaning that we use it is a misnomer, and leads to absurd conclusions. It is simply this, as well as I can express it: Magnetic emanations from the persons in the circle contain elements in the atmosphere, and that peculiar something in the medium that the spirit chemist takes, and by a process of chemical manipulation he renders visible to mortals which the spirit so manifesting puts on; presenting its form more or less resembling the spirit, generally, so near as to be recognized by the visiter to whom it appears. This is all we know, or can know in mortal life.

In this there is no toggery or any kind of paraphernalia. In my own experience, and witnessing that of many visitors, I have seen a little child, my niece, whom I recognized who was drowned when two years old, rise up to her full mature stature at my request, more rapidly than I am in the time of writing this statement. I have repeatedly seen and heard things like this when a spirit appears to a visitor who would say, "Yes, the name is correct, and things you state are true; but you do not look quite natural. You are not so tall, and your whiskers are not so long;" and the spirit would instantly grow taller and lengthen out his whiskers. "Ah! that is more like you."

This illustration simply shows in many forms, the fact of the absence of any appliances of a material character. Repeatedly these spirit forms sink apparently instantly through the floor, without leaving the least trace, and rise again in another place. This has been my experience many times, and that of many others in my presence, and witnessed alike by all present. I mention this to show that no material appliances are employed in these phenomena.

Now, let me ask what mortal understands the modus operandi of these phenomena? And who are qualified to pronounce final judgment as to the cause of them? We live in the material world, all our experience is founded on its phenomena, and these manifestations have their rise in the spiritual world where no mortal has ever been. Does it not seem a little strange that some claim the ability to grasp the entire subject, and insist that all so-called materializations are produced by means of toggery, wigs, false whiskers, masks and other paraphernalia, when in fact, the medium is in a deep trance, and so confined in the cabinet that he or she cannot get out?

Fraud? Of course there is fraud. But why be alarmed about fraud? When there is so much interest felt in this subject, so little understood about it, so much credulity and eager curiosity manifested on the one hand, and so many facilities for deception in a dim light, so much inventive genius in contriving false appearances, and withal, the eager pursuit of the "almighty dollar" when it is so plainly in sight of these tricksters, how could it be otherwise?

Let me ask, in what kind of business is fraud not practiced? And what wonderful ingenuity and persistence are manifest in them all! There are thousands of counterfeit money in circulation, and everyone knows it, and scarcely an article of food that is not adulterated. We do not cry out in alarm.

There are many frauds—wolves in sheep's clothing, livery stolen from heaven in which to serve the devil, and no great outcry is made. Then why so much alarm manifested when fraud is practiced in Spiritualism, or rather its phenomena simulated? If its grand philosophy in advancement is dependent on protection against fraud, it is in danger; in that case fraud is more powerful than truth, for no one can prevent fraud. The right thing, it seems to me, is to show the difference between fraud and the genuine manifestations, and when that is shown fraud will lose its influence.

Let those who disclaim so loudly against fraud, explain the phenomena of materialization, in order that it may be better understood; then the frauds pertaining to it will be better understood. A regretful feature in some who demand expurgation of fraud (and who does not?) is seen in a spirit more or less bitter after the manner of a prosecuting attorney in his eager desire to convict his victim. It is the fraud with which we should deal; this is the ground of protection against it.

There is another thing in connection with this subject that needs consideration; that is, the part which spirits themselves take in producing the manifestations that seem fraudulent. I have seen the materialization of substances in full view by spirit agency, the weaving of fabrics like beautiful lace from invisible substance. To illustrate: On one occasion I was called to the cabinet and my daughter appeared and said, "What have you in your pocket?" I said, "Nothing." She then thrust her empty hand into the left hand side pocket of my coat, and began pulling out lace. She then gathered it up and pressed it against my face. It felt like cobweb more than anything else I can think of. A sleight-of-hand trick? The medium in a profound trance, was sewed in such a manner that he could not get out of the cabinet without dragging the rug to which he was sewed, and chair on which he sat, with his hands full of oatmeal, all of which were found intact at the close of the seance; besides, the form was the exact likeness of my daughter. I say this to show the fact that visible material can be produced by spirits.

It is only necessary to say that spirits retain their earthly characteristics; and as many persons delight in practicing fraud and deception; and moreover, there are spirits who antagonize all efforts to enlighten the world on this subject, it is reasonable to infer that such spirits would take part in supporting the idea that materialization is a fraud; and this not being taken into consideration helps to perpetrate the idea that this phase is all a fraud.

And now I would ask all who take part in this Court of Inquiry (and I hope it will prove a drag-net, and bring out all the fraud operators) to be sure they have traversed the entire domain of this subject with the sole view of eliciting the truth, and without bias or prejudice—a thing very necessary, and yet very difficult to do.

Another point. Very few realize the force and persistence of early teaching. The common sentiment is averse to the existence of ghosts, witches, spooks, hobgoblins, and the like; and we are unconsciously influenced by our feelings on this subject, and inclined to doubt the verity of any manifestation claimed to have been produced by the spirits. Such feelings are so deeply rooted and interwoven into the mind as to give rise to the sense of reality in what is felt.

I have heard many long-time Spiritualists complain of lingering and tormenting doubts that they could not prevent; and yet did not know the cause of them. This gives rise to suspicion in spite of reason and the tendency is to suspect, or at least, to fear fraud where fraud does not exist. It is quite a common characteristic of Spiritualists to seek tests when they have had tests beyond all possibility of fraud; but their early teachings persist; and they do not know what is the matter. The thing is too good to lose; and yet they do not know just how to hang on to it; hence their fear; and simulation alarms them, and they get uneasy.

When we understand, all fear will vanish; and we can rest in full assurance of the verity of this highest and most valuable, yet the most easily simulated phase of mediumship, inviting fraud because it brings in sight coveted prize-money—and there is no lack of those who eagerly seek this method of gaining it—fakers who have no interest in it but that of profit. We all alike experiences the ruthless sacrilege and heartless cruelty of violating the most sacred feelings of our nature, and justly and promptly resist it; and this is a question of policy; for no sensible person can tolerate fraud. All feel the necessity of driving away this lowering cloud that so seriously impedes the advancement of the noblest cause of humanity.

E. J. SCHELLHOUS.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism, A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood, lecturer upon physical, physiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the molecular or spiritual hypothesis of nature. Scholarly, masterly, trenchant. Price 25 cents.

PROGRESSIVE SPIRITUALISM.

From the Standpoint of a Christian Spiritualist.

To the Editor:—Having been an occasional reader of your valuable paper, and being deeply interested in the noble cause of Spiritualism, I thought to drop you a few lines which you can give to the public if you see fit.

Spirit return has been to me a fact since my rearly youth. Receiving no encouragement from my parents or any friends, born and raised in the Empire State, and my parents being strict orthodox people, my natural gift of mediumship was never cultivated, but was smothered as much as possible in my early life.

Little was said about spirit return in those days, and one who did espouse the cause was looked upon as being unreliable or a fit subject for the asylum. However, as time passed on and my lot in life directed my footsteps toward the setting sun, and trouble and difficulties arose, no one on earth can tell the comfort and consolation it has been to me. In fact, true Spiritualism and true mediumship never die, and another great satisfaction is that the progression made by Spiritualists in the last quarter of a century has placed their doctrine on an equal footing with other churches of more ancient origin. Christian Spiritualism when rightly understood I believe to be the best light that was ever lit to guide our footsteps in the paths of life and secure to us a happy home in the spirit land; for our life is one of progression from our birth until we pass out from this body into the spiritual plane of existence, and the greater amount of light we can acquire during that progression, from the spirit side of life, the better will be our enjoyment and the greater our happiness when the change comes and we are permitted to see our eternal home.

The general belief that our friends do return under certain conditions and through certain persons is scarcely doubted. In fact the growing impression is becoming well settled in the minds of the public that such is the fact, and Spiritualism is fast crystallizing itself into a religion of the purest character. We do not discard the Bible, but revere that Golden thread of divine light and truth that extends from the beginning to the end of that inspired book.

My experience has been from my infancy to the present time, and that experience has brought to me conclusive evidence of the continuity of life. The conclusion has been made apparent by the manifestation of our departed friends to me in person. While this may seem visionary to the skeptic, to me it's as plain as the noonday sun.

And now as the time has come that the divine revelation is being understood, and the public is beginning to recognize a reasonable and spiritual interpretation theory, let us who have been convinced all our life not fail to aid in the great reformatory work of elminating from the mind of general readers the superstition of the orthodox faith. I am now doing all I can for true Spiritualism, and my earnest desire is for the advancement of the good work you so nobly advocate through the columns of your valuable paper.

MRS. S. W. MARKS.

Portland, Oregon.

An Asthma Cure at Last.

It gives us great pleasure to announce the discovery of a positive cure for Asthma, in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanic product found on the Congo River, West Africa. The cures wrought by it in the worst cases, are really marvelous. Sufferers of twenty to fifty years' standing have been at once restored to health by the Kola Plant Compound. Among others, many ministers of the gospel testify to its wonderful powers.

Rev. S. H. Elsenberg, Ph. D., Centre Hall, Pa., perhaps one of the worst cases, was permanently cured after many years suffering. Rev. D. S. Hopkins, Wilson, Ind. Ter. writes May 25th, his wife was cured two years ago after eight years suffering. Rev. F. F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, Abilene, Texas, writes was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after eight years suffering and had no return of the disease. Mr. L. H. Johnson, of Gainesville, Ga., Manager of the Gainesville Shoe Co., writes, the Kola Compound is a death blow to Asthma. It cured my daughter after all hope had gone and words are inadequate to express our gratitude to the Importers.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1166 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

The Arcana of Spiritualism.

A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker are already acquainted with character of this book. It is intended by its assisting, inspiring spirit-authors to furnish a compendium to the student of psychic laws and manifestations. It has been more than thirty years in preparing and contains all that has been received by me through inspiration and research during that time on the subjects it treats. Few questions will arise in the minds of investigators that are not answered in its pages. Price, $1.25 postpaid.

Address all orders to

HUDSON TUTTLE,
Berlin Heights, Ohio.

FREETHOUGHT AND LIBERAL PAMPHLETS

These pamphlets were published by Mr. Green in the Freethought Magazine and are all by eminent and able writers. The price on most of them has been reduced.

Roscoe Conkling. Memorial Oration. by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price 3 cents.

Thomas Paine. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price 3 cents.

Voltaire. An address by Prof. Emile Pingault. Price 3 cents.

Abraham Lincoln. His Religion. By Robert N. Reeves. Price 3 cents.

Burns and Whittier. Some of Their Likenesses and Differences. By Prof. Charles G. Brown. Price 5 cents.

Religion in the Republic. By Mrs. M. A. Freeman. Price 5 cents.

Rational Worship. A lecture delivered before the Chicago Liberal Society by Dr. T. B. Gregory of Chicago. Price 8 cents.

Why I Am Not a Christian. By D. D. Stedman. Price 8 cents.

Genesis to Revelation. Free Thought Commentary on the Whole Bible. By Judge Parish B. Ladd. Price 10 cents.

Revelation Under the Microscope of Evolution. By Prof. Daniel T. Amo. Price 10 cents.

Life and Career of Charles Bradlaugh. By George Jacob Holyoake. Price 10 cents.

Religion and Science. The "Reconciliation Mania" of Dr. Paul Carus of The Open Court. Analyzed and Refuted by "Corvinus." Price 10 cents.

Free Thought Past, Present and Future. By Prof. Thaddeus B. Wakeman. With his portrait and life sketch. Price 10 cents.

The Priest and the Church—What Have They Done for the World? By Judge Parish B. Ladd. Price 15 cents.

John Tyndall Memorial. Ten short sketches of the life of this great man. Price 10 cents

Cosmology Against Theology. By Vindex. Price 10 cents.

Church and State. The Bible in the Public Schools. The New American Party. A Criticism by "Jefferson." Price 10 cents.

Standing Up for Jesus; or What the Editor of the Freethinkers' Magazine Thinks of Jesus. Price 3 cents.

"Why An Expurgated Bible?" By Rev. E. H. Keeas. Price 3 cents.

Progress of Evolutionary Thought. The opening address before the Congress of Evolutionists, held in Chicago, Sept. 28, 29 and 30, 1893. By B. F. Underwood, the chairman. Price 3 cents.

Christianity; its Impeachment and Decadence, Also Demands of Liberalism. By Dr. F. E. Abbot and Prof. T. B. Wakeman. Price 3 cents.

Myth of the Great Deluge. By James M. McCann. Price 15 cents.

The Evolution of the Devil. By Henry Frank. Price 20 cents.

Prayer; Its Uselessness and Unscientific Assumption. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

Liberalized Christianity. By Henry M. Taber. Price 5 cents.

The Republic in Danger. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

In Place of Christianity. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

"Right Generation the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth." By Dr. M. E. Conger. An appeal to reason and man's highest aspirations. A plea for justice and equality in all the relations of life between men and women. Cloth, 75 cents; leatherette, 50 cents.

"Social Upbuilding, including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennoblement of Humanity." By E. D. Babbitt, LL. D., M. D. This comprises the last part of Human Culture and Cure. Paper cover, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations, of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. A very remarkable book. Large, octavo, 500 pages. Price, $1.75.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Paper, cloth, $1.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street,

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year..... $1 00
Six Months..... 50cts
Thirteen Weeks..... 25cts
Single Copy..... 5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE:

☞ At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10,1905.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Any person donating one dollar to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., will, if desired, receive one set of spiritual tracts and one copy of "Violets," a booklet of choice spiritual poems. One contributing two dollars to the fund will also receive a copy of "Leaves of Truth," a cloth-bound book of instructive spiritual matter.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.
500 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

A Word of Warning From the National Spiritualists Association.

All Spiritualists are respectfully requested to take notice that the MARTIN BAILEY, who real name is BAKER, recently exposed in Los Angeles, California, is NOT ENDORSED by the N. S. A., and holds no papers of whatever character from said organization.

Per order Trustees National Spiritualists Association.

HARRISON D. BARRETT,
President.

Mary T. Longley, Secretary.

Planning for a Book of Prayers.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church was late in session at Winona Lake, Ind., in which body many matters in the interest of that church were considered. That which most attracted the attention of The Progressive Thinker was the one pertaining to a "Book of Prayers," which it is proposed to adopt as a fixed form of religious service, for that church after the manner of Catholicism, save the latter is in Latin.

That act to us, seems eminently proper for Presbyterians, when we consider the rise and progress of lip-service, as distinguished from machine praying.

Under the ancient order of sublunary affairs the menial approached his master on bended knees, assuming this attitude before imploring a favor. Without such humiliation and proof of servitude no clemency or indulgence of any sort could be expected.

The king required from his vassal or dependent similar service. The subject approaching him must kneel, ungirt himself, and uncovered, hold up both empty hands, promising fealty with "lige and limb and earthly honor." This humiliating procedure, coeval with history, is extended to the Pope at Rome, he extending his uncovered great toe to his courtiers to be kissed. The late Queen of England extended her hand to her favorites to be kissed. No one had a right to expect a kindness from royalty without first giving evidence of servility.

When a God was enthroned to secure his attention still greater humiliation was expected. No act of debasement was too degrading for divine worshipers. They often clothed themselves in sackcloth and ashes, then, to gratify his spiritual appetite, they fed him on the aroma of sacrificed doves, lambs, fat bullocks, and even tender babies, which were placed on the burning altar.

Forms of prayer used from five thousand to seven thousand years ago, inscribed on earthen tablets are found in ancient ruins by late explorers.

Scholars find the Lord's prayer, as used by Christians, was a Jewish production many centuries before our era, according to popular chronology; and, stranger still, it is proved to have been in use in Babylon before the alleged Jews were slaves in that country.

Saying nothing of the antiquity of the praying custom, will the good reader kindly tell wherein the advantage of mumbling prayers by human lips, over machine prayers, as practiced in Tonquin, Burmah, Tartary, anywhere the Buddhistic faith prevails? Prayers are written, attached to wheels, and are made to revolve by water, wind or wave. Each revolution a prayer has been addressed to the Universal Good. Sleeping or waking, toiling or resting, walking, running or leaping, the praying goes continually on, and the owner of the wheel gains the credit. We like the idea. What a magnificent power still remains at Niagara for propelling praying machines! It should be utilized, providing machine praying will gain as many favors as do the other kind.

"Death Defeated; or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young." By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D. Price $1. 10 cents.

Wonders of the Past—Hope for the Future.

Captain Cook, the distinguished navigator and explorer, during his voyages in the Pacific, in 1774, discovered upwards of 2,000 miles off the western coast of South America, what is now known as Easter Island. It is about eleven miles long, and six miles broad, rising 1,200 feet above the sea. It is of volcanic origin, with fertile valleys, but very deficient in water. A Dutch navigator first met with the island in 1722, but it remained for Cook to describe it. There is no other land within 2,000 miles, yet it has a population variously estimated from 400 to 1,000. They are tall and robust, with regular features, but seemingly of the Polynesian race and dark complexion. It is believed by many scientists to be all that remains of a submerged continent, itself a mountain peak that rose high above the plain in some far off age.

Quoting from the Encyclopedia Britannica, Vol. xix, p. 428:

"Here are formed immense platforms built of large cut stones fitted together without cement. They are generally built on headlands, and on the slope toward the sea. The walls on the sea-side are, in some of the platforms nearly 30 feet high and from 200 to 300 feet long and about 30 feet wide. Some of the squared stone are 6 feet long. On the land side there is a broad terrace with large stone pedestals on which once stood colossal stone images carved in the shape of the human trunk. On one of the platforms there are upwards of a dozen images now thrown from their pedestals, and scattered in all directions. Their usual height is from 14 to 16 feet, but the largest are 37 feet, while some are no more than 4 feet. The top of the heads are flat, as if to receive crowns. A number of these crowns still lie at the crater about 8 miles distant where the images were cut."

One of these statues has a place in the British Museum, weighing four tons, and one adorns the National Museum at Washington. The latter was acquired by the U. S. ship Mohican in the year 1886. Residents of the island have no traditions relating to these images, or of the people who made them.

Knowing somewhat of the mighty convulsions which have marked the history of this old earth, there cannot be a doubt a vast continent was engulfed in some distant age, carrying down a dense population, and these images were probably the gods they worshiped. All the early races of which we have any account, went upon the mountain tops to worship, their ambition to get as near heaven as possible so their priests could hold converse with their gods. Moses is represented to have received the law from the hand of God, through a cloud while on Mount Sinai. It is believed the pyramids of Egypt and those of Babylonia had altars on their summits, where sacrifices were made.

If old Time would give up her ancient records, what a wonderful history would be given to humanity! We are hopeful the secrets of all the past will be unfolded to the denizens of the new world awaiting us on the other side of life, and that the employment of scholars there will consist in researches in those majestic realms of Nature concealed from mortal vision. Such a heaven would be infinitely superior to "loafing 'round the throne" and singing "Glory, glory, to God and the lamb forever," such as our orthodox brotherhood promise us.

An Interesting Citation of History.

George Rawlinson, a clergyman of the Church of England, late Professor of Ancient History in the University of Oxford, and author of "The Seven Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World," in his "History of the Fourth Monarchy," closing Chapter 8, on the Babylonian Civilization, concludes as follows:

"To Babylonia, far more than to Egypt, we owe the art and learning of the Greeks. It was from the East, not from Egypt, Greece derived her architecture, her sculpture, her science, her philosophy, her mathematical knowledge—in a word, her intellectual life. And Babylon was the source to which the entire stream of Eastern civilization may be turned. It is scarcely too much to say, but for Babylon, real civilization might not even yet have dawned on the earth. Mankind might never have advanced beyond that spurious and false form of it which in Egypt, India, China, Japan, Mexico, and Peru, contented the aspirations of the species."

This is a frank and truthful admission from one of the most learned of English scholars. Instead of giving credit to a Semitic tribe, with an almost inaccessible city in the Lebanon mountains of Palestine, as is the habit of churchmen, he relates a truth which the world should know.

If we can trust Bible history, it was during the seventy years the Jews were slaves in Babylon they acquired the religious ideas, and most of the history which now passes for "divine revelation." This is proved by the fact that much of what is called Jewish history is found on the lettered slabs which formed Assurbanipal's Library, from which it is evident the Jewish account was transcribed.

It is from Babylon we derive the idea of winged angels.

They who seem to suppose the Jews were the inventors of a theocratic government will be surprised should they read Rawlinson to find this feature was borrowed from Babylonia. Quoting the author again:

"The architecture of the Babylonians seems to have culminated in the Temple. While their palaces, their bridges, their walls, even their private houses were remarkable, their grandest works, their most elaborate efforts, were dedicated to the honor and service, not of man, but of God."

But to the religionist the most remarkable feature found in the ruins of Babylon, buried full 2,500 years beneath the sands of the desert, beyond the reach of the spoiler or the forger, was a madonna with a child in her arms. We regret our lack of ability to copy an illustration as given by Rawlinson in his "Fourth Monarchy." His letter-press description must supply the want:

"The mother is seated in a natural and not ungraceful attitude on a rough square pedestal. She is naked except for a hood, or mantilla, which covers the head, shoulders, and back, and a narrow apron which hangs down in front. She wears earrings and a bracelet. The child which sleeps on her left shoulder, wears a shirt open in front, and a short but full tunic, which is gathered into plaits. Both figures are in simple and natural taste, but the limbs of the infant are somewhat too thin and delicate."

Will some person be so kind as to show the relation, if any, between this Babylonian madonna and child; those found in India, representing the infant Buddha and mother; that of Isis and child Horus in Egypt, to whom temples were built in Rome; and that of Mary and Jesus, which Roman Catholics delight to worship with the title of Queen of Heaven and Child? There seems some mystic relationship between all these characters, as also with Jes Crishna and his mother, the eighth Indian avatar.

A Happy Simile.

A correspondent of the Truth Seeker has happily illustrated in the following paragraph, which we quote with pleasure, just what is going on quietly, almost noiselessly, in the churches. He says:

"There is a railroad near the Hudson which has for some years been rebuilding the bridges over the many deep gorges on its line. Without the least cessation of traffic these skeleton-like structures have been replaced beam by beam, a marvel of modern engineering skill. Will not some such change take place in the churches, or it is not now taking place?"

Most certainly the removal of rotten dogmas on which the churches were founded are being removed as fast as perhaps it is desirable. Those of us if the sere and yellow leaf have noticed these changes, little dreamed of by the younger generation. Churches widely separated fifty years ago are now uniting, and are working harmoniously together. Demagogues have always been laboring to tie themselves back to the past, but they are defeated by members of their own churches, who wish to get away from the teachings of the babyhood of the race.

Let the joyous work go on. In the good time nearing all the rotten timbers and planks will give place to new ones, rendered indestructible by scientific methods, then the ages can advance to higher planes of thought.

Not Original With Jesus.

"Jesus' golden rule," said a clergyman in his discourse the other day relating to the Chicago strike, "is that one shall place himself in the place of another." The "rule" is a noble one and should be observed by all, whether Christian or heathen. Practiced by all we should have a most excellent world to live in. There would be no crime and but little wrong.

But why give Jesus, God, man or myth, credit for this rule of conduct which every scholar and every preacher should know, was in existence ages before the period credited to Jesus. Of course we can't know who was its inventor, for it is a self-evident proposition, and was probably coeval with civilization. So soon as the race began to cultivate the virtues, so soon it must have been in being. It was proclaimed by Confucius, the Chinese philosopher, who died 479 years before our era. It was reiterated by Grecian sages only a little later, and must have been generally current with all cultivated nations at the period it is ascribed to Jesus.

Is it just to truth, and does it add additional luster to the name of Jesus, to heap upon him all the virtues and the good teachings in existence ages before his time, and give him credit with originating them; at the same time falsifying and ignoring the culture of the long centuries which preceded him? Inscriptions in cuneiform characters on earthen plates buried more than 2,500 years under the sands of the desert at Babylon, which neither friends nor enemies could alter, ultimately resurrected, contain as good morals as Jesus taught. And the Egyptian Book of the Dead found wrapped around the mummified dead, lose nothing in moral force when compared with the best thought of even present day divines.

Let us be just to antiquity, and not attempt to rob them of the glory their due.

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

"The Majesty of Calmness, or Individual Problems and Possibilities." By Wm. George Jordan. Another valuable little work. Price 30 cents.

Light Breaking In the Methodist Church

WHITTIER'S VIEWS OF GOD AND THE FUTURE LIFE.

A Most Remarkable Article Taken From the Northwestern Christian Advocate, a Staunch Methodist Paper, the Leading Organ of the Church.

John Greenleaf Whittier is the best loved of the American poets. Bryant, Emerson, Longfellow, Lowell, and Holmes are great poets; but not one of them comes so near the American heart as does the magnificent Quaker poet. Through his poetry he has become a member of countless households. Through his poetry he has entered into the most sacred experiences of countless human souls. He plays upon the heart-strings of humanity. He sings of great faith in God, in mankind, in the future.

Whittier is a seer. He catches the finer voice with which God's spirit whispers to the dull ear of the world. He puts that voice into words, interpreting it to the people. As a man standing upon a lofty mountain summit sees what those on the plain cannot see, even so it is with Whittier. He has brain and heart and soul to see great visions. He tells the visions and inspires faith in others. As a seer, he is worthy to stand with the glorious Hebrew bards.

Whittier believes in God as the inspiration and source of all love, as the love given to all humanity. No poet has ever sung of God's love with sweeter, stronger voice than John Greenleaf Whittier. This is his message:

"Immortal love! forever full,
Forever flowing free,
Forever shared, forever whole,
A never-ebbing sea."

He says: "Surely God would not permit his children to suffer if it were not to work out for them the highest good; for God never does suffer to be done anything but that which we would do if we could see the end of all events as well as he. God's love is so infinitely greater than mine that I cannot fear for his children. And when I long to help some poor, suffering, erring fellow-creature, I am consoled with the thought that his great heart of love is more than mine can be, and so I rest in peace." Whittier believes that God sees all, that God knows all, that all things are in God's hands; and therefore they must work for the good of all.

"I wait in His good time to see
That as my mother dealt with me,
So with His children dealeth He."

Out of chaos will come order, out of discords will come music, out of the darkness of night will come the splendors of morning; such is Whittier's faith.

Whittier cannot bear the injustice and the heavy cruelties of the old Calvinistic ideas about God and man. He rejects the crude and immoral ideas of Calvin's theology. It is too heavy a weight for his brain and heart. Sir Edwin Arnold at one time remarks to him: "You, sir, born in the purple of the muses, never were and never could be a Calvinistic Puritan." Whittier answers: "Nay, thee is right. The world is much too beautiful and God far too good." As Burns kindles the souls of Scotchmen, palsied by the teachings of John Calvin, even so does Whittier kindle the souls of New Englanders, palsied by the teachings of Jonathan Edwards.

Whittier's personal friends, the members of the society to which he belongs, remonstrate with him for his poem on "The Two Angels." The ideas of tenderness and love and compassion set forth in this poem seem to his orthodox friends inconsistent with the creed which he is supposed to hold. His Quaker friends make a most acrimonious attack upon him on the ground that he is losing faith, that he is teaching dangerous doctrine. The poet replies to this attack by writing his poem entitled "The Eternal Goodness." In this poem he rebels against the Calvinistic conception of God and God's dealings with men as held by the Quakers. To them he says in substance: "God cannot be such a being as you think he is. God cannot so treat his children. I care not what your proofs may be, it cannot be so."

"O friends, with whom my feet have trod
The quiet aisles of prayer,
Glad witness to your zeal for God
And love to man I bear.

"I trace your lines of argument,
Your logic linked and strong.
I weigh as one who dreads dissent
And fears a doubt as wrong

"But still my human hands are weak
To hold your iron creeds.
Against the words you bid me speak
My heart within me bleeds."

A song of sweeter trust than Whittier's "Eternal Goodness" has never been sung. It is a magnificent, cathedral-like poem. In it the poet puts his higher moral ideas of the love and tenderness of the All-Father. The poet teaches that though God be hidden in dark clouds, yet we can put our hand into his hand and walk by his side like a little child beside his father in the dark. The thoughts of this poem have wrought mightily in shaping man's conception's of God's nature. They reveal the doctrine of the Fatherhood of God so divine, so sweet that, like a sun shining above the chaos of earth and time, it sends down rebuking rays upon all who turn away from God. No confession of faith ever composed has been so widely read and has had so great an influence as this poem. It has reached a larger audience than the best ten thousand of modern sermons. Not in all the literature of the world is there a grander creed than what we have in "The Eternal Goodness." It is the most remarkable religious poem of the world, the sweetest religious lyric that has been written since time began. It is immortal. It will live so long as human life needs inspiration, so long as human hope needs cheer.

Whittier's faith in God is tranquil; it is assured; it is unshakable. As a child rests in its mother's arms, so he rests in the goodness of God.

"I see the wrong that round me lies,
I feel the guilt within,
I hear, with groans and travail-cries,
The world confess its sin.

"Yet, in the maddening maze of things,
And tossed by storm and flood,
To one fixed stake my spirit clings;
I know that God is good."

What is Whittier's belief as he looks out towards the future? To him this life is only the porch of the entrance-way of the real life. He looks upon death as only the shadow of life. He says: "The circumstance of death will make no difference with me." In conversation with Lowell, he says: "I feel that I am immortal. I cannot feel that there is any end to me." When Lowell dies, Whittier writes to Holmes in these words: "Ever since I heard the sad news of Lowell's death, I have been thinking of thee and longing to see thee; for we are now standing alone. The bright, beautiful ones who began life with us have passed into the great Shadow of Silence; or rather, let us hope, they have gone into the World of Light, and we alone are lingering here in the shadow. Well, I shall soon follow them and I wait the call with a calm trust in the Eternal Goodness." His faith in man's immortality is invincible. He says: "I do not reason about it or try to prove it; but I perfectly trust that there is a life beyond more spiritual than this and of more perfect adjustment, because I entirely believe that the Power which placed us here and is over all life, is one of perfect justice and love." He sings:

"That life is ever Lord of Death
And love can never lose its own."

The hope which Whittier thus expresses is older than any religion of earth. It is a hope born of human love. It is as a sweet flower that grows in the soil of love, and there it will grow and bloom as long as human tears fall on the white faces of the dead.

Whittier's teachings about the spirit world are so full of sweet comfort that they flash beautiful rainbows of hope across the showers of falling human tears. He believes that beyond death man goes on with his power to think, to remember, to love, just as of old; that man begins the life hereafter just as he leaves it here, man being precisely what his life on earth has made him. He says: "I shall have in the other life the same love and aspirations and occupations. If it were not so, I should not be myself; and surely I shall not lose my identity." To Whittier the gates between the seen and the unseen are ajar. The nearness of unseen realms and of unseen spiritual presences is to him a magnificent reality:

"O, sometimes comes to soul and
A feeling that is evidence
That very near about us lies
The realm of spirit mysteries."

He believes that we are moving now in a closely enfolding spirit world, a world so near to us that its wavelets lap the sands at our feet every day. He believes that our visible world is immersed, embosomed in a spirit world, as our earth is immersed and embosomed in the atmosphere. He believes that we are surrounded on every hand by the spirits of those who have lived here, but who have left us. He sings of the spirit world as the real home land. There friends and loved ones find each other. He believes that we shall recognize in the future state those we have known and loved on earth. He says:

"I have friends in spirit land,
Not shadows in a shadowy land;
Not others, but themselves, are they."

The loss of Whittier's beautiful sister is to him unspeakable. She is gifted with fine poetic tastes. She adores her brother. Their home life forms one of the sweet pictures in literature. She is his loving and constant companion. Death takes her, and then of her he writes:

"I cannot feel that thou art far
Since near at hand the angels are;
And when the sunset gates unbar
Shall I not see thee waiting stand?
And, white against the evening star,
The welcome of thy beckoning hand?"

REV. JOHN REID SHANNON.

THE FILTERED FALSE—THE GOOD.

Do the spirits of our kindred e'er to earth again return?
Are these faces but deceptions of the eye that we discern?
Are they all the masks of mortals and prepared to make believe
They are sacred, to enchant the human spirit and deceive?

Are these loved ones we are touching and oft kissing made of paste,
Or of paper, or of cheese-cloth—our attentions merest waste?
Are we naught but dupes of fakirs and a gang of sharks on earth?
Be it so; then have we nothing in our cause of greater worth?

Though granted all this thing we see be fraud before our eyes,
Beneath the very shameful act a sacred precept lies:
Naught e'er defrauded or defiled, if of good shall perish, though
Oft it seems as dead and crushed by an almighty final blow.

But the truth can never perish or be smothered by a lie,
For it is a law eternal; it can never fail or die.
Though all the ghosts and goblins may be proved of human make,
We will rise from all these ashes if we hold the truth at stake.

Though there floats upon the surface a pretentious, nasty scum,
Down within the rushing torrent there are voices never dumb;
They are ever, ever speaking to our spirits, and declare,
That though all may seem delusion our dear friends are living there.

Out upon the human passion comes a hunger and a greed,
That can hold no precept sacred which will not that hunger feed;
Greed is vicious; greed is cruel; greed is heartless, callous, cold;
Human greed has but one idol, that a shining god of gold.

'Tis a shame, disgrace, a monster of the darkest, blackest kind;
'Tis a crime against the sacred and the pure in soul and mind;
But there is within the lily just the filtered filth—its food;
So within the truth eternal is the filtered false—the good.

DR. T. WILKINS.

"The Jesuits." By Rev. B. F. Austin, A. M., B. D. An excellent pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

MY PHANTOM SHIP.

On a sea-girt shore, where the sea-gulls soar
O'er the ships-port and the ocean wide,
I gaze and dream of the days now no more,
And list to the billowy tide.
To that land of pleasure where many a treasure
Were stored in the heart of Truth,
In the voice of the sea, come back to me
The days of my happy youth.

Pearls and rubies, amber and gold,
Were the cargo hidden away
In the hull of my bark, with youth's trademark,
When Dreamland held its sway.
I sailed away gaily, nightly and daily,
For my heart was aglow with pride,
My ship held its treasures of innocent pleasures,
As it floated on a sunlit tide.

My ship is still sailing, the day-beams are paling,
As I near the Infinite shore.
Her treasures are the dear ones faithful, unfailing
Dwellers where time is no more.
I've seen their white hands in the luminous shadows,
Outstretched across the wide sea,
And their faces were tender, radiant with splendor,
As they fondly beckoned to me.

I wait in the gloaming love's light bestowing
Star-gleams of the soul's inner sight,
Where are gardens of flowers and vine-clad bowers,
Far from earth's chilling blight.
I wait and harken as the night shadows darken
The mystical star-aisles of night,
My lone ship is drifting the new dawn is lifting
Where gleams the fair City of Light.

BISHOP A. BEALS.

Summerland, Cal.

Spiritism and Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's Theories in Regard to It. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey. Demonstrates futility and inadequacy of Hudson's explanations of spiritual phenomena. Price 25 cents.

"The Kingship of Self-Control." By Wm. George Jordan. It treats of the crimes of the tongue, the Red Tape duty, the supreme charity of the world, the revelation of reserve power, etc. Price 30 cents.

A SWORN STATEMENT.

Wonderful Manifestations Occurring in Bright Daylight—The Whole Family Clairaudient and Clairvoyant—The Spirits in This Family Prefer the Bright Light of Day in Which to Do Their Work.

This is to certify that I, Mrs. Reynolds, of Puyallup, Wash., went to Mr. John A. Kinton's on Friday afternoon, April 14, 1905, to make a call and to gather a mess of greens. When I got there, I found Mr. and Mrs. Kinton were in Puyallup.

I found Ollie Kinton, their niece, at home, in the summer kitchen alone; Jennie L. Kinton and her little boy were out in the barnyard feeding chickens, and such work.

Ollie asked me to lay off my wraps and stay, as she expected the folks home soon. I took off my cape and hat, and laid my handbag on a chair; then folded my cape, it being large, heavy beaver cloth, and laid it on top of handbag, placing my hat on top of it; no one handling my things except myself.

Some time previous Mrs. Kinton had told me the spirits of the so-called dead had the power to move or take clothing or money and carry them off and hide them, and sometimes they would bring them back, and sometimes not, and that it had caused them, the family, a great deal of annoyance.

Sometimes the spirits would tell her daughter Jennie where to find them.

I thought of this when I placed my wraps and pocketbook on the chair. There was no one on the place at that time except the ones I have mentioned.

Ollie and I took my basket and went out to gather my greens, and when we went out through the yard Jennie and the little boy joined us without going into the house.

When we had gathered enough we returned to the kitchen, it being six feet from the house.

I walked over to my things, and I know no one had touched them, for they lay just as I had placed them. I picked up my handbag, and looked in. I had one five and one ten-dollar gold piece in the bag before I went out, and now the ten was gone.

I do solemnly swear I know they knew nothing of my money in my purse, and only Ollie knew I had any handbag with me, and I also know if any earthly person had moved them, I could have detected the same, as it was a test case with me.

Just then Mr. Kinton drove up, and Mrs. K. came in and greeted me very kindly, and asked me to stay to supper, as the girls were getting it ready, and regretted that she was not at home, as I had not been to see her for some time.

I concluded to stay and see if the spirits would bring my money back, but I did not lay my purse down again. I kept it in my hand. I dreaded very much to tell Mrs. Kinton about it, for I knew she would feel badly about it, but I knew no earthly hands had robbed me.

After supper Mrs. Kinton and I went into the house and I said: "I must go home as it is getting late."

While she and I were alone I told her of my loss. She was very much troubled, and said: "Mrs. Reynolds, you shall not lose your money. If I cannot make the spirits bring it back, I will borrow it and pay you."

Then Mr. Kinton came into the house, and we told him. By this time Jennie came in to tell me not to go and forget my greens, as I had left them on the back porch. We told her about the loss. "Oh!" she said, "I believe they will bring it back."

Mrs. Kinton suggested that we go back into the kitchen and all be still, and perhaps they would bring it back, or maybe it was hidden out there where the purse was left. She then told the invisibles they must bring my money back, or tell where it was. We all went out to the kitchen, and were quiet a few minutes, when Jennie, her daughter, said. "A spirit tells me your money is upstairs under the carpet in the house. Come with me and see."

We all followed her, and when she got to the top of the stairs in the hall, she stood still a moment, then turned to her right, and opened a door into a large room, and said, "Rip up the carpet on the far side, under the window."

Her father pulled out the tacks, and sure enough there was my ten-dollar gold piece.

I know no one had been upstairs since I went there. The spirit claimed it was taken to prove what could be done by spirit power, and that spirits of the so-called dead do return, and do many strange things innocent people are blamed for, and that it is strictly essential to the world that this must be proved, and they had found mediums in this family to prove it.

Mr. and Mrs. Kinton said they had known this to be true for twenty years, but could not be brave enough to publish it to the world, to make their family a target for people to talk about, but are forced at last to publish it for the good of humanity.

I will say I have been well acquainted with them for two years, and know them to be honest, truth-loving people, with no desire to do anything but right. All the family can see and hear spirits when conditions are right. Nearly all the demonstrations are done in daylight when the sun is shining.

MRS. S. A. REYNOLDS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 10th day of May, 1905.

ROBERT WILSON.
Notary Public in and for the state of Washington; residing in Puyallup.
[SEAL.]
Mrs. A. J. Kinton, Mr. John A. Kinton, Witnesses.

Spirits Gave the Victory.

A press report from Tokio, Japan, states that Admiral Togo, responding to the imperial rescript commending the admiral and his sailors, expresses his appreciation and says:

"That we gained a success beyond our expectation is due to the brilliant virtue of your majesty and to the protection of the spirits of your imperial ancestors, and not to the action of any human being.

"We shall be faithful and answer to the imperial will."

Altogether, thus far, the "virtue" of the Japanese emperor, and the "protection of the spirits" of his ancestors, seem to be more powerful than the God for whom the Russians hurrah.

"Principles of Light and Color." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A truly great work of a master mind, and one whom Spiritualists should delight to honor. The result of years of deep thought and patient research into Nature's finer forces are here gathered and made amenable to the well-being of humanity. Medical men especially, and scientists, general readers and students of occult forces will find instruction of great value and interest. A large, four-pound book, strongly bound, and containing beautiful illustrative plates. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $5. It is a wonderful work and you will be delighted with it.

The Commandments Analyzed, price 25 cents. Big Bible Stories, cloth, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

ALL THE HONEST MEDIUMS IN CHICAGO RECEIVE THE CORDIAL ENDORSEMENT OF THE ILLINOIS STATE SPIRITUALIST ASSOCIATION, WHETHER ORDAINED OR NOT. AS THERE ARE NUMEROUS FRAUDS IN THE CITY, IT WOULD BE WELL FOR ALL CAMP OFFICIALS TO BE EXCEEDINGLY CAREFUL AND WRITE TO DR. GEO. B. WARNE, 4203 EVANS AVENUE, FOR INFORMATION, IF THEY DESIRE ANY PARTICULARS. SUMMER CAMP-MEETINGS, WHEN PURE IN SOCIAL CONDITIONS, ELEVATED IN MENTAL AND SPIRITUAL TONE AND CONDUCTED ON STRICTLY BUSINESS METHODS ARE POWERFUL AIDS IN SPREADING THE TRUTHS OF SPIRITUALISM. IT MUST NOT BE FORGOTTEN THAT THEY ARE ALSO THE HARVEST TIME FOR THE FAKIRS, BECAUSE THEY COME TO THE RALLYING CENTERS FOR NUMBERS OF PEOPLE, MANY OF WHOM ARE HUNGERING FOR PHENOMENA ALL THE REST OF THE YEAR AND READY THERE TO PART WITH THEIR MONEY WITHOUT PRUDENCE. SPIRITUALISTS AND THE PUBLIC AT LARGE LOOK TO EVERY ONE OF OUR CAMP OFFICIAL BOARDS TO PROMOTE DECENCY, ELIMINATE TRICKERY AND RECOGNIZE ONLY HONEST MEDIUMS. THEY SHOULD PROTECT THE NOVICE AND THE GULLIBLE FROM IMPOSITION AND ROBBERY. THEY ARE LARGELY EDUCATORS OF THE PUBLIC. CAUTION, CANDOR, COURAGE AND DISCERNMENT ARE REQUIRED BY THESE OFFICERS.

At the Engineers' Arms, at Nelson, in Lancashire, Eng., the ghost of Robert Adams, a former landlord who was buried at Aberdeen, is said to have been behaving most disgracefully of late. "He" is heard in the dead of night drinking behind the bar—one man declares he looked through a window and saw "him"—but when the present landlord and his friends and guests descend to eject the intruder its intangible form flits upstairs to the bedrooms and disports itself there with much noise and riot. The latest report from Nelson is that a former friend, secreted in the bar, saw Robert Adams' burly figure at the beer engine, but naturally failed to seize it.

Sunday, May 21, being the feast of St. Helen, the inhabitants of the village of Lozen Grad, in Roumania, celebrated their annual feast, when the "Nistinarcs," priest of a special sect, danced barefoot upon live coals, a ceremony which will continue every day till the end of the month. After mass, celebrated by the Bishop, a large pile of wood was set on fire, and toward evening the "Nistinares" took turns at dancing over the scattered embers, uttering prophecies as to the happenings of the coming year most closely affecting the members of the parish. While the ceremony was going on bands played and people surrounded the burning embers. The people believe the "Nistinares" inherit the power of walking unscathed over the fire and that even they could not enjoy the privilege except during this month, on the occasion of this special celebration. This rite has been celebrated from time immemorial in this particular locality, and attracts a large number of visitors. How did they withstand the burning embers? Were they mediums?

D. S. Dewey writes: "I had rather lose my dinner and supper than to lose a copy of The Progressive Thinker. I do think it is the best paper on God's green earth."

J. W. Buchanan has removed to 520 Thomas avenue, Dallas Texas, where his friends will please address him.

Mrs. Powderly writes: "The meetings at 6603 Halsted street are growing in numbers and are very interesting. Mrs. Orm will lecture for us Sunday evening. Ladies' Aid meets every year to be just what we rea... needn't go to thinkin' that Sp...

Our correspondent at Sandusky, O., writes: "Mrs. M. E. Jenkins, of Windsor, Ontario, served the Psychic Research Society of this city, May 21 and 28, as lecturer and message bearer. She quickly endeared herself to the audiences by the joyous messages she gave from the loved ones who have passed out of physical view. While here, she responded to a call from Put-in-Bay Island, where she held a parlor meeting, bringing comfort and consolation to many who had not had an opportunity to attend Spiritualist meetings. It is hoped that she will again visit this vicinity."

President writes from Rockford, Mich.: "The Rockford Spiritualists will hold their regular June meeting on Sunday, the 11th. Mrs. Abbie E. Sheets of Grand Ledge has promised to be with us. Mrs. Sheets is a favorite with the Rockford people, but has been unable to accept engagements for a long time by reason of illness. We are glad to learn that she is again able to go on with the good work."

H. Smith writes: "On Sunday evening, May 28, a large and appreciative audience congregated at the hall of the Students of Nature, 1565 Milwaukee avenue. The hall was crowded. Each person was given a red carnation. The platform was surrounded with Prof. S. Hunt's juvenile orchestra of 20 young musicians. Their instruments were violins, guitars and mandolins. The pastor in charge eloquently gave the history of the birth and growth of the society which she so cheerfully cradled for eleven years. Sister Kusserow and Sister McIntire gave much encouragement for the future. Rev. Dr. Koehler, an ex-minister of the Lutheran church, spoke on Decoration, which was appropriate for this occasion, he being a true teacher of Spiritualism. Brother J. Coe, our old veteran, spoke of the growth and unfoldment, like a flower, of the pastor, as he has watched her, as a florist would. W. Lynn gave twenty tests. All were recognized. This society has lived eleven years, and will open the doors at Van Buren Opera House in September, with the pastor as the leader and teacher. It is located at the corner of Madison street and California avenue."

Mrs. Laura Crawford writes from Detroit, Mich.: "The First Church of the Soul, 46 Grand River avenue., held its closing and memorial services May 28. A fine program was rendered. The hall was nicely decorated with flowers and flags, and crowded to the doors. Lecture by Mrs. L. Crawford. She was assisted in messages by Mrs. Nellie Medcalf and others, who did well in demonstrating the continuity of life. Thursday, the first day of June the Harmony Club will hold a social and prize drawing at the home of Mrs. Crawford, 198 Fourth street. This society has been organized two months; membership numbers 24. We will resume our meetings again Sept. 1. Allow me to say in regard to your valuable paper, which we have for sale at our meetings, it is the best exponent of the Spiritual truth known. Long may it live to carry the messages of truth to the starving children of humanity."

Mrs. B. Sidwell writes: "A very interesting trumpet seance was held at Sisters Montgomery and Brooks, 24 Jackson Place, Monday evening, May 29, for the benefit of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Rising Sun Mission. Quite a snug sum was realized which was donated to the Auxiliary to aid in their relief work. Our sisters give very fine trumpet manifestations, and are worthy of the support of all Spiritualists. They leave for Winslow, Ill., for two weeks, where they are to give trumpet manifestations to quite a number of professional people who are investigating. The Ladies' Auxiliary is assisting all who are needy. Seances to raise funds to carry on its work are held every Thursday evening at Sister Bigden's, 90 Warren avenue—always a number of good mediums present. Come help us along."

Jerry Robinson, a prominent Spiritualist and a wealthy Mississippi planter owning property on Lookout Mountain, where he had spent the summer for years, dropped dead of heart trouble in Chattanooga, Tenn., May 30. He was stricken as he started to board an electric car in front of Jo Anderson's drug store to go to the Central station where he intended to catch the Memphis train at 10:20 o'clock. He was the owner of the Natural Bridge property and a fine residence near it on Lookout Mountain. He bought this property for about $5,000 after the Natural Bridge Hotel suspended business some twenty years ago. Later he turned it over to the Spiritualists, who held meetings of different kinds on the property for a long time. The Spiritualists allowed the property to get in the chancery court, where Mr. Robinson secured possession of it again a short time ago.

Dr. H. A. Cross writes: "If the majority of materializing mediums do keep artificial toggery handy at their seances—which I hope is not true—I want to assure you that spirit materialization is a fact in nature, and I can prove it by truthful statements of my own personal experiences. There is the false, the fake, but the genuine does in reality exist also. One trumpet medium of Chicago, Mrs. Celia Hughes, has given her word of consent and willingness to join with any or all congenial members of the League Board, for a sitting once a week for the phase of trumpet manifestation in the light. It was my suggestion, and she willingly acquiesced. If we can get trumpet manifestation in the light, sitting the same as is the custom when sitting in the dark, the medium not touching the trumpet, and every one present seeing the trumpet lifted by unseen hands, and hearing the voice from unseen vocal organs, or even if the spirit hands were to be seen lifting the trumpet, what a glorious accomplishment for the cause of Spiritualism that would be, and to have it here in our city. Such a result is worth working for. Mrs. Celia Hughes is willing to join us in the effort. The idea is my suggestion. I hope to see it realized."

Dr. G. Lester Lane of Boston, writes: "A letter just received from Dr. Peebles informs me that he sailed for Boston last Saturday. He will be my guest while here. Queen Victoria's message given through me regarding Russo-Japanese war has now been fulfilled to the letter."

Dr. Louis H. Freedman, the noted Australian healer and physician, began a series of Sunday evening meetings, commencing June 4, in St. George's Hall, No. 3337 State street. The Doctor intends to make these meetings a continuous pleasure to come to; delightful singers will take part, and a variety of mediums will give messages. Various lecturers each Sunday and at every meeting. Dr. Freedman demonstrates his renowned faculty of extemporaneous diagnosis and healing the sick; he has removed to his old location, 3030 Indiana avenue, corner 31st street. Phone Douglas 108.

Mrs. Kirchner writes: "On Sunday afternoon, May 28, we were again favored by having our Sister Briggs give us a grand inspirational talk. It being conference Sunday, quite a few took advantage of same and added their mite to the cause. Dr. Hager gave an elegant talk upon the continuity of life, from a scientific standpoint. Brother Lawrance also gave out some good thoughts, which carried considerable weight. Brother Thompson and Sister Weaver gave some grand demonstrations of spirit return, all of which were recognized. In the evening, owing to the absence of our president, Sister Trafton conducted the services. The speaker, Mrs. V. Darby, gave one of her eloquent discourses. After the lecture Sister Thompson and Brother Thompson and Sister Trafton gave some remarkable demonstrations of spirit return. Our choir, as usual, rendered beautiful music, which all claim is equal to any heard in the churches. We extend a cordial invitation to all to attend our services every Sunday afternoon at 3, and evening at 8, at Mission Hall, People's Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt street. We have our regular classes for dancing every Saturday night in Pleasure Hall and regular June dance, June 17. Picnic at Reissig's Grove, July 1. All are welcome."

Letters will reach Oscar A. Edgerly, the noted trance lecturer, at 42 Smith street, Lynn, Mass.

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, June 11, 1905, S. E. 58: "Birds."

Gem of Thought:

"He is in ignoble business who steals from his defenseless little friends, the birds; they cannot bar their homes, nor conquer their enemies."

For information concerning The Progressive Lyceum, authorized lesson sheet of the National Spiritualists Association, address John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

Begethe Sidwell writes: "The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Rising Sun Spiritual Mission has changed its meeting place from 54 N. Ashland avenue to 90 Warren avenue, where they will continue to give their regular test meetings on Thursday evenings at 8 p. m. sharp. All are cordially invited. Admission to these meetings will be 15 cents, the proceeds to go to the poor and needy. During the winter months we have been able, with the assistance of our numerous friends and co-workers, to supply provisions, fuel, rent and medical attendance whenever needed. While we expected to give up our meetings during the summer months, we are able by the assistance of our sister, Mrs. Bigden, who has given us the use of her commodious parlors free, to continue to hold meetings as heretofore. President Mrs. Etta White-Foote, will give dancing lessons every Saturday evening at the People's Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt streets. The proceeds of such lessons will go to help us in our work."

Fred D. Dunakin, one of the most efficient workers in our ranks, and who stands for pure Spiritualism and honest mediumship, has lately been elected as president of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association. He writes: "Our state convention was pronounced a perfect success from start to finish by all who were there, and I beg for the privilege to say a word in regard to Miss Edna Grant of Conneaut, Ohio. She is the sweetest and most inspirational and charming singer I ever heard. She sang at nearly every session of the convention and her smilling face and musical voice did more to imbue the large audiences who congregated there from time to time, with the spirit of truth, and expansion of soul than any discourse that was presented or delivered at that great convention. The work has a fair start in Ohio. We are on a good, substantial basis and all that is requisite for a successful year's work is a united effort on the part of all true workers to push the work so nobly begun on towards perfection."

John D. Severance writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: I wish to say a few words in regard to a young speaker of whom Grand Rapids Spiritualists are justly proud. I refer to Mrs. D. A. Morrill. A little over two years ago she made her debut as a speaker, and from that time she has been going steadily onward, meeting with success wherever she goes and to-day she ranks with our best speakers. She of herself is a bright, intelligent woman, but when under the control of her powerful guides it seems that the fields of wisdom are opened to her. She speaks rapidly, but very distinctly, clear, logical, forceful and eloquent. Last Sunday evening the New Thought society that Mrs. Morrill has served for the last two months, held memorial services and her closing lecture was indeed a wonder. She should be kept busy the year around, for such mediums will build up the Spiritualist movement, and lead humanity to higher conditions."

Irene Gay writes as follows of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association convention, paying a high tribute of respect to the retiring president, Mrs. Curran: "It was one of the most enjoyable spiritual gatherings I ever attended, that of the O. S. A. convention recently held in Ashtabula, Ohio. Fine weather, good speakers, soul-inspiring music, handsomely decorated halls and large audiences produced such favorable conditions that everyone was infected by it, and a general epidemic of harmony resulted therefrom. The local society at Ashtabula has long been noted for the harmonious and social element which pervaded its ranks, and during the recent convention, it was proven beyond all doubt that its reputation had been justly earned. Never were people better received or more warmly welcomed, and the kindly treatment accorded them will long be pleasantly remembered. It is not my intention to give the proceedings of the convention, as a full statement will be made by the state secretary, C. A. Sollinger, but will say the election of officers seemed to give uniform satisfaction, and I believe good and efficient service will be rendered by them. I wish to speak a few words of our retiring president, Carrie Firth Curran, of Toledo, Ohio. For two years she has faithfully served the O. S. A., and TOO MUCH PRAISE CANNOT BE GIVEN THIS NOBLE WOMAN WHO HAS SPARED NEITHER TIME, STRENGTH NOR MONEY IN ADVANCING THE CAUSE AND PRESENTING IT TO THE PUBLIC IN A TRULY SPIRITUAL LIGHT. I but voice the sentiment of all when I say that the O. S. A. is better spiritually and financially for having had Mrs. Curran as its president, and it was with regret we learned that ill health compelled her to decline accepting the office with its many onerous duties. The honest medium, as well as all seekers after truth have ever found in her a staunch friend, and that she may be restored to health and enabled to go on in the work wherein she has achieved such great success, is the prayer of those who know and love her."

G. W. C. writes from LaGrange, Ind.: "I am well pleased with The Progressive Thinker; don't know where I could better spend one dollar. I hope you will continue your grand thoughts and stirring discussions, and expose the fakers wherever they may be found, for they certainly are a menace to true Spiritualism. Stand for the truth and right, and all honest men and women will stand by you to the end."

Mrs. L. A. Griffin, the English psychic and message bearer, who has been serving the First Church of Hamilton, and now with the Progressive Spiritual Society of Toronto, Canada, is open for engagement for July, August, September and October of this year, with camp meetings, societies, etc. Address her in care of Mrs. Hobson, 28 Taylor street, Toronto, Canada.

Maggie Henry writes: "At old 77, the Universal Occult Society as usual had a very interesting meeting. Our pastor, F. M. Stoller, took for the scripture lesson a part of the 12th chapter of I. Corinthians. Some of the answers to the philosophical questions and especially one pertaining to psychometry as he is a fine psychometric reader himself, he is well qualified to answer it as well as all other questions pertaining to the spiritual philosophy, and all who are interested along this line of thought could not find a more interesting or instructive place to spend a couple of hours Sunday evening. We always have good spirit messages from Madame Lucille DeLoux and others. All are cordially invited to attend our meetings."

The Excelsior Daily Call says: "Human personality and its survival of bodily death, was demonstrated in a very striking manner by Mrs. McHenry, the trance medium and psychic expert, at the Saratoga Hotel, Excelsior Springs, Mo., one Sunday evening lately. The parlors of the hotel were comfortably filled, and the ladies and gentlemen present were given individual readings from personal articles placed upon a table. The readings were universally satisfactory and showed Mrs. McHenry to be a deep student of psychic research. Vocal selections of a high order rounded out an exceptionally entertaining and instructive program."

A. R. McDonald writes: "The Psychic Research Society of Toronto desires to make engagements for the ensuing year, with the best lecturers and test mediums. Kindly bear in mind, we court only the very best as the best are not too good for us. Address me with full particulars at No. 124 Victoria Street, Toronto, Canada."

W. J. Elmo writes: "The Spiritual Alliance Society, 3514 Vincennes avenue, near corner Cottage Grove and 35th street, holds its next social and dance Saturday evening, June 10. All welcome."

D. G. Hill writes: "Sunday, May 28, the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society was especially favored by large attendance at both services, and great interest was manifested in the lectures given by Mrs. Nellie Kusserow in the afternoon, and Dr. C. A. Burgess in the evening. Both of these speakers were at their very best; surrounded as they were by the splendid condition of the hall, they seemed to outdo themselves, if such could be possible, holding the closest attention of their audience until the last words were said, followed by mediums with messages and tests that carried comfort and conviction to the recipients. The speakers for June 11 will be for the afternoon, Mrs. M. Schumacher, pastor of the Society Students of Nature, and for the evening, that brilliant orator and talented man, Chas. Hughes, ex-state's attorney, who has entertained us on former occasions. Don't forget the grand entertainment and prize drawing, Saturday evening, June 17, at O'Donnell College Hall, So. Paulina street, between Washington Blvd and Park avenue."

Answering the inquiry of a subscriber as to how and why the words "In God We Trust" were put on the silver dollar, we would say that for this pious lie the country is indebted to a man named Pollock, who, a generation ago, was superintendent of the Philadelphia mint. Pollock was almost insane, Ingersoll said, about having God in the Constitution. He placed the inscription on our coins without authority, but the act was approved by the government. In religion, as Shakspeare remarks, what damned error but some sober brow will bless it and approve it.—Truth Seeker.

Mrs. Ella Totten of Fort Worth, Texas, writes: "I read in The Progressive Thinker of a Mr. Burdette, who says he has proof positive that the Peoria trumpet and materializing mediums are fakes. There may be fakes there all right, but there is one genuine trumpet medium I know. Her name is Mrs. S. E. Pemberton, as fine a lady as ever lived and who gives you the truth and nothing but the truth. I think it is very wrong to paint all mediums the same, just because there are fakes in the town. If this man would call on this lady I think he would change his mind. Because we find frauds in the work it is no sign they are all frauds, and it shows a very weak place in any one saying so."

C. A. Sollinger, the secretary of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association, writes: "With pleasure we send you greetings from the O. S. A., who by rising vote send their heartfelt thanks to the spiritual press, especially to J. R. Francis, for the kind and generous help in keeping the work of the O. S. A. before the public."

W. J. W. writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "A prophetic message from the spirit of George Washington is right in line with what the guides of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond predict: Spirit Washington foretold through a trance medium of this city at the beginning of the war between Russia and Japan, that the Japanese would come out victorious. The Japanese are the most spiritual people hence the progressive forces on the spirit side could work with and influence them. Many advance military spirits from America were with the Japanese; also the great Confucius."

George B. Ferris writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "On the last Sunday in May, the New Thought Spiritual Society concluded its meetings until after the summer is past, and will hold no more meetings until October, when the work will again be taken up, with greater zeal than ever, after the rest. On Sunday, the 28th, Memorial Day was observed with fitting exercises, which included brilliant addresses by Mrs. D. A. Morrill and Dr. J. C. Batdorf. The society during the past year has been very successful; the meetings have been well attended, and there is no indebtedness. The future of the society, too, seems to be assured. Plans are being considered to make the society more useful and more successful than ever before. We are in correspondence with a number of prominent speakers in regard to engagements for the coming season, and though no definite announcements can yet be made, it is certain that we will have on our rostrum some of the most talented and most widely known speakers now before the public. The Holland Unitarian church, where the meetings have been held for the past few months, is one of the most suitable meeting places that Grand Rapids Spiritualists have ever had; and it has been leased for another year."

Word comes from London, Eng., that a clock which is expected to run for 30,000 years or more is the latest result of the discovery of radium. This instrument has been invented by the Hon. H. G. Strutt, who is a son of Lord Rayleigh, the discoverer of argon, and recent winner of the Nobel prize for physics. In the clock one-twelfth of a grain of radium is suspended over a small electroscope consisting of two thin strips of silver. These, being charged with electricity from the radium, move apart, till they touch the sides of the vacuum tube in which they are fixed. There they communicate their charge to an aluminum wire which rings a bell, and, being discharged, fall together again, to repeat the process indefinitely. This extraordinary timepiece has just been placed on the market in London.

I. R. Armstrong of Vermont, writes: "The camp-meeting season again draws near, and as a former interested attendant and a present reader of Spiritualist literature, I wish to make a suggestion to those in authority at such summer gatherings. Of the transient visitors, many are excursionists of a class unable to go at other times, perhaps ignorant of what is taught there, and in numerous instances—as any camper can attest—eager to learn something in the brief interval usually afforded. In consideration of such circumstances it seems it would be well for management, mediums and officials of transportation companies concerned, to effect some arrangement—better than any I have witnessed—whereby the little time at their disposal may be spent by the sober-minded in listening to an enlightening discourse, or perhaps in a first consultation with a medium; further as an additional aid to the dissemination of a rational belief, I think it would be well for managers and editors of Spiritualist periodicals to distribute gratuitously at such times circulars containing directions for organizing house circles, a list of standard Spiritualist publications, information regarding the camps, etc. Comparatively, few visitors, if tactfully approached and politely requested, would refuse to accept them for examination at home, and new ideas first gained at the camp might thus be profitably developed and much good result."

Choice Poems by Mr. Edmiston.

To the Editor and Readers of The Progressive Thinker:—The N. S. A. has been presented with fifty copies of the handsome cloth-bound book of choice poems, the same to be sold for the benefit of our relief fund. The author has generously allowed us to sell these volumes for the exceedingly low price of fifty cents per copy. We trust the lovers of good poetry will hasten to secure a copy and thus help to swell our pension fund. We are in receipt of our portion of the funds raised on the Barrett quilt made by Mesdames Gott and Skogland; the amount will appear in our closing list; our grateful and sincere thanks are extended to all helpers in our good work. With cordial greetings to all.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.
600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C.

To German Spiritualists.

As there are many Germans interested in Spiritualism, who are often not able to understand the English language sufficiently to investigate through English meetings and English mediums, they will have opportunity to attend meetings in their own, the German language, at Lily Dale, during the camp season this summer. We will hold daily meetings there in German, aside from the regular meetings, which are of course in English, this German work being only a branch of all the good work that is done there.

The writer of this, with the assistance of other German mediums, will do this work. We hope a large number of German friends will attend the camp there, who would like to spend a summer vacation in the most delightful spot of the country, for rest and recreation, and get spiritual food and knowledge from their loved ones on the other side of the veil.

The railroad company has recognized the beauty and attraction of the place and has placed it among the summer resorts, making special rates; anyone wishing to come may ask their ticket agents for rates of excursion tickets good from June 1 until October 31.

We hope that mediums speaking the German language will wend their way to Lily Dale to assist in this work, which I think is needed in the camp and during summer season as well as at home in the winter; we hope that the readers having German friends will inform them, that they may consider Lily Dale when making their plans for the summer, that we may be able to make this a success and add to the good of the cause.

I will conduct developing classes and also hold seances and give private sittings for clairvoyant spiritual communications.

MRS. ELSIE STUMPF.

ROCHESTER, IND.

Spiritual Meetings of Interest and Profit Are Held There.

On May 15, those faithful, untiring workers in the vineyard of Spiritualism, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, paid a visit to Rochester friends to rest for a short period and incidentally to speak and give a comforting message to those of the fold. Many and loyal are the friends of these good people who are pleased to have them come among us. The meeting held at First Spiritualists Church was not so largely attended as on previous occasions, owing to the meeting being mid-week, when people are busy with material cares, nevertheless, all said and done at this one meeting was helpful and appreciated, and the weary pilgrims went on their way refreshed and happy for their visit.

May 21, Dr. George B. Warne conducted two splendid services in our city. The coming of this genial gentleman is always fruitful in good results. Therefore, every word he uttered was gratefully received. With Dr. Warne at the helm of Spiritualism, it is no wonder the fake element trembles. He is one of the saviors of Spiritualism and will be the means of washing its skirts from the filth so long besmirching it. Dr. Warne will always find a welcome among Rochester Spiritualists who believe in his methods and admire his manly courage to stand for the pure and honest in our cause.

May 30, a day of ideal beauty in nature, was also a day of spiritual feasting to the Spiritualists of our little city. Will V. Nicum, the apostle of Spiritual Spiritualism, delivered two lectures to fine audiences. By invitation of the officers of the church, Fredonia Lodge, Knights of Pythias attended services at First Spiritualist church to listen to this gifted and eloquent exponent of our philosophy. To say his effort was appreciated by the order and all listeners, is putting it mildly. We have engaged on our rostrum some of the best talent before the public in our our ranks, but it is safe to say no speaker has touched the responsive chord of sympathy and produced better results than this Dayton, Ohio, young man. Spiritualism means more than demonstrated immortality, it means the growth and development of the real man and woman. His plea for spiritualized Spiritualists will eventually bring about different conditions among the people and here and there will be found those who will reflect the radiance of the pure white light seen and experienced by this gentle teacher. If I was an orthodox I would pray the Lord to send more Will V. Nicums into Spiritualism to help us find the Christ within, and the good in everyone and everything. We will make a strong effort to have Mr. Nicum with us again in the fall as it is plainly to be seen he is the one to put life and new blood into the cause at Rochester.

MARGUERITE MILLER.
Rochester, Ind.

"Wedding Chimes." By Delpha Pearl Hughes. A tasty, beautiful and appropriate wedding souvenir. Contains marriage ceremony, marriage certificate, etc., with choice matter in poetry and prose. Specially designed for the use of the Spiritualist and Liberal ministry. Price 75 cents.

"Poems of Progress." By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily

OUR TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

And lastly, our latest premium book, "Letters From the Spirit World," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea.

All these TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.75 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family,—an achievement only accomplished by the Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

WHAT SHALL WE EAT?

The Food Question from the Standpoint of Health, Strength and Economy.

Containing numerous tables, showing the constituent elements of over three hundred food products and their relations, cost and nutritious values, time of digestion, etc., indicating best foods for all classes and conditions. By Alfred Andrews. 120 pp. Price, leatherette, 50 cents; cloth binding, 75 cents.

To many people there is no question of greater importance than the one asked in the title of this book, and no more satisfactory effort to answer it has been made than is to be found between the covers of this practical volume. It opens with a consideration of the purposes for which we eat, and how food material is converted to our needs, and is used in sustaining life.

A very important feature of the work is found in the numerous tables given, showing the results of some 1,500 analyses of food products to determine the constituent elements, comparative food values, time required for digestion, etc.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

20th Century Guide TO PALMISTRY

This is the simplest, clearest and yet the most exhaustive presentation this interesting science has yet received. All of the discoveries, investigations and researches of centuries are summed up in this practical, fascinating treatise on Palmistry.

There is no trait, no characteristic, no inherited tendency, that is not marked on the palm of the hand and can be traced with unerring accuracy by following the principles enforced by the presented in this. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, $1.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Kind reader, are you or do you know of those sitting for development? No difference for what phase of mediumship. Send your address with a 2-ct postage stamp. In return I will give my experience and advice free of charge. J. G. HINDERER.
Anderson, Ind.

Can Telepathy Explain?

Results of Psychical Research.

By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage, in this book of 243 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

"The Present Age and Inner Life; Ancient and Modern Mysteries Classified and explained." By Andrew Jackson Davis. We have a few copies of this work by the celebrated seer. Cloth, $1.10.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth, $1.

What Is Clairvoyance?

This question is one of great interest, for it opens the door that exists between the material and spiritual realms. The following communication from Clara S. Henderson contains many suggestive statements that will attract general attention among Spiritualists.

Clairvoyance [as set forth in the Chicago Inter Ocean] means literally, "clear seeing," or, as the dictionary puts it, "the ability to discern objects not within reach of the eye under normal conditions." And what clairvoyance is to the eye, clairaudience is to the ear. The ability to perceive what others do not see is often linked to the power to hear what others do not hear, and they will be treated together, although it should not be understood that these two faculties are invariably united. It may be said of both of them, however, that they are an extension of the ordinary senses, due, if we could trace back the history of the ego who enjoys such privileges, to special training received either in former lives or in the present incarnation.

There are men who are able to state approximately how many bushels of apples will be gathered from any particular orchard by looking at the fruit-laden trees. There are other men who earn large salaries because of the extremely fine development of the sense of taste, which qualifies them to become efficient judges of tea. In the same way clairvoyance and clairaudience bring to those possessing them knowledge which it would otherwise be impossible to gain.

Clairvoyance, like many other things in life, is largely a matter of vibrations. Above and below the colors we are able to discern in the spectrum are many others, and of the entire gamut of sound vibrations, we hear, through the physical ear, only a very small portion; so that, in reality, undiscovered worlds are before man, and with them he is slowly—in what is now termed abnormal ways, but which is really only normal development, becoming acquainted.

And yet the word itself—clairvoyance—is viewed with suspicion by the majority of intelligent people, for it is frequently the synonym of charlatanism, fraud and chicanery. Under its guise vast sums of money are annually gathered in by those who often advertise as "natural psychics." They are surprisingly accurate at times, and quite as inaccurate at others.

Those who are pursuing the investigation of this interesting subject for altruistic motives alone, under the guidance of careful instructors, make no effort to attract the attention of the public; consequently, clairvoyance is usually judged by those possessing the faculty in an uncertain and untrained manner, rather than by the highest type of investigators, who are able, by means of it, to know at any time what is occurring or has occurred on any portion of our globe.

The fitful powers of the "natural psychic" are ample proof that something unexplained does exist in man. In some races this faculty is frequently found, although erratic in its manifestations. The Irish, for instance, with their innumerable tales of fairies, trixies, elves, are not indulging their story-telling faculty solely in such narrations. They are naturally psychic, and possessed in former years the ability to see these tiny denizens of the astral plane, and to this day in Ireland one is shown the fairy rings—or rings where the grass is trodden down—as proof that the fairies frequent some favored spot.

Their neigbors, the Highlanders, with less of romance and more of conscious rectitude, also have their tales of second sight and many a Scottish story has for one of its exciting incidents the appearance of a loved one wrapped in a shroud as a warning of his approaching death.

In our own country the increase in psychic faculty is noticeable west of the Rocky mountains, and audiences on the Pacific Coast need no demonstration that it exists, but they eagerly listen to the lecturer who is able to tell why it exists, and how it may be attained.

Historical Instances.

If we turn to history for confirmation of these faculties, we find two of its greatest characters are chronicled as being clairaudient.

What was that made Joan of Arc, a simple little peasant maid, take upon herself the deliverance of her nation? It was the voice, she said, that spoke to her in the field and by the fireside. How did she gain knowledge to gain a successful campaign against a strong and courageous enemy? It was the voices that gave her clear and explicit instructions. From whom did she learn how to plead her cause before a most august tribunal in a manner at once able and convincing? It was the voice which taught her in the lonely night, as she lay in her loathsome dungeon. Nothing of herself alone—naught but an ignorant, healthy little girl; possessed of no gifts of intellect or learning, but dowered with the purity of heart which enabled her to hear those voices, and that absolute devotion which led her to give up her life in obeying their commands.

We may think ourselves profound, but there is a greater wisdom which recognizes that more exalted beings may excel us in profundity; and this was the wisdom which made a saint of Joan of Arc. The Lombroso School of medicine speak of her as a most interesting neuropath; perhaps that is what the world needs today—a few more neuropaths.

The other case is that of Socrates; a character so great that his biographer Plato, devoted a long life to promulgating his teachings. Socrates had a familiar, a demon, he termed it, who stood guard over him in all the transactions of his daily life. It never told him what to do, but always advised him when he was about to make a mistake. And it was after years of such advice, always heeded, that Socrates went to make the speech which resulted in his being sentenced to death. The voice checked him not. As he delivered the sentences which most infuriated those in power, the voice remained mute. And his conclusion from this silence is nothing less than magnificent, for he said that since he had not been prevented in doing that which resulted in his death, he believed that death was not an evil; that it was the next step for him in the course of evolution, and he did not fear nor dread its approach.

Cases in Literature.

In literature, for we can find many witnesses in this field, concerning clairvoyance, we shall cite but three examples. Taken as they are, from books written within the last sixty years, they may serve to show us that general opinion is changing, and that we are approaching the time when this subject will be seriously investigated.

In the latter portion of "Jane Eyre," when St. John is proposing marriage to the heroine, she is suddenly roused to a memory of Rochester by hearing his voice calling her name in accents of agonized love. She dashes out into the garden, thinking he must be in the vicinity, and calling as she runs, "Yes, I am coming." But he is not to be found. Later he tells her that at that precise time he did call to her from where he was, many miles away, and that he heard her answer. She decides not to tell him her own experience, and this is the reason she gives for such decision: "The coincidence struck me as too awful and too inexplicable to be communicated or discussed." Fortunately, we have passed that period of mental growth. There is nothing "too awful" now to be investigated and classified—there's no better way to remove the "awfulness."

In "David Copperfield," Dickens gives an instance of clairaudience occurring in the conversation between David and Dan'l Peggotty a year or two after Dan'l's niece Emily has eloped with Steerforth's people, that Emily has run away from him, and the question arises, whether, in her shame and despair she might not have committed suicide. Dan'l finally says: "My niece, Emily, is alive, sir; I don't know where it comes from, or how 'tis, but I am told as she's alive." Dickens, whose originality is one of his perennial charms, makes no comment; he simply satisfies himself with the statement.

In "Sir Richard Calmady," is a beautiful description of an evening scene in the garden at Catherine's home, when she becomes clairvoyant for a time. She sees her dead husband in his hunting costume, slowly pacing up and down in one of his favorite walks, just as she had often seen him during his life-time many years before. The author describes the incident so naturally that we realize that people are much more willing to believe such happenings than at the period when "Jane Eyre" appeared.

It is worthy of comment that in each instance these unusual powers were attained by some one who loved in the ideal manner—purely, unselfishly, and devotedly. And authorities on the subject of clairvoyance tell us that in life these powers often spring from this cause—that of love, in its most elevating aspect.

Different Conditions.

Clairvoyance may be attained under different conditions. Its first appearance in a person supposed to be normally healthy is often cause for anxiety. Although this explains some cases, it would be an unfair way of disposing of all instances.

Quite often, too, there is a disorganized nervous system responsible for such happenings, which may be remedied by medical care. If, after careful medical treatment, howerve, the happenings still occur, and the individual seems to retain his mental balance in other ways, we must look further for a more satisfactory explanation.

Turning aside for a moment, let us consider the different physical conditions under which clairvoyance may be reached. First, is that which is gained by means of hypnotism. This is now so common that all are familiar with the amusing performances of a hypnotized person as exhibited by lecturers on this subject.

Then we have the clairvoyance that comes from the use of stimulants or narcotics. The fact that it can be attained in this way is generally discovered accidentally, and the use of some stimulant is purposely pursued, with the inevitable result that the normal powers of intellectual achievement are eventually weakened. De Quincey and Coleridge are famous examples of this type of clairvoyance.

Another method of reaching clairvoyance is by means of crystal gazing, and this amusement has, of late years, been very popular in England.

There is also the clairvoyance attained through religious ecstasy. Of this kind, William James, professor of psychology at Harvard, gives many interesting cases in his "Varieties of Religious Experiences."

There is also the clairvoyance which is sometimes reached in sleep, but this touches the subject of dreams, which is too complex to be more than mentioned at present.

Astral Plane Clairvoyance.

Let us now return to the individual who begins to have clairvoyant or clairaudient experiences when in possession of his normal faculties, and who consults his physician and faithfully follows his advice with no results whatever; he finds, on the contrary, that with the passage of time, his experiences increase and grow more definite and clear-cut. Under such circumstances we may assume that there is a gradual quickening of some one of his bodies other than the physical one. It may be one or more of several different bodies, and his experiences would thus fall under different classes.

By far the most common type results from the gradual awakening of the astral body upon the astral plane. A man may have had for years a longing to visit some city; suppose it to be London. On some particular occasion, when the conditions are advantageous, he may close his eyes for a moment and find himself in London; he beholds the heavy fog with his inner vision, he sees the street-lights made dim and red by it, and he feels the damp air around him. No importance is attached to an occurrence of the sort. It is merely, as said before, a quickening of the desire-body on the astral plane.

The astral plane has been called the "plane of illusion," and a man may realize this in some of his experiences. On this plane are many malicious entities, who are anxious to frighten the newcomer, and he may be treated to a scene of kaleidoscopic changes somewhat discomposing to nerves not of the strongest. It is not pleasant, for instance, to see a woman diminish in the twinkling of an eye to a fairy of eight or ten inches, and in another instant grow to an enormous giantess of as many feet in height, towering over the frightened beholder with angry face and menacing gesture. It takes some will power to stand one's ground and not cry for mercy, but that is the only way to get rid of such disagreeable attentions. In this domain of man, a strong will carries us over obstacles quite the same as in the physical world. And any experiences of this nature only give one an opportunity to use judgment and common sense.

Astral plane experiences should not be looked upon as the revelation of anything omniscient, for that is far from true; indeed, clairaudients often hear inane and vapid conversations on the astral plane, just as we do on the physical plane. And there is no occasion to pride oneself on account of growing consciousness on this plane, for it is possible, unless accompanied by spiritual growth, to get into serious trouble through such faculties. Our latent weaknesses are all discovered on this plane, for our emotions are like an open book to its inhabitants, and advantage is often taken of this fact.

Mr. K—, who was shaving himself one morning, was startled to hear a voice right behind him say: "Cut your throat; do it now." He turned to see who had come into his room uninvited, but found no one. This occurrence repeated itself for many weeks. He grew fearful at length lest he might, in a moment of folly, yield to the terrible suggestion, but, realizing that it was a test between his own will power and something with which he was not familiar, he fought bravely for his freedom, and gradually the voice grew weaker until he heard it no more. Some time after this a friend who was mediumistic said she had a message for him from a man who had committed suicide some years before. The suicide said he had, after his own rash act, been seized with a strong desire to force some one else to do the same thing; that he had worked for a long time to persuade Mr. K— to kill himself and that he felt grateful because Mr. K— had not done so, inasmuch as he (the suicide) had been thus freed from his unholy desire, and had never since tried to persuade anyone to follow his example.

This case has been given at some length for the reason that there seems to be an increase of such experiences now apparent; and we may ere long often be forced to decide whether such a case is to be roughly classed as ordinary insanity or as an increase of psychic consciousness.

How Attained.

Some of the possible dangers in store for the person seeking clairvoyant powers have been mentioned, and now it remains for us to learn how they may be avoided. The only safe method of attaining these higher faculties is through concentration and meditation.

To begin with, concentration should be practiced in all the details of life. "Let us do with our might what our hands find to do," is a good epitome of the attitude one should hold in all he undertakes. If it is only writing a letter, he should think of nothing else but that at the time, and put his whole mind to making that letter fill the exact purpose for which it was written, whether of a social or a business nature.

And then one comes next to meditation, to setting aside a little portion of each day—if only a few moments—to training the mind to act quickly and readily, quite as the draughtsman, by infinite practice, trains his hand to be true.

At the same time control of the desire might be sought. This is an effective method of subduing those troublesome astral entities which lie in wait for one when he begins to visit the astral plane consciously.

No definite time can be set for accomplishing certain results, for the reason that each student may have accomplished much or little in former lives along this line. All that has been mentioned must be achieved by the patient and unceasing effort of the student himself, and when he is ready for regular training it will be given him.

It is perhaps well to add that qualified teachers do not advertise themselves in flashy literature, nor in any public manner. They do not teach for the material benefits to be derived therefrom and they are quite indifferent as to whether the world, generally speaking, even knows of their existence. But of a certainty, no man seeks their guidance and seeks it in vain, if his purpose be earnest, honest, and unselfish. Be his creed, caste, or color what it may, when he is ready to assimilate definite training it will be given him; or, as has been said, "when the pupil is ready the teacher is waiting."

Mental Plane Clairvoyance.

The mental plane, as stated in a former theosophical article, is the plane next higher than the astral plane in the course of evolution. Brief and fragmentary glimpses of its indescribable beauties are sometimes caught by the purest and loftiest minds. Cases of clairvoyance on this plane are rare. Only the trained clairvoyant is able to reach it, since at the present stage of man's evolution definite training is necessary in order to learn to function consciously the mental body, which is the body used on the lower levels of the mental plane.

On the higher levels of this plane, where man functions in the causal body, one becomes conscious of his past lives and the causes therein set going which resulted in his present condition.

Clairvoyance at will on the mental as well as the astral plane, is the ultimate possibility in store for everyone, but each must choose for himself the time in which it is to be attained. It may be reached quickly, if we work in harmony with the law of evolution, and for the highest interest of those around us; many incarnations may pass by if we drift aimlessly through life with no set purpose, idly seeking the amusement the hour affords; and aeons upon aeons may transpire before this glorious possibility is achieved, if a man deliberately sets himself to oppose the interests of others and work solely for the accomplishment of his own selfish desires.

CLARA S. HENDERSON.

NATURE'S BOOK.

The life of earth is but a school,
In which we learn to read
The holy laws of nature,
In a book that has no creed.
It has the rocks, the trees, the birds,
The sun, the moon and stars,
The grand old sea, flushed with glee,
'Neath the golden sunset bars.

And the tiny blade of grass
Doth a sermon to us preach,
The odor of a flower
Oft our inner souls can reach;
The ripple of a brooklet,
With all its music, mild and meek,
Will teach us all a lesson
In the book of nature sweet.

MRS. J. H. DALLAS.

St. Louis, Mo.

"Spirit Echoes." My Mattie E. Hull. This pretty volume contains fifty-seven of the author's latest and choicest poems. Neatly bound in cloth, and with portrait of the author. Price 75 cents.

"The New Life." By Leroy Barrier. Eminently suggestive along the lines of "new thought." Excellent in tone and tendencies. Price, cloth, $1.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE SOUL.

Within the deep recesses of an inky darkness,
Writhing and groping, lay a human soul;—
Securely fettered by the chains of retribution
Which bound it to a past as yet unredeemed.
And as companion to the awful darkness
Was a stillness, so intense,
That the most terrific thunder
Or the battle's most discordant clash
In comparison were mild.
And how long thus banished cannot be said,
But let it be known that a numb ignorance of all
That ever had transpired burdened this soul, apparently dead,
And yet, in its evolution
Taking the first step.

Suddenly a gleam of light broke through the awful horror,
Removed the penetrating darts of ignorance and bewilderment,
And Memory stood before it.
Sharp were the stings of conscience
And deep the scars of hate.
But withal, a lingering kindness brought Memory
For it led the soul to onward trend.

Spake the soul: Why this intensity of darkness?
Can it be that destruction I have met?
Nay, 'tis not so, for still I feel and move,
It seems but now since I beheld the sun.
Thus it pondered for a time
While Memory grew stronger,
Till fully recognized it stood before the soul.
Then deep was the anguish,
And the struggle for supremacy was fearful,
For the soul as its opponent had a dark and ill-spent past;
And to decide stood Justice, an arbitrator firm,
Yet mild.

Then spake the Records of the Past:
In the pages of the life-book
Appear to thine undoing, deeds vile and low.
A dissipated youth has been the foundation of a mad career,
These are the charges laid against thee:
Thy boyhood's days were reckless and disobedience thy score,
While small thefts and little untruths broadened into wider paths.
Then, when upon the verge of manhood the records show a deed,
For very shame of which thou shouldst desire annihilation.
Couldst thou not find a better pastime than a woman's heart?
Her death to thee is laid.

To the widows and the orphans thou hast not been a friend.
To swell the increase of thy treasury,
Thou didst employ their unprotected state thy vantage ground.
And thy workings at the gaming table are not to be passed o'er.
Pitiable cries of hungry mouths waiting to be fed,
Thou hast helped to raise.
As a towering oak thou shouldst have stood
To receive the clinging weaknesses of those near and dear.
A bold and relentless tyranny was all thou hadst to give.
And to all these may be added deceit and cruel slander,—
While hypocrisy stands foremost.
With such a record of the past, what sayest thou in mitigation?

Writhing and groans in answer,
And Justice raises her hand.

Then spake the soul:
Judge not harshly,—
Mine were but the deeds of thousands gone before,
And thousands to come after.
My early inspiration was a pair of eyes, my mother's,
As in solicitude o'er me her form was bent.
Then came boyhood days.
Vain were the prayers and pleadings of my mother,
My companions' taunts and jeers I feared,
Nor bethought me of the counsel
A wise and kind parent so fondly had bestowed;
And thus I took the first step,
Which, followed by a second was my undoing.
I dare not ask for justice;
But I would pray for mercy.

Then spake Justice:
A damaging evidence against thee are the records of thy past.
I hold the balance thine iniquities so heavily have weighted.
If to the realms of harmony and bliss thou wouldst proceed
A duty falls to thee, 'tis this: to counterpoise the scales.
Thou hast been weighed and found wanting,
And to repair thine insolvency
I compel thee, Soul, to labor and displace
Each wrong by deed of good.
This is law and unimpeached.
Therefore, for greater leniency implore not;
'Tis fruitless and of no effect.

Soul:
There looms before in grim horror my misshapen past;
The threads of my ill-woven destiny I must undo
Again to live in the beginning.
The seeming impossibility of my voluminous task
Overwhelms me and I shrink.
My weakness, it is great.

Justice:
Part of thy punishment shall be spent in solitude.
The remainder shall consist
In mingling with the souls of earth
To comfort those in need.
As thou hast trod the paths of selfishness and greed
By sympathetic deed alone thy spiritual state is gained.

* * * * * *

Since then,—a thousand centuries and more
Suns, moons and stars their courses have continued,
And strong minds, swayed with opposition, devoid of aim,
Have drifted with the tide.
While the streets of ignorance and iniquity too well were filled.
And night prevailed o'er all;
When hope seemed lost, there came a gleam
From inspiration's sun,
It broke the night, and brought the day—
The soul's work has begun!

M. ADELE THIEMAN.

Milwaukee, Wis.

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland. Interesting, instructive and helpful; Spiritually uplifting. Cloth bound; price $1.

"Child Culture, According to the Laws of Physiological Psychology and Mental Suggestion." By Newton N. Riddell. A most excellent work for all who have the care or training of children. Price 65 cents.

MATERIALIZATION.

An Old and Forgotten System for Spiritualists to Consider.

(Continued from No. 810.)

At this point the expected result depends largely upon the skill and knowledge of the spirit chemist or operator manipulating the power resulting from the blending process of primary forces and elements. This power we have computed from actual measurement of the emanations from each individual comprising the circle on the lower octave, and by mathematical processes obtained the measurement of the invisible circle three octaves higher up, and the result represents a lifting power of 2,000 to 3,000 pounds weight in one hour. That is the energy and power that has been generated and expended in one hour would equal the power necessary to lift from 2,000 to 3,000 pounds. This of course varies according to the level or octaves upon which the two circles are organized. This is the same power manifested when you raise your arm by muscular contraction, a result from concentrated vital force, which is the motive power.

Here should be noted the close relation existing between the terms, reduce, condense and contract. We should also remember that a force does not exhibit any power unless concentrated or confined. Each member of the two circles being at their post on their respective notes on the chromatic scale with the two mediums blended at the focal point on F sharp, the vital electro-magnetic forces will lightning-like flash along both arms of the human and spirit horseshoe magnets to the focal point of concentration along lines of least resistance, where they are converted into energy and power to be manipulated by the skillful operator.

A spirit being wishing to be materialized and for a few moments at least become visible to earth friends, steps into the electro-magnetic field of the human horseshoe magnet where the reduction process—the process of "bringing back to a former state of matter"—is made to play upon the spirit or ethereal form, and the lowering of the high rate of vibration culminates in condensation under the law of transmutation, and an invisible substance is "reduced or brought back to a former state of matter," in a few moments of time, and is now ready for the augmentary or finishing-up process, which for the want of a better name we will call electro magnetic atomic plating,—a process similar to your commercial electro-magnetic silver and gold plating.

This is a process under the law of transmutation by which matter is converted into its co-related force at the positive pole and transferred by the electro-magnetic currents to the negative pole where it is re-converted into its "former state of matter," thus forming a veritable shell of solid matter on that part of the spirit body whose vibrations had been "reduced to a former state of matter." These processes may be applied to any part or to the whole spirit organism, and external organs of the five physical senses.

These atomic and molecular material elements, come largely from the physical medium, but also from members of the physical circle, but are only borrowed for the time being, and are by a reversal of the processes after each manifestation returned to the original owner under the law of harmony which causes each atom to seek its natural polarization.

Now, let it be understood that spiritual clothing and all things of a spiritual nature, can by these processes be "reduced to a former state of matter" for the time being, and the length of time it will hold intact under red or orange colored light or twilight depends upon the thickness of the electro-magnetic atomic plating. A thick piece of ice will hold a solid form longer under the application of heat than a thin piece will.

Remember that heat and light are only manifestations of certain rates of motion, and the white light or actinic ray with its multiple relation to high C on the scale, affects a materialized form just as a correspondingly high degree of heat would affect a thin piece of ice, which would melt instantly and be converted into vapor and at last disappear entirely under continued application of heat. But the slow-going motion of light reflected from red on C and orange on D have a lesser effect on newly-reduced matter with texture superfine, and colors far surpassing any of our chemical pigments, and are more like rainbow tints, or the colors exhibited in a newly opened rose bud. The white seems to be whiter than new fallen snow; it is here where coloring matter comes direct from nature's store house.

Now we will make the prediction and assert advisedly that when materializing circles are formed on the plan here outlined, it will become possible for human beings on the earth plane to walk with angels and gods at high noon, and entertain such visitors from the higher realms, not unawares, under cover of darkness, but under full light will we meet spirit friends face to face.

Now suppose a physical human being should desire to dematerialize, and "be an angel and with the angels stand" for a few minutes at least, the modus operandi would be for a sensitive to take a position on the other side of the cabinet in the electro-magnetic field of the spirit horse-shoe magnet where the spirit operator could manipulate the same powers with a reversal of the processes, and in a twinkling of an eye almost, the rates of your material vibrations would be increased to the state of spirit substance, and the subject would no longer be visible to physical sight, and as a visitor from the visible realm of nature in turn be entertained by loving angel friends, manifesting life on the higher octaves of existence; and by a reversal of the processes our inquisitive friend would be returned to former normal state of matter, wiser but perhaps not happier.

While we think of it we will introduce a statement from Prof. M. Faraday, from spirit side of life, in which he says that the spiritual body consists of the same elements as the physical body, and only differs in atomic rates of vibration.

Do we not daily observe these same processes in nature all around us when an invisible substance under the law of transmutation becomes visible, tangible matter, which is a result of the manipulation of vital elecro-magnetic force by a soul entity striving to build a physical structure for the purpose of manifesting as life on the great highway of progressive unfoldment with its cyclic spirals leading from octave to octave to ultimate realms of infinitude. This process of growth under nature's own normal conditions is slow and lasting, and the manifesting entity need not be afraid of being light(ning) struck at every whip stick of the road and seemingly dashed into nothingness in the twinkling of an eye.

Why should Spiritualists repeatedly assert in print and otherwise that materialization cannot and does not take place; that this beautiful phenomenon should have no place among or be classified as spirit manifestation. Would a scientist living in equatorial regions deny the fact that vapor under favorable conditions is reduced to a former state of crystallization, and falls from the clouds in the form of snowflakes, or that water congeals into a solid state under a certain degree of cold, because he has never seen it. No, he has studied and understands the law that governs these things just as well as his brother scientist in a northern latitude where such phenomena frequently occurs.

Brother and sister Spiritualists, why not study the law that governs and processes involved in materialization? You can do that in full broad daylight, and become competent to judge between the false and the true, and be able to distinguish the difference between an arisen brother or sister and a scarecrow. P. PEARSON.

Ponca City, O. T.

WHAT IS LIFE?

As Comprehended by a Noted Californian.

Life is a term (as set forth in the San Francisco Chronicle) with which we are familiar in its ordinary sense, but the fullness of its meaning is apt to stagger us. For life is everything!

Objections to such a definition are ready to hand, but can it not be proved true? Truth is frequently established by proofs that are largely speculative. When that eminent scientist, Sir Oliver Lodge, tells us that atoms are verifiable which are so little that a million millions of them massed together are barely visible with the highest power of a microscope, we accept the fact, although we feel that proof of it must be partly inferential. But what, in this connection, interests us most in Sir Oliver's tiny atoms is the fact that they are alive; they move—and move with a purpose. They build up other forms of being, just as they themselves are built up by and of the ultimate something we here term life.

But what reason have we to claim that the inherent activity of infinitesimal bits of substance is, properly, a phenomena of life? We do so simply because life is the energetic principle—the primary basis—the ultimate something of universal existence, whose incessant activity not only sustains its own being, but creates and sustains everything else that exists.

Hence, life is eternal; these conditions of its existence prove that it could have had no beginning and can have no end. They also prove that life has intelligence that is inherent and supreme; none other could control its purposeful processes.

Therefore life is all-powerful and all-comprehensive; it is omniscient, omnipresent and omnipresent. But these are attributes which we can only ascribe to God himself, as the supreme ruler of the universe.

Therefore life is God and God is life.

And the dictum is true that man is created in the (intellectual) image of his maker; for he is apparently the superlative output of the constructive processes of life. For human life, as a specific determination and individualization of universal life, differs essentially from the lower forms in that it acquires consciousness of its existence and memory of its experience. These go to constitute human personality, which as an uncomplicated condition of eternal life, can never be destroyed. Self-consciousness in any form of being that is strictly elementary could by no possibility be lost.

Man, therefore, is destined to live forever as a miniature production and integral part of creative intelligence. In conclusion, we claim that here are facts that go to establish the truth of the definition that life is that intelligent creative energy whose activity accounts for universal existence.

Life is everything.

O. O. BURGESS, M. D.

FORGOTTEN.

Do your dear eyes look down from the heavens above
Where now you are happy, dear friends that we love,
With scorn or with pity for those who forget
The lives that you gave without fear or regret.
The wounds and the pains that for their sakes you bore,
In the days when the blue of our country you wore?

Dear voices long silent, dear eyes that are closed,
Dear forms bent with sorrows by treason imposed,
Whose blood flowed like rivers, whose lives were laid down
That the country you loved might go on to renown.
The country you bled for, and writhed in your pain,
Can it ever forget you? Would not God disdain
The people who ceased to remember with pride
And devotion the heroes who for them had died?

Yet now forty years have scarce faded away,
But who speaks or thinks of those heroes to-day?
The glorious hearts that were strangers to fear,
When danger assaulted the land they held dear,
Who sprang like a torrent from workshops and farms,
Till the very earth shook with the shock of their arms!
Yet who now remembers or trembles with pride
And tears for our glorious heroes who died?

Our heroes, who were they? Bright boys who with all
Life's joys opening for them sprang quick to the call
Of their country in need, and their gallant hearts burned,
And, oh, God, what they bore! what hosts ne'er returned!
They gave us our blessings! Oh, how they were bought!
For our country, our homes and our freedom they fought.
They suffered and died! forgot must they be?
Oh, when I forget them, may God forget me!

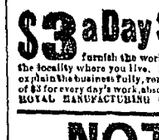
KITTY.

INDUCE

Your Neighbor to Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Now is the time to extend the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. It will contain Occult and Spiritualistic news with which every one should be familiar. No other paper published on this earth contains such a vast amount of matter so well adapted to enrich the mind. Send in a subscription now.

"New Testament Stories Comically Illustrated. Drawings by Watson Heston. With Critical and Humorous Comments upon the Texts." Heston's drawings are incomparable, and excruciatingly funny. Price in boards, $1. Cloth, $1.50.



REMARKABLE IVNENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342R, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS.

Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address

DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

I Turned Out $301.27

worth of plating in two weeks, writes M. L. Smith of Pa. (man's small outfit). Rev. Geo. P. Crawford writes, I made $7.00 first day. J. J. S. Mills, a farmer, writes, can easily make $5.00 day plating. Thos. Parker, school teacher 21 years, writes, "I made $9.80 profit one day, $9.55 another." Plating Business easily learned. We Teach You Free—No Experience Required. Everybody has tableware, watches, jewelry and metal goods to be plated. We plate with Gold, Silver, Nickel, Bronze, Brass, Tin, Copper. Heavy plate—latest process. No toy or humbug. Outfits all sizes. Everything guaranteed. LET US START YOU. Write for Catlog, Agency and Offer. F. Gray & Co., Plating Works, Cincinnati, O.

$3 a Day Sure Send us your address and we will show you how to make $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully, remember we guarantee a clear profit of $3 for every day's work, absolutely sure. Write at once. ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 867, Detroit, Mich.

NOTICE!

The Woolley Sanatorium, the only institution in the United States where the Opium, Cocaine and Whisky habits can be cured without exposure, and with so much ease for the patient. Only 30 days' time required. Describe your case and I will write you an opinion as to what I can accomplish for you. Ask your family physician to investigate. Dr. B. M. Woolley, 166 N. Pryor Street, Atlanta, Ga.

811

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

In the World Celestial

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance medium, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness.

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

President Bowles of the National Liberal League, says: "It is one of the choicest pieces of literature of this marvelous age of books."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price $1. For sale at this office.

A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

By Lilian Whiting.

Author of "The World Beautiful," "Kate Field," "After Her Death," "From Dreamland Sent," etc. With portrait. 16mo. Cloth, gilt. Price $1.25. The writer of this "Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning" has thrown the book into five chapters, with sub-titles as follows:

LIVING WITH VISIONS. "Summer Snow of Apple Blossoms;" Music-Flow of Pindar; Friends in the Unseen.

LOVES OF THE POETS. The Prefigured Friend; Vita Nuova; "One Day, My Siren."

IN THAT NEW WORLD. Pies and Poetry; In Casa Guidi; Florentine Days; Walter Savage Landor.

ART AND ITALY. Individuality of Character; The Clasped Hands; Kate Field's Records; Mrs. Browning's Death.

LILIES OF FLORENCE. Poetic Rank; Spiritual Laws; Modern Scientific Thought; The Consideration of Genius.

For Sale at this office.

MAHOMET His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

BODY AND SOUL.

BY J. CLEGG WRIGHT.

This volume consists of a course of lectures delivered in the trance state, and is certainly no small contribution to the study of the soul. It is a good work to open the eyes to the difference between the deductive and inductive process of mind. Bound in cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

ANCIENT INDIA, Its Language and [illegible] berg. Paper, [illegible]

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

ALL THE HONEST MEDIUMS IN CHICAGO RECEIVE THE CORDIAL ENDORSEMENT OF THE ILLINOIS STATE SPIRITUALIST ASSOCIATION, WHETHER ORDAINED OR NOT. AS THERE ARE NUMEROUS FRAUDS IN THE CITY, IT WOULD BE WELL FOR ALL CAMP OFFICIALS TO BE EXCEEDINGLY CAREFUL AND WRITE TO DR. GEO. B. WARNE, 4203 EVANS AVENUE, FOR INFORMATION, IF THEY DESIRE ANY PARTICULARS. SUMMER CAMP-MEETINGS, WHEN PURE IN SOCIAL CONDITIONS, ELEVATED IN MENTAL AND SPIRITUAL TONE AND CONDUCTED ON STRICTLY BUSINESS METHODS ARE POWERFUL AIDS IN SPREADING THE TRUTHS OF SPIRITUALISM. IT MUST NOT BE FORGOTTEN THAT THEY ARE ALSO THE HARVEST TIME FOR THE FAKIRS, BECAUSE THEY COME TO THE RALLYING CENTERS FOR NUMBERS OF PEOPLE, MANY OF WHOM ARE HUNGERING FOR PHENOMENA ALL THE REST OF THE YEAR AND READY THERE TO PART WITH THEIR MONEY WITHOUT PRUDENCE. SPIRITUALISTS AND THE PUBLIC AT LARGE LOOK TO EVERY ONE OF OUR CAMP OFFICIAL BOARDS TO PROMOTE DECENCY, ELIMINATE TRICKERY AND RECOGNIZE ONLY HONEST MEDIUMS. THEY SHOULD PROTECT THE NOVICE AND THE GULLIBLE FROM IMPOSITION AND ROBBERY. THEY ARE LARGELY EDUCATORS OF THE PUBLIC. CAUTION, CANDOR, COURAGE AND DISCERNMENT ARE REQUIRED BY THESE OFFICERS.

At the Engineers' Arms, at Nelson, in Lancashire, Eng., the ghost of Robert Adams, a former landlord who was buried at Aberdeen, is said to have been behaving most disgracefully of late. "He" is heard in the dead of night drinking behind the bar—one man declares he looked through a window and saw "him"—but when the present landlord and his friends and guests descend to eject the intruder its intangible form flits upstairs to the bedrooms and disports itself there with much noise and riot. The latest report from Nelson is that a former friend, secreted in the bar, saw Robert Adams' burly figure at the beer engine, but naturally failed to seize it.

Sunday, May 21, being the feast of St. Helen, the inhabitants of the village of Lozen Grad, in Roumania, celebrated their annual feast, when the "Nistinares," priest of a special sect, danced barefoot upon live coals, a ceremony which will continue every day till the end of the month. After mass, celebrated by the Bishop, a large pile of wood was set on fire, and toward evening the "Nistinares" took turns at dancing over the scattered embers, uttering prophecies as to the happenings of the coming year most closely affecting the members of the parish. While the ceremony was going on bands played and people surrounded the burning embers. The people believe the "Nistinares" inherit the power of walking unscathed over the fire and that even they could not enjoy the privilege except during this month, on the occasion of this special celebration. This rite has been celebrated from time immemorial in this particular locality, and attracts a large number of visitors. How did they withstand the burning embers? Were they mediums?

D. S. Dewey writes: "I had rather lose my dinner and supper than to lose a copy of The Progressive Thinker. I do think it is the best paper on God's green earth."

J. W. Buchanan has removed to 520 Thomas avenue, Dallas Texas, where his friends will please address him.

Mrs. Powderly writes: "The meetings at 6603 Halsted street are growing in numbers and are very interesting. Mrs. Orm will lecture for us Sunday evening. Ladies' Aid meets every Wednesday at 2 o'clock. Everybody welcome. Send to

E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "The auxiliary of the First Association has discontinued their meetings until October. Meetings are held at Mrs. W. Bocman's every Thursday afternoon at 2 p. m., during the summer. The Temple League met at Mr. and Mrs. Walter Williams'. Quite a sum was realized for the Temple. Sunday meetings are held at the home of the president, Mrs. W. Farrow, every other Sunday. Sunday, May 28, the Benevolent Spiritualists met at Mrs. Farrows'. Mrs. Congdon gave the opening address, followed with addresses by Mr. and Mrs. Walter Williams. Miss Farrow rendered several selections on the violin. Mr. and Mrs. Emil Nahle hold meetings as usual at Woons' Hall; Mrs. M. Price, every Sunday at No. 423 First street N. E.; Mrs. Leese at 720 Tenth N. W.; Mrs. Julia Warnekie, 122 I street N. W."

Dr. S. Weir Mitchell's avowal of his belief in "mind reading" is of much more consequence to the world than all of the great Osler's lucubrations on the decline of mental powers after the age of forty. If it is true, as this eminent neurologist and clear seeing author says it is, that a knowledge of facts and occurrences may be gained without vision, touch or hearing, it is plain that physical science as it is now authoritatively needs revision.—Tribune, La Salle, Ill.

W. Hassman writes: "The closing meeting of the North Star Spiritual Union was held May 28, at 1546 Milwaukee avenue, with a large attendance, especially from the Society Light More Light. The lecture was given by Dr. P. M. Esser, a noted teacher and healer residing at 82 Willow street, 2nd flat. The second speaker was Dr. Koehler of North avenue. Tests were given by Mrs. Johanna Rennau, 1812 Ashland avenue. The president gave thanks to all who attended the meetings and invited them back again at the opening gathering the first of September. The business meetings will be held at 33 Upton street every month as usual."

G. H. Brooks writes: "I have been so busy since my return home from Philadelphia after a very pleasant month's engagement with Mr. Locke's society, that I have not had time to write to The Progressive Thinker to let the many readers of the same, as well as my friends know of my work, or where I am. During our absence from home our house had been broken into, and everything scattered about the house, to such an extent that we shall never feel settled again. Some damage was done, but thus far we have found nothing missing. I arrived home the second of May, and wife and Raymond from Los Angeles, Cal., the next week. Wife has been greatly benefited by her trip to California, and is much better than when she went away. I have been serving the Spiritual Science Society of Rockford, Ill., during the month of May, and am to serve one Sunday in June. I find a very pleasant and successful society, and the engagement has been successful and most pleasing. I shall be found at my home, 114 President street, Wheaton, Ill., where I will respond to calls for funerals, and some work later on. Our little society in Wheaton intends holding a grove meeting either the third or last Sunday in June, at Glen Ellyn, where we shall be more than glad to welcome all of the Spiritualists who may feel to attend. In next week's issue I will tell how to get there, and when the meeting is to be, and the kind of talent we are to have. I trust in a short time to be out of my hurry, and give more time to my friends."

The nineteenth great picnic will be given by the First German Spiritualist Society of the West Side in Reisig's Grove, Riverside, Ill., on Sunday, June 18, 1905. Tickets, sold in advance, 25 cents. At the grove, 30 cents each. Take the Metropolitan Elevated (Garfield Park Line) to 52nd avenue, and from there take LaGrange car to the grove.

Mrs. H. A. Cross writes: "I wish to express my appreciation and thanks through the columns of The Progressive Thinker to Mrs. Geo. S. Lincoln and Mrs. C. Kirchner for opening their homes for the test circles held for the benefit of the Illinois Sunflower Club, auxiliary to the I. S. S. A., and also to the mediums who assisted them in the message giving; and also to thank the committee at the entertainment held at the Hyde Park Occult Society's Hall, for their good work, and the society for the use of its hall for our business meeting and the entertainment, and last but not least, our Sister Francis, who is always ready to offer her home for our little gatherings. Now everybody make up your minds to go to our Fourth of July picnic, to be held at Lake Bluff, Ill. Round trip tickets on the Chicago and Northwestern railroad, 75 cents. Basket lunch. Coffee and ice cream served. Chocolate set to be raffled that day."

Mrs. Kirchner writes: "On Sunday afternoon, May 28, we were again favored by having our Sister Briggs give us a grand inspirational talk. It being conference Sunday, quite a few took advantage of same and added their mite to the cause. Dr. Hager gave an elegant talk upon the continuity of life, from a scientific standpoint. Brother Lawrance also gave out some good thoughts, which carried considerable weight. Brother Thompson and Sister Weaver gave some grand demonstrations of spirit return, all of which were recognized. In the evening, owing to the absence of our president, Sister Trafton conducted the services. The speaker, Mrs. V. Darby, gave one of her eloquent discourses. After the lecture Sister Thompson and Brother Thompson and Sister Trafton gave some remarkable demonstrations of spirit return. Our choir, as usual, rendered beautiful music, which all claim is equal to any heard in the churches. We extend a cordial invitation to all to attend our services every Sunday afternoon at 3, and evening at 8, at Mission Hall, People's Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt street. We have our regular classes for dancing every Saturday night in Pleasure Hall and regular June dance, June 17. Picnic at Reissig's Grove, July 1. All are welcome."

Letters will reach Oscar A. Edgerly, the noted trance lecturer, at 42 Smith street, Lynn, Mass.

Our correspondent at Sandusky, O., writes: "Mrs. M. E. Jenkins, of Windsor, Ontario, served the Psychic Research Society of this city, May 21 and 28, as lecturer and message bearer. She quickly endeared herself to the audiences by the joyous messages she gave from the loved ones who have passed out of physical view. While here, she responded to a call from Put-in-Bay Island, where she held a parlor meeting, bringing comfort and consolation to many who had not had an opportunity to attend Spiritualist meetings. It is hoped that she will again visit this vicinity."

President writes from Rockford, Mich.: "The Rockford Spiritualists will hold their regular June meeting on Sunday, the 11th. Mrs. Abbie E. Sheets of Grand Ledge has promised to be with us. Mrs. Sheets is a favorite with the Rockford people, but has been unable to accept engagements for a long time by reason of illness. We are glad to learn that she is again able to go on with the good work."

H. Smith writes: "On Sunday evening, May 28, a large and appreciative audience congregated at the hall of the Students of Nature, 1565 Milwaukee avenue. The hall was crowded. Each person was given a red carnation. The platform was surrounded with Prof. S. Hunt's juvenile orchestra of 20 young musicians. Their instruments were violins, guitars and mandolins. The pastor in charge eloquently gave the history of the birth and growth of the society which she so cheerfully cradled for eleven years. Sister Kusserow and Sister McIntire gave much encouragement for the future. Rev. Dr. Koehler, an ex-minister of the Lutheran church, spoke on Decoration, which was appropriate for this occasion, he being a true teacher of Spiritualism. Brother J. Coe, our old veteran, spoke of the growth and unfoldment, like a flower, of the pastor, as he has watched her, as a florist would. W. Lynn gave twenty tests. All were recognized. This society has lived eleven years, and will open the doors at Van Buren Opera House in September, with the pastor as the leader and teacher. It is located at the corner of Madison street and California avenue."

Mrs. Laura Crawford writes from Detroit, Mich.: "The First Church of the Soul, 46 Grand River avenue., held its closing and memorial services May 28. A fine program was rendered. The hall was nicely decorated with flowers and flags, and crowded to the doors. Lecture by Mrs. L. Crawford. She was assisted in messages by Mrs. Nellie Medcalf and others, who did well in demonstrating the continuity of life. Thursday, the first day of June the Harmony Club will hold a social and prize drawing at the home of Mrs. Crawford, 198 Fourth street. This society has been organized two months; membership numbers 24. We will resume our meetings again Sept. 1. Allow me to say in regard to your valuable paper, which we have for sale at our meetings, it is the best exponent of the Spiritual truth known. Long may it live to carry the messages of truth to the starving children of humanity."

Mrs. B. Sidwell writes: "A very interesting trumpet seance was held at Sisters Montgomery and Brooks, 24 Jackson Place, Monday evening, May 29, for the benefit of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Rising Sun Mission. Quite a snug sum was realized which was donated to the Auxiliary to aid in their relief work. Our sisters give very fine trumpet manifestations, and are worthy of the support of all Spiritualists. They leave for Winslow, Ill., for two weeks, where they are to give trumpet manifestations to quite a number of professional people who are investigating. The Ladies' Auxiliary is assisting all who are needy. Seances to raise funds to carry on its work are held every Thursday evening at Sister Bigden's, 90 Warren avenue—always a number of good mediums present. Come help us along."

Jerry Robinson, a prominent Spiritualist and a wealthy Mississippi planter owning property on Lookout Mountain, where he had spent the summer for years, dropped dead of heart trouble in Chattanooga, Tenn., May 30. He was stricken as he started to board an electric car in front of Jo Anderson's drug store to go to the Central station where he intended to catch the Memphis train at 10:20 o'clock. He was the owner of the Natural Bridge property and a fine residence near it on Lookout Mountain. He bought this property for about $5,000 after the Natural Bridge Hotel suspended business some twenty years ago. Later he turned it over to the Spiritualists, who held meetings of different kinds on the property for a long time. The Spiritualists allowed the property to get in the chancery court, where Mr. Robinson secured possession of it again a short time ago.

Dr. H. A. Cross writes: "If the majority of materializing mediums do keep artificial toggery handy at their seances—which I hope is not true—I want to assure you that spirit materialization is a fact in nature, and I can prove it by truthful statements of my own personal experiences. There is the false, the fake, but the genuine does in reality exist also. One trumpet medium of Chicago, Mrs. Celia Hughes, has given her word of consent and willingness to join with any or all congenial members of the League Board, for a sitting once a week for the phase of trumpet manifestation in the light. It was my suggestion, and she willingly acquiesced. If we can get trumpet manifestation in the light, sitting the same as is the custom when sitting in the dark, the medium not touching the trumpet, and every one present seeing the trumpet lifted by unseen hands, and hearing the voice from unseen vocal organs, or even if the spirit hands were to be seen lifting the trumpet, what a glorious accomplishment for the cause of Spiritualism that would be, and to have it here in our city. Such a result is worth working for. Mrs. Celia Hughes is willing to join us in the effort. The idea is my suggestion. I hope to see it realized."

Dr. G. Lester Lane of Boston, writes: "A letter just received from Dr. Peebles informs me that he sailed for Boston last Saturday. He will be my guest while here. Queen Victoria's message given through me regarding Russo-Japanese war has now been fulfilled to the letter."

Dr. Louis H. Freedman, the noted Australian healer and physician, began a series of Sunday evening meetings, commencing June 4, in St. George's Hall, No. 3337 State street. The Doctor intends to make these meetings a continuous pleasure to come to; delightful singers will take part, and a variety of mediums will give messages. Various lecturers each Sunday and at every meeting. Dr. Freedman demonstrates his renowned faculty of extemporaneous diagnosis and healing the sick; he has removed to his old location, 3036 Indiana avenue, corner 31st street. Phone Douglas 108.

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, June 11, 1905, S. E. 58: "Birds."

Gem of Thought:

"He is in ignoble business who steals from his defenseless little friends, the birds; they cannot bar their homes, nor conquer their enemies."

For information concerning The Progressive Lyceum, authorized lesson sheet of the National Spiritualists Association, address John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

Begethe Sidwell writes: "The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Rising Sun Spiritual Mission has changed its meeting place from 54 N. Ashland avenue to 90 Warren avenue, where they will continue to give their regular test meetings on Thursday evenings at 8 p. m. sharp. All are cordially invited. Admission to these meetings will be 15 cents, the proceeds to go to the poor and needy. During the winter months we have been able, with the assistance of our numerous friends and co-workers, to supply provisions, fuel, rent and medical attendance whenever needed. While we expected to give up our meetings during the summer months, we are able by the assistance of our sister, Mrs. Bigden, who has given us the use of her commodious parlors free, to continue to hold meetings as heretofore. President Mrs. Etta White-Foote, will give dancing lessons every Saturday evening at the People's Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt streets. The proceeds of such lessons will go to help us in our work."

Fred D. Dunakin, one of the most efficient workers in our ranks, and who stands for pure Spiritualism and honest mediumship, has lately been elected as president of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association. He writes: "Our state convention was pronounced a perfect success from start to finish by all who were there, and I beg for the privilege to say a word in regard to Miss Edna Grant of Conneaut, Ohio. She is the sweetest and most inspirational and charming singer I ever heard. She sang at nearly every session of the convention and her smilling face and musical voice did more to imbue the large audiences who congregated there from time to time, with the spirit of truth, and expansion of soul than any discourse that was presented or delivered at that great convention. The work has a fair start in Ohio. We are on a good, substantial basis and all that is requisite for a successful year's work is a united effort on the part of all true workers to push the work so nobly begun on towards perfection."

John D. Severance writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: I wish to say a few words in regard to a young speaker of whom Grand Rapids Spiritualists are justly proud. I refer to Mrs. D. A. Morrill. A little over two years ago she made her debut as a speaker, and from that time she has been going steadily onward, meeting with success wherever she goes and to-day she ranks with our best speakers. She of herself is a bright, intelligent woman, but when under the control of her powerful guides it seems that the fields of wisdom are opened to her. She speaks rapidly, but very distinctly, clear, logical, forceful and eloquent. Last Sunday evening the New Thought society that Mrs. Morrill has served for the last two months, held memorial services and her closing lecture was indeed a wonder. She should be kept busy the year around, for such mediums will build up the Spiritualist movement, and lead humanity to higher conditions."

Irene Gay writes as follows of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association convention, paying a high tribute of respect to the retiring president, Mrs. Curran: "It was one of the most enjoyable spiritual gatherings I ever attended, that of the O. S. A. convention recently held in Ashtabula, Ohio. Fine weather, good speakers, soul-inspiring music, handsomely decorated halls and large audiences produced such favorable conditions that everyone was infected by it, and a general epidemic of harmony resulted therefrom. The local society at Ashtabula has long been noted for the harmonious and social element which pervaded its ranks, and during the recent convention, it was proven beyond all doubt that its reputation had been justly earned. Never were people better received or more warmly welcomed, and the kindly treatment accorded them will long be pleasantly remembered. It is not my intention to give the proceedings of the convention, as a full statement will be made by the state secretary, C. A. Sollinger, but will say the election of officers seemed to give uniform satisfaction, and I believe good and efficient service will be rendered by them. I wish to speak a few words of our retiring president, Carrie Firth Curran, of Toledo, Ohio. For two years she has faithfully served the O. S. A., and TOO MUCH PRAISE CANNOT BE GIVEN THIS NOBLE WOMAN WHO HAS SPARED NEITHER TIME, STRENGTH NOR MONEY IN ADVANCING THE CAUSE AND PRESENTING IT TO THE PUBLIC IN A TRULY SPIRITUAL LIGHT. I but voice the sentiment of all when I say that the O. S. A. is better spiritually and financially for having had Mrs. Curran as its president, and it was with regret we learned that ill health compelled her to decline accepting the office with its many onerous duties. The honest medium, as well as all seekers after truth have ever found in her a staunch friend, and that she may be restored to health and enabled to go on in the work wherein she has achieved such great success, is the prayer of those who know and love her."

G. W. C. writes from LaGrange, Ind.: "I am well pleased with The Progressive Thinker; don't know where I could better spend one dollar. I hope you will continue your grand thoughts and stirring discussions, and expose the fakers wherever they may be found, for they certainly are a menace to true Spiritualism. Stand for the truth and right, and all honest men and women will stand by you to the end."

Mrs. L. A. Griffin, the English psychic and message bearer, who has been serving the First Church of Hamilton, and now with the Progressive Spiritual Society of Toronto, Canada, is open for engagement for July, August, September and October of this year, with camp meetings, societies, etc. Address her in care of Mrs. Hobson, 28 Taylor street, Toronto, Canada.

Maggie Henry writes: "At old 77, the Universal Occult Society as usual had a very interesting meeting. Our pastor, F. M. Stoller, took for the scripture lesson a part of the 12th chapter of I. Corinthians. Some of the answers to the philosophical questions and especially one pertaining to psychometry as he is a fine psychometric reader himself, he is well qualified to answer it as well as all other questions pertaining to the spiritual philosophy, and all who are interested along this line of thought could not find a more interesting or instructive place to spend a couple of hours Sunday evening. We always have good spirit messages from Madame Lucille DeLoux and others. All are cordially invited to attend our meetings."

The Excelsior Daily Call says: "Human personality and its survival of bodily death, was demonstrated in a very striking manner by Mrs. McHenry, the trance medium and psychic expert, at the Saratoga Hotel, Excelsior Springs, Mo., one Sunday evening lately. The parlors of the hotel were comfortably filled, and the ladies and gentlemen present were given individual readings from personal articles placed upon a table. The readings were universally satisfactory and showed Mrs. McHenry to be a deep student of psychic research. Vocal selections of a high order rounded out an exceptionally entertaining and instructive program."

A. R. McDonald writes: "The Psychic Research Society of Toronto desires to make engagements for the ensuing year, with the best lecturers and test mediums. Kindly bear in mind, we court only the very best as the best are not too good for us. Address me with full particulars at No. 124 Victoria Street, Toronto, Canada."

W. J. Elmo writes: "The Spiritual Alliance Society, 3514 Vincennes avenue, near corner Cottage Grove and 35th street, holds its next social and dance Saturday evening, June 10. All welcome."

D. G. Hill writes: "Sunday, May 28, the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society was especially favored by large attendance at both services, and great interest was manifested in the lectures given by Mrs. Nellie Kusserow in the afternoon, and Dr. C. A. Burgess in the evening. Both of these speakers were at their very best; surrounded as they were by the splendid condition of the hall, they seemed to outdo themselves, if such could be possible, holding the closest attention of their audience until the last words were said, followed by mediums with messages and tests that carried comfort and conviction to the recipients. The speakers for June 11 will be for the afternoon, Mrs. M. Schumacher, pastor of the Society Students of Nature, and for the evening, that brilliant orator and talented man, Chas. Hughes, ex-state's attorney, who has entertained us on former occasions. Don't forget the grand entertainment and prize drawing, Saturday evening, June 17,, at O'Donnell College Hall, So. Paulina street, between Washington Blvd and Park avenue."

Answering the inquiry of a subscriber as to how and why the words "In God We Trust" were put on the silver dollar, we would say that for this pious lie the country is indebted to a man named Pollock, who, a generation ago, was superintendent of the Philadelphia mint. Pollock was almost insane, Ingersoll said, about having God in the Constitution. He placed the inscription on our coins without authority, but the act was approved by the government. In religion, as Shakspeare remarks, what damned error but some sober brow will bless it and approve it.—Truth Seeker.

Mrs. Ella Totten of Fort Worth, Texas, writes: "I read in The Progressive Thinker of a Mr. Burdette, who says he has proof positive that the Peoria trumpet and materializing mediums are fakes. There may be fakes there all right, but there is one genuine trumpet medium I know. Her name is Mrs. S. E. Pemberton, as fine a lady as ever lived and who gives you the truth and nothing but the truth. I think it is very wrong to paint all mediums the same, just because there are fakes in the town. If this man would call on this lady I think he would change his mind. Because we find frauds in the work it is no sign they are all frauds, and it shows a very weak place in any one saying so."

C. A. Sollinger, the secretary of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association, writes: "With pleasure we send you greetings from the O. S. A., who by rising vote send their heartfelt thanks to the spiritual press, especially to J. R. Francis, for the kind and generous help in keeping the work of the O. S. A. before the public."

W. J. W. writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "A prophetic message from the spirit of George Washington is right in line with what the guides of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond predict: Spirit Washington foretold through a trance medium of this city at the beginning of the war between Russia and Japan, that the Japanese would come out victorious. The Japanese are the most spiritual people hence the progressive forces on the spirit side could work with and influence them. Many advance military spirits from America were with the Japanese; also the great Confucius."

George B. Ferris writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "On the last Sunday in May the New Thought Spiritual Society concluded its meetings until after the summer is past, and will hold no more meetings until October, when the work will again be taken up, with greater zeal than ever, after the rest. On Sunday, the 28th, Memorial Day was observed with fitting exercises, which included brilliant addresses by Mrs. D. A. Morrill and Dr. J. C. Batdorf. The society during the past year has been very successful; the meetings have been well attended, and there is no indebtedness. The future of the society, too, seems to be assured. Plans are being considered to make the society more useful and more successful than ever before. We are in correspondence with a number of prominent speakers in regard to engagements for the coming season, and though no definite announcements can yet be made, it is certain that we will have on our rostrum some of the most talented and most widely known speakers now before the public. The Holland Unitarian church, where the meetings have been held for the past few months, is one of the most suitable meeting places that Grand Rapids Spiritualists have ever had; and it has been leased for another year."

Word comes from London, Eng., that a clock which is expected to run for 30,000 years or more is the latest result of the discovery of radium. This instrument has been invented by the Hon. H. G. Strutt, who is a son of Lord Rayleigh, the discoverer of argon, and recent winner of the Nobel prize for physics. In the clock one-twelfth of a grain of radium is suspended over a small electroscope consisting of two thin strips of silver. These, being charged with electricity from the radium, move apart, till they touch the sides of the vacuum tube in which they are fixed. There they communicate their charge to an aluminum wire which rings a bell, and, being discharged, fall together again, to repeat the process indefinitely. This extraordinary timepiece has just been placed on the market in London.

I. R. Armstrong of Vermont, writes: "The camp-meeting season again draws near, and as a former interested attendant and a present reader of Spiritualist literature, I wish to make a suggestion to those in authority at such summer gatherings. Of the transient visitors, many are excursionists of a class unable to go at other times, perhaps ignorant of what is taught there, and in numerous instances—as any camper can attest—eager to learn something in the brief interval usually afforded. In consideration of such circumstances it seems it would be well for management, mediums and officials of transportation companies concerned, to effect some arrangement—better than any I have witnessed—whereby the little time at their disposal may be spent by the sober-minded in listening to an enlightening discourse, or perhaps in a first consultation with a medium; further as an additional aid to the dissemination of a rational belief, I think it would be well for managers and editors of Spiritualist periodicals to distribute gratuitously at such times circulars containing directions for organizing house circles, a list of standard Spiritualist publications, information regarding the camps, etc. Comparatively, few visitors, if tactfully approached and politely requested, would refuse to accept them for examination at home, and new ideas first gained at the camp might thus be profitably developed and much good result."

Choice Poems by Mr. Edmiston.

To the Editor and Readers of The Progressive Thinker:—The N. S. A. has been presented with fifty copies of the handsome cloth-bound book of choice poems, the same to be sold for the benefit of our relief fund. The author has generously allowed us to sell these volumes for the exceedingly low price of fifty cents per copy. We trust the lovers of good poetry will hasten to secure a copy and thus help to swell our pension fund. We are in receipt of our portion of the funds raised on the Barrett quilt made by Mesdames Gott and Skogland; the amount will appear in our closing list; our grateful and sincere thanks are extended to all helpers in our good work. With cordial greetings to all.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.
600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C.

To German Spiritualists.

As there are many Germans interested in Spiritualism, who are often not able to understand the English language sufficiently to investigate through English meetings and English mediums, they will have opportunity to attend meetings in their own, the German language, at Lily Dale, during the camp season this summer. We will hold daily meetings there in German, aside from the regular meetings, which are of course in English, this German work being only a branch of all the good work that is done there.

The writer of this, with the assistance of other German mediums, will do this work. We hope a large number of German friends will attend the camp there, who would like to spend a summer vacation in the most delightful spot of the country, for rest and recreation, and get spiritual food and knowledge from their loved ones on the other side of the veil.

The railroad company has recognized the beauty and attraction of the place and has placed it among the summer resorts, making special rates; anyone wishing to come may ask their ticket agents for rates of excursion tickets good from June 1 until October 31.

We hope that mediums speaking the German language will wend their way to Lily Dale to assist in this work, which I think is needed in the camp and during summer season as well as at home in the winter; we hope that the readers having German friends will inform them, that they may consider Lily Dale when making their plans for the summer, that we may be able to make this a success and add to the good of the cause.

I will conduct developing classes and also hold seances and give private sittings for clairvoyant spiritual communications.

MRS. ELSIE STUMPF.

ROCHESTER, IND.

Spiritual Meetings of Interest and Profit Are Held There.

On May 15, those faithful, untiring workers in the vineyard of Spiritualism, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, paid a visit to Rochester friends to rest for a short period and incidentally to speak and give a comforting message to those of the fold. Many and loyal are the friends of these good people who are pleased to have them come among us. The meeting held at First Spiritualists Church was not so largely attended as on previous occasions, owing to the meeting being mid-week, when people are busy with material cares, nevertheless, all said and done at this one meeting was helpful and appreciated, and the weary pilgrims went on their way refreshed and happy for their visit.

May 21, Dr. George B. Warne conducted two splendid services in our city. The coming of this genial gentleman is always fruitful in good results. Therefore, every word he uttered was gratefully received. With Dr. Warne at the helm of Spiritualism, it is no wonder the fake element trembles. He is one of the saviors of Spiritualism and will be the means of washing its skirts from the filth so long besmirching it. Dr. Warne will always find a welcome among Rochester Spiritualists who believe in his methods and admire his manly courage to stand for the pure and honest in our cause.

May 30, a day of ideal beauty in nature, was also a day of spiritual feasting to the Spiritualists of our little city. Will V. Nicum, the apostle of Spiritual Spiritualism, delivered two lectures to fine audiences. By invitation of the officers of the church, Fredonia Lodge, Knights of Pythias attended services at First Spiritualist church to listen to this gifted and eloquent exponent of our philosophy. To say his effort was appreciated by the order and all listeners, is putting it mildly. We have engaged on our rostrum some of the best talent before the public in our our ranks, but it is safe to say no speaker has touched the responsive chord of sympathy and produced better results than this Dayton, Ohio, young man. Spiritualism means more than demonstrated immortality, it means the growth and development of the real man and woman. His plea for spiritualized Spiritualists will eventually bring about different conditions among the people and here and there will be found those who will reflect the radiance of the pure white light seen and experienced by this gentle teacher. If I was an orthodox I would pray the Lord to send more Will V. Nicums into Spiritualism to help us find the Christ within, and the good in everyone and everything. We will make a strong effort to have Mr. Nicum with us again in the fall as it is plainly to be seen he is the one to put life and new blood into the cause at Rochester.

MARGUERITE MILLER.
Rochester, Ind.

"Wedding Chimes." By Delpha Pearl Hughes. A tasty, beautiful and appropriate wedding souvenir. Contains marriage ceremony, marriage certificate, etc., with choice matter in poetry and prose. Specially designed for the use of the Spiritualist and Liberal ministry. Price 75 cents.

"Poems of Progress." By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily

OUR TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

And lastly, our latest premium book, "Letters From the Spirit World," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea.

All these TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.75 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family,—an achievement only accomplished by the Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

WHAT SHALL WE EAT?

The Food Question from the Standpoint of Health, Strength and Economy.

Containing numerous tables, showing the constituent elements of over three hundred food products and their relations, cost and nutritious values, time of digestion, etc., indicating best foods for all classes and conditions. By Alfred Andrews. 120 pp. Price, leatherette, 50 cents; cloth binding, 75 cents.

To many people there is no question of greater importance than the one asked in the title of this book, and no more satisfactory effort to answer it has been made than is to be found between the covers of this practical volume. It opens with a consideration of the purposes for which we eat, and how food material is converted to our needs, and is used in sustaining life.

A very important feature of the work is found in the numerous tables given, showing the results of some 1,500 analyses of food products to determine the constituent elements, comparative food values, time required for digestion, etc.

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

20th Century Guide TO PALMISTRY

This is the simplest, clearest and yet the most exhaustive presentation this interesting science has yet received. All of the discoveries, investigations and researches of centuries are summed up in this practical, fascinating treatise on Palmistry.

There is no trait, no characteristic, no inherited tendency, that is not marked on the palm of the hand and can be traced with unerring accuracy by following the principles enforced by the presented in this. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, $1.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Kind reader, are you or do you know of those sitting for development? No difference for what phase of mediumship. Send your address with a 2-ct postage stamp. In return I will give my experience and advice free of charge. J. G. HINDERER.
Anderson, Ind.

Can Telepathy Explain?

Results of Psychical Research.

By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage in this book of 243 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

"The Present Age and Inner Life; Ancient and Modern Mysteries Classified and explained." By Andrew Jackson Davis. We have a few copies of this work by the celebrated seer. Cloth, $1.10.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth, $1.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

S. P. LeRoy: Q. Where can I get Robert Ingersoll's lecture on "The Gods"?

A. It can be obtained through the office of The Progressive Thinker.

C. H. Doty: Q. It has been proven by Damus and others that Apollonius of Tyana, born in the year 2 A. D., and dying in the year 98 A. D., was a rare scholar, teacher, traveler, seer and healer. That he brought documents similar to our gospels from India. Allowing the personality of Jesus, what was the necessity for two individuals, of the same nature and office, at the same place and time? It has been asserted that the life and character of Apollonius has been attributed to that of Jesus. What is the probable truth?

A. The life of Apollonius is almost as obscure and mythical as that of Jesus, and it might be contended with plausibility that either one was a substitute for the other, or that both were reflections of more ancient persons. That part of history which touches religion has been so enwoven with fraud, interpolated and changed to suit the beliefs of copyists, that there is scarcely anything reliable. It is a fogland, with pleasing mirage conjured by the imagination of the travelers.

Our correspondent is too precise in his date of the birth of Apollonius. It is variously stated, showing that it is not exactly known. His birth was in the years of the first century and his life covered the greater part of the same.

He was a Pythagorian philosopher, traveled in India to learn the wisdom of the Brahmins, and returned to teach. As the Brahmins have not changed, we know what he learned of them and taught. He was thought by his disciples to be divine, and performed, it is recorded, astonishing miracles. Others regarded him as an impostor. It is probable that he, like all the ancient "philosophers," used the smattering of knowledge of nature he had gained to awe the ignorant masses with a show of "divine power." Every soul of them was a charlatan and pretender. Their "wisdom" was either a reiteration of platitudes, or word juggling, where words were taken for real things. They were compelled to perform miracles, for that was the only evidence of their superiority the people would receive. Their wisdom was of small moment if they could not heal the sick and raise the dead. Miracles were common to all prophets, messiahs and teachers. If they did not occur during their lives, their followers introduce them after the master's death. In that age no other record was made except by those interested, and in a generation all evidence for or against disappeared.

H. H. Budington: Q. Was not Shakspeare a medium, loftily inspired? No doubt many of his plays were extant before his time, yet ignorant as he was, could he have written with such exalted wisdom, had he not been impressed by wise spirits? He was, I believe, under the influence of Greek spirits.

A. Mr. H. H. Budington has published a pamphlet with a good showing of evidence as to the spiritual origin of Shakspeare's works. If this be admitted the answer recently given in The Progressive Thinker does not require modification. We all have the evidence of spirits that it is correct. As for Bacon we do not understand why he should be connected with Shakspeare at all. There is no allusion to him in the plays, and at Shakspeare's time no mention is made that he was not the author, or that Bacon was in any way concerned.

O. Merrill: Q. What is the origin of man, and at what time does the spirit take possession of the body?

A. It is the unanimous opinion of all scientists, that man came by evolution from lower forms of animal life; that he was not created, but evolved. This question has been treated at length by spirit intelligences in the book I published, "Origin and Antiquity of Man."

Taking this theory as correct, the spirit is the last link in the chain. It is the product, the fruitage of all this travail.

The body does not form the spirit, or the spirit the body. The two grow together, mutually dependent until death separates them.

For the individual preservation of the spirit a certain progress must be reached, and hence embryonic life does not carry with it prolongation after the death of the body.

Hon. R. A. Dague: Q. The San Francisco Examiner has the following news item: "Former Councilman Bernard C. Cuvellier shot himself yesterday on the roof of the eleven-story building of the Union Savings Bank, at Thirteenth street and Broadway, it being the anniversary of his father's suicide many years ago in New Orleans. Not only was it the same day of the week and month, but his father employed the same means to end his earthly cares and at the same hour of the day. The older Cuvellier and his son were also the same age when they invited death at their own hands." Was this "obsession," coincidence, or brooding over his trouble real or imaginary, did the knowledge that his father committed suicide influence the son?

A. From a previous, somewhat exhaustive study of this question, I think the law of heredity fully explains it. Perhaps the knowledge of his father's act may have been suggestive and produced that state of mind when one idea dominates, known as the hypnotic, but this would not have occurred had not the recipient's mind been favorably organized. It was like his father's and of necessity pursued the same career. An unlimited number of instances illustrating and paralleling this case of suicide might be collected. I will relate one which came under my own observation. A young man, a leader in business in a western city, deserted a wife and two children, for a paramour. He was in his 28th year and after a few years of profligacy, renounced his ways for a more correct life. There is nothing extraordinary about this, but on investigation it was found that his father at 28 deserted his wife who had two children, for a woman more attractive, leaving the mother to rear them with hardest labor. After a few years of dissipation, he returned to her and until his death, twenty years thereafter, was a model husband.

Continuing this line of research it was found that the grandfather had exactly the same career, leaving his wife at the same age, returning and living an exemplary life thereafter. The three, grandfather, son and grandson, as their portraits showed, had more than usual resemblance. They were actuated by the same motives, and there is no mystery in the fact that their actions were the same. We see instances every day where children follow the footsteps of their parents in noble deeds. Children are expected, at proper age, to reproduce the characteristics of their parents, and the surprise comes when they do not. Many times mental and physical peculiarities pass over a generation to re-appear in striking isolation in the character of some offspring.

The same law holds in the entire range of the animal world. The horse has been cultivated from immemorial time away from the wild stock and yet in the purest bred strains there is constant reversion to the original type. The dog reverts to his wolf or fox progenitors. The physical is accompanied with corresponding mental reversion. So well established is this fact of offspring taking back to more or less remote ancestors, that it has received a name, atavism, under which the facts are collected. It is the force which opposes evolutionary progress, holding specific forms to their own type, and obliterating the changes brought by accidents or conditions.

"Blood will tell," and this hereditary tendency often proves stronger than educational training, and the savage appears through the highest culture of civilization.

A New Phase of Mediumship.

R. S. Ray has recently developed an advanced phase of mediumship in the line of answering questions sent up by those in his audience. Mr. Ray passes through the aisles before the meeting is opened, giving each person a slip of paper and a pencil; they write one question, fold the paper and return to him. He places the papers, when they are all gathered, on the table in front of him, in plain sight of the audience, and does not touch them again until they have been answered, when he throws them into the waste basket.

The questions are answered in detail, names being given, and particulars in regard to the questions, the spirit friends of the questioner being often described, and even private conversations held by the questioners before leaving their homes, and other things which could not be known by a stranger (as Mr. Ray most assuredly is to most of those present) unless informed by spirits in touch with the parties and with him.

Mr. Ray's meetings are held in his large parlors, three connecting rooms, all brightly lighted, at 207 Lincoln avenue, between Garfield and Webster, every Sunday, Wednesday and Friday at 8 p. m.

The wonderful new phase of mediumship which he has developed consists in the fact that he does not touch the questions after they are handed to him in plain sight of the audience, and then laid together in a pile on the table, all the time in plain sight in a bright light. He leaves them there until after the opening hymn is sung, the invocation, and the address upon the Philosophy of Spiritualism, when he places himself in a receptive condition, passes his hands over the questions as they lay piled up on the table, about four or five inches above them, but not touching the papers, and immediately his spirit guide and the friends of the questioners commence giving him their answers, which he repeats to those in the audience whose satisfaction and often astonishment are unbounded. He often answers more than a hundred questions upon all possible subjects in an evening. People coming from as far as Austin and Maywood on the west, and Ravenswood and Evanston on the North and from the far South Side, a party of six came last Sunday in their automobile.

People may write their questions on their own paper at home, and place in sealed envelopes if they like, it makes no difference, the only stipulation being that no one but themselves and the Professor must touch the paper. Even Mrs. Ray does not touch a paper, because it would spoil the personal magnetism necessary for him to get in rapport with spirit friends of the questioner. The other evening a man forgot to hand in his question written at home, but his friends were so anxious to communicate with him that they came and told the Professor that the man had his question in his pocket but had forgotten to send it up, and the spirit who came answered the question just the same.

These things to those who are not Spiritualists are very wonderful and unexplainable—to us who know whereof we speak and why we believe, they come to be a matter of course.

FRANCES MARIE NORTON.

Chicago, Ill.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

MESSAGE FROM JOE JEFFERSON.

Given Through the Mediumship of Justin Hulburd.

Good morning, brother; one in faith, one in fact, one in a soul's desire. We can drink the libation of Truth together, calling that great divine power to bless our ministrations through life. The cup that will hold the seventh libation creates in man a brotherhood through eternity.

I have entered Searchlight Bower this morning to ask in all kindness that you will do me the favor to take down a communication and see that the same is conveyed through the mail to that glorious sheet of information, through the law of progression called The Progressive Thinker. Such is the prominent headline of that educational paper.

Before I go any further it is my desire to thank a lady whose soul is generosity. She says her name when in the physical life was Mrs. Mary C. Morse, the wife of Ephraim Weed Morse, one of San Diego's old citizens in Southern California. Her spirit name is Lovelight. She gave way to allow me to give this communication, as this was the day she was going to send a letter to her husband and spirit mate who still lives in the physical body.

Do you know, Brother Hulburd, woman's nature—bless them—is a constitution of love and generosity? I care not how low any female may fall below the law of morality, in that individual still lies a flame that can be kindled into love for a fellow-being. I believe it was woman that gave to the soul of man one of nature's laws called Generosity. I am willing to be convinced to the opposite. I would like to see the individual who had the power to convince me it was not so. Woman—bless her—is the mother, the wife and the comforter of man through life.

I hope Brother Francis, the editor of The Progressive Thinker, will permit me space in his glorious paper to send my soul love and spiritual greeting to those loved ones I left in the physical body and to all who call me their friend.

Now, brother, I wish to describe my entrance into spirit life through the new birth.

After I had made my exit from the physical body, when I opened my eyes and had taken in the visual condition called spiritual sight, I beheld my mother and father, and with them was my first female companion.

After I had received that joyful greeting, I looked upon my loved brother and professional companion, William Florence. He held by the hand one of my offspring. After I had received the greetings accorded me by my spirit friends, Billy Florence said: "Joe, you look like you had come from a hard rehearsal, and the long and tedious work has its effect upon your condition."

I said, "Dear Billy, when the curtain descended on the last act I was tired, that is all."

On his left stood Edwin Booth, John Spear, the astrologer, and wife on the right. Many happy days I passed in John's company. As I looked to the east I saw Edwin Forrest and Charlotte Cushman approaching, holding each other's hands with that great smile of affection called brother and sister love. Many of my professional sisters and brothers were in attendance with a host of other friends.

There came forward one whom I loved from boyhood—N. M. Higgins. His soul and life was that of music. When we clasped hands the echo of an orchestra was heard in the distance. The sound of each instrument showed to me they were in perfect tune. The tone was heavenly and I cried for joy. Brother Higgins said, "Joseph, I had in preparation this orchestra for your reception. Our rehearsal was that of joy to know we were going to welcome an old friend to spirit life." Oh, it was such a glorious meeting I cannot describe it to you. No pen or pencil can portray that blissful scene.

Mediums in the physical body erred when they described my spiritual home. Human nature is weak in many cases, and I found it so in those who were playing the role of public mediums.

I was conducted to the home of my loved ones in spirit life.

While enjoying that beautiful expression called soul friendship, Charlotte Cushman approached me and said, "Brother Joseph, do you not want to go and see Puss? You can talk through his organ of speech. Here are two guides waiting to conduct us to his home in the mountains. Come, they will lead the way. It is in their power to attach your force and will power to his organ of speech; through that channel you can convey your thoughts to the people living on the earth plane."

They led and we followed, that is why when I made you that other visit the attempt at producing a communication for the reading public was so feeble.

Perhaps you would like to know who gave that little Justin the name of Puss. It was I, Joseph Jefferson. When quite a lad, at rehearsal one morning in Washington, D. C., he was sitting on my knee, a little mite of a creature as I thought then. I thought I had grown to be quite a lad, and felt my superior condition over him, he being so small. I forgot then that he was a number of months older than I was. Edwin Forrest was playing a star engagement at the theatre. He came to where we were sitting and said, "Joe, let me take my little one; he appears in this scene. Do you not think we ought to give him a nickname?"

I said, "Yes, let's call him Puss, he's so little for his age."

He held up a stick of candy and said, "Joe, hold this until I get through; don't you take too many licks now, because I can tell, you can lick down to there," pointing his little finger down on the stick of candy.

Brother that is a sweet memory to me. I treasured that as long as I lived in the physical body. Now in my spiritual existence the memory is sweeter than ever. I am today speaking through the organ of that little one that I loved so much on earth. He was looked upon by the professional sisters and brothers as a little queer individual, sensitive to all influences that he came in rapport with.

I remember on one occasion Edwin Forrest said to Edwin Booth, "The world will hear from that little one yet. I hope it will not come to pass until he has closed his professional career." The spirit world understood what they required.

While under the guardianship of Brother Warren his mediumship was put into full force between the North and South, during the civil war. He obeyed the commands of a spirit voice, and many papers reached Abraham Lincoln's hands through a force called Mind. The action was physical. The higher element was spiritual. He was borne on that force and gave into the hands of Abraham Lincoln that which was valuable. Abraham Lincoln tells me he watched for his coming with the anxiety of a mother for her child, expecting to hear every day that he had been shot down.

He still lives in his physical body. His hair is white. That keen look of his intellect can at times also be seen. He still lives a monument of his past life. Those that loved him in his professional career have passed on to a higher life, the real world of thought.

I send my love and blessing to the friends that were kind to me, and may the higher angels bless my dear ones.

I thank you for taking down this communication, and hope the editor of The Progressive Thinker will find space for it in his valuable paper. It is the only channel at present through which I can convey my thoughts to the friends still living in the physical body. I am on the look-out for another medium nearer home through whom I can reach my loved ones and speak to them through the power of oral language.

Your friend and the friend of all progressive thinkers, I understood the power of spirit communication while living in a physical body. Adieu until we we meet again.

JOSEPH JEFFERSON.

"I AIN'T LOST MY RELIGION."

Commentary and Criticism—Theism and Atheism.

Some people remind me of the old African who, in a moment of pious enthusiasm, arose in a meeting and delivered himself as follows: "Brothers and sisters, you know and I know I ain't been what I oughter been. I've robbed hen-roosts and stole hogs and told lies and got drunk and cussed and swore; but I thank God there's one thing I ain't never done—I ain't never lost my religion."

I do not insinuate that these persons have lied or sworn or stolen or got drunk, but use this case to illustrate another point. They have passed through many changes and have been obliged to modify or drop some points of old religious belief to agree with their knowledge of Spiritualism; nevertheless, they still hold some points of old faith acquired in early life, and will cling to these until they land "on the other side of Jordan." They have not lost their religion.

I want to analyze some of the saying, statements and mistakes of this class, and do it so as to avoid personality.

"Men are made in the image of God," a common expression of Theists, leads us to inquire which men and which god? Some men are black, some white, some yellow; so there should be black, white and yellow gods to correspond. There are many gods and many men in endless variety; but let us suppose there is but one god and men in his image, as alleged; we want to know which man or men are the best likeness of him? As we may get a true idea of a thing by seeing its image, we should perceive exactly what a god is in appearance by observing its image.

We would transpose the statement so as to read: Gods are made in the image of men. All gods are man-made; and it is very uncertain what men mean by God.

The argument that man is the image, the offspring, the counterpart of a god proves that the said god is one of bad character, because humanity has been and is bad, for the most part; and the bad qualities must have been transmitted to them from the creator.

But we are told that man is the counterpart of God only in his good qualities; while in all things bad, wrong, evil, he is the image and child of Satan.

That does not help the matter any, for this god, they say, made Satan also, who derived his natural attributes from this maker the same as other individuals. However, leaving Satan out of view, the wrong doing and evil in men prove a bad creator, on the hypothesis of offspring, image and counterpart.

The water in the stream is like that in the fountain. A thing made is attributable to its maker. Like produces like in all nature; and there is no fair or logical reason why a god should naturally be better than his offspring and counterpart.

Some Spiritualists have repudiated Jehovah, yet believe in and recognize the Christian god of popular religion. We have understood that the god of the bible is one and the same god all the way through; but now it seems there are two—one, the Christian god; the other, god of the Jews. When they assert "the Bible is the word of God" they should state definitely which god. They often quote "None is good but one, and that is God." That is the Christian god—worst and most abominable of all gods—well proven in history.

Dr. Blank says: "When I speak of Christianity I have no reference to the Jewish Jehovah—when I use the word God I do not refer to Jehovah." The god that Christians worship is declared to be "the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob," which is the Jewish Jehovah. The pedigree of Christ runs back through the genealogies of Jewish history. He was a Jew and his father must have been a Jew, inevitably—"the Father of an only Son Jesus" by a virgin, according to the fable.

At another time Blank affirms, "God did not speak his last words to Moses on Sinai nor to John in the rugged isle of Patmos. He speaks to us in every true soul thought today." It is evident that the god he recognizes is the one that spoke to Moses and to John, the Apostle. (Jehovah)

If any god speaks to us in the soul thoughts expressed by Blank, it says some crooked, contradictory things, impossible to understand. His god-webs-on-the-brain is built upon the shifting sands of Christian ignorance, paraded as "divine wisdom."

Dr. Blank's latest definition—"God is spirit—the infinite consciousness, life, purpose, will, wisdom of the universe. This God I believe in, trust and reverence."

If he will confine his averments to this world, it will be big enough for all practical purposes. What does he know of the infinite and the universe? and of a god that he avers is "undefinable, incomprehensible, unknowable?" His proof is assertion, assumption, inference of what he believes.

He says, "We might as well attempt to blot the immortality idea out of human beings as the God idea. They are innate ideas."

There is nothing he claims to know so much about as his ideal god. Innate ideas, facts, principles are well sustained by science, nature, reason, demonstration. The god idea is a thing of faith and education, and god ideas are as different as the various god believers — doctrines assumed, taught, believed—fabrications without support of science or nature.

Blank claims to have held conversations with Jesus Christ, but says others who claimed this were obsessed; and he proved certain persons obsessed or insane because they claimed to be God or servants of God to deliver his message; notwithstanding, he says of himself: "I am a conscious individual, a germ of divinity, a portion of God." He seems to be "a chip of the old block." May not this prove him insane or obsessed by the phantom of an imaginary god—measured by his own rule?

He makes the charge of "blasphemy" against persons opposed to prayers to his unknown god or "speak irreverently of sacred prayer"—says "they write with pens dipped in the gall of demonism and exhibit the froth of hell." He may frighten some people with his hell and blasphemy, but those free from religious bondage will not be disturbed. Denunciations of "the infidels and atheists" do not settle anything in argument.

We do not recognize any such thing as blasphemy, have no reverence for sacred things, and we perceive the error and folly of prayers to imaginary gods. No prayer was ever heard and answered by any god. We worship no person or thing—we reverence nobody—nothing.

It is queer how some folks affirm so much of a thing that is incomprehensible and define a word that is undefinable. The only visible, palpable part of a god is the name—all else is myth, faith, fancy: Men worship a monster of their own creation. "The Omnipotent God" is an omnipotent tyrant and criminal.

Spiritualism meets the whole Christian gospel of salvation and damnation with square denial and proves it utterly false.

The Bible is the great compendium of errors, fables, myths; and it takes one error to prove another all the way through theology. Theism is mystery of the unknown, the worst of all delusions, involving man in a maze of blasting contradictions, of no importance to humanity. What we believe is not as important as what we know. The logical mind demands facts in proof of theory. We are no longer dependent upon imaginary idealism.

A. H. NICHOLAS.

A GREAT WOMAN GONE.

Mrs. Livermore's Interest in Woman Suffrage.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, whose recent death has called forth words of appreciation, love and admiration from those who have known of her work all over the civilized world, never lost her interest in all worthy reforms. In an address not long ago, after reviewing the good work that women are now doing in a multitude of lines formerly thought impossible to them, she said:

"The ballot is the synonym and symbol of equality in a republic. We must have this symbol of equality before women can do their best work in any department of life. Now, they are most of the time trying to undo the mischief done by others, or by the law.

"Women are allowed to look after the defectives and unfortunates, but they want to get back behind the causes of pauperism and insanity, and in nine-tenths of the cases these result from bad laws.

"Women have no antagonism toward men. We love men quite as well as we ought to, and often better. They only need to beckon at any moment, and we are ready to rush to the uttermost. It is this very wish to help that makes us long for the ballot.

"During the civil war, the major of the 20th Indiana Regiment was brought to my house in Chicago, with seven partly healed wounds, received at Gettysburg. He told me that in the beginning of the battle his regiment was stationed on a hill among the reserves. The smoke hid the battlefield; they could not see what was going on, and the screaming of the shells was so terrible that he found himself trembling with fear. After awhile the smoke blew away, and they could see, on a hill opposite, other reserves, including the 18th Indiana. Presently the other reserves were ordered down, and the major cried, 'Boys there goes the 18th Indiana into the fight!' The grape and canister tore through them mowing great swaths. On they went, keeping step and time, making their way around the great mounds of dead. And the 20th Indiana watched in agony the slaughter of their comrades and friends, and the major cried, 'O, God, why don't they call us reserves into action? We could charge down the hill and spike those guns!' I think of this as I read the papers, and as I go among the slums. I say to myself, 'O, God, why do not these beloved men, the halves of ourselves, call on us, their reserves? We could save them!'

"The same lesson came to us from our sick and wounded soldiers during the Spanish war; it comes to us in all charitable and philanthropic work. It is this that makes me—now facing my 84th birthday—still keep asking that we women may be classed not politically with state prison convicts, but with the men of our own households, whom we have helped to make and rear."

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

On Monday May 22, Rev. G. C. Love delivered the funeral discourse of Harriet Susan Parmenter, near the town of Barlow, Oregon. Miss Parmenter was nearly 15 years old, and had been an invalid for eight years; for five years was helpless, yet was ever patient in her sufferings. The flowers brought by loving friends completely covered her grave, showing she had many friends to miss her in this life.

Henry Upsall passed to the higher life, May 26, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ballou, Chicago, aged 74. The funeral was held at Watseka at the home of his son, and conducted by Dr. H. H. Alter of Watseka, and Margaret E. Skeels of Onarga. Mr. Upsall was a devout Spiritualist, a Mason, Odd Fellow and G. A. R. The Odd Fellows conducted the services at the grave.

MARGARET E. SKEELS.

Passed to spirit life, Mrs. Rose Bracher, age 34, Sunday, May 21, at her late residence, 431 North Harrison avenue, Canton, Ohio. She leaves a husband, one son and one brother; also her parents. Mrs. Bracher and her husband were Spiritualists, she having passed away in that belief. It was her request that Mrs. Nina D. Challen should take charge of her funeral, which she did most beautifully.

MR. B. LINT.

Released from earthly bondage, Harry Price, youngest son of Mrs. E. B. Price of St. Louis, Mo., the well-known trance lecturer and clairvoyant, after a long siege of suffering and pain, under which the young man bore up with great fortitude. He was 19 years old and was a dutiful son and beloved brother. The change called "Death" held no terrors for him and his last request was that he be given a Spiritualistic funeral, which took place, May 29, and was conducted by the Society for Spiritual Research, among which the young man had a host of friends. Services were held at the house by Mrs. K. T. Harry of St. Louis and at the grave by Mr. W. J. Erwood of Wisconsin.

OSCAR F. EVERTZ.

St. Louis, Mo.

"Love—Sex—Immortality." By Dr. [illegible]

BOOKS FOR ALL SPIRITUALISTS TO PERUSE.

Obsession. How evil spirits influence mortals, and how to guard against the same. A very necessary and interesting study for sensitives. By M. Faraday. 23 pages. Price 10 cents.

Oceanides. A story of spirit life, by Carlyle Petersilea. Price, paper cover only, 50 cents.

Origin of Species. By Charles Darwin. Price, cloth, gilt top, 50 cts.

Origin, Development and Destiny of Man. A scientific and philosophical treatise upon a subject of which man never tires—that of himself. By Thos. P. Fletcher. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

Out of the Depths Into the Light. This little book will be read with intense interest by thousands. By Samuel Bowles; Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, medium. Price 25 cents.

Our Bible, Who Wrote It, and a Few Thoughts on Other Bibles. By Moses Hull. Price, $1.

Palmistry. By Comte de Saint Germain, A. B., L. L M. Practical palmistry, or hand reading simplified. Price 75 cents.

Past and Present. By Thomas Carlyle. Price 50 cents.

Perfect Motherhood, or Mabel Raymond's Resolve. Dedicated to woman everywhere, that children may cease to be born accursed. By Lois Waisbrooker. Price, cloth, $1.

Philip Carlisle. By Carlyle Petersilea. A romance, and full of spiritual thought. Price, $1.

Philosophy of Phenomena. Physical and Metaphysical. Matter phenomena and life phenomena. Objective and subjective phenomena. Hyperbole metaphysical. By Geo. M. Ramsey, M. D. Price, cloth $1.

Philosophy of Spiritual intercourse. Contains an account of the very wonderful spiritual developments at the house of Rev. Dr. Phelps, Stratford, Conn. By A. J. Davis. Price, cloth, $1; postage 8 cents.

Physical Culture Cook Book. By Bernarr Macfadden. Price $1.

Poems From the Inner Life. These poems are full of soul inspiration—are real poetic gems; sweet with the highest thought. By Lizzie Doten. Price $1.

Poems of Progress. By Lizzie Doten. Price, $1.

Poems of Passion. By Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Price $1.

Poems of Pleasure. By Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Price $1.

Poems of Power. By Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Price $1.

Poems of the Life Beyond and Within. From the poetic inspirations of many centuries and of different peoples. Spiritual poetry translated from many tongues. By Giles B. Stebbins. Price $1.

Political Works of Thomas Paine. Containing the three volumes—"Common Sense," "The Crisis" and "Rights of Man"—three volumes in one. Just the book for patriotic Americans. Price, cloth $1.

Power of Self-Formation. By Leroy Berrier. In two styles of binding; paper cover, 50 cents; cloth cover, 80 cents.

Practical Methods to Insure Success. A valuable little work, full of practical instruction in matters pertaining to the physical, mental and spiritual health. Worth many times its cost. Price 10 cents.

Primary Factors of Organic Evolution. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D., Member of the U. S. National Academy of Science, Professor of Zoology in the University of Pennsylvania. Price, cloth, $2.

Prophets of Israel. Comprises in the main popular sketches from Old Testament History. By Carl H. Cornill, Doctor of Theology and Professor of Old Testament History. Price 25 cents.

Psychic Experiences. By Ella M. Dole. Price, 50 cents.

Psychic Light. Continuity of Law and Life. By Maud Lord Drake. This book is from the pen of an acknowledged leader in psychic philosophy and a successful demonstrator of its phenomena, and one of the oldest advocates of New Thought and Higher Education. Cloth bound. Price, $1.50.

Psychometry. Its Science and Law of Unfoldment. By J. C. F. Grumbine. Price, 50 cents.

Pulpit, Pew and Cradle. Second paragraph in book, last two lines reads: "Christianity is one thing for grown men. It is quite another thing for women and children. By Helen H. Gardner. Price 10 cents.

Radiant Energy and Its Analysis. Its Relation to Modern Astrophysics. By Prof. Edgar L. Larkin, director of Lowe Observatory. Containing numerous illustrations and diagrams. Price $1.75.

Realization. A Course of Lessons Upon the Inner Nature of the Self. By Loraine Follett. Price, 50 cents.

Reincarnation. By Walker and Wood. Price, leatherette, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents;

Reincarnation, or the Doctrine of the Soul's Successive Embodiments. Examined and discussed pro and con by Dr. J. M. Peebles versus Dr. Helen Densmore and W. J. Colville. Paper cover. Price 30 cents.

Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe, and the Law of Control. New edition, enlarged and revised and greatly improved. By M. Faraday. Price 15 cents.

Religious and Theological works of Thomas Paine. Here is a book that should be in the library of every Spiritualist and Freethinker in the land. Price, cloth, $1.

Religion. A profound philosophical treatise on this world-wide subject of contention. It is a good book for students preparing for the spiritual rostrum. By E. D. Babbitt. Price, cloth $1; paper, 50c; postage, 10 cents.

Rending the Vail. Given through the mediumship of W. W. Aber Price, $1.50; postage, 25 cents.

Researches Into the Phenomena of Modern Spiritualism. By Sir Wm Crookes. Illustrated. Price 50 cents.

Right Generation, the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth. An appeal to reason and man's highest aspirations. By Dr. M. E. Conger Price, leatherette cover, 40 cents.

Right Living. This book gives an admirable course of study in ethics, and supplies a long-felt want of an ethical text-book adapted to the comprehension of children. By Susan H. Wixon. Price, cloth, $1.

Rights of Man. Being an answer to Mr. Burke's attack upon the French Revolution. By Thomas Paine. Post 8vo; 279 pages. Price paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Romance of Two Worlds. By Marie Corelli. Price 50 cents.

Schopenhauer's Essays. Translated by T. B. Saunders. Price 75 c.

Scientific Basis of Spiritualism. By Epes Sargent. $1; postage 10c.

Sixth and Seventh Book of Moses. Translated from the ancient Hebrew. Price, $1.

Science of Spirit Return. By one of the scientific minds of The Progressive Thinker corps of contributors. Rich with profound thought By Charles Dawbarn. Price 10 cents.

Social Upbuilding, including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennobling of Humanity. By E. D Babbitt, M. D. Price paper, 15 cents.

Some Glimpses of Occultism Ancient and Modern. A series of lectures by C. W. Leadbeater. Price, $1.50.

Spirit Echoes. Poems and Short sketches. By Mrs. Mattie E. Hull. An attractive little volume, neatly bound in cloth. Price 75 cents.

Spiritism. Mrs. Piper's and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's theories in regard to it. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey, ex-president of the Medico-Legal Society of New York. Price 25 cents.

Standing up for Jesus, or what the editor of the Freethinker's Magazine thinks of him on general principles. Profound, biblical, sarcastic. Price 4 cents; 25 copies for 50 cents.

Spiritual Harp. A collection of vocal music for the choir, congregation and social circles. By J. M. Peebles and J. O. Barrett; E. H. Bailey, musical editor. Price $1.25. Postage 14 cents.

Spiritual Songster. A collection of thirty-eight inspirational songs, adapted to popular music, for the use of congregations, circles and families. By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

Starnos. A rosary of pearls culled from the works of Andrew Jackson Davis. Intended to imbue the sorrowing and stricken heart with new inspiration. By Dr. Della E. Davis. Price 50 cents.

Startling Facts or Deeds of Darkness Disclosed, Relative to Auricular Confession, and Its Relations to Sacerdotal Celibacy, Convents, Monasteries, Morality, and Civil and Religious Liberty. By Rev. J. G. White. Price, 75 cents.

Strike of a Sex. A unique story of a strike among women. Price 25c.

Studies in the Outlying Fields of Psychic Science. How to investigate, form circles and develop mediumship. A test of genuine mediumship. By Hudson Tuttle. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Success, and How to Win It. A lecture and course of twenty-four success lessons by Dr. B. F. Austin, B. A., D. D. Price 25 cents.

Superstition in All Ages, or "Le Bons Sens." Testimony of a Catholic priest who abjured the Christian religion and asked God's pardon for having taught it. Price, cloth, $1; postage 14 cents.

Talleyrand's Letter to the Pope. This work will be found especially interesting to all who would desire to make a study of Romanism and the Bible. Price 25 cents.

Teachings of Jesus, Not Adapted to Modern Civilization. With the true character of Mary Magdalene. A book full of truth. By George W. Brown, M. D. Price 15 cents.

Ten Commandments Analyzed. By W. H. Bach. Price, 25 cents.

The Arcana of Spiritualism. A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy. A splendid work by the seer and philosopher, Hudson Tuttle. Price, $1.25.

The A, B, Z of Our Own Nutrition. An excellent work and guide to perfect health. By Horace Fletcher. Price, $1.

Leaves From the Diary of a Spiritualist Medium

An Interesting and Instructive Narrative from the Pen of that Talented Lady and Excellent Medium, Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vermont.

April 20. "Nothing much," as Aunt Sue says, has come to me to-day, so I will devote to-day's pages to an account of the Rising Up of Betsey Jane. For some time I have felt a drawing toward Steelville, and when I got a letter asking me to come over as soon as possible and hold a meeting in the hall, I came.

It seems that a medium, Mr. Strong, came to the place several months ago and held circles in various private houses every week for some time. By what I have heard of him he must be a fine medium but he is not a speaker. He succeeded in waking up the sleepy church members in the place, not to mention the "sinners" the church had failed to reach.

Steelville was thoroughly roused at last and Mr. Strong was fairly besieged by investigators and his seances were crowded, but personal affairs called him to a distant state and the meetings had to be discontinued. After Mr. Strong's departure the minister of the most popular church in the place preached a sermon denouncing Spiritualism and he made a good many statements that will not make his record look pretty in the day of judgment." Many of the church members, including one of the deacons, were very angry and remarks anything but Christ-like were hurled from one party to the other, until it looked as if the "temple would be rent in twain," as the minister expressed it. To stay the storm a minister from another town was sent for and the opposing parties were requested to choose a spokesman and meet at a certain time and state their grievances, and the two elders would arrive at some decision provided they could not calm the tempest.

The two deacons were chosen to represent the two parties, and at the time appointed the church was so crowded there was hardly standing room. Before Deacon Foggy, who represented the church, got through with his accusations Deacon Broaden, who represented the Spiritualistic dissenters was taken violently ill and was helped to a nearby house by his alarmed family. This circumstance seemed to afford much satisfaction to Deacon Foggy and his party who hailed it as a sign that "the Lord was on their side. At the close of Deacon Foggy's remarks the out-of-town elder got up and commented briefly upon Deacon Broaden's illness and inquired if there was any one present who felt equal to filling his place. For a moment there was solemn stillness and then a woman plainly dressed, with gray hair and a kind motherly face, rose to her feet and surveyed the gathering. "I will take his place," she said simply.

A murmur of astonishment ran through the house, but above it a man's voice was heard to exclaim, "I vum, if Betsey Jane hain't riz up!" The woman waited until quiet was restored and then in a steady voice began to speak. "My friends, I ain't no orator nor scholar, but just a hard workin' farmer's wife, as you know; but what's in a person is bound to come out sooner or later, and my time has come to-night, and I'm going to stand up for what I know is the truth if the heavens fall. Deacon Foggy says Spiritualism is the devil's doings. Well, that is his personal opinion, and don't prove anything but his ignorance, besides the remarks is so old and worn-out it ain't fit to put in a rag bag.

"Next the Deacon told us that this Spiritualist feller Strong is no sort of a man, but queer in his talk and ways. Very likely, folks who don't believe as we do always are queer, but it's safe to say that Mr. Strong is a pretty straight man, for if he had disclosed a vice as big as a chickadee's eye the Deacon would have made a cloak out of it that would have covered him out of sight.

"The first real charge seems to be that this man Strong is leadin' the people into infidelity because he don't take much stock in the Jewish God. Well, if that being didn't want folks to pick flaws in his character, why didn't he hold himself above reproach, I'd like to know? If Mr. Strong won't have anything to do with such a god he is followin' the example set by Jesus Christ. Moses told his folks that God said so and so, but Christ told his folks that Moses said it and then he asserted his authority was way above it and just pushed Moses and his god right one side, and we haven't any reason to think that he ever acknowledged him. You church folks want to look out, or you'll find some folks that don't pretend are His closest followers after all.

"Next the Deacon told us that spirit messages work ruin and mischief, and to prove it he told us that a spirit came into one of his meetin's one night and said his name was Dudley Price and he advised his brother Andy to make a trade he was thinkin' about and Andy made the trade and lost all his property. If Deacon Foggy should meet a man who said he was my brother and the man should ask him to tell me to buy a certain thing and I should do it and lose my money, would Deacon Foggy want everybody to hold him and his religion accountable for it? Why can't you use a little sense, if you've got any? Everybody knows that Dudley Price was a poor shiftless critter whose chief business in life was settin' on the steps of the post-office tellin' how the United States government ought to be run, while his poor wife took in washin' to keep his from starvin'. Andy Price wouldn't have paid one mite of attention to any advice his brother might have given him before he died, so why should he now?

"You church folks have got it in your heads that death is goin' to make you all over, but your bible tells you plainly that he that is holy shall be holy still and he that is filthy shall be filthy still, and it stands to reason that a person who is a fool before he dies will be a fool afterward until he has had a chance to grow wise, and I wouldn't trust him for quite a spell, for folks that won't learn anything here, won't be likely to learn very fast there. You are spirits now just as much as you ever will be, and the quicker you get that idea in your heads the better off you'll be.

"It does beat all how old ideas will stick in a body's head! The most of the Spiritualists seem to think that death is bound to do a little contoggling for them and the ones they love best, but it won't. Death will take away from us all our conceit and wealth and hypocrisy and show and we shall appear to be just what we really are. You needn't go to thinkin' that Spiritualism gives folks leave to act like the Old Nick all their present lives, for it's no such thing—it just gets right down to the bottom of things and it cuts closer than any church creed you ever see.

"The Deacon's next charge is that the spirits that come are deceivin' spirits, and to prove it he tells us that Aunt Flida Rich's brother came into the seance one night and advised her to give her money to home missions, and by that we ought to know it was the devil and not Flida's brother, seein' he was a missionary to foreigners.

"If the report was true, Jabez Rich was eaten by the cannibals—I don't see how they ever stomached him, but perhaps his religion bein' hot and peppery made him set well—and judgin' by Deacon Foggy's remarks to-night I don't believe he'd want any of his money given to folks that had eaten him. If it was the devil in Mr. Strong that gave that advice to Flida Rich, I would like to know if it was the devil in Deacon Foggy that made him persuade old man Hogg when he was dyin' to give his money to the church?

"The Deacon says that Spiritualism is entirely contrary to the teachin's of the church. Well, so much the worse for the church then. The religion taught by Jesus Christ was entirely contrary to the teachin's of the church in them days, and I might say in these days too. Christ taught us that God is love and it is the love in us folks that makes us want to know whether our folks live after death or not.

"Aunt Hannah Goodno was the chief pillar of this church for years and years. I was in to see her after her girl Malviny died, and she says to me, 'Betsey Jane, you don't know how I miss Malviny, and it seems as if my heart would break for want of her. If I could only know that she still lives and loves me I could bear it better. If some one I could trust could see her or get one word from her, even if I couldn't, it seems to me I would be happy.'

"Here the poor old lady began to sob, and says she, 'My religion has always been a great comfort to me before, and it's been a mighty power to soothe and uplift when I've helped bury other women's girls, but some way now I can't get holt of it as I use to, and it seems kinder wobbly and far away, and I want to know my Malviny still lives.'

"That is the cry that goes out from every soul that has ever loved and lost. You church folks will yell yourselves hoarse declaring folks live after they die, but the minute somebody tries to prove it, you'll have a conniption fit. Now don't you Spiritualists get roasted up and go to twittin' and callin' names. If you've got somethin' worth having, let your words and your acts prove it, and keep holt of it, and let them howl if they want to. What's false is bound to die sooner or later, and neither you nor they can help it no matter how hard you hug it. Truth will grow stronger and brighter all the time so there ain't any call for anybody whose got it to get scairt and have spasms, for it will keep first rate. If you get all rousted up you will say and do lots of foolish things, but if you keep cool and sweet you'll be in a condition to see what's right and what's wrong. The proof of the puddin' ain't in the receipt you took to make it by, but in the eatin,' and the proof of religion ain't in the preachin' but the livin.' If you've got holt of something that makes you honest and kind and clean and happy, folks won't be long in findin' it out and wantin' to know what it is and how and where you got it.

"A few days ago I called on a neighbor—I'm not going to call names—and she is a dreadful nice, particular housekeeper, and her parlor is fixed up so nice and prim and she's that choice of it that she never opens it only on special occasions. Well, I hadn't been there a great while afore the minister came and so this woman asked us to go into the parlor. It was close and dark and everything looked as spick-span clean as a new hat. We hadn't been in there but a little while when Liddy Perkins and her three children come along, and of course they had to be taken into the parlor too. I knew it was goin' to make dreadful riley feelin's and lots of 'em, and it did. The children didn't want to stay there in the dark, and I didn't blame 'em if they didn't, and so they kept runnin out doors and leavin' the door open after them and that let a whole lot of sunshine in and if you'll believe it as soon as the sun got in good and bright we saw two or three great spider's webs right across some of the best pictures—Bible pictures they were, too—and we saw also that there were holes in the stuffin' to the sofa and the floor was real poor and didn't look a mite safe. The woman that owned these things was all worked up and set on the edge of a slippery hair-cloth chair with her back as stiff and straight as a board, and never took a bit of comfort; I don't believe she heard half the minister said when he tried to explain to us how that old infidel Joe Honest happened to die happy.

"Poor woman, she just ached all over with the misery them children gave her, and when they begun to to look at her relics and keepsakes and make remarks about 'em—children are master hands at makin' discoveries—I heard her mutter, real loud for a mutter, 'Drat them young ones!' but they didn't do a mite of harm, not one bit.

"Now the church is like that woman, and these Spiritualists are like them children, and the church is so afraid that the children will leave the door open—of course they will—and let the light of truth illumine her darkness and disclose her cobwebs and ragged furniture, that she can't take a minute's peace when they are around; and when they get to lookin' over the relics handed down to her from long ago she will sit stiff-backed and mutter—not very low—'Drat them young ones!' forgettin' that He whom they profess to foller said, 'Except ye become as little children, ye can in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven.'"

Betsey Jane sat down and for a moment there was silence and then the house rang with applause. The elders said they were sorry the people had been kept so late and closed the meeting at once. The next day Deacon Broaden who was as well as ever, wrote for me to come to them, and everywhere I have been among the farmers I have had to hear how Betsey Jane "riz up."

The Progressive Thinker.

A Paper that Never Falters, Never Pauses in Its Effort for the Greatest Good to the Cause of Spiritualism, Science, Morality, Higher Thought, and a Better Life. Never Lacking for Life and the Dissemination of Most Important Mind-Food.

Give Us the Truth, the Whole Truth, and Nothing but the Truth

Spiritualist Meetings.

It is important when a meeting is suspended, that notice be given us, so that inquirers may not be mislead. We want new notices of all meetings being held here in public halls at the present time.

First German Spiritualist Society on the West Side. Meetings every Sunday at 3 p. m. in Garselman's Hall, corner Ashland avenue and W. 13th street.

The North Star Spiritual Union holds services at Perl's Hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, every Sunday at 7:30 p. m. Mrs. Johanna Roennaw, test medium.

Central Spiritual Church holds services each Sunday afternoon at 2:30, at Fasking's hall, 30th and Archer avenue. Conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Howes.

The Light of Truth Church will hold services in Hopkins' Hall 528 W 63rd street, near Stewart avenue. Conference at 3 p. m. Lecture at 7:45. Messages at each service. Midweek meeting Thursday 3 p. m. Mrs. Jeffery Burland, pastor.

The Englewood Spiritual Union is now located at McDermott's Hall, 6603 South Halsted street. Meetings every Sunday evening at 7:30. Ladies' Auxiliary every Thursday afternoon at 2:30.

Chicago Spiritual Alliance Church, in Vincennes Hall, 35th and Cottage Grove avenue. Mrs. May Elmo, pastor, assisted by Hugh S. Fraser. All welcome. Services at 3 and 8 p. m.

Spiritual Church of All Souls, in Hope Hall, No. 220 Western avenue, between Jackson and Van Buren, Sunday evenings at 7:30, conducted by Mrs. R. Squire.

The Kenwood Spiritual Church will hold services every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at Kenwood Hall, Nos. 4308-10 Cottage Grove avenue. Good speakers and music. Mrs. Grace E. Aitken, pastor and test medium. Come and bring your friends.

The Progressive Society holds services every Sunday at 183 East North avenue, corner Burling, at 3 and 8 p. m. Good speakers, tests and messages at every session. Mrs. Hilbert, pastor.

The Church of the Psychic Forces holds services at Wilcox Hall, corner Champlain avenue and 43d street, every Sunday. Conference at 3 p. m. Lecture at 8 p. m. The hall number is 361-363 East 43d street. Conducted by Mrs. Isa Cleveland.

Church of the Spiritual Truth holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7:30 at 962 Milwaukee avenue, near North Paulina street. Mrs. J. DeLong, pastor.

Spiritual Science Society meets every Sunday from 2 to 10 p. m., at Arlington Hall, N. W. corner of 31st street and Indiana avenue. Admission to afternoon meetings, free; evening service, 15 cents. Mrs. Dixon and her daughter, the child wonder, will always be in attendance. Others will assist. These meetings will be continued all summer. Dr. Beverly, president, No. 44 East 31st street.

A Spiritualist Temple has been opened by Mrs. Schwann, at 523 Belmont avenue. Services held every Sunday and Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock. Tests and music at every service.

The Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature will hold Sunday evening services at 1565 Milwaukee avenue, corner Western avenue. Mrs. M. Schumacher, pastor.

The Universal Occult Society meets every Sunday at America Hall, 77 East 31st street, at 3 and 8 p. m. R. Gilray, pastor. Evangelist F. M. Stoller will preside at all meetings during the absence of Brother Gilray.

Lake View Spiritual Union holds Sunday afternoon meetings at 3 p. m., at Wells Hall, No. 1629 North Clark street, corner Fletcher, conducted by Dr. and Mrs. Carl A. Wickland. All cordially invited. Residence 616 Wells street.

Church of the Soul, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, pastor, meets every Sunday in room 309 Masonic Temple. Service 11 a. m. Sunday-school 10 a. m. Superintendent of Sunday-school, Mrs. S. J. Ashton. Pastor's address, 3802 Ridge avenue, Rogers Park. Day at home, Friday.

Meetings every Sunday at 10:45 a. m. at hall 210, Masonic Temple, under the auspices of Walter DeVoe, the well-known lecturer. Miss Cora M. Nafe, soloist.

The Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission holds regular services every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at the People's Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt streets. The Rising Sun Lyceum meets at 2 p. m.

The German-English Society Bund der Wahrheit No. 18, holds services every Sunday evening at 7:30 in Brandt's Hall, 152 E. North avenue, between Halsted and Clybourn; and every Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock sharp, at the National, formerly Garfield Turner Hall. Mr. Frank Joseph, medium.

Church of the Soul Communion holds meetings every Wednesday evening at 8 oclock and Sundays at 8 p. m., at 207 Lincoln avenue, between Garfield and Webster avenues. Lecture, messages and tests. R. S. Ray, pastor.

The Christian Occult Church, United Brotherhood Hall, 3245 State street. Every Sunday evening at 7:30. Test messages given by good mediums. Good speakers in attendance.

The Golden Rule Spiritualist Society will hold meetings every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at O'Donnell College Bldg., South Paulina street, between Washington Boulevard and Park avenue. All cordially invited.

Temple Light and Truth, 870 Wabansia avenue, near Robey street and North avenue. Sunday-school 10:30 a. m. Lectures and spirit messages given at 3 and 8 p. m., by Mrs. T. Loll, pastor, every Sunday, in German and English.

The Hyde Park Occult Society holds regular Sunday evening services, 7:45 o'clock, at 319 E. 55th street, between Kimbark and Monroe avenues. Jackson Park cars pass the door. The best talent available will be secured for all meetings. To spread the truth is the object of this society. Address all communications to Miss Eva L. Stewart, corresponding secretary, 543 E. 55th street. Entrance to hall, 319 E. 55th street.

The Chicago Spiritualists' League holds its meetings the first Tuesday evening of each month, at Kimball Hall, 243 Wabash avenue. Dr. Geo. B. Warne, president; O. E. Kropp, 5481 Kimbark avenue, secretary. The League wishes every Spiritualist society of the city to send in the names of all their mediums, stating their particular phase of mediumship. Address all communications to the secretary.

R. S. RAY, Psychic and Natural Clairvoyant Readings by mail, $1.00. 207 Lincoln ave., Chicago, Illinois.

MRS. DR. DIXON—Mail dime and birth date, 3 questions answered; private readings daily, 44 E. 31st st., Chicago.

MRS. DE WOLF KISER, (formerly of Chicago, Ill.). Readings by mail, $1.00, and postpaid, self-addressed envelope. Foster Opera House Bld., 8 and Walnut, Des Moines, Iowa.

Business Medium and Psychometrist.

Send date of birth, ask three questions, which will be answered, and a trial reading, for 25 cents. For psychometry, send article or specimen to read from. THERESE DUANE, Box 87, Berkeley, Cal.

Annie Lord Chamberlain's Card.

Dear friends, you can greatly help me care for my blind sister, Jennie L. Webb, one of the earliest mediums now in the form, by writing a letter to a spirit friend. Send it to me with $1, and I will try and get reply by independent writing or whispers. Address Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, Milford Mass.

MYSELF CURED I will gladly inform anyone addicted to COCAINE, MORPHINE, OPIUM OR LAUDANUM, of a never-failing harmless Home Cure. Address MRS. M. F. BALDWIN, Box 1212 Chicago, Ill.

TRUMPETS.

The infallible fibre trumpet is insulated top and bottom; shell, enamel, cardinal color finish, $1.50. Guaranteed, better than metal or any other material; very light in weight; absolutely tangible with spirit forces; warranted perfect or money refunded; cases with handles, $1.50. Booklet for all kinds of development, 12 cts, sent on receipt of price.

JAS. NEWTON, 423 Dorr St., Toledo, O.

PLEASE READ THIS.

If sick write me; will give you a free examination and surely cure you. I cure when all others fail. Nervous exhaustion and lost vigor of both sexes successfully treated. Great success with diseases of children. Write in own handwriting, giving name, age, sex, weight, leading symptom, and five 2-cent stamps, and receive a correct diagnosis, worth dollars to you. For children send lock of hair.

FRANCES L. LOUCKS, 35 Warren St., Stoneham, Mass.

FRED. P. EVANS,

The Noted Psychic for Independent Slate Writing and Clairvoyance,

Has recently left New York, and is now located at 1112 Eddy St., San Francisco, Cal. Send stamp for circular on Mediumship.

GREAT BOOKS AT LOW PRICES.

Researches in Modern Spiritualism. By the greatest living chemist, Sir William Crookes. New Amer. Ed. 50c. (Eng. Ed. costs $1.50.)

National Memory Training. By B. F. Austin, B. A., Ex-Principal Alma College. "The kernel of the Memory Systems." Highly commended by educators. 5th edition just out. 50c.

The Living Decalogue. Twelve masterly Expository Lectures by W. J. Colville, the great author and spiritual teacher. Just out. 50c.

Success and How to Win It. 24 New Thought Lessons by Dr. Austin, Editor of "Reason." Worth $25.00, but sold for 25c.

Reason. 48 pp. monthly. (New Thought and Psychic Research.) Edited by Dr. B. F. Austin, 50c. a year.

The four volumes, with "Reason," 1 year, $2.

AUSTIN PUBLISHING COMPANY, Department T, Rochester, N. Y.

Sheet Music. Three Beautiful Spiritual Songs.

"We Are Passing But Once This Way." Song and refrain, by P. O. Hudson; price, 25 cents.

"Satisfied." A reverie. By A. J. Maxham. Price 25 cents.

"The Light of Reason." English and German words; sung to the tune of "Lead, Kindly Light." Price 25 Cents.

LISBETH An Interesting Story of Two Worlds. Elevating, Fascinating and Instructive Throughout.

This work by Carrie E. S. Twing is exceptionally interesting. She well says: "These characters which have brought out the highest and lowest in different religious beliefs, have moved me, not I them." The whole book is interesting, fascinating, and instructive. Price, $1.00.

AFTER HER DEATH.

The Story of a Summer. By Lilian Whiting. Pervaded with pure and beautiful spirituality of thought. Instructive and helpful to all who love and seek the higher and finer ways of spiritual experience. Price, $1.00.

The Spiritual Association of Sixty-ninth street and Wentworth avenue, meets every Sunday at Alberta Hall, 6922. Hon. D. Gilmour will address the meeting at 7:30 p. m. Conference at 2:30 p. m.

The Society of Spiritual Unity holds meetings every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue, under the direction of Mrs. Nellie Kusserow.

Mrs. Virginia Bryan, one of our most eloquent trance mediums, will lecture at Star Lodge Hall, 378 South Western avenue, each Sunday evening.

STANDARD BOOKS,

Cloth Binding, 50c. Each.

The following books by well known and popular writers, we have selected with the thought that they will be of interest to our readers. They are printed on fine paper; perfectly clear, readable type; cloth binding. Good home library edition:

Heroes and Hero Worship, and the Heroic in History. The Hero as Divinity. The Hero as Prophet. The Hero as Poet. The Hero as Priest. The Hero as King. By Thomas Carlyle. 350 pages.

Past and Present. By Thomas Carlyle.

Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer.

Fairyland of Science. By Arabella B. Buckley. This book is written in such a pleasing manner that young as well as old can understand it. Illustrated, gilt top.

Origin of Species. By Charles Darwin.

Descent of Man. By Charles Darwin. These two books by Mr. Darwin, should be in every home.

Karma. A Novel. By A. P. Sinnett.

A Romance of Two Worlds. By Marie Corelli. A most wonderful occult story.

Zanoni. By Bulwer Lytton. A romance by that most wonderful and mystic writer, after a long residence in the East and an exhaustive study of occult lore.

Any one of the above valuable books can be obtained for 50 cents, a miracle of cheapness.

"Harmonics of Evolution: The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science, as Taught by Modern Masters of the Law." By Florence Huntley. A work of deep thought, carrying the principles of evolution into new fields. Price cloth, $2.

New Methods of Cure

Write Today to

DR. C. E. WATKINS,

Giving him your age, sex, and leading symptoms, and he will give you a diagnosis of your case, and very low terms for treatment, during June July and August; and will explain to you his

NEW METHODS OF CURE.

Remember that during June, July and August very low terms can be made with the Doctor.

No Charge for Diagnosing Your Case

DR. C. E. WATKINS, Hotel Westland, Back Bay, Boston, Mass.

ANDREW B. SPINNEY, M. D

Who has had

Forty Years' Experience in the Study and Practice of Medicine, Two Years Prof. in a Medical College, Ten Years IN SANITARIUM WORK,

and is a Natural Clairvoyant. He never fails in diagnosis, He has given special attention to eye, ear, throat and lung troubles, also all forms of nervous diseases of both sexes. Never fails to cure piles. If you would like an opinion of your case FREE, write just how you feel with your own hand and hold the letter in your hand five minutes. Enclose stamp for reply.

Address, ANDREW D. SPINNEY, M. D. Prop. Reed City Sanitarium, Reed City, Mich.

DR. J. S. LOUCKS

Is one of the oldest and most successful Spiritual and Magnetic Physicians. His cures are marvelous; his examinations are free to all who send him name, age, sex, and lock of hair, and 6 cents in stamps. He doesn't ask for leading symptoms. He treats nervous exhaustion of both sexes with wonderful success, at reduced prices. A trial will convince you. His practice extends all over the land. He cures you in your own home.

Address, J. S. LOUCKS, M. D., Lock Box 1203 Stoneham, Mass.

Academy of Higher Sciences

And College of Fine Forces.

Teaches new and wonderful methods of cure. "Fast becoming of world-wide fame."—H. Tuttle Light, Color, Electricity, Magnetism, Mind, Baths. Its beautiful Diploma confers title, "D. M." Doctor of Magnetics; can be gained at College or at one's home. Books and instruments furnished. Send stamp for catalogue to

E. D. BABBITT, M. D., 62 East Ave., Rochester, N. Y.

AN ASTONISHING OFFER

Send three two-cent stamps, lock of hair, age, name and the leading symptom, and your disease will be diagnosed free by spirit power.

Mrs. Dr. Dobson-Barker,

230 North Sixth St. San Jose, Cal

A Wonderful Spectacle. Restores Lost Vision. Write for Illustrated Circular showing styles and prices and photo of Spirit Yarma, who developed this Clairvoyant power in me. I can adjust my Melted Pebble Lens Spectacle as perfectly to your eyes at your own home and send by mail, as if you were in my office. Thousands will testify. B. F. FOOLE. 48 Evanston Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mr. Poole:—Your spectacles are perfect. I can say perfection, I shall recommend them to my friends. Ever your friend. E. B. Robertson, Los Angeles, Cal.

Rare Books For Sale.

Art Magic—Original de lux copy, cost $16.50. Will sell for $12; A BARGAIN.

Gerald Massey's "The Natural Genesis,"—2 volumes, and "The Book of Beginnings," 2 volumes, $16; worth $20. These books contain the origin of symbols, astrology, magical ritual, freemasonry and all religions. No idea can be had of their great value. A bargain.

History of the Doctrine of a Future Life. W. R. Alger. Cost $5; at $3.

Psychology—John Dewey, $1.25; now 90c.

Doctrine and Literature of the Cabbala. Waite. $3; at $2, now.

Dictionary of the Bible—Worth $15; at $8. A bargain. Address at once,

J. C. F. GRUMBINE, 1285 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, Mass.

A Big Cut in Occult Books

Of Priceless Value,

For the Next 15 Days Only.

READ CAREFULLY Clairvoyance, by J. C. F. Grumbine, 160 pages and containing new matter on Divination and Crystal-reading. It is endorsed by Lilian Whiting, Henry Wood, The Progressive Thinker, W. J. Colville, and all up-to-date writers and lecturers on occult subjects. Professor Hardin, the noted hypnotist, uses it as a text book for his students. Regular price, $2; now, $1.

"Auras and Colors," "Psychometry," "Realization," three 50c books for $1.

Crystals reduced from $2.25 to $1.75.

My Extraordinary System of Development. "The System of Philosophy Concerning Divinity"—never fails to develop your psychical powers. It is a revelation—an eye-opener. I can not emphasize its value too highly, as I unfolded by it! It teaches you how to sit, what to eat, the conditions to follow, how to avoid trances, obsessions, and to become a magus of the first order. The O. W. R. is the only Rosicrucian order in America. Send for prospectus, reduced terms, enclosing a stamped addressed envelope.

Address, J. C. F. GRUMBINE, 1285 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, Mass.

The Jesuits Containing chapters on Origin and History of the Jesuits; Principles and Aim of the "Company of Jesus;" Immoral Teachings of the Jesuits; Condemnation of the Order; Expulsion of the Jesuits; Bull of Pope Clement XIV., Abolishing the Society; The Jesuits' Estates Act; an appendix of valuable information. By B. F. Austin, A. M., B. D. Price 15c.

The Devil and the Adventists.

An Adventist attack upon Spiritualism repulsed. By Moses Hull. Price, 10 cents.

Force and Matter By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

THE LIFE RADIANT.

BY LILLIAN WHITING.—In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration. Price, cloth, $1.00.

A Very Interesting Book for Aff. Philosophy of Spiritual Intercourse. This work contains a graphic account of the very wonderful spiritual developments at the house of Rev. Dr. Phelps, Stratford, Conn., and similar cases in all parts of the country. This volume is the first from the author directly upon the subject of Spiritualism, and has stood the test of many years. Price, 75c; postage 5c.

LIST OF CAMP-MEETINGS.

Send In Your Dates and Name of Secretary at Once.

Interest in the various Spiritualist camp-meetings has commenced, and secretaries of the same should report at once to this office, so that proper announcement as to dates can be made.

MT. PLEASANT PARK, CLINTON, IA.

The twenty-third annual camp-meeting at Mt. Pleasant Park, opens July 30 and closes August 27. The very best talent has been secured for the season, and Opening Day promises to be a red letter day in the history of the camp. Programs and information given to all who write to Mrs. M. B. Anderson, secretary, Clarksville, Mo.

ONSET CAMP.

Onset camp commences its twenty-ninth annual meeting, July 23, and closes August 27. Onset is one of the most beautiful seashore resorts in the world, and is in close proximity to other noted summer resorts. It is connected by a bridge with Point Independence, and close at hand lies Monument Beach, and beyond Gray Gables, formerly the summer home of Ex-President Cleveland, and at the head of the bay is located "Crow's Nest," owned by Joseph Jefferson.

The water supply, introduced by the Onset Water Company from Sandy Lake, could not be purer or better.

No summer resort is better supplied with well-regulated hotels, with rooms and board at reasonable rates. Also rooms can be obtained at cottages, and meals at either hotels or restaurants in close proximity.

Letters addressed to the proprietors of the following hotels, Onset, Mass., will be promptly answered, giving full statement with regard to prices of rooms and board: Hotel Onset, Glen Cove Hotel, Glen Echo Hotel, Union Villa, Washburn House, Bullock's, Hotel Marcy, Highland House, and Mrs. Ronald's.

CHESTERFIELD, CAMP.

The official board met at Camp Chesterfield, April 9, to perfect arrangements for the coming camp session, beginning July 15 and ending August 27. The grounds are in fine condition and we want to make this the best camp ever held here. We have secured the very best talent and will have them well advertised. The programmes will be ready for distribution in a month. Mrs. Lydia Jessup, secretary, Anderson, Ind.

SUNAPEE LAKE CAMP, N. H.

Sunapee Lake Spiritualist Camp-meeting Association will hold its 28th annual meeting at Blodgett's Landing, N. H., commencing July 30 and closing August 27. We have a good list of speakers and test mediums. Address all letters to Thomas Burpee, Sutton, N. H., or the secretary, Lorenza Worthen, Hillsboro Br., N. H.

VICKSBURG, CAMP.

Vicksburg camp, Mich., opens July 30 and closes August 20. For full particulars address Mrs. Jeannette Fraser, Vicksburg, Mich.

MINERAL PARK CAMP, CAL.

The Spiritualists of Southern California have engaged Mineral Park, the camp grounds in the Arroyo Seco, just below Garvanza, for their annual camp-meeting, from June 25 to July 25. Many improvements are to be made at the park, and fourteen cottages will be erected. Mrs. Nettie Howell is the head of the executive committee. Address her for programmes.

NEW ERA CAMP-MEETING.

The New Era camp-meeting begins July 9, and continues over four Sundays. We will have with us during the meeting those grand workers, Harry J. Moore, Mrs McCoy, Mrs. Ella Royal Williams, sure, and hope other good workers will also attend from all parts of the compass. We expect many of the lecturers and mediums from the coast (and we have many good ones) to attend during the meeting. Everybody come and help make this coming camp-meeting a grand and glorious one. The hotel will be under the management of the president, and everything possible will be done for the comfort and welfare of the guests. Camp ground is only 22 miles from the great Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland, Oregon. Address Rev. G. C. Love, president, 354 College street, Portland, Oregon.

EDGEWOOD CAMP, WASH.

The annual camp-meeting of the Spiritualists of the state of Washington, will be held at the Edgewood camp-grounds on Surprise Lake, commencing July 30 and ending August 20. These grounds are owned by the state association and can be reached either from Tacoma or Seattle by the Interurban electric cars. The annual state convention will also be held at the same place on August 21 and 22. Spiritualists from the East who intend to visit the Lewis & Clark Fair at Portland, should time their visit so as to stop over for a day or two at the camp, where they will find a hearty welcome from their western co-workers. All railroads give stop-over privileges at the different Sound cities. GEO. E. KNOWLDEN. Tacoma, Wash.

CENTRAL OHIO CAMP.

This camp opens Sunday, June 4 (and closes Sunday, June 25), at Bueleh Park, eight miles southwest of Columbus, directly on the B. & O. railway, and Columbus, Grove City and Southwestern Traction Lines; one-half hour's ride from Columbus and 20 minutes from Morgans; will land everybody at the park. Many talented speakers engaged. All are welcome. Officers: H. E. Boerstler, president; L. M. Lydy, vice-president; A. W. Dennis, treasurer; Hattie G. Webster, secretary. For further particulars, address the secretary, 55 McDowell street, Columbus, Ohio.

GRAND LEDGE CAMP, MICH.

The Grand Ledge Spiritualist Camp-meeting opens July 21, 1905, and closes Aug. 21, 1905, with Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly as presiding chairman. As the programs are now being printed they will be distributed as soon as possible, and all those wishing further information regarding the camp, address J. W. Ewing or W. R. Divine of Grand Ledge, Mich. The association extends a cordial invitation to all.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., CAMP.

The Liberal, Educational and Spiritualist Camp-meeting will open at Mineral Park, June 25, and close July 25.

THE ASHLEY, OHIO, CAMP.

This camp opens August 6 and closes August 27. For further particulars address Will Randolph, secretary, Ashley, Ohio.

OCEAN GROVE CAMP.

This camp is located at Harwich, Mass., and opens July 9, and closes July 23.

WINFIELD (KANSAS) CAMP.

The Winfield Camp Association will hold its twelfth annual camp-meeting, commencing July 15, and ending July 25. We have secured the best of talent, and expect to make this camp one of the most interesting of its history. All get ready to come the first day and stay until the last. We have secured Max Hoffman, Will J. Erwood, Isa Wilson Kayner, Bessie Bellman, Mr. and Mrs. Aber. These are all excellent workers as most everyone knows. There will be many local mediums on the grounds. Address Mrs. Maud K. Gates, 807 North Manning street, Winfield, Kansas.

UNITY CAMP, MASS.

The season's work at Unity Camp, Saugus Center, will open on Sunday, June 4 and continue every Sunday until the last of September. These meetings will be fully up to standard of former seasons, with many added improvements. Good speakers and mediums will be present. Electric cars going direct to camp gate, without change, leave Scolley Sq. subway, Boston every half hour. Visitors cordially welcomed.

LOS ANGELES CAMP, CAL.

To be held at Mineral Park, commencing June 25 and ending July 25. Mrs. Nettie Howell is in charge.

VERONA PARK CAMP.

The Verona Park camp-meeting, Me., will open Aug. 13 and close Aug. 27. A. F. Smith, president, Bangor Me.; F. W. Smith, secretary, Rockland, Me.

MANTUA CAMP, OHIO.

This camp located at Mantua Station, Ohio, will open July 9, and continue to August 27. For further particulars, address F. H. Sherwood, Secretary, Mantua Station, Ohio.

CAMP PROGRESS.

Camp Progress, Moreland Park Grove, Upper Swampscott, Mass., opens Sunday, June 4, 1905.

LAKE BRADY, OHIO.

The fourteenth annual session of this camp will be held during the months of July and August. For full particulars address A. G. Keck, Akron, Ohio.

FOREST HOME CAMP, MICH.

Forest Home Spiritualist camp-meeting begins July 30, and closes Aug. 20. Programs are ready for distribution.

Any person never having been in Northern Michigan, will find it to their interest as well as pleasure to visit this camp. Its climate is delightful; its natural scenery beautiful; it is an antidote for hay fever; here the gay and festive mosquito does not scatter its germs of disease. The association wishes to make its sixth annual meeting the best that has been held. Two cottages will be erected the coming month, and the public will be well taken care of. For full particulars address the secretary, Mrs. Ruth Eastman, P. O. Box 69, Mancelona, Mich.

Maple Dell Park, Ohio.

The American Spiritual, Religious and Science Union will open its camp session at Mantua, Ohio, Sunday, July 9, the day's program being in charge of the Cleveland lyceums, which will unite and celebrate Children's Day.

On Sunday, July 16, the exercises will be in charge of the veteran workers in Spiritualism, Moses and Mattie Hull.

Sunday, July 23, the speaker will be F. W. Martin, of Elyria, O., a promising young orator, who highly pleased his audience at this place last summer. He will be assisted by other speakers.

Mrs. Morrill of Michigan, will be on the grounds from Monday, July 24, and will be the principal speaker from that time until July 30.

July 31, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond has charge of the work, and will remain to August 7, giving a course of psychic lessons during the week, closing on the yearly meeting day, Aug 7.

From Aug 7 to 12, Lyman C. Howe is expected to be with us.

Aug. 13 is Cleveland Day, when the different Cleveland societies will fill the program with good mediums, speakers and music.

Aug. 20, the Darrowville society will have entire charge of the program.

Aug. 26-27 will be set aside for a convention. This will be the closing meeting of the camp session.

D. M. KING, President.
F. H. Sherwood, Secretary.

New Era Camp, Oregon.

To the Editor:—As camp-meeting time draws near, allow me through your columns to ask the friends not to forget to send in donations for the fancy work.

If sent so they can reach me before the 16th of June, they may send them to my present address, 354 College street, Portland, Oregon. After that date, direct to me at New Era (Camp Ground) Oregon, as I shall go there to clean up and arrange the camp ground and hotel, so that everything will be in readiness for the first meeting on Sunday, July 9. Articles of fancy work of any design that can be turned into cash will be thankfully received and duly appreciated.

We have secured splendid talent for the meeting, and everything possible is to be done for the comfort and education of those who attend the meeting, and we want everyone who can do so, to show their appreciation of our efforts

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32 CHICAGO, ILL., JUNE 17, 1905. NO. 812

ANIMAL PASSIONS AND APPETITES

They Sometimes Remain Long After Entering Spirit Life.

In The Progressive Thinker, No 807, James H. Young replies to Lyman C. Howe's statement in No. 788, that "animal passions and physical appetites do not pass the death line." When reading the article of Mr. Howe I was greatly surprised that a person of his probable great experience in spirit manifestations and knowledge of the Spiritual Philosophy should still cling to that nearly obsolete "twinkling of an eye" doctrine which some years ago was so generally taught in orthodox Christian churches.

Although my parents were fanatical Christians, thanks to the good angels, I was saved from the blight of such teachings.

After thirty years study of Spiritualism and twenty-four years daily life with one of the spirits' chosen mediums, and communion with hundreds of highly advanced spirits, I have never heard one make the statements attributed to Mr. Howe. On the contrary, every spirit who has made expression on that point has invariably stated that when spirits left the physical body they without exception carry with them all the attributes of the earth life, and it sometimes takes a long time to divest themselves of those incumbrances.

I long ago supposed all highly cultured Spiritualists, such as Brother Howe, had advanced beyond the old church teachings and been released from the swaddling bands of Christianity.

I fully endorse Brother Young's article, and in corroboration will state a few instances sustaining his views.

My cousin, Justin Hulburd, when fifteen years of age was a member of Edwin Forrest's Dramatic Company. When on a boat going down the Mississippi from St. Louis, Mo., to Memphis, Tenn., Mr. Forrest was sitting on the deck and Justin stood alongside of him, holding a spelling book. Mr. Forrest was teaching him to spell. He discovered in time that was a failure.

As they were in process of a little quarrel about the spelling lesson, the Captain came to where they were. He said, "Mr. Forrest, won't you allow your boy to sing for the passengers? They have a great desire to hear him."

Just then Justin was controlled by a spirit who said to the captain, whose name was Horace Maybrook, "Hod, for Christ's sake give me a drink! I'm shivering all over for want of a drink."

Justin's little body was shaking like an aspen leaf. Mr. Forrest said to the Captain, "Bring some whiskey in a glass and let Puss smell it; perhaps the odor of the liquor will satisfy the unhappy spirit or whatever it may be."

The Captain left, and soon returned with a glass of brandy. Mr. Forrest said, "Now, Puss, or whoever is talking, sit here on my legs and smell this liquor.

No sooner had little Puss sat on Edwin Forrest's legs, when he grabbed the glass out of the Captain's hand and drank the contents before they could stop him, then threw the glass into the river and said: "Brother Hod, that was good, now I can talk to you. James Livingston was my murderer; he shot me through the heart as we were riding through a piece of timber near Jefferson, Mo.

The Captain admitted to Edwin Forrest that was the spirit of his brother who was a gambler and outlaw. They knew he was killed, but by whom they never learned until then.

The Captain said: "Why, that child has drank enough brandy to make him drunk."

Edwin Forrest said: "Those influences that surround him have a way of destroying the effects; how I cannot tell."

The above incident ocurred before the Fox Sisters were heard of.

The Captain told it to a reporter of the New Orleans Picayune, and it was published at the time.

In 1875 Justin was sojourning in Chicago, taking a rest. He frequently attended circles and was many times controlled by a spirit who gave the name of Tim. The circle was usually composed of Col. Morse and wife. Mrs. Thompson, the wife of a Chicago lawyer, a Mrs. Robinson who was a member of the society for which Mrs. Richmond lectured, a bass singer of Mrs. Richmond's choir, name forgotten, F. D. C. Meyer, and a sister-in-law of Col. Morse, name forgotten.

The spirit Tim gave many fine tests, but never until they would give him a drink of whiskey. Justin never drinks liquor of any kind, but the sitters would give his spirit what he desired in order to get tests. He wanted only the commonest whiskey. If they gave him a good article he would refuse to give tests.

On one occasion, in 1878, I with two others was spending an evening in a social way at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Pirnie, in Cleveland, Ohio. Mrs. Pirnie was a grand medium. Mr. Pirnie was also a medium, but owing to ill health was rarely controlled, but this evening were having a friendly chat he was suddenly controlled by a negro spirit he had known in Michigan. The spirit said he was drowned in Saginaw Bay. He had procured a bottle of rum, gone out in a small boat fishing, was caught by a squall of wind, the boat was upset and he was drowned. I asked the spirit how he felt when he went to spirit life. He said: "I'll tell you, boss, I felt mighty bad to think I had lost all that good rum. I'd only drank part of the bottle, and I was so sorry I hadn't drank the rest of it."

It was very evident death had not taken from this poor spirit his love for rum.

In 1882, at Kansas City, Mo., Mrs. Harriet Hosmer Chamberlain accompanied by Prof. Haus, of Topeka, Kan., called at Justin's home. Besides the above named there were present Mrs. See, a daughter-in-law of Bishop See, of Davenport, Iowa; Doctor J. W. Charles, of McPherson, Kan., and Doct. F. D. C. Meyer.

After sitting a short time Justin was controlled by Edgar Allan Poe, who gave Prof. Haus his past life in rhyme, telling him of the peculiar minds he had to deal with amongst the students. The Professor told Mrs. Chamberlain every word was true. The Professor asked Spirit Poe if he had any desire now for liquor. He said: "Not any more; it took me a long time to get over that desire."

Then Professor Haus asked him what the feeling was when he came in rapport with a physical medium?

He said when he came close to the medium's atmosphere, then came a strong desire for liquor; when he did not receive it, he could not give a good communication. After a time that desire left him and he prayed to the good angels to keep it away. His prayer was answered and now he has no desire for liquor.

Those present said, "Thank the good angels for that ministration in life."

Such was told me by Mrs. Harriet Hosmer Chamberlain.

In the winter of 1883 and 1884, Doct. F. D. C. Meyer, Justin Hulburd and the writer were one evening at the home of Prof. Kimmel, in Kansas City, Mo. Mrs. Kimmel, the accomplished wife of the Professor, was a medium. On this occasion she was controlled by an Indian spirit who demanded pipe and tobacco. Upon being refused the spirit attempted to take her to the street where those things could be procured. It was only by a strong effort the Professor prevented her leaving the house.

In the year 1882 we were holding circles twice a week in Justin's home. The circle was composed of Mrs. H. H. Chamberlain, Joseph Fleming, F. D. C. Meyer, E. W. Hulburd and the medium, Justin. At one of the circles Justin was controlled by an Irish influence. The first words were, "Sure, now, and who be yez? Is it heretics ye are? Arrah, now, and what would Father Brady say if he saw me here? Sure and the girl told me I would find the Virgin Mary here."

Then she commenced bemoaning her sad mishap in having been enticed into a place where there were heretics. Finally she said her name was Bridget Kelly, that she was a washerwoman in New York City. She told of Dennis, her husband, and her daughter Norah. Of the many times the priest called for money to save her soul. After talking for some time she turned to Mrs. Chamberlain—a very dignified old lady of 72—saying, "Give me a sup." Mrs. Chamberlain said she did not use liquor and had none.

The spirit said, "Sure now, take that bottle out of your pocket and give me a drink."

Mrs. C. reiterated the assertion that she had none. The spirit indulged in some characteristic remarks and left.

Justin's Indian guide Rosa came laughing heartily and said she found the spirit wandering around looking for the Virgin Mary. She told her the Virgin was in there. When the spirit left the medium, she again met Rosa, and upbraided her for deceiving her. Rosa then told her she was the Virgin Mary. The spirit wanted to know what made her so dark. Rosa said she got sunburned going about to so many countries.

Bridget afterwards came several times. She said we were her saviors. She became a member of Justin's band, and the guides say she is doing a grand work, bringing ignorant Catholic spirits from "Darkness to Light." She is very bitter in animosity towards the priests, and says, "Sure, they are the ones that took all our hard earnings."

After we came to our present home in the mountains of Southern California, for a time we had great difficulty in procuring the family washing done. Had to depend entirely on Indian women, who at first were very unreliable. At one time we were for several weeks unable to procure a washerwoman. Finally Justin said if I would bring the water he would do some washing. I brought the water and he commenced. He had been at work but a short time when I perceived it was not Justin who was washing. Bridget had come and she remained until the work was completed. After she had been working for some time she said to me that Mr. Franklin said she might have a drink, and she asked for whiskey. Benj. Franklin was at that time the leader of that band.

After the passing of twenty-three years, Bridget is still working with the band and frequently makes her presence known. Justin's guides say she has become a beautiful spirit and is a grand missionary among those still in darkness.

It was evident Bridget did not leave behind her desire for liquor when she left the physical body. It is many years now since she has expressed a wish for liquor.

When we came to this mountain home we frequently employed an Indian named Jose Duro, who was Captain of the Canajoes. He was fond of whiskey and would drink whenever he could get it. In time he passed to the "Happy Hunting Ground." Several times he came and controlled Justin. The last time he controlled was about two years ago. He said he knew of a rich ledge of gold-bearing rock and would lead us to it if we would give him some whiskey. We told him we did not keep whiskey in the house. He persisted for some time, urging us to get him whiskey. When he realized that he couldn't get it he left without revealing his secret.

This Indian had been in spirit life about twelve years and still craved whiskey. E. W. HULBURD.

Descanso, Cal.

Every man is a volume if you know how to read him.—Channing.

There can be no civility without a deep morality.—Emerson.

THE RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR.

Some Practical Inferences From Its Results.

The results of this war were predicted by mediums, and have already been fulfilled in some points—another proof of the truth of Spiritualism.

At the beginning of the conflict the czar stated that Japan had acted very badly in their manner of opening the war at Port Arthur, and, notwithstanding Japan is a little nation and Russia a great and powerful nation, Japan must be punished severely.

Russia has not yet arrived at the point of administering that punishment, and the plot thickens. They called on their god constantly and relied on him to give them the victory over the foe; yet he heeded not their cry, but deserted them in time of greatest need—another proof that the Christian God is a fabrication and religion a fraud. This god appears to be on the side of the best fighters, and now Russians have a justifiable cause to repudiate Jehovah.

The czar's proposition to the European nations, a few years ago, for disarmament has been carried into practical effect by the Russians, though not according to the original plan. The little Japs did it for them on land and sea, and now the world rejoices.

Togo had the best thoughts and wishes of the world at large (including native Russians) which aided him as much as anything else, and he did what the world expected of him.

A. H. NICHOLAS.

Summerland, Cal.

A PLEA FOR ANIMALS.

Many people speak of animals and treat them as though they had no rights. They are mere brutes to be used for man's convenience or pleasure; to be kicked, beaten, tortured, whenever anger or ill-nature wants some object on which to gratify itself by the infliction of pain. They are irrational creatures without souls, without sensibility, without any sense of right or wrong, and why treat them with any consideration! Were they not made for man? Was he not given dominion over them? Is not death the end of them?

Jerome K. Jerome thus expresses a common attitude of men in relation to the dog who will stick to his master whatever misfortune overtakes him, and defend him even with his life, if that is required:

"Ah! old stanch friend, with your deep, clear eyes and bright, quick glances that take in all one has to say before one has time to speak it, do you know you are only an animal and have no mind? Do you know that dull-eyed, gin-sodden lout leaning against the post out there is immeasurably your intellectual superior? Do you know that every little-minded, selfish scoundrel, who never did a gentle deed or said a kind word, who never had a thought that was not mean and low or a desire that was not mean and base, whose every action is a fraud and whose every utterance is a lie; do you know that these crawling skulks are as much superior to you as the sun is superior to rush light, you honorable, brave-hearted, unselfish brute? They are men, you know, and men are the greatest, noblest and wisest and best beings in the whole vast, eternal universe. Any man will tell you that."

Yet many of the wisest of mankind in all ages have believed that the lower animals as well as man exist after death, that all living creatures have minds, in however small a degree, and that mind is as indestructible as matter.

If animals had the power of logical thought and of speech they might argue very ingeniously, if not conclusively, in favor of their own immortality. Addressing man through one of their representatives, the dog or horse, we will suppose they might say:

We have, fundamentally, the same natures that you have. We feel pleasures and pain, and are subject to moods; we have affection, jealousy, vanity and pride; we enjoy the smile of approval from our superiors, and dread their displeasure; we are not devoid of imitation and curiosity. We have some sense of beauty, some imagination, and some power of reasoning. We are not entirely destitute of reverence. We are capable of improvement by education and inheritance.

Your philosophers teach that mind is imperishable. Certainly, we have minds, distinct individual minds. Mental as well as bodily characteristics are subject to the law of heredity with us, precisely as they are among human beings. If your minds are immortal, why are not our minds also immortal? Your philosophers refer, in proof of man's immortality, to the fact that his consciousness persists, while the atoms of his brain and body are constantly changing, that memory and identity extend through years, although the body has changed many times, showing that the impressions must be made on something that is not like the brain, subject to change. This is just as true of us. The atoms come and go; but our identity, as shown in memory reaching back a dozen years or more, persists amid all material fluctuations.

Your Darwins and your Haeckels and Wallaces have shown what your own observation should have taught you, that you are derived from the lower animals—the lower animals, we say, because you yourselves are animals. Go far enough back, and your ancestors and ours were the same creatures. Since our origin is the same, must not our nature and destiny be the same? Your bodies have been developed from animal bodies; your minds from animal minds. If, then, your minds are immortal, ours must be; for how could a being who is indestructible and immortal have been evolved from a perishable being? To say that the capacity for immortality was somehow acquired during the process of evolution from apehood to manhood is to make use of an unsupported assumption, opposed to continuity, the primary fact of evolution, in order to enable you to deny our immortality and assert your own.

There is another consideration we may mention in our behalf. Your theologians say that a future life is necessary to prevent the ultimate defeat of justice, since it often fails here. Think of the millions of animals that have been hunted for sport, beaten, tortured, and wantonly killed—often, too, by men they are serving with all their strength and the best they knew. Where is the justice of a God who would confer immortality upon all who have found their chief sport in tormenting and destroying animals, and give the animals no recompense for their sufferings, extending through long dreary centuries, in the aggregate beyond the power of computation, and in horribleness beyond the power of Hogarth's pencil to describe?

Justice requires that we have a future life. Moreover, from the first, man has been surrounded by animals; they have been his companions, and they are indispensable to his happiness. He keeps them now, even when they are of no utility to him; and in the city parks are kept deer, swan and birds of song for the pleasure of the people. In the past men were generous enough to believe that we would share with them the future; and, even now, the Indian of the plains

> "thinks, admitted to that equal sky,
> His faithful dog shall bear him company."

One of your own poets, while speaking our praises, bears testimony to the indispensableness of our presence and our companionship to man's happiness—an indication that, if man is immortal, we, too, are immortal:

> "I think I could turn and live with animals, they are so placid and self-contained;
> I stand and look at them sometimes for an hour at a stretch;
> They do not sweat and whine about their condition;
> They do not lay awake in the dark and weep for their sins;
> They do not make me sick discussing their duty to God;
> Not one is dissatisfied—not one is demented with the mania of owning things;
> Not one kneels to another, nor to his kind that lived thousands of years ago."

We are not degraded by vices. We have never been guilty of drunkenness, gambling, swindling or lying; most of us are not open to the charge of holding slaves or of beating our wives and children.

Thus might the animals make a plea to the rational world, not simply for their own immortality, but for better treatment than they now receive. Abstract morality would treat with justice all beings, without any inquiry as to their origin or destiny; but the highest ground on which Christendom has theoretically recognized the rights of all races of men is that they have a common origin and destiny, and constitute a universal brotherhood.

This implies a great advance beyond the condition of the little tribe or community which recognizes no rights to be respected beyond its own jurisdiction and the relations of its own members. The progress is due to a multitude of causes; and the belief that all men have a common origin and a common destiny has probably had but little to do with it, as it certainly affords no ultimate reason for the practice of justice to all men, which we believe has its true reason and basis in the interest and well-being of mankind.

If the great majority of mankind who believe in future state for themselves could see that the claim of the animal to a future life is nearly, if not indeed quite, as well founded as their own, the result might be a treatment of the poor brutes somewhat better than they now receive. Perhaps the fashionable ladies and gentlemen who join in fox hunts, and the brutal drivers who club their horses until they fall from the weight of the load and the force of the blows, might be restrained, if they could realize that the wronged brutes would appear in ghostly form to reproach them after death.

Our knowledge, however, of the hardships and barbarities to which slaves have been subjected, when there has been no question among their masters as to their immortality, of the treatment which the inferior races have received from the powerful nations of Christendom, and of the persecutions that have destroyed millions of lives where the brotherhood of man and the immortality of the soul have been accepted by all, and of the wars, which every now and then drench with blood the fairest spots in Christian lands, make one doubt whether the acceptance of the theory that animals are immortal would greatly modify the common treatment of them.

The belief among the mild and contemplative Egyptians that the souls of men after death appear again in animals, and the same doctrine in India, where metempsychosis was most extensively and ingeniously developed, undoubtedly contributed to respect for the rights of animals. Unfortunately, justice to animals had no place in the ethics of the Christian church, which has shown less regard for the brutes than was shown by the pagan teachers of Greece and Rome, whose writings abound in passages inculcating kindness to animals as do the writings of the Old Testament, which commands: "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn." "Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk,"—passages which, among others, show a tenderness toward the brutes we do not find in the early teachings of the Christian church. The Jews are entitled to credit for their humane method of slaughtering animals for food, for it is an established fact that severing the main arteries and allowing the animal to bleed to death is far less painful than the Persian and Babylonian method of crushing the head with a sledge-hammer, not to speak of the superior dietary effect of the Jewish procedure.

"The fatal vice of the theologian," says Mr. Lecky, in his History of European Morals, "who have always looked upon others solely through the medium of their own special dogmatic views, has been an obstacle to all advance in this direction. The animal world, being altogether external to the scheme of redemption, was regarded as beyond the range of duty; and the notion of our having any kind of obligation to them has never been inculcated, has never, I believe, been admitted by Catholic theologians. In the popular legends and in the recorded traits of individual amiability, it is curious to observe how constantly those who have sought to inculcate kindness to animals have done so by endeavoring to associate them with something distinctively Christian. That class of amusements, of which the ancient combats of wild beasts form the type, have, no doubt, nearly disappeared from Christendom, and it is possible that the softening power of Christian teaching may have had some indirect influence in abolishing them, but a candid judgment will confess that it has been very little. During the periods and in the countries in which theological influence was supreme, they were unchallenged. They disappeared at last, because a luxurious and industrial civilization, involved a refinement of manners; because a fastidious taste, recoiled with a sensation of disgust from pleasure that an uncultivated taste would keenly relish; because the drama, at once reflecting and accelerating the change, gave a new form of popular amusement; and because, in consequence of this revolution, the old practices being left to the dregs of society, they became the occasion of scandalous disorders."

Mr. Lecky states with truth that the inculcation of kindness to animals on a wide scale is "mainly the work of a recent and secular age." Societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals are supported in the Protestant and free-thinking portions of Christendom. But in every community there need to be cultivated sensitiveness to the sufferings of animals, and a public sentiment that will not permit them to be abused.

Cruelty to dumb sentient creatures by man who has them in his power should be deemed criminal. B. F. UNDERWOOD.

IS A MEDIUM?

Or an Expert in Legerdemain?

The subject of Spiritualism being under discussion at the "People's Forum," Washington, D. C., May 14, one speaker declared that he could do all that Pierre Keeler does at his light circles, and he did not claim to be a medium nor believe in spirit communication. He said he had given seances in his shop on Seventh street several times, and would like to give another to which he would invite as many present as his shop could accommodate. Accordingly at a subsequent meeting, the seance was appointed and arranged. I and my wife went, but by a mistake of the street number failed to get there. So we returned to attend the seance at Mr. Keeler's not far away. We found him sitting on the steps with a friend. It was time to begin, but so few were there that he declined to hold a seance, but said he would go with us to the other one. He had heard of the man's performances and knew the place. So my wife and I hurried back, followed by Mr. Keeler and his friend. Though the performance had begun we were all let in. There were about sixteen persons gathered in the small upholstery shop. The battery had been formed by the upholsterer, Fuss. The ringing of a bell, beating a tambourine and drumming on the back of a guitar to the music of a mouth organ were heard. The man's coat came off while he clasped with both hands the left arm of the lady sitting next to him in the battery. She declared that she felt the pressure of his hands all the time. Another battery was chosen by raps purporting to come from the guide, George Collins, a deceased minstrel. A lady was first chosen; then each man in turn asked "Do you want me?" The answer from the cabinet was one rap, no, until the last man, Mr. Keeler, was chosen.

The second battery being formed, pads and pencils were handed over to the guide in the cabinet. About twenty messages in writing came over which were recognized and received by different persons present. Three came for me; one signed Thomas Paine, saying, "I am glad to see you here"; another signed R. G. Ingersoll, saying, "I do not know"; a third signed Herbert Spencer, saying, "You are doing good work."

Next came writing on a large pad, by a visible hand. Several persons were called up by the hand pointing to them, and holding the pad on the shoulders of the sitters in the battery, got writing.

No sign of trickery was apparent, nor does Mr. Fuss pretend to be a trickster. Like performances have been witnessed in his shop before, and he says that on one occasion the twenty-one persons present all voted that it was spiritual.

There was no charge for admission. I moved that a collection be taken. It was seconded by Mr. Keeler. Mr. Fuss demurred and passed out to the sidewalk. But the collection was taken. Mr. Keeler and two other men put in 50 cents each, and I suppose a fair amount was raised. Mr. Fuss feared to take pay, not having a license, but Mr. Keeler assured him there was no law against accepting contributions.

We all went away satisfied that in spite of the man's assertions to the contrary, HE IS A MEDIUM, and that the performances we witnessed were spiritual. WM. HENRY BURR.

The Law at Work.

Wm. D. Noyes writes from Rochester, N. Y.: "The police, June 6, called on all clairvoyants, palmists and mediums, and warned them to quit work or take their chance of arrest and fine or imprisonment. When I asked if the order included spirit mediums, he said, 'Yes; all are classed under that head of fortune tellers, and would be dealt with in that way.' The writer was one that was warned."

We should avoid whatever may display bad feeling, and attend with civility to what may be addressed to us; all hearts are conciliated by politeness and affability.—Socrates.

VACCINATING THE GROUND.

Barren Land Can Be Made as Rich as a Garden at Cost of 4 Cents an Acre

That the soil can be vaccinated to cure its barrenness, with the same result that attends the vaccination of the human body to cure certain ills would appear preposterous to the casual mind, but this is exactly what is done, according to an intensely interesting article entitled "Inoculating the Ground," by Gilbert H. Grosvenor, in the October number of the Century Magazine. In the most simple language he describes how, by a process of inoculation, the nitrogen, so necessary to fruitful land, is put back into the soil which is robbed of it by wheat and many of the other grain crops, and rendered unproductive by reason of the robbery.

Even a skeptic reading Mr. Grosvenor's article must be impressed by it, and at the end of the story see visions of vast tracts of now barren fruit lands in the eastern part of this country reclaimed and fruitful. Probably the most pleasing thing about the whole matter is that the nitrogen germs so necessary to the soil's productiveness are furnished free by the Agricultural Department, the letters patent having been presented to the government by Professor Dr. George T. Moore, in charge of the laboratory of plant physiology of the department, who discovered how to practically utilize nitrogen germs.

But Mr. Moore was not the discoverer of the germs. It has been known for many years that the air we breathe contains all of the nitrogen so necessary to the soil, and it was known that certain plants, like the clovers, bean and pea, did not impoverish the soil as some of the grains did. It remained for Professor Nobbe, a German scientist to discover, as Mr. Grosvenor declares, that the bean especially takes its nitrogen from the air and that it absorbs more than it needs, and actually enriches the soil with the surplus supply.

Then he found that all of these plants had bulbs, or round tubercles, or nodules, attached to the roots, as if an insect had bitten them. He dissected one of these bulbs and found it filled with bacteria that worked incessantly, absorbing nitrogen from the air to feed the plant.

Then the professor successfully cultivated these bacteria, and a German company was actually formed to supply them to farmers in bottled form. They did not live because they had been too well fed by the professor, says Mr. Grosvenor, and hence were not used to working for themselves. In the soil they died. The company stopped manufacturing.

Professor Moore cultivated a self-reliant disposition in his nitrogen bacteria. He did not overfeed them, and they began to seek their nitrogen food themselves. Having obtained permanent bacteria, he found a bit of cotton would soak up millions of them. Then he dried it, and in this form it is sent to the farmer, who is directed to soak the cotton in a solution of water, granulated sugar, potassium phosphate, magnesium sulphate and ammonia phosphate. The solution is then mixed with earth, so that every particle of the earth is moistened. It is then mixed with five times the quantity of earth and scattered over the barren field, vaccinating it with nitrogen germs that multiply and cause bountiful crops. One small package, it is said, will inoculate one to four acres.—Chicago American.

The church still talks about "evidence," about "reason," about "freedom of conscience," and the "liberty of speech," and yet denounces those who appeal to reason, and who honestly express their thoughts—Ingersoll.

The acknowledgment of weakness which we make in imploring to be relieved from hunger and temptation is surely wisely put in our prayer.—Thackeray.

Self-reliance is one of the progenitors of greatness.—Anon.

DR. B. F. AUSTIN.

Extract From a Lecture Delivered in Baltimore, Md.

"Robert Green Ingersoll, the questioning agnostic, the fearless iconoclastic and wizard word-weaver of our age, was born August 11, 1833, and died July 31, 1899. He enjoys the great distinction of being most bitterly attacked by those who never heard his voice or made a thorough study of his writings. He was called an 'infidel,' but this term was not properly applied to him, either as one who denied the existence of God, or in its truer meaning, as one who is unfaithful to his own convictions of right and truth. He is frequently spoken of as though his entire message was a gospel of negation, a system of doubt and skepticism; whereas Ingersoll taught a most comprehensive system of positive duties, a gospel of life, and liberty and love. He sang the praises of honest industry, championed the cause of the oppressed, exalted and glorified the pure home life and love, taught men self-respect, and urged men to make the most and best of themselves, help their brothers in affliction and serve their country with fidelity. He was the great apostle of liberty and freedom, and preached a gospel of truth and kindness, and justice and equality among men. He lived a pure and charitable life, spending with royal munificence his large income on the poor and on humanitarian objects, and leaving an example in his home life and relations which multitudes of his detractors might copy with advantage. Ingersoll did not deny, though he did doubt and question the existence of a personal God. He said: 'There may be for aught I know somewhere in the unknown shoreless vast, some being whose dreams are constellations and within whose thought the infinite exists.' Of Jesus he said, 'For the man Christ I have an infinite respect. The place where man has died for man is holy ground. To that great and serene man I gladly pay the tribute of my admiration and my tears. He was a reformer in his day. He was an infidel in his time. He was regarded as a blasphemer, and his life was destroyed by hypocrites. Had I lived at that time I would have been his friend.'

"Like all other great men he had limitations and his lack of faith in, or knowledge of, the future life was one of his greatest. He constantly declared that his effort was not to blot out any hope men might entertain of heaven, but to put out the fires of hell. He ridiculed some of the old dogmas and interpretations, but never religion itself. He said some bitter things about the church and the clergy, but most of his attacks on the church were attacks on abuses, and most of his bitter statements about clergymen were reprisal.

"It is too early to estimate the effect of his lectures and writings. In 100 years from now his work will appear far greater and more beneficent than it could possibly appear to us. It is not too much to say that he has influenced largely the religious teachings of our age, has contributed largely to the more liberal thoughts of our times, and has cleared the ground by his iconoclasm for the new theology now the new thought of the day."

D. FEAST.

God's Mills Grind Slow But Sure.

In our experiences in this inner school of a kindly Providence under angelic tutors, we see and hear, and write things which, owing to insufficient mental unfoldment, we cannot understand, and often have St. Paul's scruples, when he said that being caught up into the third heaven he saw and heard things which were not lawful to tell.

Such experiences have often been mine. One lesson given me by a spirit in 1874 in writing, and which, although I saw nothing in it, was preserved among others, and reads as follows:

"Many new features of universal knowledge will soon appear in different ways and become the knowledge, and through knowledge, the wealth of humanity. At present if electricians or any scientists were asked concerning universal wireless telegraphy from mind to mind, city to city, continent to continent, immortal realms and beings included, they would not think it feasible, and to ask even the brightest concerning cosmic titles and cosmic commerce, they would think it an absurdity, or at least unintelligible speech. But it is divinely purposed that these things shall be introduced to man and become known and established facts and practices, yea; in time to be taught in the common schools and colleges.

"Cosmic commerce implies the use of nature's forces and substances of hitherto unused kinds and in ways new to men of this age. Electricity, the queen of nature's forces, drawn from the earth and supplemented by that of the elements, will revolutionize many things and pave the way for man the student to receive the truth concerning creation and all evolutionary processes. He will learn to verify the prophecies of the Bible in scientific demonstrations through the wireless system of mental and general telegraphy, the establishing of light towers from which the light shall flash from the east to the west and fill the earth with glory. Man shall also wholly learn himself; learn what is or constitutes life; how these fluids—electricity, magnetism and ether are interactive and pass through the silver cord to the golden bowl or soul seat, to nourish the life or spirit in man.

"They will learn to keep up the required ratios of these substances by thought, proper foods and proper conduct, to thus prolong life on in a strong and healthy condition to a much greater age, and garner wisdom for eternal enjoyment."

Now we read in our daily papers the efforts and accomplishments of such men as Tesla, Edison, Marconi, and others in electrical science. Many other noble minds are delving into these studies and the establishing of the referred-to light towers to be lighted by electricity drawn from the earth and supplemented by that of the elements, will some of these days be a realized thing. Many grand demonstrations will then result, which are not yet thought of even by those capable of bringing the results of their arduous studies into uses of different kinds.

I am sure these things will so be, because all that I have ever beheld clairvoyantly has come and does come to pass, but some things are slow, verifying the saying that "God's mills grind slow but sure." MRS. M. KLEIN.

Van Wert, Ohio.

Think of the egotism of a man who believes that an infinite being wants his praise.—Ingersoll.

Court of Inquiry.

Crisis Pending in the Ranks of Spiritualism.

MATERIALIZING TOGGERY.

A Trenchant Article From the Pen of C. W. Stewart.

In the name of all that is sacred, what is Modern Spiritualism coming to?

Is it possible that the claim made by the alienist materialists that belief in Spiritualism is evidence of mental degeneracy is to be verified and sustained by such special pleading as that of Judge Dunn in a recent issue of The Progressive Thinker?

The whole article is a plea in extenuation of rascality on the part of both spirits and mortals. For admitting for the sake of the argument that Winans procured the paraphernalia under spirit influence, and it was afterward used upon his person by spirits, it only shifts the rascality from the mortal to the spirit. Yes, but Winans always tells the circle that there are "etherealizations, materializations, and personations." Yes, I know that he does, and once in a circle held by him with mosquito netting tacked to the floor around him, a tall figure wrapped in a sheet appeared before me and some one suggested that it was my mother. I asked if it was, and the figure bowed assent. I put my hand upon the head of the spook, and found that the hair (?) resembled grey Spanish moss, and in quantity almost sufficient to stuff a chair, while the fact was that my mother had very fine black hair, combed low on her forehead in her earth life. I at once stated that this was not my mother, and in so doing I incurred the lasting hatred of Winans and his adherents. At the close of the seance a few of us concluded to investigate the "test" conditions a little, and we found that while the netting was tacked to the floor, it was tied to a hook overhead and had a convenient draw-string in it which enabled the "personating" spirit to simply unhook the net, open the drawstring, and step out!

It was the air of mystery assumed by Mesmer that caused the French Academy to sit down on him so hard, and it is a pretty safe rule to go by to carefully watch all alleged media who clothe themselves with an air of great mysteriousness TRUTH DOES NOT WEAR A MASK, even if "personating" spirits do and any cause that excuses such trumped-up nonsense will fail, and ought to fail.

There seems to be a continual conflict waged in the ranks of the Spiritualists growing out of their failure to catch the significance of the trend of scientific and progressive thought at the present time.

What is it that causes the constant, universal harmony that characterizes the Royal Society of England? It is to be found in the fact that each and every member is a devotee of natural truth, and is willing to sacrifice everything on the Altar of Truth. A number of active workers in the cause of Spiritualism, including myself, believe that so-called spiritual phenomena are natural phenomena, and although they are the highest class of natural phenomena, they are no more remarkable, per se, than the blooming of a flower. As Prof. Hyslop said to me over a year ago, "In the light of modern scientific investigation the words natural and supernatural have both lost their meaning."

Another reason for this harmony is in the fact that the Royal Society does not deal in gods and religions, excepting as ethnological subjects. One of the greatest causes of discord in our ranks at present is the effort to churchalize Spiritualism, and this makes it much easier for the practice of rascality. When anything is cloaked with a halo of false reverence, that moment the road is opened for the entrance of "pious fraud." The history of theology is but a record of this fact. A medium, like everybody else, is sacred only when he is the embodiment of truth. A spirit is no more an object of reverence than is a mortal in earth life, and when this truth is fully comprehended, people will cease sitting in open-mouthed wonder listening to the most ridiculous twaddle, purporting to come from the prophet Isaiah, or some of the Greek philosophers!

CUT OUT THE RELIGIOUS ELEMENT, PLACE SPIRITUALISM WHERE IT BELONGS IN THE CATEGORY OF SCIENCE, AND YOU WILL NOT ONLY PUT A STOP TO THE WRANGLE OVER THE UNKNOWABLE, BUT WILL, TO A GREAT DEGREE STOP THE DEPREDATIONS OF THE FAKIRS.

I undertake to say here and now, after thirty-four years of investigation of this subject, that no genuine mediums for materialization will have in their possession, or allow in the seance room, any such paraphernalia as is said to have been found in the possession of Charlie Winans. More than that, I say here and now, that no genuine medium for materialization will refuse to submit to reasonable test conditions, provided by a committee that understands the principles of mediumship, and would know what true test conditions were.

I have seen manifestations of this kind that were given under conditions where fraud was impossible, and have talked with my own spirit wife, and have seen her dematerialize right before, not only my own eyes, but a company of ladies and gentlemen saw all that I saw and heard all that I heard; and this with a medium who would scorn the idea of sitting under any other than test conditions, as well as the idea of accepting remuneration for thus sitting. And when there is a suggestion that any kind of paraphernalia is necessary to facilitate the manifestations, right then and there is the time and place to drop all such mediums and their apologists, and repudiate both.

Nature manages to arrange for the advent of human beings into this sphere of existence with a body suitable for general purposes, and no paraphernalia of any kind are necessary to facilitate the process. And if the claim that the spirit realm is a perfectly natural world is worth anything, then the coming back into visible form of one who has entered the next expression of life ought to be as natural a process as the first. DIRTY CHEESE-CLOTH AND FALSE HAIR AND FACES FORM NO PART OF THE MID-WIFE'S OR THE ACCOUCHEUR'S OUTFIT, AND TO CLAIM THAT A SPIRIT CANNOT MANIFEST WITHOUT THEM IS TO BRING THE WHOLE SUBJECT TO THE LEVEL OF THE VAUDEVILLE STAGE!

It is the almighty dollar that is at the bottom of all this rascality, and when Spiritualists will organize for business purposes, and see to it that when a medium is proven honest they shall be not only protected, but the organization see to it that they are freed from the struggle for a living, then there will be no incentive to such reprehensible work. Truth loves the light of day. I saw a medium in this city over a year ago agree to go under test conditions to give materialization, and after all the arrangements for the tests were made, the woman's husband slipped into the cabinet, thus ruining the test, and the spirits came out with pretty, shining stars and crescents all over their "spirit robes," amid the Ohs! and Ahs! of the residents of Easy street who, as Barnum said, will pay more to be gulled than they will pay for the pure, unadulterated truth. And this very medium (?) has admitted that she was party to a precious bit of fraud that was recently exposed.

Out upon all the wretched rotten crew! Out upon the whole ignorant gullible crowd that follow in the wake of these charlatans to get a test from their great-grandmother, and have no use for the philosophy, which, if they had sense enough to comprehend it, might save them both dollars and shame!

All "John and Mary" mediums who have had a cold chill down their backs and have started out to get a quarter out of the gullible public with a "tester," should be sat upon at once. Better, far better that the world should wait another thousand years for proof of future life than that this glorious truth should be smirched and slimed with the filthy elements of falsehood and fraud.

Another abomination of desolation in our ranks is the would-be leaders and managers who want to be the whole kite, when they are not competent to serve even as the tail of one! Here, for instance, comes the Light of Truth, that like Atlas, has the whole world on its back, and is "TESTING THE SPIRITUALISTS OF NORTH AMERICA SPECIFICALLY AND THE SPIRITUALISTS OF THE WORLD GENERALLY. "What meat has this our Caesar fed upon that he has grown so great?" And worse than all, the editor informs us for the most part, the stuff so far tested is exceedingly "shoddy." Well, well! Have we a right to ask the L. of T. what is the nature of its test conditions? Do the proprietors of King Solomon's Mines employ the same assayer to test the Spiritualists and the same chemicals with which they locate great gobs of wealth in "Country rocks?" Are they like the old fellow in Nevada that told of a mine that he had located that was "full of pirates and chloroform?" We are all growing anxious to learn whether we belong to the class called shoddy, or those who are all wool and a yard wide! And when this party gets the sheep and the goats separated, will he take the sheep that have been sheared to sit at the right hand of "our Father which is in heaven?" And will the goats that are "shoddy" be driven into outer darkness where there will be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth? If so, I shall brook no delay, but will employ a dentist at once that I may have something to gnash! O, for a few E. V. Wilsons in the flesh to satirize this miserable mess and mixture of vanity and assurance!

Spiritualism is in this world just as the sunlight is in the world. It is not here to aid a little mutual admiration society getting half-fare rates on the railroads, nor yet to assist in publishing prayerbooks. But at present it is somewhat adumbrated with theological twaddle, and barnacled with fakes and fakery, but it has survived many other evils and will doubtless survive these, and when it does, it will rest upon the foundation of scientific truth, untrammeled with either churches or pious fraud, which have always supplemented each other in robbing humanity.

Yours for scientific truth.

C. W. STEWART.

"Origin of Life, or Where Man Comes From." "The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter Through Organic Processes, or How the Spirit Body Grows." By Michael Faraday. Price 10 cents.

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism, A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood, lectures upon physical, physiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the molecular or spiritual hypothesis of nature. Scholarly, masterly, trenchant. Price 25 cents.

MUSIC CURES INSANITY.

Lyman C. Howe Visits Buffalo and Collins, New York.

Buffalo is the first city I ever visited as a spiritual itinerant. It was in 1858-9. Then Mrs. F. O. Hyzer, Thomas Gales Foster and Cora L. V. Scott were the ideal standards of the spiritual platform and its thrilling inspirations. Few, if any, have ever surpassed them, and rarely are they equaled. Platform tests were unknown; but the largest halls were packed with intelligent, eager listeners to the startling utterances and brilliant oratory of the heaven inspired speakers.

As it was my "first love," Buffalo has ever been a favorite center to me. Many months—aggregating years—I have ministered to the faithful, through the varying changes that have marked the footsteps of progress in Buffalo. Last Sunday, June 4, I again made my bow to a Buffalo audience, at the Temple (Church), corner of Jersey and Prospect streets. The day was dark, and rain respected not our feelings; and the chill was trying to the faith of Christian Science. But there was a lively sprinkling of children and youngsters, and the tried and true of the oldsters, made a respectable audience. Mrs. Dillon was full of life to inspire the lyceum and lead it into the spiritual arcana in search of truth.

The evening brought out a fine audience, including Mrs. Dr. Matteson, fresh from Syracuse, where she had been to share the annual meeting of the State Association, of which she is an active and valuable member, and now elected to serve on the official board.

The strong personality of Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood and wife surprised me, as intellectual illuminators, and he is to give some scientific lectures at the church on week evenings, taking a door fee to meet expenseses. I regret that I am not to be one of his pupils for this week and next, on Wednesday evenings. There are some superficial Spiritualists who affect to discredit Prof. Lockwood as a Spiritualist, calling him a materialist, and even denouncing him as a "dangerous element" for spiritual Camp meetings! How any intelligent person, after hearing his lectures, or reading his books and letters to the spiritual press, can see any ground for such charges, surpasses my understanding. He is a materialist, and does not deny it; but his materialism is of that scientific order that demonstrates the continuity of human life, and the communication of excarnate men and women with the denizens of this world, and the frank and free expression of a belief in immortality. If this does not constitute a man a Spiritualist, what does? He has no apology for bogus mediumship, and strikes hard against frauds and shams of all kinds. If this is cause for a church trial and excommunication from the spiritual fraternity it might improve the condition of Spiritualism to ostracise the fraternity. Save the cause by expelling the church.

We may differ as to method, but no sensible Spiritualist, who loves the truth, can desire to coddle and protect any imposition, whether it be practiced by a medium to supplement the genuine or by a conscienceless pretender who is in no sense a medium, and abuses public confidence by systematic lying and preconcerted deception.

Brother Atcheson presided over our meeting, good music entertained and sweetened the hour, old friends met, and new ones were introduced, and the evidence was in favor of a hearty growth for unadulterated Spiritualism. I expect to speak in the same church the remaining Sundays of June.

From Buffalo I took a run—or ride—to Collins, about 6 miles south of North Collins, where for thirty years the great annual meeting of the Friends of Human Progress did a world-wide work for freedom and Spiritualism.

On Monday evening, June 5, in company with Mrs. Howe and her relatives, I visited the State Asylum for the Insane. It is a beautiful and wonderful place. 500 acres of ground in a very complete state of cultivation, worked mostly by the patients, and buildings all of brick, covering a large area that makes it seem like a modern city. We witnessed the dance in the spacious hall built expressly for entertainments for patients.

It is a model of fine taste, elegant appointments, beautiful scenery, and polished cleanliness. It is about seven years since it was started and there are now about seven hundred and fifty-eight patients and more coming. Many have been cured and discharged.

The music is one of the best remedies. It may also be one of the best preventives, not only of insanity, but all other maladies.

We stayed till about 11:30 p. m., during which time nature joined in the festivities in a sublime display of pyrotechnics, and a superb rendering of battle hymns of the clouds, supplemented by a baptism of her summer tears, the whole making a scene sublime and awful to witness.

Now don't you tell that I am just out of an insane asylum; for I might be suspected of having been obsessed. But against the obsession theory it is noteworthy that for most of the cases there are natural causes, easy to discover, and by the application of natural antidotes they are cured and discharged. One case that does not seem to improve much, is that of a Fredonia man who has spent most of his life with horses, and owned some racers, and his whole montality was absorbed in the horses and races. He fancies himself a horse, frequently claiming that he is the famous trotter "Duke" that he owned.

Another thinks he is a post, and he is stiff and straight, and when he dances all his motions conform to the ideal post, rigid, inflexible. One patient suddenly came to himself in the midst of the dance, and wondered where he was, and how he came there. He was cured from that hour.

Good medicine, pleasant to take; yet dancing is so wicked!

LYMAN C. HOWE.

Mediumship Defended.

And Advocates the Philosophy of Spiritualism.

To the Editor of the New York American:—I note in your paper of May 21, an article from Ella Wheeler Wilcox on Psychic Phenomena, and I read the communication with much interest as I do all articles from the pen of this gifted writer, that come under my observation, and yet I may not always agree with her conclusions.

Mrs. Wilcox says she had been asked to give her opinion upon the abovenamed subject, and surely she has a right to her opinion, and a right to express it, too, and as a thinker her opinion is entitled to respect. But it is said there are always two sides to a question, and some subjects are many-sided, and we are wiser if we hear all sides, and with your permission, Mr. Editor, the writer would like through the columns of your interesting and progressive paper, to voice a few thoughts on the other side of this important subject, and also kindly review some of the statements of the article in question.

The writer says she agrees with a certain judge in his remark, that "proofs of the existence of the mind of man after death was the most important matter in the whole world," and further speaks of the subject as an "important and beautiful study," and it would seem that a subject of so vast importance should be world-wide in its application, and yet Mrs. Wilcox would limit its study to just a few of the human race. She says: "I would earnestly advise any one who is not in robust physical condition, and not in the possession of a strong will, a clear reasoning brain and a well-balanced mind to keep away from psychic phenomena."

Now as a matter of fact there seems to be but few people comparatively in robust or perfect health, and the great mass of humanity are not the possessors of a strong will, clear reasoning brain or well-balanced minds, nor yet of strong individuality.

The mind of the great mass of the people is fashioned or molded by the prevailing thought of the age; they drift with the tide—the great countless throng of humanity have never been awakened to the need, or indeed to their right, to think for themselves, and because of this, when a subject is presented to the world that opens a boundless field of knowledge to the human mind, shall the multitude be barred from its benefits? Shall the investigation of this important and beautiful study be left solely to such men as Bishop Fallows, Minot Savage, Heber Newton, Dr. Funk and others whose interest therein Mrs. Wilcox says, "lends dignity to the study." She seems to be lacking in her faith in the common people—"the bone and sinew of the republic." Give the common people a chance, and note the progress.

In my opinion Mrs. Wilcox makes unqualified statements that need to be verified to be accepted as fact, and the very nature of these assertions preclude the possibility of verification. She says: "Many degenerates, if not all, half the insane, and many invalids are simply victims of obsession" (by evil spirits). I repeat it is quite impossible to verify these sweeping assertions, for even a "master" that she styles the "knower" could hardly have knowledge of the cause of all degeneracy. Really the causes of wrong-doing are manifold. To know the cause of degeneracy would necessitate a personal investigation of every individual degenerate, and the same regarding the insane. I question if anyone knows that half the insane people are so because they are obsessed by evil spirits. The causes of insanity, the same as of wrong-doing, are many.

This charge has oft been made by Theosophists.

Mrs. Wilcox also reiterates the charge that mediumship is destructive to the physical, mental, moral and spiritual welfare of the medium.

She says mediums as a rule are unable to distinguish between mind-reading and seership; but is there any crime in this? My opinion is that the mind-reading that Mrs. Wilcox says was practiced upon herself a score of times by mediums, regarding a desired event, was on the part of the spirit communicating rather than that of the psychic, and has my sister writer any knowledge to the contrary?

Mrs. Wilcox said that at a certain period of her investigation she found that her will, and the sense of personal responsibility was being lessened.

My own experience of more than thirty years investigation along this important subject has been exactly the opposite. My own will has been materially strengthened, my sense of personal responsibility largely increased, and my individuality strikingly developed; and my own case is only one of many of which I have knowledge.

My sister worker would have no one not in perfect health have anything to do with mediumship, and yet my experience has taught me that thousands of people have been benefited physically through psychic power. I have known many mediums who were ailing some of them invalids before the unfolding of their psychic powers, who have been restored to health through the life-giving forces and power of spirit. And then there are many mediums practicing the art of healing that have rendered untold blessings in this direction. Mrs. J. H. R. Matteson, the clairvoyant doctor—the psychic wonder of Buffalo, N. Y.—whose wonderful work is known throughout the state, has cured thousands and benefited other thousands. She devotes her time exclusively to the work, and has for thirty years, and is happy, hale and hearty.

And here, too, I may add, that I know of instances where mediums and others have been cured of the tobacco habit, the liquor habit, etc., through coming in touch with the forces and influences of the spirit realm.

Mrs. Wilcox speaks of thousands of mediums who throw open the door of their being to "all sorts" of spirits and declares the result of such action is ruin to them. I have been wondering where these thousands of people are. My own experience with mediums has been that they have one general spirit helper, or a band of assistants whose work is to protect, counsel and advise. My researches have not led me to one single medium who kept "open house" to all kinds of spirits. Here again experiences differ.

I would not "scoff" at "mastership" in things spiritual, nor declare it did not exist; and while I have no acquaintance with the particular kind of "mastership" issued from the school of "psychic wisdom" at Chicago, of which the writer speaks, still, mastership obtains in other departments of life. There are masters in eloquence, in oratory, in art, in sculpture, in mathematics, in music; there are masters in the professions, in medicine, in surgery, in law, in teaching; masters in the realm of invention, in the field of physical science, and in the world of industry. Yes, and on the field of carnage, masters in the "art" of war.

There are masterful home-builders, masterful souls in doing good. Masters too, among the street-sweepers and ditch diggers, and these latter are of equal importance in the great field of life with the masterful orator or artist, and thus it is in the natural order of things that there should be master minds in things spiritual, or in seership, but this does not signify that these masterful minds or "knowers," know it all. There is still the great field of unexplored knowledge. No master, or expert, or adept has exhausted the fountain of wisdom or drank all the exhilarating waters from the well of knowledge; there is still plenty from which the average mind can still quaff and be refreshed.

My gifted sister writer says she is "convinced of the immortal truth underlying it all, and also of the danger lurking in such investigation." But, my good sister, danger lurks everywhere. The danger is in excesses and abuses, and not in the normal and judicious use of methods and things; and I would advise all people who would come into a better understanding of life, its great meaning and purpose; who would come into a higher understanding of self; who would know the unfolding of latent powers and possibilities of being; who would sense the expansion of intellect; who would realize the exquisite joy of mental and spiritual freedom, who would have their will strengthened, their sense of personal responsibility quickened, their individuality intensified, their standard of moral action elevated, and their sense of justice enlarged—I would advise all such to investigate psychic phenomena with its accompanying philosophy which really constitutes the philosophy of life and the science of living. I would advise all people who would be rid of the element of fear, who would have removed the dread and terror that has so long hung as a pall of gloom over the gateway of death—I would advise all such to study the great subject of spirit return.

But beware of fakirs; use discretion and judgment in the selection of psychics. Tricksters and pretenders are abroad in the land. One recently came to grief in my own city. Charlatans are prowling around deceiving those not on the alert. Believe not every one who claims psychic power, but make inquiry and find the tried and true ones, and benefits untold will accrue therefrom. It will open to the enslaved mind, cramped and dwarfed by the dogmas and superstitions of the past, the great field of progressive thought, of free thought. And to me there is no brighter jewel in the crown of human experience than that we name Free Thought. It is the diamond rare that flashes its splendor of reason amid the dark superstitions that surround us. O, what a boon to be free to think, and to use the reason with which nature has endowed us.

In conclusion I may say that twenty-five years of public work, bringing me almost daily into contact with people who have investigated along these lines, added to my own study, and sensing in my own organism the inbreathing of inspiration's mighty flame, has led to the foregoing conclusions.

Opinions differ, and experiences differ upon which ideas are builded.

CLARA WATSON.

Jamestown, New York.

A CORRECTION

Made by William F. Nye, of New Bedford, Mass.

To the Editor:—In your list of Spiritual camp-meetings we particularly note the good things said of Onset (presumably by its management), and interested as I ever have been in Onset's development, it is amusing, to say the least, what they say of its pure water supply introduced several years since by a company having the best interest of this chosen spot at heart, little expecting any pecuniary gain for a decade, but they did expect a helping hand from the nine zealous directors of the association who annually collect $4,000 from the association's property consisting of 37 cottages, a large temple, a large casino, boat landings, many bath houses, etc. But in all the years that this water "that could not be purer and better" and which the state board of health has pronounced the best in the state, has not been introduced into a single one of their buildings, and the occupants of them all have to bring water in buckets from a driven well. But on the other hand we are taxed $100 annually for the privilege of bringing this element of salvation to the grounds—and salvation it truly has been, for the water from the drive wells was becoming contaminated by vaults and cesspools. With thousands of revenue in our treasury, these directors still persist in their course, scarcely contributing to a single fountain presented them to which the water company is contributing water.

This policy of Onset's management is strictly in keeping with the seven years' lease of the entire property of the association made to themselves, which for many years back has deprived all holders in the property of the Onset Bay Grove Association, not in the ring, of any of its revenues. We are literally fenced out to battle for justice in the state courts, and the public are decidedly of the opinion that the methods of Onset's camp-meeting directors are not right.

Now, my dear Mr. Francis, I am laying bare these conditions of what in the years past was one of the most prosperous Spiritualist camps in the country, more in pity than in anger, and to show that proud men of social and financial standing, as they would have you think, professing to aid the spirit world in its revealments, are no less deserving of censure than the frail mediums in their fraudulent methods.

WILLIAM F. NYE.

New Bedford, Mass.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations, of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. A very remarkable book. Large, octavo, 500 pages. Price, $1.75.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

"Child Culture, According to the Laws of Physiological Psychology and Mental Suggestion." By Newton M. Riddell. A most excellent work for all who have the care or training of children. Price 25 cents.

Motherhood the Best Guarantee of Good Citizenship.

We call ourselves a republic. Are we? A republic is a country governed by representatives elected by the people. Are we? No. The men of our country elect the representatives, but the men are only a fraction of the people, and no matter how good a fraction is, it can never be the whole.

The puritans caught the idea of religious liberty for themselves, but they denied it to others; yet they regarded themselves as upholding freedom. Church members only were at the time allowed to vote. After the close of the Revolutionary war it was the taxpayer only who could vote. Later, under Thomas Jefferson, the great democratic principles were advocated and white male citizens only might cast the ballot. The republicans blot out the word "white" and male citizens only may vote.

This country can never be a true republic while these limiting words stand. If the true republic would be upheld, every citizen, male and female, at the age of 21, should have the right of franchise. Disfranchised persons are described as "male idiots, male lunatics, male criminals, male children—that distinction? Why do governments exist? For the protection of property, for the fulfillment of law for the development of the people. Are not women interested in these matters? A woman, from cradle to the grave, has her life regulated by the government. Should she not have something to say about what shall be the kind of government she is controlled by?

In old times the men of this country made new laws for themselves, but imported the old common law for women, the common law preventing the married ones from holding or inheriting property or in collecting her wages if she earned them. During the last sixty years, since woman's suffrage has been agitated, these laws have been improved so that now married as well as single women may hold property.

Last year Massachusetts passed a bill which the women had been working for fifty years entitling a woman to a legal right in her own child.

There are now 500,000 children under 14 years of age at work in factories, and women who are struggling to get bills passed to prevent it have not been able to accomplish it. President Roosevelt has been lecturing on the subject of race suicide. Is there any race suicide like this? Since women are interested in the protection of property, in the administration of justice and the development of the race, it would seem that she would have a share in making the laws.

There are women who are unfit for self-government, as there are men unfit, but in each case they are in the minority. Women have the best guarantee of good citizenship that exists, and it is motherhood.

REV. ANNA H. SHAW.

President National Woman Suffrage Association.

TO A MOURNING MOTHER.

(Dedicated to Mrs John Patterson, of North Dakota.)

I would not wipe away a tear or soothe
the deepest grief,
For in them both there is a force that brings such sweet relief;
And yet I feel so sad for those who lose a little child,
And down within their spirits fail to be quite reconciled.

There is a sadness deep and low within a mother's breast,
When close unto her mother heart the lifeless form is pressed,
But when we know that naught is lost and death is but a change,
We cannot feel the passing on to be so very strange.

All beings in the stream of life are floating with the tide
And in the rushing current oft are swept from side to side;
A mother clinging to her child is often torn away
To meet and cling far down the stream upon some future day.

'Tis not the end when they depart, 'tis not forevermore;
The little darlings, growing, wait upon the other shore,
Where angels teach them of their souls,
from mortal bodies free,
The higher laws, the truer life of immortality.

DR. T. WILKINS.

Helped by Spirits.

We are often asked, of what use is Spiritualism. It is of use often in saving us from danger from severe accidents. I will mention a few cases where I have been saved.

Some thirty years ago, I was tending an iron planer. I had on it what is called a planer jaw. It is somewhat like a vise, for holding small pieces while being planed, which it would be very difficult to hold without it. While using it on a certain occasion I undertook to adjust a piece of iron that had become loose, without stopping the machine, which was a very dangerous thing to do. The planer jaw in moving back and forth passed very near to the back upright of the planer. To adjust the piece I had to place my hand forward of the jaw and if not taken away in time the hand would be caught between the jaw and the frame of the planer and the wrist cut off or crushed. Just in time to save my hand, some power outside of myself jerked my hand back out of danger. If it had been delayed one second of time I would have lost my hand.

Another instance, I was thrown to the ground by a runaway horse, the consequence was a stiff left shoulder joint. I could not move my shoulder joint. I was sitting by the stove and went to sleep, when some outside force took me by the arm and gave it such a sudden jerk that it loosed the joint so that it has been all right ever since but I never had anything hurt me as that did. The pain died away in a few minutes and I have not been troubled with it since.

In another instance, I was drawing fence posts down the mountain. There was a steep place where I had to chain the hindwheel. I had placed the chain round the forward axletree and as I was passing the chain back between the forward wheel and the wagon rack, my horse hawed just enough to catch my left arm between the wagon rack and the rim of the wheel. I exerted myself with all my strength to free my arm, but was held as firmly as though I were in a bear trap. I was out of hearing of anyone. After I had satisfied myself that I could not get clear without help, I became resigned to my fate and became passive. All of a sudden I was freed. The horse did not move to loosen the grip on me, but I was all of a sudden freed.

Redhouse, N. Y. A. H. FRANK.

"How to Train Children and Parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than buying this little book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

CANDIDLY

The World Has Never Seen the Like Before

Read This Offer:

Truly, the world has never seen the like before. Search the annals of history, ancient and modern; critically examine the history of Spiritualism; look here and there, in every nook and corner of the world, and you cannot find a parallel to the offer made in reference to these twelve remarkable Premium Books. They constitute a wonderfully valuable Spiritualistic and Occult library, and are furnished at a nominal sum. All are substantially bound, neatly printed, and those who purchase them are delighted with them. The only one to appear, "LETTERS FROM THE SPIRIT WORLD," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea, should be in every library. Read the following carefully:

We have now TWELVE magnificent Premium Books, and you can select from them as follows:

Any one of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price 25 cents. This is the price, remember, when you order only one book in connection with a yearly subscription. The paper, one year, and one Premium Book, $1.25.

Any two of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price 70 cents.

Any three of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $1.75.

Any six of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.05.

Any seven of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.

Any eight of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.65.

Any nine of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $2.90.

Any ten of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $3.10.

Any eleven of the Twelve Premium Books you may order, price $3.40.

Lastly, all of these TWELVE Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.75, something never before equalled in this country or Europe.

Bear in mind that every order for a Premium must be accompanied with a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker. We repeat that the world has never seen the like of it before.

OUR TWELVE REMARKABLE PREMIUM BOOKS FOR $3.75.

The following is the list of titles of the Twelve Premium Books:

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.

2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.

3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3. These three volumes have been prepared by J. R. Francis. They contain invaluable data.

4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.

5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism, by Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten.

6—The Next World Interviewed, by Mrs. S. G. Horn, a most remarkable medium.

7—The Occult Life of Jesus, by Alexander Smythe, a medium of rare gifts.

8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands. Translated by A. Farnese, a wonderful English medium.

9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science, by Hudson Tuttle.

10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

12—Letters from the Spirit World, written through the mediumship of Carlyle Petersilea.

Each Spiritualist should at once commencing forming a Spiritualist and Occult library.

When ordering a Premium Book, one or more, you must send in a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker.

WOMANLY BEAUTY

Of Form and Feature—The Cultivation and Preservation of Personal Beauty Based upon Health and Hygiene.

By twenty well-known physicans and specialists. With 80 half-tone and other illustrations. Edited by Albert Turner. A handsome volume, 256 pages, bound in cloth and gold.

In this volume the editor has brought together the teachings of those who have made a study of special features of the subject, and the result is a work that is unique and practical, not filled with a medley of receipts and formulas, so often found in books on beauty.

Fully illustrated with pictures that mean something to the reader, not of so-called "beauties," closing with chapters of "Hints in Beauty Culture" and "Hints in Health Culture," which, if followed, would alone be worth many times the price of the volume in securing health and good form, which is possible to all. Price $1.

"The Romance of Jude. A Story of the Life and Times of the Nazarene and His People." Through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley. An intensely interesting book. Neatly bound in cloth and gilt. Only 50 cents.

An Important Question.

It Is Ably Answered by L. W. Billingsley, Attorney, in a Lecture Delivered Before the Psychological Club of Lincoln, Neb.

Is There Psychic Phenomena That Leads to a Rational Inference That There Are Communications Between Spirits or Entities of Those Who Have Passed Over to the Unseen World, With Persons in Earth Life?

The last quarter of a century has been a remarkable epoch for spiritual enlightenment. It was an inevitable sequence of increasing knowledge, and of a firmer grasp of the psychic laws of the universe. These laws related both to the physical and spiritual realm. Science, with painstaking and patient investigation has penetrated and partially unfolded the forces and mysteries of the universe.

Man has a two fold nature, the physical and spiritual; the former adapted to his material environments and the latter capable of infinite expansion and development in spiritual surroundings. There are different degrees of manifestation of the physical and ethereal realms.

Science, Thought, Strange Discoveries.

Science has reached this point; it sees in matter a manifestation of spirit. Man through the eyes of science sees that he is encompassed round about,—in which thought carries its messages and flashes its images.

Thought is found to be a vital dynamic force, that springs into action and is manifested in deeds material and spiritual. Thoughts are things, in two realms of action.

Some souls have far outstripped others in potent enlightenment of humanity because they had greater power in interpreting spiritual forces. During the last quarter of the 19th century most remarkable discoveries were made; the telephone, phonograph, wireless telegraphy, and X-ray and other strange discoveries have been unfolded from the occult realm, and harnessed up and made of inestimable value to man. These strange discoveries proved the existence of forces and laws in the hidden recesses of Nature; they revealed that there was an important spiritual philosophy lying back of them. These revelations promoted a strong desire for spiritual truth, and for facts concerning the soul and its destiny.

All phenomena that tends to throw light on the question of the survival of the human personality beyond death, is now deemed one of the most important matters that can occupy the attention of the thinking world. A "scientific demonstration" of a future life is attempted by eminent investigators. The destiny of the soul is an intensely absorbing question, not only to students of science and philosophy of this day, but in all ages back to remotest antiquity.

Theories, Life Beyond the Grave.

Various kinds of hypotheses and theories have been advanced to explain psychic phenomena, that are being produced from time to time. The theory of the subjective mind, and its connection with hypnotism, telepathy, and mind-reading are made to do service for seeming spirit communication; in other words man is made the victim of illusions and delusions. The trouble and fallacy of these explanations of alleged spirit communications, are, they do not account for, nor cover all, the phases of phenomena that are from time to time manifested.

On the other hand, Spiritualists claim and endeavor to prove with more or less success, often with assumptions, that life beyond the grave and spirit communion with those on the earth plane, is a certainty; and that the spirit, the real man, still exists with improved faculties beyond the grave; and that the various phases of psychic phenomena, such as rappings, materialization, clairvoyance, clairaudience, psychometry, levitation, automatic writing, independent writing, trumpet talking, whisper talking, spirit photography, spirit painting, speaking in strange tongues, trance speaking, by mediums far beyond the capacity of the medium in his normal mind, are all produced by, and are due to, spiritual entities, who have survived the change called death, and by these various means are able to communicate with their friends on the earth's physical plane of existence.

The Views of Eminent Scientists.

Such well known scientists as Prof. Richet of Paris, Prof. Crookes, the distinguished chemist, the late Prof. Hare, Prof. Hyslop of Columbia University, Prof. James of Harvard University, Dr. Savage (the learned divine), Dr. Alfred Wallace, Prof. Flammarion (the eminent astronomer), and many other distinguished and conservative investigators have affirmed with more or less reluctance, that after allowing for the possibility of conscious or unconscious fraud, error in judgment, telepathy, hypnotism, there still remains a large residue of facts and phenomena that can be accounted for on no other hypothesis than that of the existence and acts of spirit intelligence, in communications which mortal man on the physical earth plane.

London Psychic Research Society.

The London Society for Psychic Research organized some twenty years ago, had for one of its prime purposes to expose fraudulent mediums, hypnotism, and all manner of psychic pretenses, by the most rigorous tests, has now over thirty large volumes of their proceedings relating to thousands of phenomena embracing investigations of its members into the occult world. The members of this society are largely composed of the leading scientists and investigators of the various countries of the civilized world. Its late secretary, Frederick W. Myers, one of the most scholarly men of his times, in investigating psychology and other occult sciences, became a reluctant supporter of the spirit hypothesis.

Pseudo Mediums Painted Black.

Not a great many years ago the claims of Spiritualists were looked upon with contempt, suspicion and derision; but for a few years past they have been gaining ground for credible demonstrations. It may now be assumed in all fairness that many of their statements of fact are credible and worthy at least of investigation.

One of the great causes of prejudice against Spiritualism arose out of the ground that a large class of pseudo mediums, psychics and fortune tellers masqueraded under the title of genuine mediums. The presence of these pestiferous fakirs and confidence men and women were a menace, and are so today, to weak-minded and impressionable people of many communities. Only a few of these would-be smooth "psychics" have any real mediumistic powers; their chief stock in trade is monumental nerve and robust assurance, joined to cunning, shrewdness and incisive knowledge of frail human nature, that aid them in their "graft." The presence of these brazen imitators, predicates the existence of genuine mediums. Worthless things are seldom counterfeited. The more worthy a thing is, the greater the number of counterfeits, you will find to be the general rule.

All mediums, clairvoyants and fortune tellers indulging in sensation advertising and disreputable practices should be avoided with silent contempt.

Real psychic powers should not be common merchandise.

The two extremes of psychic research are, crass and uncompromising materialism on the one side, and unbounded credulity on the other. The unprejudiced investigators of scientific attainments find proofs of spirit phenomena without doubt.

Many Spheres of Being and Activity.

The chief concern to the honest investigator is, not so much the verity of the mysterious phenomena, but the source and cause of their production. Investigation has in the latest era, of time, insistently reached out beyond the material world. Reason says that in the boundless universe, there probably is many spheres of being and activity, beyond the material world.

If twenty-five years ago a scientist had proclaimed that the human voice could be stored away in a cylinder of wax, and reproduced innumerable times, that one could talk with a friend over an electric wire a thousand miles away, and easily recognize his voice; that messages of love, statecraft, commerce and war, could be sent thousands of miles across the trackless ocean on the wings of vibrating air without the aid of an electric wire; or that a light of such tremendous vibrating power could be produced that would enable the human eye to look through a man, iron plate and other material things, such prophecies would have been generally pronounced, as the vagaries of a disordered mind; but all of these things have since come to pass, and are potent realities, for man's comfort, utility, profit, and progress. The unsounded depths of the spiritual universe lay back of the astounding discoveries, from which was rescued and unfolded these vast and subtle powers.

The philosophers of the materialistic school are putting more limited boundaries on that zone they once so glibly called the "unknowable"—which they so tenaciously for a long time held could not be explored. There are now but few learned men who have the temerity to put limitations upon the possibilities of man's knowledge.

Within the little span of 25 years, volume after volume has been given to the world on the "Scientific Demonstration of a Future Life," thus, as it were bridging over the seen and the unseen worlds. Death has been immeasurably robbed of its terrors by the white light of knowledge.

The Whence, the Why, the Whither.

Most of our knowledge now comes through the five senses. Printed and written matter is read by the eye, and oral teaching heard by the ear, and all is sensed by consciousness. There must be other channels of learning to inform ourselves of the realities of the universe beyond seeing, hearing, feeling, smelling and tasting. Telepathy, clairaudience, intuitions, premonitions, dreams and other phenomena lay beyond the five senses. It is in the province of the psychic investigator to explore and analyze these facts, to reveal nature and expound her laws.

There is pressing upon us on this morning of the 20th century an irrepressible craving to solve the problems of the whence, the why and the whither of our origin, progress and destiny. In every age these difficulties have confronted philosophy, progress and destiny—to know why we came here; why we are here; and whence do we journey.

The philosophy of the universe calls for an exposition of our nature, course and future. No one has an infallible grip on truth, though many act on that assumption, especially if they are dogmatic, intolerant, ignorant and take a little, narrow view of the philosophy of life; such souls are to be pitied, yet squinting at the great universe through a thin crack in their little cabin of knowledge, they would scorn pity.

The Philosophy of the Universe.

The philosophy of the universe calls for an exposition of our nature, course and future. Millions of humanity can not believe that we came here for one brief stay on earth, and that our whole future is determined by an insignificant fragment of existence, but that we come time and time again to earth life, going through a full round of experiences, of race, sex, condition, environment, steadily evolving upward, with fresher and better forms, unfolding new faculties and increased mental and spiritual powers, and more intense aspirations for good. Even about us now, we see vast differences in humanity, in faculties, aptitudes and capacities. To the leaden minded fisherman the glowing sunset is likely to arouse no thoughts save that of lowering weather and its relation to a catch of fish for the morrow, while to a genius it unfolds inspirations and ideals of indescribable delights.

The Phenomena of Spiritualism.

What is called spirit phenomena is of vast importance to humanity. Millions of people base their belief of the immortality of the soul on the phenomena which (they believe) gives them physical and tangible proof of communication with the spirits of friends and loved ones who have passed over to the unseen world. This faith and belief has given hope and comfort to millions of stricken hearts.

That momentous question propounded by Job, "If a man die shall he live again?" has to the mind of the Spiritualist been answered satisfactorily by these phenomena, when they were not satisfied by the words of sacred religion, and could not grasp the logic of the theologian. It is well to present the latest argument of psychologists against the conclusions of Spiritualists, who admit the phenomena, but deny the source of the phenomena to be in spirits of the other unseen world communicating with people living on the earth plane, clothed in physical bodies. Probably the ablest popular author from that point of view is the late Thomson J. Hudson, and his contention is set out with much force in that great work, his "The Law of Psychic Phenomena." In many instances he admits the premises of Spiritism with unusual candor; for instance on page 206 of the above named work he says: "THE MAN WHO DENIES THE PHENOMENA OF SPIRITISM TO-DAY IS NOT ENTITLED TO BE CALLED A SKEPTIC, IS SIMPLY IGNORANT; AND IT WOULD BE A HOPELESS TASK TO ENLIGHTEN HIM." However, he attempts to explain the origin of the phenomena and place it as he calls it "on rational principles," and thus removing them from the realm of the supernatural."

Some modern scientists have an easy way of discussing spirit phenomena; it consists in denying their existence and refusing them an investigation.

Some men are quite willing to plug up their ears and deny that it thunders, as they are so wedded to old superstitions, traditions, and hear-says. Such persons have as little comprehension of reason and logic as a frog has of astronomy. It is just that kind of people who deny all spirit phenomena. Those who have witnessed certain physical phenomena, such as moving of furniture and other ponderous objects, without contact with any person; flashes of lights in the darkness of a room; distinct utterances of intelligent speech through and without trumpets, and all about a room in various tones of voice, while the medium was in a sleeping trance, must appeal to one's intelligence, as constituting dynamic force possessing intelligence often of a remarkable degree, and that it must come from spirits of the dead or some other source.

Characteristics of Phenomena.

A careful observer of spirit phenomena can note these characteristics:

First—The phenomena seldom rises above the ordinary intelligence of humanity.

Second—The intelligence imparted through the spirit phenomena is on a level with that of the medium through whom it manifests itself.

Third—The communications often rise above his known objective intelligence.

The foregoing are the conclusions drawn by Dr. Hudson. Moreover, he says, that the alleged communications from the greatest philosophers who have gone before, amount to the merest twaddle when filtered through ignorant mediums. That has been the experience of some of us, who have heard alleged spirit communications from President Lincoln, Garfield, McKinley, also from Col. Bob Ingersoll and other notables; we have found them to be pleasing platitudes, glittering generalities and ungrammatical preachments. We have also heard reeled off yards of doggerel called poetry, stuffed with mutilated verbs and bleeding forms of speech, but with intelligent mediums this stupidity is not in evidence.

Influence of Intense Skepticism.

The writer has had affectionate communications through a medium from his alleged dead brother, who so far has not died. Of course this communication has come after a false suggestion of a dead brother made by the sitter. Mr. Hudson claims this is done by the medium, honestly, whose subjective mind is imposed upon and made to work through the power of suggestion. He makes another suggestion that has been generally found to be correct, "That no medium ever was powerful enough to produce his phenomena, under test conditions in the presence of a hostile and aggressively skeptical investigation committee." From this he concludes that the source of the phenomena, resides within the medium, and hence is amenable to the universal law of suggestion which governs the action of all subjective intelligence and power. There is another fact observable by all of us, that a medium cannot cause spirit phenomena, whose mind is agitated; quiet passivity, and peaceful serenity on the part of a medium is an indispensable prerequisite to success, not only in producing the phenomena, but in going into the trance state.

Operations of Mind, Fraudulent Spirits.

Fair-minded scientific investigators of spirit phenomena have from time to time reluctantly receded from their former opinions as to the the cause of spirit phenomena, and become its staunchest supporters, among whom may be mentioned some eminent as scientists, such as Professors Hodgson, Crookes, Wallace and others.

Dr. Hudson in his volumes entitled "The Divine Pedigree of Man" and "Scientific Demonstration of a Future Life" struggled to bridge the gulf between the seen and unseen world on operations of mind; but in places the spans of the bridge were made of straw assumptions. Law must reign everywhere in the universe, hence must prevail in the spirit world and govern the action of spirits. The material necessities of the earth life cannot prevail in the spirit world. Believing in the hypothesis of evolution we are impelled to the belief that the spirit in the unseen world is much like it is on the material earth plane here, and that it is slowly evolving to better conditions and greater powers. We have lying, deceptive, fraudulent spirits here, lodged in human bodies, and they go over to the other side with these same perverted natures, hence we conclude they act out their natures, in their manifestations, through mediums, in seances. On the other shore, they probably have a big crop of liars and frauds who try to palm themselves off on us here as being spirits of kings, presidents, philosophers, statesmen, poets, orators, divines and so on. Hence we often hear miserable stuff from alleged great spirits, but palpably were from fraud spirits using mediums as masques to hide their personal identity. It is absolute nonsense to conclude that bad people at once become good spirits and enter heaven upon death. It would be a travesty on the great law of evolution.

Fifteen years ago Dr. Hudson gave this as the scientific key to spirit phenomena: "That the subjective mind of the medium, being controlled by suggestion, believes itself to be the spirit of any deceased person whose name is suggested. It has been educated to that belief through the objective education and the environment of the individual. It is by the laws of his being, absolutely controlled by the objective belief of the individual, and the suggestions embraced in that belief." In his later work, "The Law of Mental Medicine" he calls the subjective mind the "soul." I have quoted much from him as he appears to be the strongest and fairest in his efforts to give a scientific cause for spiritual phenomena.

Mr. Hudson utterly fails to cover and explain some spirit phenomena as proceeding from the mind of the mediums prompted by suggestions of a sitter, or the medium's own auto-suggestion from his conscious to his subconscious mind.

When the occasion requires it, a man should be brave enough to say, "I don't know." We now know this much, that this earth occupies but a small space in the great universe and there might easily be a thousand laws and a thousand forces of which we have now no conception. In infinite space there is room for innumerable things. In seeing the phenomena of any strange power, we at least should have the courage to say I don't know.

A new or strange truth is ever accompanied with an element of danger. A man that advances it is generally deemed a suspect. It has been said humorously that "God has made the universe fireproof and permits man to play with the matchbox." Some people are overmuch afraid of being fooled, and others over-credulous. Often we are greatly deceived by believing too little, as well as believing too much. Often we see the worst kind of incredulity in some people's utter incredulity.

Emerson said, "Of no use to the world are those men who study to do exactly as was done before; who never understand that to-day is a new day." Within the last twenty years the boundary line between spirit and matter seems to have been passed.

Psychic cobwebs, if they be such, often baffle and tangle the feet of even intellectual giants. The vast seas of unknown powers are almost wholly unchartered. Prof. Crookes, the eminent scientist says that the human body is coarse and made up of slow, sluggish vibrations, but if the vibrations were increased as rapid as those of the X-ray our bodies would be invisible and pass through many solids, and if as rapid as radium would pass through all solids. So according to science the spirit body of Christ may have passed through the walls of the Chamber of Jerusalem, thus do away with the idea of the supernatural.

Lord Kelvin tells us seeming miracles are common. "Every action of human free will is a miracle to physical, chemical and mathematical science." If that is true of us mortals free will, then, what is it when we come to pass on the action of Infinite Intelligence? This same eminent scientist tells us that an atom of matter and an atom of ether may occupy the same space at the same time, and that an electron is so small that it will take one hundred thousand to make an atom. Great souls in scientific investigation are advancing the theory that there is a stupendous vitalizing energy through which runs streams of individuality.

Thoughts and feelings evibrate all about us. No man can think to himself without affecting others. The first great step in progress, is to be willing to say, I don't know; if you have not a sure grip on truth. Prof. Huxley gave this utterance: "Science seems to me to teach in the highest and strongest manner the great truth; an entire surrender to the will of Gods. Sit down before the fact as a little child, be prepared to give up any conceived notion, follow humbly wherever and into whatever abyss nature leads; or you shall learn nothing."

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

A Dog With a Soul.

A Detailed Account of a Most Remarkable Occurrence.

Jeff, the huge half mastiff, half collie that until two months ago was the property of Maj. Henry C. Willets of Boone, Watauga county, N. C., is the hero of one of the strangest romances of real life ever told. As set forth in a late number of the Chicago Sunday Tribune. The great dog, pet of the children of Boone, prevented the marriage of his master to an adventuress who sought to marry him and secure an interest in his great tobacco plantation, and to break up the match, he kidnapped Lee Willets, the 3 year old son of Maj. Willets, and cared for him for days, feeding, warming, and protecting him in the mountain fastness of the Blue Ridge.

That Jeff stole the child to break the engagement and reveal to Maj. Willets the real character of the woman he thought he loved every person in Boone and half the people of Watauga county believe. Even the negroes who work in the tobacco cross their foreheads with the caul of a coon or rub their noses with the left hind foot of a graveyard rabbit every time Jeff comes near, for they believe the spirit of the Major's dead wife, their beloved "missy," directed the actions of the giant dog.

Almost Too Weird to Believe.

The story as told in Boone and the surrounding county, is so strange and weird as to be almost unbelievable, and undoubtedly it is colored in some particulars by the fanaticism of the negroes and the superstitions of the poor whites. Yet, the plain, unvarnished recital of what Jeff did and how he did it is sufficient to stagger belief.

The story as gleaned from the principal actors and separated from the embellishments added by the negroes and poor whites is as follows:

Three years ago a strong, handsome man child came to the home of Maj. Willets, three miles below Boone, near Shull's Mills, on the Vilas river. And he was christened Lee—Robert E. Lee Willets. His mother, who was the beautiful Miss Nina Trimble of the Raleigh Trimbles, fell sick soon after Lee, her third child, was born, and the great joy that pervaded the Willets plantation was darkened. Maj. Willets had longed for a son. His first two children, Lucy and Faith, were 12 and 10 years old when Lee was born, and the arrival of the boy seemed to round out his life, and he was happy, not knowing that the boy's coming meant the departure of the beautiful young woman who had given up her career in Raleigh and Richmond society to wed him—a planter, and live with him far away from the gay scenes of her bellehood.

Dog and Baby Friends From First.

The week after Lee was born Maj. Willets went down to Greensboro to sell some of his bright top leaf hill tobacco, and when he returned he brought with him an awkward, big-footed, bright eyed puppy—and they called him Jeff, after Thomas Jefferson. The first thing that little Lee noted was the awkward puppy, dragging with his teeth at table cloths and dragging the major's best wide brimmed Sunday hat out into the yard, and Lee cooed and flopped his arms and wiggled with delight.

When Lee got so he could sit up on a comfort on the floor Jeff and he become great playmates, and the sick mother reclining on her couch, smiled gently as she saw her romping boy tugging merrily at the tail of the good natured puppy and Jeff dragging at Lee's dress with his teeth to attract attention.

Before Lee could walk the patient suffering of the beautiful mother ended and she was carried on the shoulders of six weeping negro men up the hillside and laid there with her husband's people.

The major, heartbroken, turned his attention to hard work to cover his bitter grief—and so Lee was left to the care of his young sisters and the negro mammies and to Jeff—principally to Jeff.

Say Mother's Spirit Entered Dog.

The negroes declare that from the day that Mrs. Willets died Jeff assumed charge of the boy, and they believe that the spirit of the mother guided the big, awkward dog, just reaching his full size, in taking charge of the baby. When Lee learned to toddle out on the grass in his second summer Jeff walked beside him, holding the baby's skirts in his teeth, and dragging him back when he tried to run too near the horses or cows. And Jeff would lie by the hour on the grass and let Lee pound and maul him, pull his ears, jab him in the eyes, and haul him by the tail, and simply smile—if a dog can smile.

So, when Lee learned to talk, he talked mostly to Jeff and the dog listened, according to the negroes, and seemed to understand all that the child said. The devotion of the dog to the child attracted the attention of everybody in the neighborhood, but for some unknown and unexplained reason the negroes even from the first conceived the idea that the spirit of the dead mother was directing the dog, and they shunned the dog. Even the mammies who had charge of the boy scowled and muttered when Jeff insisted upon sleeping under the baby's crib, and only desisted from driving him out of the house for fear he might "put the cunj" on them.

But everything was peaceful until last November, when Miss Ida Turpin of Baltimore, young and bewitching, came to teach school at Todd, a short distance from Boone, and the major met her. The girl, evidently of good family, in straitened circumstances, saw the major, still handsome and distinguished despite his 58 years, and she saw, clearer, his wide acres and his growing wealth of tobacco, his barns and his mules, his great tobacco press, his cattle and his horses—and she coveted them. The major, with his distinguished air, his snow white hair and mustache, riding in his freshly ironed linens, with his broad brimmed white felt hat set upon his white hair, was enough of himself to set the heart of any girl inclined to marriage, and the story of his running away to the war when only a child, his courage—and his riches—added to the palpitation in Ida Turpin's breast.

Fascinated by Her Pretty Face.

She had been reared in luxury, sent to the best private school in Maryland, and then a reversal had swept away the family fortunes and she had been forced to teach to support herself, and she was bitter. She saw in Maj. Willets the chance of riches and comfort, and, being heartless, she determined to wed him. Her smiles to him as he rode by the country school near Todd drew him back in that direction, and in a few weeks he rode out almost every day in that direction to meet the pretty faced, black-haired school mistress. Then by his invitation she came over one Sunday to spend the day at the Willets plantation.

The negroes declare that from the first both Lee and Jeff hated Miss Turpin. Lee ran away when she came near nor would his father's commands make him return, and Jeff showed his teeth and growled when she approached.

The love affair progressed rapidly. The major was completely infatuated. Each Sunday Miss Turpin came to the plantation for the day, and each time Lee and Jeff showed their displeasure and went away together to the negro cabins and ate and slept there until she returned to her school. The negroes vow that the name of the school-marm made the hair on Jeff's neck stiffen out straight.

The courtship progressed until in March Maj. Willets proposed to the fair schoolmarm. The proposal was made on the front piazza of the Willets plantation house and Jeff and Lee were playing on the walk below. Maj. Willets now declares that when he proposed, the dog jumped up with a sudden growl, ran up on to the piazza, and acted as if he was going to attack Miss Turpin, and that Lee, toddling up after the dog, slapped at her and told her to go away.

Asks All in Exchange for Hand.

Astonished and frightened a little bit, Miss Turpin hesitated and refused to answer until the dog and child had been sent away. Then when the major pressed her for an answer she told him she would consent to become his wife if he would put the plantation in her name and deliver the deed to her on the wedding day.

The major, forgetting everything and overlooking the grasping tendency of the woman, consented, and that evening at dinner he announced to his children his engagement. Lucy and Faith hugged and kissed "their new mamma," but—this according to the major's statement—Jeff growled angrily and Lee, without a word, climbed down from his high chair and toddled out of the room, followed by the dog.

Maj. Willets called sharply to Lee to return and kiss Miss Turpin, but he kept on and went out of the house, leaving the newly engaged pair with an uncanny feeling as to the child and the dog. At bedtime Major Willets asked for Lee. He could not be found. Neither could the negroes find Jeff. A hasty search of the negro cabins revealed the fact that they had not been seen since dusk, when they went down past the mule barns together. The great plantation bell was rung and negroes were sent to search the tobacco barns and the deserted cabins on the river side of the house. Eleven o'clock came and negroes were dispatched on horseback to Boone, where Lee's aunt lives, but he had not been there, and at 1 o'clock a general alarm was raised.

Match Ends With Child's Disappearance.

Not a trace of the child or the dog was found that night, but when morning came a negro brought word that they had been sighted near Amathe, going toward Stone mountain, the child hanging to the dog's collar and the dog pulling and dragging the boy along.

The weather was chilly, although spring was coming in that latitude, and the major was frantic. In his frenzied anxiety over the safety of his boy he stormed and blamed Miss Turpin. "They ran away because they hated you," he said. "I have been an old fool to bring a woman my child hated into my house, and if he dies I will never forgive myself. If he comes back alive I will never do anything to drive him away again."

And Miss Turpin, in her disappointment, revealed herself in her true light. She called the major an old fool and declared she would sue him for breach of promise.

"Sue away," stormed the major, "Sue away. I'll fight to the end before any scheming woman can have a penny of my baby's money."

The pursuit was taken up in the direction of Amathe, but no trace of the fugitives was found. The entire county was aroused, the alarm went from Watauga Falls to Soda Hill, and everywhere the planters roused out their negroes and searched the hills and valleys, foot by foot, without finding a trace. Four days passed and broken-hearted, the major returned to his home crushed and aged by the disaster that he had brought upon himself. The negroes in their cabins hinted at witchery and they told wild stories of the comradeship of the boy and the dog.

Negroes Believe Witchcraft at Work.

Still one great hope remained in the heart of the major. It was easy to conceive how a child might wander into the mountains and die, but how a great, strong dog could disappear and leave no trace was not understandable. The planters argued that the dog was still with the child and that they might be found in some negro cabin under the care of the blacks, so day by day the hunt went on.

The end of the first week found the major almost prostrated and the negroes firmly convinced that witchcraft had been at work. The bitterness of feeling grew so great that around Todd school district the people demanded that Miss Turpin resign. She wept and declared they were turning her out to starve and she, in humble spirit, came to the major, asked his forgiveness, and told him she would no bring suit if he would permit her to stay. His chivalry triumphed over his anger. He gave her $5,000 in cash and told her to seek a school elsewhere.

On the eighth day there came to the searchers a strange rumor. Negroes seven miles above Todd on Gap Creek Fork told great stories of an immense dog that came to their cabins and carried away the food they had cooked, running with it into the mountains. The moment the major heard the rumor he rode at the head of a party towards the spot. The section of country is wild and broken and the fork tumbles down between great wooded hills, in which only a few whites and negroes live. Before night the major had secured descriptions of the dog seen by the negroes and had organized the search.

Dog and Boy Found Together.

At ten o'clock that night, while the line of hunters with pine knot torches was beating through the woods, over gorges and mountains, the cry came along from the south that started everybody in that direction. Maj. Willets rode down the line, dashing madly through thickets towards the spot, and he discovered a score of negroes, with pine torches flaring, standing in an overgrown clearing around a deserted log house. In the doorway stood Jeff, growling and leaping toward every negro who advanced.

"Down, Jeff, down!" yelled the major as he leaped from his horse at the edge of the clearing.

The dog growled, but the bristles on his neck flattened down. "Good Jeff, come here," said the major, advancing. The dog slowly abandoned his attitude of defense, his tail began to wag, and a moment later the major stepped inside the cabin. There, sleeping upon the board floor, was Lee, safe.

The major, with something nearer a sob than had passed his lips in years, clutched his boy to his breast and tears fell upon the child's face. Slowly the baby's eyes opened, and as he hugged his father he whispered sleepily: "Did dada send away the nasty woman?"

The procession homeward through the woods was a joyous one. Lee, reassured, slept in his father's arms as the major held him tight on the horse, and by daybreak he was on his own bed, sleeping peacefully and happy, while Jeff, a little bedraggled, kept guard by the bedside.

From the baby lispings the family learned that Jeff really brought food to the child in the deserted cabin and the baby kept warm at night by hugging close to the big dog.

Some say that Lee, his baby heart broken by his father's love affair, ran away, and that Jeff followed him to protect him. But the negroes declare that the mother's spirit entered the dog and directed him to steal the child away, and keep it to prevent the marriage.

Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss at Clyde, Ohio.

Elizabeth Schauss closed our lecture season with a fine inspirational address in G. A. R. hall, Sunday, June 4. The subjects were selected by the audience, who gave rapt attention to her eloquence on the following: "The Egotism of Our Age"; "The Power of the Ideal in Real Life"; "The Solitudes of Nature and of Man, or the Loneliness of Human Life."

She said there were few who understood the value of solitude. The higher we ascend, the fewer there are who go with us to the top, and the greater our loneliness and the least understood. That the compensation for any sadness one might feel in such loneliness, was the power the calm environment may be made to yield. Wonderful powers are developed through solitude, repose and concentration. But in order to climb to the top and reach the vestibule of spiritual unfoldment, we must divest ourselves of all egotism, and not be swerved in our upward climb by those who falter by the way. We should have high ideals and never be satisfied until we attain them. The great ideal of Lincoln was to see everyone enjoy the freedom that he enjoyed, the thought of which came to him in moments of solitude and concentration when alone. He did not falter, but lived to reach the goal of his ambition.

I wish I could report in full this fine lecture, so full of beautiful lessons and uplifting thoughts. I have given but a brief synopsis, not couched in the same words, exactly, but conveying the same ideas and meaning.

At the close of the lecture she gave a few psychometric readings which were accurate. We predict for Mrs. Schauss a brilliant future in the intellectual field of mental development and psychic unfoldment.

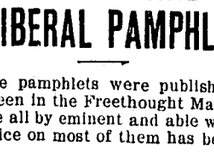
MARY E. FRENCH.

How a Woman Paid Her Debts.

I am out of debt, thanks to the Dish-washer business. In the past three months I have made $600,000 selling Dish-washer. I never saw anything sell so easily. Every family needs a Dish-washer and will buy one when shown how beautifully it will wash and dry the family dishes in two minutes. I sell from my own house. Each Dish-washer sold brings me many orders. The dishes are washed without wetting the hands. That is why ladies want the Dish-washer. I give my experience for the benefit of any one who may wish to make money easy. I buy my Dish-washers from the Mound City Dish-washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write them or particulars. They will start you in business in your own home. L. A. C.

Spiritism and Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's Theories in Regard to It. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey. Demonstrates futility and inadequacy of Hudson's explanations of spiritual phenomena. Price 25 cents.

"The Kingship of Self-Control." By Wm. George Jordan. It treats of the crimes of the tongue, the Red Tape duty, the supreme charity of the world, the revelation of reserve power, etc. Price 30 cents.



"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth, $1.50.

RHEUMATISM

CURED Through the Feet

Don't Take Medicine, External Remedy Brings Quick Relief. FREE on Approval. TRY IT.

We want everyone who has rheumatism to send us his or her name. We will send by return mail a pair of Magic Foot Drafts, the wonderful external cure which has brought more comfort into the United States than any internal remedy ever made. If they give relief, send us One Dollar; if not don't send us a cent.

Magic Foot Drafts are worn on the soles of the feet and cure by absorbing the poisonous acids in the blood through the large pores. They cure rheumatism in every part of the body. It must be evident to you that we couldn't afford to send the drafts on approval if they didn't cure. Write today to the Magic Foot Draft Co., X017 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich., for a trial pair of drafts on approval. We send also a valuable booklet on Rheumatism.

The Arcana of Spiritualism

A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker are already acquainted with character of this book. It is intended by its assisting, inspiring spirit-authors to furnish a compendium to the student of psychic laws and manifestations. It has been more than thirty years in preparing and contains all that has been received by me through inspiration and research during that time on the subjects it treats. Few questions will arise in the minds of investigators that are not answered in its pages. Price, $1.25 postpaid.

Address all orders to

HUDSON TUTTLE,
Berlin Heights, Ohio.

FREETHOUGHT AND LIBERAL PAMPHLETS

These pamphlets were published by Mr. Green in the Freethought Magazine and are all by eminent and able writers. The price on most of them has been reduced.

Roscoe Conkling. Memorial Oration. by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price 3 cents.

Thomas Paine. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price 3 cents.

Voltaire. An address by Prof. Emile Pingault. Price 3 cents.

Abraham Lincoln. His Religion. By Robert N. Reeves. Price 3 cents.

Burns and Whittier. Some of Their Likenesses and Differences. By Prof. Charles G. Brown. Price 5 cents.

Religion in the Republic. By Mrs. M. A. Freeman. Price 5 cents.

Rational Worship. A lecture delivered before the Chicago Liberal Society by Dr. T. B. Gregory of Chicago. Price 8 cents.

Why I Am Not a Christian. By D. D. Stedman. Price 8 cents.

Genesis to Revelation. Free Thought Commentary on the Whole Bible. By Judge Parish B. Ladd. Price 10 cents.

Revelation Under the Microscope of Evolution. By Prof. Daniel T. Ames. Price 10 cents.

Life and Career of Charles Bradlaugh. By George Jacob Holyoake. Price 10 cents.

Religion and Science. The "Reconciliation Mania" of Dr. Paul Carus of The Open Court. Analyzed and Refuted by "Corvinus." Price 10 cents.

Free Thought Past, Present and Future. By Prof. Thaddeus B. Wakeman. With his portrait and life sketch. Price 10 cents.

The Priest and the Church—What Have They Done for the World? By Judge Parish B. Ladd. Price 15 cents.

John Tyndall Memorial. Ten short sketches of the life of this great man. Price 10 cents.

Cosmology Against Theology. By Vindex. Price 10 cents.

Church and State. The Bible in the Public Schools. The New American Party. A Criticism by "Jefferson." Price 10 cents.

Standing Up for Jesus; or What the Editor of the Freethinkers' Magazine Thinks of Jesus. Price 3 cents.

"Why An Expurgated Bible?" By Rev. E. H. Keeas. Price 3 cents.

Progress of Evolutionary Thought. The opening address before the Congress of Evolutionists, held in Chicago, Sept. 28, 29 and 30, 1893. By B. F. Underwood, the chairman. Price 3 cents.

Christianity; its Impeachment and Decadence, Also Demands of Liberalism. By Dr. F. E. Abbot and Prof. T. B. Wakeman. Price 3 cents.

Myth of the Great Deluge. By James M. McCann. Price 15 cents.

The Evolution of the Devil. By Henry Frank. Price 20 cents.

Prayer; Its Uselessness and Unscientific Assumption. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

Liberalized Christianity. By Henry M. Taber. Price 5 cents.

The Republic in Danger. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

In Place of Christianity. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

"Right Generation the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth." By Dr. M. E. Conger. An appeal to reason and man's highest aspirations. A plea for justice and equality in all the relations of life between men and women. Cloth, 75 cents; leatherette, 50 cents.

"Social Upbuilding, including Co-operative Systems and the Happiness and Ennoblement of Humanity." By E. D. Babbitt, LL. D., M. D. This comprises the last part of Human Culture and Cure. Paper cover, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

"The Attainment of Womaly Beauty in Form and Features. The Cultivation of Personal Beauty, Based on Hygiene and Health Culture. By twenty physicians and specialists. Edited by Albert Turner." Of especial interest and value. Price $1.

"The Commandments Analyzed." By W. H. Bach. The Commandments are not only analyzed, but contrasted with other Bible passages, showing great incongruities. Price 25 cents.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street,

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year	$1 00
Six Months	50cts
Thirteen Weeks	25cts
Single Copy	5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE:

☞ At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1905.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Editor-at-Large for the National Spiritualist Association.

Mr. Tuttle has been engaged to answer all attacks in the secular or religious press on Spiritualism. Send him clippings when an attack is made, giving date and name of paper. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Any person donating one dollar to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., will, if desired, receive one set of spiritual tracts and one copy of "Violets," a booklet of choice spiritual poems. One contributing two dollars to the fund will also receive a copy of "Leaves of Truth," a cloth-bound book of instructive spiritual matter.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.
600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C.

Common Sense in a Christian Pulpit.

Scarcely a week passes when there is not evidence that the pulpiteer is getting on common sense ground. Following the habits of the ancients who accredited the paternity of their great men to a God, the Christian fathers, to make Jesus worthy of veneration, gave him the credit of having been sired by the Eternal God. Not yet content, they alleged he was co-eternal with the father; that though he passed through the embryotic period; was born as all babies are born; passed through the period of adolescence; arrived at man's estate; ate, drank and slept like other men; preached, suffered agony on the cross as other mortals have suffered, and died as they; yet all the time he was the great God himself, possessing his wisdom, power, goodness and mercy; that he ascended to heaven, and there assumed the duty of judge of the dead.

It can be easily proven that every characteristic ascribed to Jesus was common to the sons of pagan gods; that it was only a transference of ancient beliefs to this new candidate for godly honors.

But here comes Rev. Dr. Algernon S. Crapsey, an Episcopalian of Rochester, N. Y., who in a late discourse declared in so many words:

"In the true light of scientific research the founder of Christianity, Jesus, the son of Joseph, no longer stands apart from the common destiny of man in life and death, but he is in all things like as we are; born as we were born, dying as we die."

If Jesus was not a myth, such is clearly his history.

It is dishonoring to the great Father of us all, to give credence to the Catholic claims which Protestants inherit, that a Jewish maiden was overshadowed by the Holy Ghost, a fraction of the godhead, and yet that God himself; and then to exalt that Jew girl to the title of Queen of Heaven, and worship her as such. But the learned clergyman, in that same discourse, braved more, he said:

"A belief in the inerrancy of the Bible is no longer possible to an educated man, or to any one, in fact, who reads his Bible with reasonable intelligence and attention."

The Catholic world saw what the final outcome would be if their sacred book was placed in the hands of the people, so they resisted the movement of Luther and his associates to place that collection of fragmentary literature in the hands of the people. Then they forbade its reading by the laity. They exerted all their powers to keep its contents from being known, and tried, but vainly, to limit knowledge to the priesthood. But here we are in spite of them, and now there is seemingly an organized movement on the part of educated Christian clergymen to tell the truth about the Bible and about the man Jesus.

Let the contest go on inside the church, Spiritualists keeping hands off. Don't let us try to exalt our mediums by declaring Jesus a medium. There is a greater question still to be settled. Deprived of his godhead, was he a man or myth? In reconstructing paganism, did the Fathers consolidate their lesser gods, Bacchus, Adonis, Apollo, Esculapius, Serapis, etc., convert them into Jesus, and locate him in Galilee, a then almost unknown quarter of the world?

DR. J. M. PEEBLES.

Ere this paper reaches our readers, the venerable pilgrim, Dr. J. M. Peebles, will be at his home in Battle Creek, Mich. He had an exciting time while in England, being kept extremely busy in giving lectures.

"Death Defeated; or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young." By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D. Price $1. 10 cents.

"The Present Age and Inner Life; Ancient and Modern Mysteries Classified and explained." By Andrew Jackson Davis. We have a few copies of this work by the celebrated seer. Cloth, $1.10.

Counterfeit Phenomena.

Ringing Words From H. W. Richardson, President of the New York State Spiritualist Association.

There can be no such thing as fraudulent mediumship. Mediumship is genuine or it is not mediumship at all. Nevertheless there are persons who pose as mediums who attempt to imitate genuine manifestations for filthy lucre. They don the livery of heaven in which to serve the devil. That this iniquitous practice has greatly retarded the progress of our movement is unquestionably true. We may differ in our opinions as to the best methods for dealing with this question, but there is no gainsaying the fact that Brother Francis of The Progressive Thinker has done yeoman service to Spiritualism by his unrelenting warfare against, and exposures of, pretense and deception under the name of mediumship.

Thoughts for the Thoughtful.

An article in "Public Opinion" of May 27, headed "Church Wealth in France," shows that "The total value of art treasures in French churches, without including those of an architectural nature, is no less than $400,000,000. This sum would be doubled if sculptures, and so forth, were added."

Suppose to this enormous wealth, stolen from the people, exempted from taxation, and used to magnify the importance of the church and its priesthood, was added the cost of magnificent and palatial churches, cathedrals, monasteries, nunneries, and all the other accumulations of wealth, used solely in the interest of a creed in France were taken into account. The sum total would swell into many billions. How far short of the truth is the statement made by Thiers, in substance, in his History of the French Revolution, that two-thirds the entire wealth of the nation was under sacerdotal control, exempt from taxes, the other one-third compelled to pay the expenses of state, at the time of their revolution?

It may be said the government has confiscated this vast wealth, claiming it is the property of the people; but the Republic dares not to divert this wealth from church uses. It remains a corrupting influence under church control, and the people remain its slaves.

Now what is true of church influence, with the wealth of the nation at its bidding and control of public affairs in France, is, to a less extent, true in America. Fortunately for us, in stead of one great church dominating all, we have many, and with varying creeds they cannot combine; but still they are a menace to our institutions, and with instinctive desire to lead and control, the popular mind, they are ever struggling to add to their wealth. When so old as France, the same order of things prevailing here as there, in the distant centuries to be, America will be in the clutches of a priesthood whose ambition has always been to rule or ruin. They use heaven as their stock in trade, and until the masses repudiated hell that was a contributary force in aid of their tyranny.

Our hope and belief is, that with the spread of knowledge, and the universal diffusion of education religious ideas will change; that churches will develop into social organizations, having more care of the mortal, thereby better qualifying its members for an immortal life. The one-world-at-a-time theory is an excellent one with this interpretation, and harmonizes with Spiritualism. We live to-day with the positive knowledge of a to-morrow.

Practical Religion vs. Theoretical.

President Geo. Harris, of Amherst College, during a recent discourse entitled "Formal Instruction and Morals in the College," said:

"There is, I think, more practical religion in the colleges to-day than in any other period of their history. Cant and pretense are not tolerated; irrational doctrine is discarded; but faith, hope, love and character are exalted."

Who does not know that brutal penalties never lessened crime? It was not long ago there were upwards of two hundred crimes in England that were punished with death. Statistics show that there was no period in English history when crime was as prevalent as then. If a person had stolen a lamb, the punishment was death. "Why not take the dam as well," inquired the offender. "They can't kill a person but once." And if the owner of both interposed opposition, and he was killed, or a dozen others, the penalty could not be increased.

In the divine economy the priests told us: "The stealing of a pin, if unforgiven by God, subjects the offender to the undying flames of a sulphurous hell forever." The slaughter of a multitude of his fellows could not increase the penalty, so the wretch went on adding crime to crime until mortal justice overtook him, when he in turn was slaughtered so Infinite Justice could take a hand in increasing the torture and prolonging it through a wasteless eternity.

As discrimination in our penal code, with milder punishment, has become the order of the day crime has decreased. And with hell very generally eliminated from the Christian creed, at least in effect, students in colleges, and the people everywhere, have became more civilized, hence the effect which the College Professor noted, and which all know to be a fact.

"Success, and How to Win It." A lecture and course of twenty-four success lessons by Dr. B. F. Austin, B. A., D. D. The titles of some of the lectures are as follows: Self Helps; Financial Success; Ideals; Economy; Planning; Attraction; Courtesy; Kindness and Tact; Angelic Help. Price 25 cts.

"The Jesuits." By Rev. B. F. Austin, A. M., B. D. An excellent pamphlet. Price 15 cents.

"Love—Sex—Immortality." By Dr. W. P. Phelon. Price 25 cents.

Going Forward.

Seldom do we find in any journal, secular or religious, an essay, brief or lengthy, expressing more of vital, progressive truth, full of suggestive thought, and thoroughly uplifting in its spiritual significance, than is found in "A Sermon for Today," on the subject of "The New Faith and the Old," in the Chicago Sunday Tribune.

Spiritualists as well as others may study these very incisive and suggestive thoughts, with delight and profit. The whole intent is in full accord with our Spiritual Philosophy and teaching, and has practical application to Spiritualists as well as church-men.

It shows clearly that churchmen, as truly as Spiritualists are going forward:

"Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."—Ex. xiv., 15.

The first impression of any forward movement is that it means a dissolution of all the things to which one can tie. Slowly dawns the truth that the mind of man was not made to tie to anything, that it cannot be fastened to any landmark, that it is a living thing which must either go forward or die. This, true of the body itself, is true of our whole life, of our education, of our emotions, our character, and our civilization. We must needs go forward or perish, even though the movement means facing the desert and leaving those things which we have been to such pains to establish.

This law holds good in religious thought. The truth of today must be the error—or half truth—of tomorrow as certainly as the garments of the child must be discarded by the man, and just as in large measure the science of today will be the superstition of tomorrow. If men grow in things how much more shall they grow in thought. Religion being man's attempt to express in deed and word his thought of the highest and best it would belie its name if each new height gained did not show some yet greater height before. An unchangeable religion would not be a religion at all.

Yet no other thing has so worried many good people as the fear that their religion should change. Just as they once believed that the universe was made, finished, and fixed forever—as though such a thing would ever be true of a universe aglow with life—so they thought of their religion as committed to them complete like a set of unchangeable laws. Therefore their utmost concern was to preserve its precise form, and the great thing in religion became not the spirit of its teaching but the form of its text. Failure to realize the vital and therefore developing nature of religion resulted in the guarding of the letter that kills at the expense of the life-giving spirit. And when faith forsook its chrysalis stage they wept such bitter tears over its broken shell they have not yet seen the fairer glory into which it has grown.

If there be any ground for lament as to the condition of religion it lies not in the failure to preserve the old statements and the old customs, not in the unwillingness of the world today to shrink itself into yesterday's outworn forms of truth, but in the pitiable sight of a church that tries to keep up the old life with dead formulae, that has so far forgotten its great teacher's revelation as not to know that religion is life and not logic, or laws, or language. The saddest feature today is the unwillingness of the church to go forward; instead of being the leader of science and of civilization she is often reluctantly dragged behind these onmoving powers.

The need now is not to go back to Moses and Paul, as though these were our goal, but, taking some guidance from them, to go forward into the new truth that is ever dawning. He who steps into the twilight of new truths always finds the day breaking about him. If he stands perfectly still the full day comes and then the night again. It is only the man who keeps on moving forward who is always it the light. The trouble is that so many are standing fast in truth from which the light has all died out, and they are calling their darkness the only day and denouncing those who prefer the light.

The ancient good ever stands opposed to the new best. It says, better stay in the old Egypt you know than perish in a desert untried. But true souls step forth. They find the desert, and often it is drear; yet God is there, and morns are bright and manna falls by the way.

Then beyond the desert there is Canaan; beyond the Alps, Italy; beyond the doubt, the delight of larger, clearer truth. Do not fear leaving the old; do not worry over theological unrest. Unrest is but the sign of life. Better the child's unrest than the senile placidity of old age. Better the death in the desert than decay in Egypt. Better to die in doubt than to mold away in the empty tomb of truth. Consider him, who for the joy set before him, despised the cross; forget the things behind and press forward to the prize before, the clearer light and larger life.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

The Psychic Circle.

An Explanatory Letter From Dr. Alex Caird.

To the Members of the Psychic Circle:—I would like to correct a misunderstanding in regard to the Psychic Circle. Many of our correspondents seem to think that no one can become a member unless they are a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker. We certainly wish that every member might (for their own good) receive the benefit to be derived from reading the grandest spiritual paper published, and so keep in touch with the spiritual happenings, and learn the views and opinions of the different writers on the large variety of subjects treated, but we realize that there are many who would like to become members of the circle who are not able to subscribe for the paper, much as they might like to. Such are just as welcome; there are no conditions. We wish Brother Francis could read some of the many letters we have received extolling his paper; he would certainly feel that his efforts for the world's betterment were appreciated.

A word as regards the difference in time. As our circle extends, not only all over our own country, but to Africa, India, Europe, Australia and New Zealand, one can readily see that if we tried to sit at nine o'clock by one time, some part of our circle would be observing the rules every hour in the twenty-four. If we all sit at nine o'clock, local time, the thought wave will start at the Atlantic, extend across the continent and around the world.

If any member wishes the circle to concentrate their wishes on any subject of general interest, will they kindly send the request to The Progressive Thinker? We have no way to inform the large circle, but everybody reads The Progressive Thinker. We would also request the circle members to repeat the following prayer, by Robert L. Stevenson, upon arising in the morning. "The day returns and brings us the petty round of irritating concerns and duties. Help us to play the man; help us to perform them with laughter and kind faces; let cheerfulness abound with industry. Give us to go blithely on our business all this day; bring us to our resting beds weary and content and undishonored, and grant us in the end the gift of sleep."

ALEX. CAIRD, M. D.
44 Commercial street, West Lynn, Mass.

RIDICULE.

Artemus Ward's Account of a Circle.

Almost every subject, creed, religion, faith, belief, philosophy or science, however beautiful and true, can be made the butt of ridicule. The sting in ridicule consists in the skillful presentation of the truth of a subject in a false and humorous light, or in holding up before the world in a humiliating manner the idiotic, ignorant, irresponsible, unacknowledged representatives of the subject ridiculed. There has always been and no doubt will continue to be a peculiar opportunity to ridicule Spiritualism. There is perhaps a greater chance to ridicule the Christian religion, but for obvious reasons it is not taken advantage of. Spiritualism, however, is obliged to take it from all sides, and the fact that it has for so many years withstood and continues to withstand it, not only, but keeps on steadily finding its way into the hearts and minds of the people, is a fact of no ordinary significance. Scientists, philosophers, doctors, lawyers and even preachers are accepting it as a most glorious truth. Bishop Fallows in Chicago, and a German Lutheran preacher in New Jersey (whose name I cannot now recall) have recently preached it from their pulpits, much to the delight and comfort of their parishioners.

But the object of this communication is the reproduction of as fair a sample of ridicule as any I have observed of the subject of Spiritualism. It is from the pen of the late Artemus Ward (Charles F. Browne) who was a natural genius in his profession—that of a humorist,—and will be enjoyed by the Spiritualist equally with the non-Spiritualist. It runs as follows:

Among the Sperrets.

My naburs is mourn harf crazy on the new fangled idear about sperrets. Sperretooul sircles is held nitely & 4 or 5 long-haired fellers has settled here and gone into the sperret biznis exclooslvely. A atemt was made to git Mrs. A. Ward to embark into the sperret biznis but the atemt faled. 1 of the long-hared fellers told her she was a etherreal creeter & wood make a sweet medjium, whareupon she attact him with a mop handle & drove him out of the house. I will hear obsarve that Mrs. Ward is a invalerble womun—the partner of my gois & the shairer of my sorrers. In my absunce she watchis my interests & things with a eagle eye & when I return she welcums me in afectionate stile. Trooly it is with us as it was with Mr & Mrs. Ingomar in the play, to whit—

2 soles with but a single thawt,
2 harts which beet as 1.

My naburs injooced me to attend a sperretooul sircle at Squire Smith's. When I arrove I found the east room chock full, includin all the old maids in the villige & the long hared fellers a4sed. When I went in I was salootid with "hear cums the benited man"—"hear cums the hory-headed unbeleever"—"hear cums the skoffer at trooth," etsettery, etsettery.

Sez I, "my frienz, it's troo I'm hear, & now bring on your sperrets."

1 of the long hared fellers riz up and sed he would state a few remarks. He sed man was a critter of intelleck & was movin on to a Gole. Sum men had bigger intellecks than other men had and they wood git to the Gole the soonerest. Sum men was beasts & wood never git to the Gole at all. He sed the erth was materiel but man was immateriel, and hens man was different from the erth. The earth, continnered the speeker, resolves round on its own exeltree onct in 24 hours, but as man haint gut no axeitree he cant resolve. He sed the ethereal essunce of the koordinate branchis of superhuman natur becum metty-morfussed as man progrest in harmonial co-existence & eventoocally anty humanized theirselves & turned into reglar sperretuellers. (This was versifferously applauded by the cumpany, and as I make it a pint to get along as pleasant as possible, I sung out, "bully for you, old boy.")

The cumpany then drew round the table and the sirkle kommenst to go it. They axed me if there was anybody in the sperret land which I wood like to converse with. I sed if Bill Tompkins, who was onct my partner in the show biznis, was sober, I should like to converse with him a few periods.

"Is the sperret of William Tompkins present?" sed 1 of the long hared chaps, and there was three knox on the table.

Sez I, "William, how goze it, old Sweetness?"

"Pretty tuff, old hoss," he replide. That was a pleasant way we had of addressin' each other when he was in the flesh.

"Air you in the show biznis, William?" sed I.

He sed he was. He sed he & John Bunyan was travelin with a side show in connection with Shakspere, Johnson & Co's. Sircus. He sed old Bun (meaning Mr. Bunyan) stirred up the animils & ground the organ while he tended door. Occashunally Mr. Bunyan sung a comic song. The sircus was doin middlin well. Bill Shakspeer had made a grate hit with old Bob Ridley, and Ben Jonson was delitin the peple with his trooly grate ax of hossmanship without saddul or bridal. They was rehersin Dixey's Land & expected it would knock the pepel.

Sez I, "William, my luvly frend, can you pay me that 13 dollars you owe me?" He sed no with one of the most tremenjis knox I ever experienced.

The sircle sed he had gone. "Air you gone, William?" I axed. "Rayther," he replide, and I knowd it was no use to pursoo the subjeck furder.

I then called for my farther.

"How's things, daddy?"

"Middlin, my son, middlin."

"Ain't you proud of your orfurn boy?"

"Scacely."

"Why not, my parient?"

"Becawz you have gone to writin for the noospapers, my son. Bimeby you'll lose all your character for trooth & verrassety. When I helpt you into the show biznis I told you to dignerfy that there profeshun. Litteratoor is low."

He also statid that he was doin middlin well in the peanut biznis & liked it putty well, tho' the climit was rather warm.

When the sircle stopt they axed me what I thawt of it.

Sez I, "My frends I've bin into the show biznis now goin on 23 years. There's a artikel in the constitooshun of the United States which sez in effeck that everybody may think just as he darn pleases, & them is my sentiments to a hare. You dowtlis beleeve this sperret doctrin while I think it is a little mixt. Just so soon as a man becums a reglar out & out sperret rapper he leeves orf workin, lets his hare grow all over his face and commensis spungin his livin out of other peple. He eats all the dickshunaries he can find & goze round chock full of big words, scarein the wimmen folks & little children & destroyin the peace of mind of evry famerlee he enters. He don't do nobody no good & is a cuss to society & a pirit on honest people's corn beef barrils. Admittin all you say abowt the doctrin to be troo, I must say the reglar perfeshinal sperret rappers—them as makes a biznis on it—air abowt the most ornery set of cusses I ever enkountered in my life. So sayin I put on my surtoot and went home. Respectably yures,

A. WARD.

Can it be possible that Spiritualism has survived such withering, blasting, scorching, stinging ridicule as the foregoing, and grown and prospered in the face of it? It is plainly evident that Artemus Ward had had some personal experience in the investigation of the subject of Spiritualism, not with genuine mediums, but with genuine frauds, and I can therefore not only enter into and appreciate the spirit of his humor, and excuse his ridiculous rebuke, but I can heartily sympathize with him in his most apparent disappointment in his investigation of the subject, for have we not all encountered similar experiences in our examination of it? The only difference between Artemus Ward's experiences and those of our own is that amid all the fraud and rot and rubbish with which we have come in contact we have gathered a sufficient number of pearls to establish us not in the faith but in the knowledge of the fact we live beyond the tomb. While we have all been disgusted with many so-called Spiritualistic phenomena and angered by many so-called mediums who supposed they were giving us great satisfaction and regarded us easy marks upon which to practice their damnable fraud, we have experienced a certain proportion of genuine phenomena and met a respectable number of genuine honest mediums through whose mediumship we have received incontrovertible evidence that those gone before still live.

When Spiritualists all over the world are organized so that each society or church can maintain for a stated number of years or indefinitely, honest, true, respectable expounders and demonstrators of the truth of Spiritualism, its progress will be much more rapid and uninterrupted. The only wonder now is that it has made any progress at all with the dead weight it is carrying and has carried all these years.

H. V. SWERINGEN.

A Telling Thrust.

A new and telling thrust at the church, by one of its most prominent members, Rev. Washington Gladden, a Congregationalist, hit a vital part, and threatens the whole church fabric. It was made in his late Memorial Day sermon. He said:

"The Congregational Church has come to be a church of employers; the masses of the people who work with their hands for wages, are, as a class, outside of the church and are rapidly increasing in numbers. The same fact is true of all Protestant churches, and Christianity fails to fulfill its mission because of this condition."

Christianity, if trust can be placed in the New Testament account of its beginning, was a revolt against the oppressions of the wealthy Pharisees. It was against them the curses of Jesus were hurled with such telling effect. He represented there was no place in heaven for them; but Lazarus, begging crumbs which fell from the rich man's table, he transported to that blissful abode, and gave him rest in Abraham's bosom.

Some of us in these modern times may not covet such a retreat; but Jews, to whom he was directing his discourse, doubtless thought it the climax of human enjoyment.

"The Majesty of Calmness, or Individual Problems and Possibilities." By Wm. George Jordan. Another valuable little work. Price 30 cents.

The Commandments Analyzed, price 25 cents. Big Bible Stories, cloth, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

A Medium in Japan.

SPIRITUALISM IN JAPAN.

The Strange Mysterious Power of a Japanese Boy Who Says Inanimate Objects Reveal Their Secrets to Him.

Ehima Kasakura, aged 16 years, living at Yakka-ichi, has within the last year astounded the scientific world, and given rise to wonder even in his own mystical country, by his strange power.

The boy, it is declared, talks with inanimate objects, and reads from them the most wonderful stories of things with which they have been connected, and his seemingly miraculous powers have started among students of psychical research an investigation which, some believe, may lead to new and important discoveries.

The almost laughable (to American minds) theory that inanimate objects record and retain impressions of all that goes on about them is advanced in all seriousness by scientific and learned French, German, English and Japanese scholars, who inside of the last year have talked with this boy of seemingly supernatural powers.

Ehima is an ordinary looking Japanese boy, bright, alert, strong, smooth-skinned, and gentle, with glowing pride in the army and in the fact that three of his brothers have fought and one died in the war between Japan and Russia. Next year he, if permitted, will enlist and carry a rifle in the ranks. That he will not be permitted to enlist the boy has no idea, but it is known that already army officials of Japan, never unwilling to try any theory, no matter how absurd it may seem, are planning to take this boy into Manchuria and give him a high and important position attached to headquarters, and strive through him to gain Russian secrets by seeing if he can learn from the tables, the chairs, and the captured swords the secrets associated with them.

Had Strange Powers From Boyhood.

To Americans—to any but an Oriental—such an idea would be laughable madness, yet the stories of the boy's gift told by scientists, learned men, force even Occidentals to admit that the ways of the Jap are peculiar, and that perhaps such powers exist among the queer, superstitious, uncanny yellow men.

Since early boyhood, his neighbors in Yakka-ichi say, this Jap "man," as he calls himself already, has been able to do strange things. He could pick up pieces of paper, blank and uncoiled, and read things from them. He could find a piece of glass on the shores of Mie bay, on which he played with the other boys, and weave around that piece of glass strange and weird stories of where it came from, what it was, what manner of man owned it. He could pick up a coin, gaze at it a few minutes, and then spin off a story of that coin from the time it was bright and new from the mint, through the hands of man after man, what it did, what it bought, what crimes were committed for it, what bribes it paid.

Half of those who know him considered him a sorcerer. Others smiled softly and marveled at his imagination.

When the war started Ehima was wild to go. His three older brothers marched away to join Nogi's men before Port Arthur.

Caused Suicide of Boastful Soldier.

Months later there returned to Yakka-ichi a soldier, wounded but boastful. Ehima, with other boys who had brothers in the trenches, hunted up the soldier to see if he brought news from those they loved. The soldier had no news of them, but he told a wonderful story of a gallant charge up a blood-stained hillside, with iron and steel pouring upon them; of how he cut wires, leaped ditches, and finally fell wounded on the bare hillside.

Ehima heard him tell of lying under the stars at night with the searchlights playing over him; of crawling foot by foot down the hill as the guns roared, and finally reaching his command again in the trenches. Then the man exhibited a metal flask, dented, and said:

"I carried this with me on the charge. It saved my life."

Bashfully Ehima asked him to examine the wonderful thing. He took the flask, gazed at it a moment, then, drawing himself up indignantly, threw it to the soldier and said: "Liar and coward! You were afraid. You hid in the ditch, and you were shot while running away down the hill."

The soldier paled and trembled.

"How did you know?" he asked.

"The flask told me," said the boy.

Men who had heard the thing wondered, and they wondered still more when the next day the soldier killed himself, saying he could not live because he was a coward.

The story was told in the town, and Ehima's fame grew.

Knew of Brother's Secret Mission.

Soon after that there came a letter from Ollu, Ehima's brother. The letter was cheerful, hinted nothing of danger, told of the glories of soldier life and of his own chances of promotion. The family was proud and pleased. Ehima took the letter and read it. Then he held it in his hands and said:

"Ollu has been chosen to go on a desperate mission. He is enjoined to secrecy. If he does not return his captain will write us. When he wrote this he was sorrowful, thinking he would never see us again. There was a man in the room with him, a man with the uniform of a member of the star. He was waiting for Ollu to finish the letter, and enjoined him to write nothing of his mission."

One month later came a letter from Ollu's captain telling of his glorious death in attempting a sublime errand. He had volunteered to lead twenty-five men with hand grenades up to a fort, to hurl these grenades through the embrasures, and wreck the guns, paving the way for a sweeping charge.

Every man of the twenty-six had perished, but six guns were wrecked, and the charge succeeded where three times before it had failed.

From that time Ehima's fame grew greater. Foreigners heard of him, and they came, giving him money to tell them things. A. M. Robinson, the well known traveler, ran up from Yamada to visit the boy in his home and learn for himself regarding his strange powers.

Unsolved Mysteries of the Orient.

He tells the following story regarding his interview:

"In twelve years' travel among oriental peoples I have learned not to disbelieve until I know. One cannot fathom the depths of these half mystic natures. I found an ordinary, bright looking Japanese boy, who spoke some English, because his father was in the curio trade and he had heard the tourists talk. I spoke with him in Japanese.

"The wonderful stories that the natives of Yakka-ichi told concerning him made me think that perhaps he was a sort of freak, gifted with great power of deduction or a vivid imagination. Frankly, I was prepared to go further, and admit that he might possess something of occultistic insight. But I was totally unprepared for what I found. He told me that he did not know at all how he knew things.

"'How do you tell?' I asked. 'I look at a thing, and pictures come before me,' he said. 'I see the thing and then I tell them.' 'Do you hear anything?' 'No, I see the words spoken. I hear nothing. I see a man. His lips move. I know what he says, but I do not hear. Once I heard music, but that time I was just waking from a dream.'

"'Do you dream much?' 'Yes, I dream things, but the dreams are not always true. What I see is always true.' 'Did any one ever tell you anything about men who had second sight?' 'No. What is that? Is it like me?'

Tells History of Silver Piece.

"Satisfied that he had never been coached, I questioned him about his education. He has little, but can read and write well, and figure rapidly, as most merchants' sons can do. Without a bit of warning I put my hand into my pocket and drew forth a silver piece, two inches in diameter, which I always carry. There is a round hole in one edge, on one side are hands clasped, and on the other is the bust of James Madison.

"This silver piece was dug up by my grandfather in Scioto county, Ohio, years ago. There was no clew to its origin except that in our family it was stated that the medal, or coin, was one of a dozen or more given by President James Madison to the Miami Indians.

"Holding this piece in my hand, I asked: 'Did you ever hear of James Madison?' 'No,' said the boy, 'who was he?'

"'Do you know what an Indian is?' 'Indian—O, yes. My father gets curios from India.' 'No, I mean a North American Indian—a red man.' 'Americans are white and much money,' he said. Then I handed him the piece.

"The boy held it in his hand, turned it over, examined it curiously. 'What do you see?" I asked.

"'I see a big white building,' he said slowly, 'in a big city. There is a crowd of white men and one, two, seven, nine red men. The red man—the big red man, with the feathers in his hair—promises he will be the friend of the white mikado. The white mikado shakes hands with the red men and gives them silver pieces like this.'

"Astounded, I simply sat and stared at the boy. He was still looking at the coin and was greatly interested. 'Did you see all that in the picture?' I asked.

"'I see some more,' he answered. 'The red man is dead. They have killed his horse, his little spotted horse. They have put him on a platform above the ground. All his people weep. His bow and arrow and his gun and pipe are at his side. The medal is around his neck.'

Recalled a Forgotten Tragedy.

"I was dumfounded. I suddenly remembered that, when a boy, my grandfather told me that Yellow Horse, a chieftain, had died near our town in Ohio and had been buried on a platform. I remembered distinctly that he described the killing of the horse—a Pinto, of which the chief was proud. I remembered that he told me there was trouble between the whites and Indians because the chief's body was disturbed and some of his belongings taken. I had forgotten all about the story until that Japanese boy told it to me again.

"I have since learned through friends who, at my request, investigated government records at Washington that Yellow Horse was at the head of a delegation of Indians that visited Washington during Madison's term, and that twelve special medals were struck in honor of the visit and presented to the chief and his followers."

Other foreigners have tested the boy, but a few weeks ago government agents held an interview with his father and stopped the exhibition of his powers, requesting the father to see that the boy reserved his gifts for the use of his country.

Recently, it is known blank papers and small articles picked up in Kuropatkin's headquarters at Mukden have been submitted to the boy by special orders, and army officers have been in secret consultation with him at his home. Recently also he made a hurried trip to Tokio in charge of a favored army officer, but the cause of that trip is unknown, and its results are secret.

Not one of the scientists who have seen Ehima has yet dared to formulate any distinct theory in regard to his extraordinary powers. Whether he is gifted with second sight or whether the objects from which he gets his impressions really do carry the records of their surroundings to him no one will venture to decide.

The theory that inanimate objects do retain impressions and are capable of transmitting them has been advanced by several "dreamers" in past times, and the case of Ehima Kasakura promises to throw light on that theory which may result in great discoveries.—Chicago Tribune.

WHEN YOU GLANCE OVER THE EIGHT PAGES OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER YOU WILL BE SURPRISED TO SEE THE VAST AMOUNT OF READING MATTER CONTAINED THEREIN.

THE FIRST PAGE IS CHOCKFUL OF INTENSELY INTERESTING THOUGHTS.

NOW TURN TO THE SECOND PAGE AND YOU WILL FIND THE COURT OF INQUIRY IN ACTIVE SESSION, INVESTIGATING THE WHYS AND WHEREFORES OF THE TOGGERY USED BY MATERIALIZING MEDIUMS AT THEIR SEANCES. IT IS THRILLINGLY INTERESTING, AS IT OPENS UP A NEW FIELD OF THOUGHT. OTHER ARTICLES OF ESPECIAL MERIT ON THE SAME PAGE.

NOW REFER TO THE THIRD PAGE; IT IS RUNNING OVER WITH GOOD THINGS.

THE FOURTH PAGE HAS THE USUAL EDITORIALS WITH THE USUAL SOUL-INSPIRING ARTICLES.

NOW GLANCE AT THE FIFTH PAGE; IT IS RADIANT WITH SPIRITUAL LIGHT.

THE USUAL ITEMS ARE ON THE SIXTH PAGE.

THE SEVENTH PAGE ALWAYS HAS SOMETHING OF GREAT VALUE, AND THE EIGHTH PAGE IS NEVER WITHOUT SPECIAL INTEREST. A MERE GLANCE AT THE HEADLINES OF THE PAPER WILL GIVE ONE AN IDEA OF THE LARGE FIELD IT OCCUPIES IN THE REALMS OF SPIRITUALISTIC AND FREETHOUGHT LITERATURE.

"The Constitution of Man." By Elizabeth Towne. Gives a clear and practical presentation of advanced mental science and embodies many new and original ideas, and the fullest teaching extant as to the nature, control and direction of desire. Price 50c.

Illuminating New Zealand.

We are glad to learn that Mrs. Loie F. Prior has met with a most excellent reception in New Zealand, and that she is causing a Spiritual commotion there that cannot fail to do good. She is one of our ablest speakers.

SPIRITUALISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

The Rev. Loie F. Prior's Reply to the Rev. James Gibbs, D. D.

As reported in the New Zealand Times, the New Century Hall, Kent-terrace, was crowded to the doors on Sunday evening, when the Rev. Loie F. Prior, under the auspices of the Wellington Association of Spiritualists, replied to the strictures passed upon her and her co-workers by the Rev. James Gibb on the previous Sunday. The audience comprised many of Wellington's best known citizens, and the speaker's eloquent address was listened to with rapt attention. Mr. W. McLean, in introducing the Rev. Mrs. Prior, said he noticed some church people present, and wanted to tell them that the society on no occasion attacked any religious body. Its members believed in all religions, and were in sympathy with every true worker in the interest of Christ. It was quite true that sometimes attacks were made on man-made dogmas, but outside of those dogmas they did not assail the opinions of the clergy or any of their people

It had been asked in rather a sneering fashion, Who was this Mrs. Prior, and whom did she represent? Mrs. Prior was rather a modest lady, and had not told them anything about herself, but he would say that she represented as missionary at large one of the largest bodies in the Spiritualist world—a body having a membership of over 250,000, a body that had over 15,000 workers, over 700 places of meeting, and over two million dollars worth of property. Surely that was something that any clergyman or any woman might be proud to represent.

It had also been stated by the critic that he did not know anything about the phenomena or philosophy of Spiritualism. What would a church audience think if he (Mr. McLean) ascended a pulpit and told his hearers that he knew nothing about Christianity or the healing virtues which Christ possessed, and which he told those who believed him could not only do his works but far greater works. Had any of his believers of the present day performed these works, and if not, why not? The critic had quoted largely from Professor Myers' book, and it was unfortunately for him that he had done so. He (Mr. McLean) had the book in his hand, and would read an extract from it. It was well that members of the churches should not be hoodwinked by special extracts taken from this book, which had entailed on the writer nearly thirty years' of investigation into the phenomena of Spiritualism, which he had approached in the spirit of suspicion.

The speaker read an extract to show that Professor Myers was undoubtedly a Spiritualist, and acknowledged the phenomena of Spiritualism. The critic had stated that men of science would not have anything to do with Spiritualism, but Professor John Tyndall had said that these phenomena all around and about us were established facts. Scores of other scientists had also said the same thing, and that the man who denies the phenomena is grossly ignorant of the laws of nature.

Mr. McLean then referred to the Lord Chancellor of England's Presidency of the Victorian Institute, before which Dr. Peebles, who had recently occupied this platform, had been engaged to lecture on the subject of "Immortality and Its Proofs." Professor Myers had clearly demonstrated that men after their change in death had returned to the earth, not by scores, but by hundreds. The critic had stated that if a photograph of the dead could be produced that would be some proof, and yet there were at least 200 spirit photographs in the city and he did not know it. If he were to walk through the rooms adjoining the hall he would see a lot of well authenticated spirit photographs, and would no longer be grossly ignorant of the subject he pretends to talk about.

SHE DRAWS A VIVID PICTURE.

The Rev. Loie F. Prior began her address with a quotation from Sir Edwin Arnold's "Light of Asia." She would draw a picture; could they not in fancy see spread before them a great canvas? There standing in the foreground a man clothed in the royal robes of state, a man majestic in form, a man clear of eye, and of strong, noble intellect expressed upon his face. And nigh unto him and the center figure upon that canvass was another man. Meek, lowly, the light of universal love shining out from his countenance, but his garments were torn and soiled. Seemingly he had been roughly handled. Upon his brow rested a crown of thorns, and blood and sweat had left their traces upon his features. In the background there was a great mob of people, and in fancy they could hear the shouts and yelling. But pressing up, round, and above those two figures were men clothed in sacerdotal garb with sneers upon their faces, and they could almost hear the words they were giving utterance to. The first of the two prominent figures on the canvas was Pontius Pilate, the other the meek and lowly Nazarene.

They could hear the words of the representative of Rome when he asks of the lowly man, "What is truth?" and that man answers back, "What is truth?" And they could hear the great Governor of the far East say to the masses round about: "This man has done no wrong," but we hear the sneering remarks of the rabbis—"Crucify him! Crucify him!" Had she painted the picture so that they might see it? Did they understand its full importance? Could she impress upon them that it was not the howling mob in the background that asked for the life of the gentle Nazarene—it was those who wore the garb of the clergy at that time. They made a demand upon Pontius Pilate for the crucifixion of the man who had done no wrong, in preference to the ones who had done wrong. And why did they ask for the life of the meek and lowly inoffensive man that went about teaching: "Do unto others as ye would be done by"—a man whose hand was ever extended to aid his brother man?

Why did the theologians of that time make a demand for that man? Because that meek, humble man dared to attack their theology—dared to say that that which was taught in the temple, in the synagogues, and in the schools of his day was not the teaching that would uplift humanity. All about him he saw the suffering thousands, all about him he heard the cry of the hungry, undoubtedly all about him he saw oppression, and out of the fullness of his large heart he went forth to benefit his brother man; and because he dared to pronounce a verdict upon those who had meted the measure poured out, they said, "Crucify him! Crucify him!"

THE BURNING BUSH.

They were living at that time in the letter of the Bible and not the spirit, as we to-day had been living in the letter of the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth in place of living in the spirit of those teachings. He dared to expose the iniquities, He dared to take from off the people's eyes the blindfolds that had been placed there by the clergy of His time. To-night she desired to speak about the spirit and not the letter, and she would refer to the book that had been the religious authority for so many years. Could she believe some of the wondrous miracles that were recorded therein? She would digress for a time to go into that distant past and see before her the burning bush—the bush that was aflame and consumed not. Could she, of modern times, accept that story and say it was not a miraculous thing at all? Most assuredly she could, because she had seen the like unto it the present day, and if they were to go with her to the Hawaiian Islands and get into touch with some of the natives who were developed mediums, they would find them well able to make fires that would not burn. The natives would dance on hot stones with bare feet without their feet being blistered. In her own country she had stood by the side of a lady who underwent a severe examination. She had seen her take a lamp of the Rochester pattern and permit the flame to go about her face; she would put her hand through, and if one got close and made an examination one would find that not one of these delicate hairs upon the hands and face was in the slightest degree scorched. The lady she referred to would take paper money from the audience, and by whispering upon it, it would pass through the lamp uninjured. Could she read the story of the burning bush and say it was not a miraculous occurrence? Most assuredly she could, because she had seen with her mortal eyes a similar occurrence, and no one could convince her that she had not seen what was so convincing.

MOSES AND THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

Could she believe the story of Moses and the ten commandments? Yes, because she dared to say that in this story was recorded the first independent slate-writing. Theologians who stood in the pulpit to-day had never investigated the matter, and never intended to investigate it, but they were willing to believe in an independent slate-writing that occurred thousands of years ago, whilst Spiritualists to-day had evidence of independent slate-writing that was occurring around them all the time. Moses went into the mountains and was there forty days when he received the tablets of stone and brought them back. Our reverend brothers who "believe that story—that Moses went away for forty days to get his slate-writing—would not leave our independent slate-writers out of their sight for forty seconds. The reverend gentlemen would receive and accept a story of the past, and yet refuse to accept the evidence of the present.

Could she believe that the story of John of Patmos, could she understand the lesson given in the last book of the Bible? Yes. There was not a miracle there, but only the trance-condition of a sensitive, just as we have trance conditions of our sensitives to-day. Could she believe the handwriting upon the wall? Most assuredly she could, because we had the appearance of handwriting upon the wall to-day.

AMAZING SPIRITUAL SUBSTANCE.

Every manifestation called a miracle in the Bible was performed to-day all over the civilized and uncivilized world. Her reverend friend spoke of the letter, but spoke not knowingly of the spirit. They were told that spirit is the quintessence of matter, and yet their opponents would use their clumsy gross instruments to analyze that which is the quintessence of matter—instruments that were wholly materialistic. She wondered if our scientific brothers of to-day would expect to gaze upon Venus with a microscope, or would they try to analyze the anatomy of a flea with a telescope! And yet men dared to try and analyze spirits and spiritual substances with weights and measures only known to their materialistic senses. Because they could not weigh spirit with their materialistic scales, because they could not see spirits with their materialistic telescope or materialistic microscope, because they could not view spirit with their materialistic spectroscope, then many of them dared to say that spirit did not exist; and when sensitives attuned by the Infinite, when sensitives presented in the present day—in this modern age—all of the miracles—she wanted to emphasize that word—the miraculous manifestations that were to be found in the Bible, and said that such were the phenomena of Spiritualism, their critics said they did not believe them—they did not believe in the blatant statements of the mediumistic. Her reverend friend had dared to say that spirits returned no doubt at times—these were hardly his words, but conveyed his meaning—spirits might return at times and manifest, but not through the mediumistic.

She would analyze the term mediumship. They knew what matter was. Matter was analyzed to-day in the laboratory where weights and measures, crucibles and retorts were used, and also tubes and furnaces. Scientists were able to analyze matter. But spirit was more refined than the finest of matter. How could they use the same instruments and implements for the locating, the analyzing, and the dissecting of matter, when spirit was so much finer than matter? They could not go into the laboratory to locate an instrument which was able to convey to their senses what a spirit was like, so they needs must have a medium that stood poised as it were, between the materialistic and the Spiritualistic. Was that not logic? The medium was a go-between, to use the vernacular of the day, and the spirit being made conscious of the presence of spirit could convey to the materialistic that which was Spiritualistic.

GOD'S LAWS THE LAWS OF NATURE.

The medium was only an instrument, and a spirit could not manifest itself to mortal man without a medium. In haunted house stories undoubtedly some medium was present, and unless the medium manifested itself the ghost would not appear. Spirits did not draw the substance necessary for manifestation without mediums, so that she said to her reverend friend that a spirit had to have a medium to manifest itself through. She cared not what phenomena in Spiritualism was to be presented, a medium must be present to present that phenomena. Her friend said it was possible for a spirit to manifest at times, and yet at the same time he dared to say that the manifestation of one spirit did not prove the immortality of the soul. Let them come down to hard investigation of the laws of nature. They knew very well that God's laws were the laws of nature and never violated themselves—they never prostituted themselves, they never deviated from themselves. Now, if knowing these things, if one spirit manifested itself after the change called death and brings back intelligence and speaks intelligently, then she said that others passing through death had intelligence after passing through death. She dared say that because she understood the laws of nature, and not only one spirit since the Bible was compiled, but thousands of thousands and hundreds of thousands and millions of spirits had come back to manifest themselves to man.

ORTHODOX RELIGION AND SPIRITUALISTIC PHENOMENA.

Orthodox religion of the present time was founded on Spiritualistic phenomena. The Mosaic laws were founded on messages which Moses received from the Infinite. Why did Moses have his little tent outside the enclosure of the general encampment, and why did he repair to that tent to have converse with God? That was his seance chamber. He went into communion with God there, and had said that the scribes could not look upon the face of God because they would be blinded, so that Moses' message was founded on spirit communication. In the New Testament was there not related spirit communications received? They knew it so well that it was not necessary for her to tell them of the many manifestations of the spirit. She wanted to go on with the building up of the great church politic. Her mind carried her to Rome, and she saw before her the crumbling away of the old religious ideas. She saw the mass of theologians who had lived so long upon the credulity of the general public anxious to build up a great church co-eval with a great empire. They put their heads together, some of these good old men, who did not care about going out and talking in the streets after they had lived in luxury so long. They put their heads together and said: "Let us find out what these Christians are teaching—let us find it out and teach it ourselves." Church history told them that the teachings of the Nazarene did not go smoothly on. Three hundred years passed away before the great church began to teach the humble, gentle, lovable words of the Nazarene. Then she saw in her mind's eye how the persecutors became the persecuted.

THE DARK INQUISITION.

Men remembered how the early Christians were persecuted and burned in Nero's garden; but it was not a very far stretch of time before the clergy of Rome and Spain rose up, and upon the escutcheon of Christianity appeared that dark blotch called the Inquisition. In the name of the humble Man who taught "Do unto your brethren as you would they would do unto you," they placed men upon the rack, in His name men were strung up by the thumbs, in His name men were butchered. The moans of the people reached the spirit world and the message of inspiration touched one Martin Luther, who dared to branch off from the old teachings. They knew the thirty years of fiendish war and persecution that followed. Again the persecuted became the persecutors, and she, coming from that great country of the Stars and Stripes, knew of the persecution that was put upon the people who sailed from England, Holland, and other countries to a place where they could worship God according to the dictates of their hearts, for there, as soon as they grew strong enough, they in turn became the persecutors and left the blot of the burning of the witches at Salem, Mass., upon the glorious escutcheon of the United States. Again went up the cry of sorely oppressed humanity, and the angels responded from the spirit world.

SEANCE IN EPWORTH COTTAGE.

She might tell them something new when she mentioned the little seance which was held in Epworth Cottage in England, where John and Charles Wesley received the basic principles of the Methodist church. It was a well-known fact that Charles Wesley received independent slate-writing, but after the Methodist church grew in power all the manifestations of spirit communion were erased from the Methodist slate. They should read history if they desired to find out if spirits had inspired men or brought messages to man. The preacher stood in his pulpit and told his parishioners to do what he told them, not what he did; but the minister went about among his flock and ministered to man—he was not constantly preaching the letter, but was ministering unto the spirit If they could only take all that there was provable in theology and put in its place all that was demonstrable in the ministry, how much grander, how much more ennobling, how soul-uplifting then would be the teachings of the church! The previous afternoon there had been a grand reception in the city of a noble man, but not so very long ago that man—General Booth—commenced his crusade in London when the hands of the clergy were upheld and he was condemned for the work he was doing. He was criticised because he dared to step out of the ordinary path, but he put the spirit and not the letter into his work, and by impregnating his work with the spirit, to-day he was venerated and reverenced from the north to the south and from the east to the west. Since that noble band of Salvation Army people marched out to help the oppressed and touch the souls of men, the clergy had sent out members of the Christian Endeavor Society and similar organizations, but they never thought of that special kind of work until General Booth and his good Army of men and women set the example. So long as science knew little about this earth of ours heaven was just behind the clouds, according to the teachings of the clergy; but so soon as science turned her telescopes upward and adjusted her microscopes, delved down beneath the crust of the earth and brought up the vertebrae of animals ages since dead, the clergy no longer taught that hell was down below and heaven up above. It was no longer a literal location; it was a condition. They were told that intellectual men were divorcing themselves from religion, but they were only divorcing themselves from narrow bigotry, and such men were the true religionists of the world because they were seeking the truth wherever it could be found. Science was not standing still. Science was reading the rocks, making paths around the world, weighing and measuring even the clouds themselves and science was gradually drawing away from the teachings of theology. They had to keep abreast of science, and if they hoped for an immortal life they had to get into touch with the spirit.

A GREAT UNIVERSAL GOD

that was all love, that was all wise, that was all powerful, that was all good, had no chosen, elected or selected few. She could not conceive of a God that could give to man the power to love, the ability to see the wondrous beauties of this world—a world so perfect and so harmonious when we understood its laws—and then in a moment of vast egotism say, "I will choose out of the great mass of people only a selected few who shall forever, eternally and everlastingly adore me and me alone."

WE WANTED THE SPIRIT OF GOD,

and did not want to wait until we reached the other life to look upon God's face. How were we to get it now? Only by receiving those grand messages that came from God to us from the other world. Her reverend friend said it was strange that although Spiritualists purported to receive messages from the dwellers of the other sphere those Spiritualists never brought to earth anything regarding the future life, only what they knew, and he asked the question, why do they not tell us something about the other world that we do not know?" They had told her a great deal about the other world that she did not know. Had the reverend gentleman gone to her and asked she was quite sure she could have told him something brought to her from the other life that he did not know; but she dared say that if she had told him what she had received from that other life he would not believe her, because his materialistic senses could not grasp it.

Men did not believe that planets in their movements around the sun affected this little earth before Galileo turned his telescopes upon them, because they could not see. Se would like to know why her reverend brother, who had not seen, dared to refute the statements of thousands who had seen and who knew. If a mind incarnated in the human body could send a telepathic message to another mind incarnated in another human body, and the reverend gentleman could prove to her conclusively that the mind died when the human body died, then she would lay down her arms and say, "Oh, human mind, there is nothing for you after this life but the sleep of Endymion—that is all there is for you;" but if he could not prove that the mind or spirit of man or the soul of man, died, then she said to him: "I can prove to you that the mind of man, the spirit of man, or the soul of man does communicate with man."

Her reverend friend was preaching what he understood, and could not speak differently. He should grant the same privilege to her. She spoke as one who had seen, as one who had felt, as one who had stood upon the threshold of the spirit world.

SHE BORE TESTIMONY TO THE IMMORTAL LIFE, to that which she had seen, to that which she had heard, to that which she had known, and seeing was believing, hearing was knowing, and so firm was she that out of the fullness of her heart she spoke, not from a written sermon, that she could not say good-bye to those who were the nearest and dearest, knowing that she would meet them just beyond the veil with that great God who created this beautiful world, that great God who had given man the power to live, that great God that had inspired us with the universality of truth, that God who lives, is, has been, and always will be. Many men have looked beyond and have come and talked of Him, many men are looking beyond and will come and teach of Him; but my friends accept the spirit, not simply the letter.

SPIRIT RETURN.

The Writer Details Some Interesting Experiences—A Book Brought by Spirit Power.

To the Editor:—I have been strongly impressed for some time to send you an account of these incidents as proof of spirit power.

About a year ago a school teacher named Miss Emma C— was boarding with a family living in a house where, some twenty years ago, and before Miss C— was born, a young lady named Nellie G— had died.

One morning Miss C— told the lady with whom she was boarding that during the night she was awakened, and saw a young woman in her room, describing her dress and general appearance, and said that her face looked haggard and drawn as though she was very ill and suffering, and that she walked across the room and disappeared.

She was offered another room, but said she was not afraid, and did not change, although she saw the same form once or twice more.

Later on Miss C—'s aunt came to visit her and slept with her. By the way, the aunt had lived in the house when Miss G— had died there, but Miss C— knew nothing of this at this time. Miss C— asked her aunt if any one had ever died in that room, describing the young woman she had seen. The aunt said she had accurately described Miss Nellie G— who had died in the room adjoining the one they were in.

Will some of our skeptical friends account for this only as evidence of spirit return and materialization?

Will some one explain how this book was brought? I had often seen Miss Abby Judson's little booklet, "From Night to Morn," advertised, and as I took great interest in all her writings I often thought I would send for it, but delayed doing so. About three years ago, I came into my store early one morning and at once saw lying on the show case the little book mentioned, as clean and bright as if just from the press, and without any evidence of having been handled or mailed. As there are with the exception of myself and immediate family no Spiritualists in this vicinity, I was somewhat puzzled to know how it came there, and made some inquiries, but could find no solution of the matter and am still in the dark.

D. M. DUNLAP.

MY BETTER HALF AND I.

Forty years of harmony, do,
Without one day of strife;
Forty years of happiness,
With a dear, loving wife.

So happy when together,
But never when apart;
Through calm and stormy weather,
Yet always one in heart.

But now we are divided,
Yet more than ever one;
And though I oft am lonely,
I never am alone.

For I feel her always near me,
Forever at my side,
And though death hath divided,
It never can divide.

And yet two personalities,
Distinctly each its own,
Two individualities,
Mysteriously made one.

And I shall soon be with her,
Who ever is with me,
Nevermore to part again,
Through all eternity.

THEODORE SIMPSON.
Vancouver, B. C.

BOOK REVIEWS.

How Nature Cures: Comprising a New System of Hygiene; Also the Natural Food of Man. A Statement of the Principal Arguments Against the Use of Bread, Cereals, Pulse, Potatoes, and All Other Starch Foods. By Emmet Densmore, M. D. 413 pages. Swan, Sonnenschein & Co., London.

Doctor Densmore has an international reputation as a successful practitioner and writer on hygiene, and everything he writes is of interest and value, and has more than usual authoritative worth. At this time when the doctors are telling the people what to eat, and what not to eat, it would seem that scarcely anything is left not under their ban. But no one has advocated such a sweeping change in diet, a change which amounts to a revolution. Bread, the "staff of life," and potatoes, with the whole range of starch-yielding vegetables, relied on as the best and most healthy food, if these are thrown out there seems the greater part of the world's supply gone. The author makes an exhaustive argument, and his conclusions are like the deductions from a mathematical proposition.

Doctor Densmore believes that the natural food of man is fruit and nuts. If this regimen is adopted, the movement in forest culture will be accelerated, for then there will be the motive of gain as well as that now causing the replanting of trees. Now the farmer who sees profit in land only as he can cultivate it in cereals, and trees as enemies of his efforts, would see the most profit in fruit and nut trees, and the wide setting of these would restore the conditions which prevailed before the denudation of the land. There would be a more equable climate, more rain fall, absorption of the surplus, less disastrous floods and winds.

We believe that a diet of fruit and nuts would be ideal, but for the world at large impractical. The rapidly increasing population makes it more and more difficult to keep food supply up to the demand. Yet with the wheat fields set to fruit and nut trees over this vast continent, the supply might be adequate to the needs.

The author is not a "vegetarian," but a fruitarian. He says: "Throughout civilization the great bulk of the human family—the vegetarians and the mixed eaters alike—are cerealities; in the future, when the doctrines herein taught are understood and adopted, mankind will become fruitarians."

Although this dietetic reform runs through the book, it really forms a minor part of its teachings. There has not been any work of the popular literature of hygiene that compares with it in valuable information. While showing the fallacy of the "regular" drugging, the author does not wholly discard remedial agents, yet he relies on the natural recuperative forces of the system. He surveys the different modes of medicine and shows the doctor to be a "fetish," like the savage "medicine man." The patient gets well while the doctor waits. Then he tells how to doctor according to the plan of nature, how to keep well in infancy and age. This not by reliance on drugs but on pure food of the right kind, pure air and water. He plainly tells what to eat, how to eat, when to eat, the benefit of sleep, how to conserve the vital forces, how to avoid intemperance, to avoid the disease of corpulency, and about every ailment afflicting human beings.

Unlike the notorious Osler, he believes man does not reach his best ability until fifty, and is capable if he lives rightly of doing his most finished work at a full century.

Doctor Densmore in practice gives a much wider menu than in theory. He recognizes the necessity of adapting his recommendations to the foods now available. He is not a fadist, but he is too broad to indulge in any narrow scheme. The reader is impressed with the extent of his knowledge, the clearness with which he presents his views, his exhaustless research, and honesty of purpose.

The main factor of health is a proper diet, when sick restoration largely depends on the right kind of food. Give the stomach the food the system demands, and make its digestion perfect and the material is furnished for the perfect building of the body and restoration. One thus organized, is not only proof against ordinary attacks of disease, but immune from the microbes of contagion.

There are few books that give the reader more value received for their time spent in perusal than "How Nature Cures." HUDSON TUTTLE.

John McCullough as Man, Actor and Spirit. By Susie C. Clark. Boston: Murray & Emery Co.

This is a beautifully printed and bound book of 360 pages, by a writer well known to the Spiritual public.

The story of the great actor's life is told in a manner attractive as a novel. Born in a cottage in Ireland, from which his father's family was evicted, coming to America a friendless boy, barely able to read, and less able to write, he arose from poverty, obscurity and ignorance to world-wide fame.

He went to work in a chair-making shop, and one of the old men delighted in reciting Shakspeare, and gave him a copy of Shakspeare's works. He was in ecstasy over the passages, but could read so imperfectly he would get the school children to read for him. He engaged in amateur theatricals, attracted attention of managers, and began his life's work.

"Perhaps the stage never possessed a more painstaking, laborious student, through all obstacles and hardships. His part was always perfectly committed and performed to the best of his ability."

He worked with unflinching resolve and labor is the secret of genius, but is it possible for such achievements without superior aid? Are we not justified, even compelled, to grant that the greatness of such minds comes in a measure from the spirit world?

The last hundred pages are most attractive to Spiritualists. McCullough as a spirit, what he has said and written through mediums since his death, especially his influence over the noble worker F. A. Wiggin, are of absorbing interest. It is a wonderful sequel to his biography, unique, and I think has no precedent. I have space for only one brief quotation of McCullough as a spirit. "I would like to have it printed in letters of gold: "In the Roman arena, when the victorious gladiator hesitated before plunging his sword into his adversary until cultured ladies cried, 'kill—kill,' often when raising the helmet he found the face of a brother. May we never find out there in the Beyond, when the masks are lifted off from all foes, that we have stabbed the heart of a friend, whom we thought an enemy. There is only one enemy in the world; his name is Ignorance, and only one God, whose name is Truth."

There is an earnestness, a character and wisdom in the communications purporting to be made by the great actor, which evidence their genuineness. The presentation of mediumship, its conditions and limitations, by Miss Clark, is admirable for its subtlety and clearness. HUDSON TUTTLE.

LAKE PLEASANT, MASS.

Notes of the Coming Camp-meeting.

The birds are singing and the squirrels are chittering in the sunny groves at this lovely and healthful summer home—the mother of camp-meetings.

Cheery, bracing mornings and moonlit evenings make joyous the June days and nights for the people at the Lake.

Cephas Burnham has cleaned the grove and added neatness to nature.

The boats are being painted and put in condition for sailing.

Dr. Weston has driven a well, 54 feet deep, from his kitchen in the Conant cottage, and found pure, soft water.

Miss Isabel Ross has made the Beals grounds and cottage on Lyman street, very beautiful with new roof paint and flowers, a new veranda and new chamber being the chief additions.

Mr. Clark's new bride and her sister and niece are living in the Clark cottage. They say Lake Pleasant is the right place for health and growing appetites.

Mr. McKenna of the Cove cottage, has made a complete basement tenement and will rent all the upper part of this large cottage.

Edwin Putnam has located two cottages in the space north of Association hall.

Mr. Cook of Holyoke, is building a cottage on Turner street.

Mrs. Haslam, who has bought a house in Greenfield, Mass., will open her cottage on Turner street, this month.

The Bluff will miss the genial presence of Mr. and Mrs. Barron this year as well as that of the caretaking Sadie Severance, all of whom have passed to the higher life since last season.

The dancing pavilion has been shingled, and a new coat of paint of various colors makes the inside and outside glow with old-time radiance.

The railroad company has builded some easy and generous stairs from the station to the pavilion. The company has taken down the foot-bridge over the track, and propose to remove a portion of the south bank in order to straighten the track.

The Scalpers have bought the Hunter boarding house, and may put in billiard tables and other help to their midnight entertainments. It is presumed that they have also bought sufficient land for the indispensable graveyard for the burial of all rejected and slaughtered applicants for admission to their "Independent order"

Mr. Matthews and his musical wife have made a cozy home opposite the Hunter House, and begun farming by planting a large garden.

The campers who passed the winter at the lake are united in the opinion that the snow was deep, and the weather cold; but with plenty of wood and coal, they hibernated, with rather more than less of cold feet.

The camp is now supplied with water as the pump is working. "Jacob's well" is as popular as ever.

A petition has been sent to Washington for a postoffice the year around—some 90 signatures having been obtained. If accepted, it is rumored that Leon Henry will be the new postmaster.

H. S. Streeter, the present postmaster will open the office this month.

The summer session will begin July 30 and close August 27. The speakers and mediums now engaged are A. H. Dailey, Geo. W. Kates, Z. B. Kates, T. U. Reynolds, J. J. Morse, Carrie E. S. Twing, Carrie L. Thomas, Amelia F. Henning, A. P. Blinn, May S. Pepper, J. Clegg Wright.

The Ladies' Schubert Quartette of Boston, will sing and give special musical entertainments. They are accomplished artists who stand among the first in that city of artists.

The hotel will be managed by Philip Yeaton who will open it June 15.

The Ladies' Improvement Society will hold a fair in August. Send your gifts to Mary M. Sheldon, 378 Main street, North Adams, Mass.

I. R. Stratton will have charge of the dancing, Charles U. Bickford being conductor of Stratton's orchestra.

The camp is filling up, new arrivals nearly every day.

Tickets for round trip go on sale from Boston, June 1, $3.75, good to return in October. Other round trip tickets from all parts of the Fitchburg division of the Boston & Maine railroad from Boston, Springfield, Troy, Wilmington and intermediate points go on sale, July 29. Rate from New York City via New Haven, Hartford and Springfield, $5.55.

For circulars, rents and other information address (enclosing stamp) A. P. Blinn, the efficient clerk, at Lake Pleasant, Mass. H. A. BUDINGTON.
Springfield, Mass.

The Outlook Beyond Death.

Lilian Whiting's twelfth book has just been sent out from the press of Little, Brown & Co., on its apostolic mission of preaching the gospel and pure spiritual doctrine of immortal life, under the title "The Outlook Beautiful." From its first to last page it is a glowing portrayal of the religious belief of the editor and subscribers of The Progressive Thinker. In the opening words of the book she declares, "The angel we call Death may be more truly regarded as the Angel of Life—as God's Messenger who comes to guide the way into the life more abundant. * * * It is the process by means of which the spiritual body is released from the physical and enters on the next higher plane of the spiritual universe."

There is a joyous note of exultation running all through the book over the glory of the surety of the gift of spiritual life to man—but there is also a deeper tone of sacred awe as to the responsibility of human beings still in the body making this preparatory life a means of spiritual advancement; for she says—"life is a trust, divinely committed to man. It is the most priceless, the most infinitely valuable of possessions—a gift of rare powers and unlimited resources, to be used for the benefit of others, and thus, in the truest way for one's self." And, again: "The perpetual phenomena of life furnish all the means for spiritual culture. There is not a day but makes its demands on one for his highest and sublimest qualities. There is not a day whose experiences do not test the most exalted ideals."

The title of the opening chapter is "The Delusion of Death," and she quotes from the poet Stephen Phillips:

"The delusion of death shall pass,
The delusion of mounded earth, the apparent withdrawal;
We shall shed our bodies, and upward flutter to freedom."

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.
Quincy, Ill.

"Spirit Echoes." My Mattie E. Hull. This pretty volume contains fifty-seven of the author's latest and choicest poems. Neatly bound in cloth, and with portrait of the author. Price 75 cents.

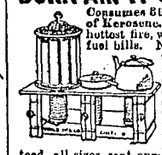
"The New Life." By Leroy Berrier. Eminently suggestive along the lines of "new thought." Excellent in tone and tendencies. Price, cloth, $1.

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland. Interesting, instructive and helpful; Spiritually uplifting. Cloth bound; price $1.

DEAFNESS AND CATARRH CURED

BY NO METHOD UNTIL "ACTINA" WAS DISCOVERED.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dept. 842C, 920 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.



CANCER CURED

WITH SOOTHING, BALMY OILS.

Cancer, Tumor, Catarrh, Piles, Fistula, Ulcers, Eczema and all Skin and Female Diseases. Write for Illustrated Book. Sent free. Address

DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

BURN AIR-IT'S CHEAP NO STOVE LIKE IT!

Consumes 805 Barrels of Air to 1 gallon of Kerosene. Penny fuel, burns like gas, hottest fire, won't explode, saves work and fuel bills. No coal, wood, dirt, ashes—no wick, no valves, easy operated, handsome, durable. Grand cooler, baker, quick work, cool kitchens. 18000 Harrison Wickless, Valveless Oil-Gas and Air Burners sold 1 month. AGENTS WANTED—$10 Weekly. GREATEST MONEY MAKER. Guaranteed, all sizes, sent anywhere, $6 up. Write, FREE proposition, 30 day trial offer. Address only mfrs. World Mfg. Co., 5909 World Bld'g, Cincinnati, O.

812

The above is the number of the present issue of The Progressive Thinker, as printed at the top of the first page, right hand corner. If this number corresponds with the figures on your wrapper, then the time you have paid for has expired, and you are requested to renew your subscription. This number at the right hand corner of the first page is advanced each week, showing the number of Progressive Thinkers issued up to date. Keep watch of the number on the tag of your wrapper.

A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

By Lilian Whiting,

Author of "The World Beautiful," "Kate Field," "After Her Death," "From Dreamland Sent," etc. With portrait. 16mo. Cloth, gilt. Price $1.25. The writer of this "Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning" has thrown the book into five chapters, with sub-titles as follows:

LIVING WITH VISIONS. "Summer Snow of Apple Blossoms;" Music-Flow of Pindar; Friends in the Unseen.
LOVES OF THE POETS. The Prefigured Friend; Vita Nuova; "One Day, My Siren."
IN THAT NEW WORLD. Pisa and Poetry; In Casa Guidi; Florentine Days; Walter Savage Landor.
ART AND ITALY. Individuality of Character; The Clasped Hands; Kate Field's Records; Mrs. Browning's Death.
LILIES OF FLORENCE. Poetic Rank; Spiritual Laws; Modern Scientific Thought; The Consideration of Genius.

For Sale at this office.

MAHOMET His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

BODY AND SOUL

BY J. CLEGG WRIGHT.

This volume consists of a course of lectures delivered in the trance state, and is certainly no small contribution to the study of the soul. It is a good work to open the eyes to the difference between the deductive and inductive process of mind. Bound in cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

ANCIENT INDIA,

Its Language and Religions. By Prof. H. Oldenberg. Paper, 25 cents.

INDUCE

Your Neighbor to Subscribe for The Progressive Thinker.

Now is the time to extend the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. It will contain Occult and Spiritualistic news with which every one should be familiar. No other paper published on this earth contains such a vast amount of matter so well adapted to enrich the mind. Send in a subscription now.

Psychic Light.

BY MRS. DRAKE.

Important Addition to Our Literature.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake has a national reputation as a medium. The manifestations given through her mediumship have been most marvelous. She has written a book with this title: "PSYCHIC LIGHT—THE CONTINUITY OF LAW AND LIFE." It is a ponderous volume of 600 pages. It will hold your attention from the beginning to the end. It is chockful of stirring incidents. Price of this large volume, only, $1.50 postpaid.

VOLNEY'S RUINS

—AND—

THE LAW OF NATURE,

∴ TO WHICH IS ADDED ∴

Volney's Answer to Dr. Priestly, a Biographical Notice, by Count Daru, and the Zodiacal Signs and Constellations by the Editor;

Also, a Map of the Astrological Heavens of the Ancients.

Printed on heavy paper, from new plates, in large, clear type, with portrait and illustrations. One vol. post 8vo, 248 pages; paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

This is undoubtedly one of the best and most useful books ever published. It eloquently advocates the best interests of mankind, and clearly points out the sources of human ignorance and misery. The author is supposed to meet in the ruins of Palmyra an apparition or phantom, which explains the true principles of society, and the causes of both the prosperity and the ruin of ancient states. A general assembly of the nations is at length convened, a legislative body formed, the source and origin of religion, of government, and of laws discussed, and the Law of Nature—founded on justice and equity—is finally proclaimed to an expectant world.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

Dr. J. M. Peebles writes from London, England: "Last night's address before the London Alliance of Spiritualists closed my labor's in this country. I have traversed this island from Glasgow to Merthyr Tydville, Wales, where they have that wonderful Welsh revival. I have lectured every Sunday and some twice or three times during the week. I spent a day on Tuesday at the beautiful home of Alfred R. Wallace. The London Alliance has a magnificent hall, right off from an Art Gallery. Last night many could not gain access into the hall and so were compelled to stand at the door during the entire services." The Doctor will soon be at his home again at No 70 National avenue, Battle Creek, Mich. He has had a busy time in England, where he was royally welcomed.

Will C. Hodge is occupying the platform of the Psychic Society in Oakland, Cal., for the month of June.

The Vermont State Spiritualist Association will hold its next quarterly convention at Grand Army Hall, Montpelier, Vt., Friday, Saturday and Sunday, June 23, 24 and 25, 1905. Vermont state speakers: Alonzo Hubbard, Mrs. Sarah A. Wiley, Mrs. Abbie Crossett, Mrs. Emma Paul and Ida Lewis have been invited and are expected to be present. In addition to the Vermont state speakers the management have secured Mrs. Effie I. Webster-Chapman, a good test medium and speaker, for the entire meeting. All these speakers, at former conventions and at Queen City Park camp meetings, have given most excellent satisfaction in the presentation of the spiritual philosophy. All will take an active part in the convention, therefore all may expect a rare treat at the coming meeting. During the convention, test seances will be held by Mrs. Chapman, consisting of giving names and minute description of our friends passed to Spirit life, proving to all, even the most doubtful, the great truth of immortality. To these seances a small admission fee will be charged to help defray expenses. The sessions of the convention will be interspersed with good music in charge of Mrs. Ella Roys. Entertainment at the Union House, $1.25 per day, two in a room; $1.50 per day, one in a room. S. N. Gould, Randolph, Vt., president; Don H. Chapman, Cambridge, Vt., chairman of Board of managers; Miss Alma Leonard, East Calais, Vt., secretary.

The Connecticut Spiritualist Camp-meeting Association, at Niantic Camp Ground, Niantic, Conn; season of 1905, commencing June 12 and continuing until September 11. For full particulars address George Hatch, South Windham, Conn.

Mrs. Jane Harris Roberts writes from Wanganui, N. Z.: "I am writing to thank you for the copies of The Progressive Thinker you so kindly send each mail, which I endeavor to lend out to as many as possible, as it is truly a 'light bearer.' I am here for a few weeks, and have good work to do for the truth. We have to take a larger hall, as the people were being turned away, such is the hunger for knowledge. I gave a lecture on 'Clothed With the Sun,' to a very crowded audience, on Easter Sunday. The next Sunday I spent in Wellington, where I went for a few days in order to see Mrs. Prior, and listen to her inspiring addresses."

Benton Harbor, Mich.—The promise of immortality to the body gathered hundreds of disciples under the banner of Benjamin and Mary, the "Flying Roller angels" in this city, and it brought them recently a shipload of converts from Australia. Now and then one of the elect would pass away and there would be mutterings from the children of Israel. Hannah Elizabeth Gile, aged sixty-two, one of the first apostles and an immortalized leader of the holy band, died yesterday of heart trouble and now there is open revolt. There were 300 members close to the "throne of Benjamin," it is whispered, that demanded why the messenger of Shiloh had failed in the fulfillment of his promises. "Ah! my beloved, although Sister Hannah was seized in her doubt of the truth and thrown out of our earthly paradise, for you the word still holds," answered the "angel" in all suavity.—Chicago Examiner.

Dr. J. M. Peebles, while in Boston, was the guest of Dr. Lane and his wife. He speaks in high terms of the good work they are doing.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Mrs. Kirchner writes: "The warm weather does not seem to affect the attendance at the services of the Rising Sun Mission on Sundays, as we had quite a large audience on the afternoon of June 4, to listen to our Sister Martha Price of Boston. She gave some valuable food for thought in her lecture. Mrs. Hamilton Gill followed with a few remarks and demonstrations of spirit return. Brother Thompson also gave some very interesting demonstrations of his ability as a psychic. In the evening a large crowd greeted our speaker, Mrs. J. L. Fravel, who electrified her hearers, her subject being 'The Emancipation of Selfishness.' It was well delivered by her guides, who are always ready to elevate the human family up to a spiritual standpoint. After the discourse Sister Schumacher gave a short talk, and also gave some very consoling spirit messages. Mrs. Kirchner followed with quite a number of messages, which were comforting to the sorrowful. Our choir as usual rendered some fine musical selections. We cordially invite all to attend our services every Sunday afternoon at 3; evening at 8, at Mission Hall, People's Institute, Van Buren and Leavitt streets. On Saturday night, we hold a test seance in Mission Hall. Tests for all. Our second annual June festival and dance takes place in Pleasure Hall, Saturday, June 17. Our second annual picnic on Saturday, July 1, at Reissig's Grove, Riverside. All are invited. Our speaker for Sunday, June 18, will be Mrs. Martha Price of Boston."

The annual camp-meeting of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualists Association will open on July 30, and close on August 27. Col. W. J. Bryan of Nebraska will deliver an address on the opening day. The announcement will be heard with great interest by the people of Clinton, Iowa.

Forty-eighth anniversary of the Harmonial Society of Spiritualists of Sturgis, Michigan, will be held in the Free Church, Saturday and Sunday, June 17 and 18, 1905. Able speakers are secured. Dr. G. B. Warne of Chicago, Ill., vice-president of the N. S. A., and Dr. Julia M. Walton of Jackson, Mich., treasurer of the Michigan State Spiritual Association, are the speakers. Other volunteer speakers are expected. Dr. E. A. Warren will sing solos of his own composition at each service. Mrs. Mabel Thorpe Jones of Coldwater, Mich., musical director; Miss Alta Toby of Sturgis, organist. Every effort is being made to make this forty-eighth anniversary a success. Everyone is invited regardless of religious belief. Come and enjoy the feast in store for all. The speakers will both lecture in the afternoon of Sunday—2:30 and 7:30. Those from near-by towns on the Lake Shore railroads can hear both speakers and return home Sunday evening, especially those going west. Special Sunday rates on this road. For information you desire, not named, address the secretary, C. Cressler.

Louise E. Zimmerman writes from Elmira, N. Y.: "Owing to ill health, the writer resigned, some months ago, from office in the First Spiritualist Church of this city, consequently has written no report of the work since that time. Upon request, it gives great pleasure to write that the closing of the church year will leave a fund in the treasury, and an increased membership working in harmony to promote the truth of Spiritualism and the uplifting of humanity. Mrs. R. W. Barton, as resident pastor, is giving both comfort and satisfaction to sorrowing, seeking hearts, and will remain with the society for the ensuing year. During the month of June, regular services will be held at the church on Sunday evenings only. Wednesday evening of each week a 'pay circle' and social will be held at the residence of President and Mrs. E. F. Evans, 369 Wallace Place, where all are welcome to an enjoyable evening. During July and August, the regular summer vacation will give friends and members of the society an opportunity to attend camp-meetings or rest quietly preparatory to the work of the coming season. In September, the regular Thursday evening message meeting and Sunday afternoon and evening services will be resumed. The Ladies' Aid still hold interesting gatherings semi-monthly, and all go merrily along the way, rejoicing in the demonstrated truth of the continuity of life. Let the light so shine, that all may know the sweet peace and consolation that there is no death, all is life, and the loved ones have but put on incorruption, when they pass from mortality, and can return through the doorway that is never closed."

W. H. Kizer writes from Des Moines, Iowa: "It seems that all good mediums must drift, sooner or later, to a large city, in order to spread the light or furnish the proof of continuity of life through spirit demonstration. Mrs. De Wolf Kiser's mediumship converts more people to the idea of a spirit world than all the preachers and priests in this country, with all their claims, minus demonstration. Perhaps the writer would have been a materialist during his sojourn in this material world had it not been for the phenomenal manifestations witnessed by him in many different ways, showing the love, the wisdom, and the faithfulness of the true friends in spirit life, who once were his associates, and are very anxious to spread this glorious light. Mrs. DeWolf Kiser only gives independent slate writings in daylight, from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. This leaves the skeptic at a loss to fabricate his claim of fraud, or to explain the modus operandi except by spiritual origin. This, with her other phases of mediumship, interests people, and makes converts where hearsay evidence is of no avail."

Dr. E. B. Craddock writes from Concord, N. H.: "Ever since the birth of The Progressive Thinker I have wished it Godspeed. I was converted to Spiritualism in 1853, and have taken great interest in it in Wales, England, Paris, Havre, France, and heard of it in Trinidad, W. I. I have seen it in almost all its phases, and still stick to it as my religion. I would like to see a good society started here in this city. We want more books, more literature. I wish everyone who can spare a book, pamphlet or paper to send the same to me for all to read who desire. Many have old books lying away dusty, that might be doing some one good, and help build up a little society. A good speaker and test medium can do well here. I will be pleased to answer any letters from reliable persons, and do all I can to help one get started. A society will be organized next fall, and a way opened for a medium. Each one should at least give 25 cents for The Progressive Thinker. Address me at South Spring street, Concord, N. H."

F. J. Lentsch writes from Louisville, Ky., that the People's Spiritual Church closed its meeting for the summer the last Sunday in May, Frank T. Ripley lecturing on the "Religion of the Future," followed by messages. He was followed by the Rev. Mary Mann, the regular pastor of the church. She made a few remarks and gave some most satisfactory tests. She has but few equals and no superiors, and is a perfect lady in every sense of the word.

Isabella Powderly writes: "The Englewood Spiritual Union is having very spiritual meetings. Mrs. McArthur is one of our best speakers, and is well liked by all who hear her. Do not forget the annual picnic, July 4, Jackson Park, near the German Building. All are welcome. The Ladies' Aid meets every Thursday at 3 p. m. Meeting every Sunday evening, McDermott's Hall, 6608 Halsted street."

J. W. Hoysradt says: "Some day a new house of worship will come—the Church of the Common People. Through its portals will throng all those who believe in the higher life, and from its pulpit will be handed down the message of life as the Great Master himself uttered it. The Almighty will not be proclaimed a revengeful Deity, ever ready to send forth suffering on his children. The responsibility of man to his Maker will be emphasized, but the pulpit will strongly impress on the minds of its hearers the responsibility for their own condition and the great need of religious dealing with their fellow men. It will teach employers to deal justly with employes, housewives to treat their servants honestly, workmen to keep their contracts, tradesmen to deal squarely, and money-mad Americans not to stoop to low tricks performed under the plea of 'business policy.' It will reclaim thousands of homeless young men and women who are going to ruin in your great city; it will speak with righteous denunciation of 'wickedness in high places' as well as in low places. The Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man will be constantly proclaimed. The pathway of life will be flower-fringed and lightened by the sunshine of a great hope."

Captain Geo. W. Walrond, who has now completed a continuous term of ten years in Denver, Colo., has released his large suite of offices, lecture hall and occult class rooms for another term of five years. It was Mr. Walrond's intention to have retired from active public work altogether but his extraordinary and phenomenal success in Denver forces him to hold on to occult and Spiritualistic work till his seventieth birthday at least, when he will have been engaged fifty years in the ranks.

M. Lizzie Beals writes from Worcester, Mass.: Miss Susie C. Clark is certainly one of the most brilliant speakers on our platform to-day, and we are justly proud of her."

L. S. Burdick writes: "A visit last Sunday to the Spiritual Society at Marcellus, Mich., found it in a live working condition, having held meetings twice a month the past year, on the combination plan of spiritual and social, an all-day meeting; a picnic dinner supports the physical. Brother H. L. Chapman supplies the spiritual. Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Goodrich lead the music. Readings and fine tests by Mr. Comstock, all home talent."

Eula M. Golden, secretary, writes: "The Spiritual Research Society of Flint, Ind., meets the first Sunday in each month. We expect to have Dr. E. H. Denslow of South Bend with us June 17, and 18, if nothing happens, and would be pleased to have all who are interested attend, especially those of neighboring towns. Although we are few in numbers, we try to do what we can and feel sure that some good will come from our work."

D. G. Hill writes: "On Sunday, June 4, a large and appreciative audience gathered at O'Donnell College Hall, the home of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society. The services for the afternoon were short talks by the veteran worker, J. E. Coe, and Mrs. Virginia Bryan Lyons, followed with messages by Mrs. Grand and Nora E. Hill. In the evening the speaker, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, gave a soul-inspiring address from the subject, 'Memory's Golden Shore,' with messages by Mrs. Nellie Kusserow and Mrs. Virginia Bryan Lyons. The labors of these workers and the splendid music and singing merited the approval of the listeners. The speaker for Sunday evening, June 18, will be that well known and capable man, Dr. J. H. Randall. Bear in mind that this society gives an entertainment and prize drawing on Saturday evening, June 17, at O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina street between Washington Blvd. and Park avenue. You are welcome."

E. W. Sprague and wife, the N. S. A. missionaries, have Sunday August 13, and the week days following still open for camp-meeting engagements. Their services can also be secured for societies or camp-meetings for July 1 to 23. Address 618 Newland avenue, Jamestown N. Y.

Lily M. Thiebaud, a prominent lecturer, writes from San Bernardino, Cal.: "Your paper is highly appreciated by me, and I am endeavoring to attract the people here to do more reading of Spiritualist papers. I have reason to feel greatly encouraged with the work here. We have a number of new members since last letter to you. Have good audiences every Sunday night. The Theosophists have had a lecturer here. He gave six lectures. From some who attended his lectures came the request that I should give a lecture on Reincarnation, as they wished to know what the spirit teachers would say on that subject. The audience gave close attention, expressing their deep interest. There are many liberal-minded people here, who are slowly learning to 'walk alone.' To convince them that the name Spiritualist is one of which to be proud is my mission it seems. I tell them not every one is worthy of the name. We have now organized a lyceum."

Mrs. Augusta Grant writes from Elkhart, Ind.: "We have had with us for the month of May D. A. Herrick, of Grand Rapids, Mich. He is an exceptional worker in the field of Spiritualism, and his lectures are inspiring to the soul, aiding in its advancement and progression along the lines of our beautiful philosophy. Numerous manifestations were given from time to time, proving to many that there is a reality in a life hereafter. Many new members joined our band of workers, and we are expecting soon to become a chartered society. May peace and harmony always prevail with us. Brother Cole, fifty years a Spiritualist, gave us a bundle of Progressive Thinkers to distribute, showing his zeal in the cause."

G. H. Brooks, 114 President street, Wheaton, Ill., writes: "The Spiritualists of Wheaton, Glen Ellyn and vicinity will hold a grove meeting, Sunday, June 18, at Glen Ellyn, in a grove a little back from Glen Ellyn, and the many Spiritualists of Chicago are invited to attend. There is no prettier place near Chicago to hold a grove meeting. Take the Aurora, Elgin and Chicago electric car and get a round trip ticket for Glen Ellyn. When arriving there, cross the Northwestern tracks; take the first street car after you cross the tracks; go East until you come to the first road, then turn north and go a short distance, when you will find a pavilion where the meeting will be held. Some of the state board will be present to assist; also some test mediums. There will be a morning session at eleven, one at half past two, and one at half past seven. So come one and all; bring your baskets and enjoy a day in the country."

W. J. Colville writes from Portland, Ore.: "I am here lecturing on Sundays at 3 and 8 p. m., for First Society of Spiritualists in Artisan's Hall Abington Bldg., Third street, and on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, at 8 p. m.; also Wednesdays and Thursdays at 3 p. m., in Advance Thought Hall, 193 Sixth street. Very large audiences are attending my lectures which treat upon a large variety of topics of considerable general interest. Portland is very full of visitors at present. Lewis and Clark Exposition, though small in comparison with Chicago and St. Louis fairs, is very attractive and well repays a visit. The climate of Oregon is very pleasant in summer, as intense heat and dust are almost entirely absent. Interest in all phases of spiritual and liberal thought is being well sustained. There are many active workers in and around Portland and the public appetite is keen for spiritual instruction. Mrs. Mallory's reading room and library at 193 Sixth street is a great center for philosophical debate."

The First German Spiritualist Society of the West Side will hold their nineteenth picnic in Reissig's Grove, Riverside, Ill., on Sunday, June 18. These picnics have been so thoroughly enjoyed in the past that the society has concluded to hold two this year, the time of the second one being September 10. Come one and all and have a good time.

E. Rouble writes from Watertown, N. Y.: Another crowd presented itself to hear Mrs. Amanda Coffman's farewell sermon, and to witness her ability in giving the blindfold messages. Our good brother, Geo. H. Brooks, had told us in March what a worthy possessor she was of this rare phase, but even this did not give us an adequate idea of the amount of good she could do with it. The public soon recognized her as an ordained minister of merit, which, together with our society's satisfaction of her efforts, helped her in doing a wonderful work as well as making scores of friends who join us in asking her to return to us for a longer period during the coming season of 1905-06."

Correspondent writes: "Dr. Louis H. Freedman, world-renowned Australian healer and physician, opened his meeting, Sunday, June 4, at St. George's Hall, State street and Thirty-third. A good and appreciative audience assembled, and all were delighted with his remarks. He contemplates making a tour through Great Britain and Scotland. He is an interesting speaker, having had twenty years' close study in spiritual philosophy, a beautiful singer, a healer and physician. He will accept engagements to nearby towns and camps for this season. Madam Josephine gave very convincing messages. Mrs. A. Jenckes sang a very sweet solo.

Dr. C. A. Wickland writes: "The Lake View Spiritual Union announces that the Sunday services have been discontinued for the summer months, to be resumed again in September. The meetings during the past season have we believe, been of interest to a goodly number of people, who through the ministration of the ministering spirits have been made to realize that it is not all of life to live and not all of death to die; that life indeed extends and continues to unfold even beyond the grave, in fairer clime than this."

The Western Wisconsin Camp Association holds its annual camp-meeting in Unity Park, Wonewoc, Wis. Aug. 5 to 27 inclusive. This is one of the most beautiful camp grounds in the northwest; it is constantly being improved; those who contemplate visiting this camp will be pleased to learn that a new auditorium will add to the pleasure and comfort this year. A splendid program; talent the best. Programs will be ready for distribution the last week in June. For particulars and programs write M. M. Blish, secretary, Wonewoc, Wis.

Harmony Grove Camp-meeting Association will hold its annual camp, Aug. 6 to 20. The management is endeavoring to make this the best camp in the history of Harmony Grove, having already secured the services of a number of first-class workers with a fair prospect for others. This camp is located in a most beautiful grove of stately old live oaks, three and one-half miles west from Escondido, Cal., and is reach by stage from San Diego (24 miles) or by daily train over Santa Fe railroad to Escondido via Oceanside, changing cars at the latter place. Those coming from Los Angeles should also change at Oceanside. Announcements will soon be ready to send out. All are welcome and we earnestly desire the co-operation of all who are interested in spreading the grand truths of Spiritualism. For further particulars in regard to the camp address T. J. McFeron, secretary, 528 Fir street, San Diego, Cal.

Mrs. Dobson-Barker writes: "Rev. Allyn Franklin Brown, who has resided on a ranch near Los Gatos, Cal., for the past sixteen months, has again taken up the work for Spiritualism. He is known from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean, as organizer of societies and state missionary. He is now with the First Spiritual Union of San Jose, Cal., for the month of June. As usual he is arranging for meetings every evening to try to increase the membership of the society and teach the beautiful truths of our philosophy. Many of the people here are pleased with this work of question meetings. He always interests thinking skeptics wherever he goes. Among the new things that he is ever ready to suggest, is the printing of a neat little program of the month's work. Any society wishing his services can address him at 230 N. Sixth street, San Jose, Cal., during the month of June. On Monday he was called to officiate at the funeral of Chas Hubbard, at his late home in East San Jose. His wife accompanies him and is a great help to him in his work; although not a public medium, she is an able astrologer."

TOPIC FOR THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

Sunday, June 18, 1905, S. E. 58: "Prayer."

Gem of Thought:—

"True prayer, oral or silent, is born of the bosom, not of the brain."

For information concerning The Progressive Lyceum, authorized lesson sheet of the National Spiritualists Association, address John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

Notes From Montana.

With the close of the second annual convention of the M. S. S. A., which convened in Billings, June 1, 2 and 3, Spiritualism has had an interpretation which distinguished it from that trumped up by both prejudice and ignorance. About three days before the convention's sessions a "floating" medium with flaming advertising matter circulated broadcast located for a short time in Billings. I deemed it advisable to write the following article and have it published in the secular papers: "One Madame Bell is not a recognized medium of the National or State Association, and is not in Billings under the auspices of the local society of Spiritualists."

This had the desired effect as the public discovered that organized Spiritualism would not be associated with such representations.

Sunday evening, June 4, I conducted a christening service at which service flowers were used instead of water. The people of Billings were curious to know how I would justify this innovation, so I explained it in our way. Many of the friends present requested me to give one more christening service and I said to them that I would convene one in the near future.

I delivered in all eight lectures in Billings, and people of all beliefs, and many of no belief at all in the hereafter, attended the meetings.

I go from Billings to Livingston, on to Butte and Anaconda, and then on to New Era camp for July.

HARRY J. MOORE.

LETTER FROM NEW ZEALAND.

A Prominent Worker There Has Something to Say.

As an old Spiritualist and worker of some twenty years upon spiritual platforms, I greet you through the pages of your estimable journal, which always brings us a bright message of cheer and courage.

I have had the pleasure of meeting several of your mediums, latest of all Mrs. Lois Prior, who is lecturing in Wellington, a truly gifted message bearer, whom our societies welcome with great joy. I have lectured in Australian centers, and all through New Zealand during the last twenty years, and always have a desire to visit your more extensive country. At present I am holding a mission in Wanganui, one of the beauty spots of our lovely island, where a young, energetic society is struggling against much opposition, and therefore needs a helping hand. My work in Auckland (where I had the pleasure of meeting Mrs. Laura Fixen) is at present in the charge of Mr. Walker from Australia; also other mediums from Christchurch are at present in Auckland.

I had such a beautiful message from "Sunshine," through Mrs. Prior, that my heart is so cheered I can go on working with increased energy. Wishing you all blessed results to your work, I extend to you "hands across the sea" in greeting, remaining yours sincerely,

JANE HARRIS ROBERTS.

Wanganui, N. Z.

"A NEW PHASE OF MEDIUMSHIP."

As Presented Through the Mediumship of Mrs. Josie K. Folsom.

To the Editor:—I notice an article in this week's Progressive Thinker with the above heading, and I am glad to see that particular phase of mediumship gaining ground, but am somewhat amused to see it called a new phase. Mrs. Josie K. Folsom has been giving this phase for years, only her method is more satisfactory as a test condition than that of Mr. Ray. Her method is as follows: She has blank cards passed out among the audience, preferably by some skeptic, and requests the people to address some friend that they know to be in spirit, by their full name, ask any question they like, and sign their own proper name. If they prefer to use their own paper or card it is equally acceptable, as the cards are merely a matter of accommodation. Mrs. Folsom then asks some stranger, a skeptic or investigator to blindfold her eyes, which is done by filling the sockets of her eyes with a pair of folded kid gloves, or, as lately done with absorbent cotton, and binding on them a heavy silk bandage. After this is done, a committee gathers up the cards, lays them on the table and Mrs. Folsom gets the names and messages, sometimes as high as six names not written on the cards, all recognized as a rule, the exceptions being less than a dozen I think, in two years.

After the names and messages are obtained, she then picks out the right card, sometimes from the very bottom of the pile, and hands it to the one for whom the message is intended. She very seldom fails in getting the right card, simply by the sense of touch.

I saw her go before a large audience in Michigan, a state she had never visited before, and the audience largely composed of an excursion party from Detriot, a city she has never been in, and under the above conditions, gave seventy-two full names that were all recognized.

Her marvelous independent spirit writing, that is the wonder of the skeptic and the envy of rival enemies at this time, is always given under strict test conditions, in full electric, or daylight. Pictures that are recognized by their friends are obtained in the same way.

It will not be long until the great truth of immortality will be fully demonstrated and placed in the category of classified science where it legitimately belongs. May it come speedily.

Yours for truth as against all fraud and sham, C. W. STEWART.

St. Louis, Mo.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth, $1.

"New Testament Stories Comically Illustrated. Drawings by Watson Heston. With Critical and Humorous Comments upon the Texts." Heston's drawings are incomparable, and excruciatingly funny. Price in boards, $1. Cloth, $1.50.

MONTANA STATE CONVENTION.

Notes of a Harmonious and Successful Session.

The second annual convention of the State Spiritualist Association convened in Billings, on June 1, 2 and 3. Many questions of importance were discussed, chief among which were the following: What relation does a local society hold to the state association, and also what rules individual members of either should adhere to.

Rev. Harry J. Moore read the following, which were accepted: To walk in unison. To assist those in need. To pity those who are in misfortune. To enlighten those who are in darkness. To sympathize with those who are bereaved. To visit those who are sick. To reclaim those who are erring and make our thoughts and lives beautiful and acceptable in the sight of our arisen loved ones and of each other.

We also accepted the following preamble, which will be used in organizing societies in the state of Montana: We whose names are herewith attached, in order to promulgate and strengthen by word and example the facts and truths of Modern Spiritualism have organized ourselves into a church or society, known as the First Spiritualist Church or Society of ——, and agree to abide by its rules.

I also wish to make mention of the discussion precipitated when the proxy vote proposition at our National Convention was presented. The discussion ended with every delegate voting for the following resolution:

Resolved, That the representation entrusted with proxies of local societies to the N. S. A. be permitted to select their own proxies on the floor of National convention.

Surprise was expressed by many delegates present that the National Association should go so far as to entrust to the hands of the credential committee the right of choosing as to who should vote the proxies from the different states. It was decided by the delegates present that the delegates from the State Association to the N. S. A. convention knew better in regard to what the state wanted better than anyone else, who may be chosen by some one not from that respective state.

The lectures delivered by Rev. Harry J. Moore, and the messages given by Mrs. Eva McCoy are of the kind to increase the interest in the philosophy and phenomena of Modern Spiritualism. Their efforts were commended very highly and an effort will be made to keep them in the state.

The following delegates to the N. S. A. convention were elected: Mr. and Mrs. Frank McCormick, Mrs. A. P. Smith of Billings, and Mrs. M. P. Hicks of Anaconda.

The following officers for the state association were elected: President, Mrs. Frank McCormick, of Billings; vice-president, Mrs. M. P. Hicks of Anaconda; secretary, Mrs. W. C. Selbred of Billings; treasurer, Mrs. A. P. Smith of Billings; trustees, Mr. Capp of Livingston, Mr. Holmes of Butte, Mrs. Kerlin of Anaconda, Mr. Nelson of Billings.

Taking it all in all we consider our second annual convention quite a success from every standpoint. The delegates decided to hold the next convention in Billings, Mont.

MRS. W. C. SELBREDE, Sec'y.
MRS. M'CORMICK, President.

WATERTOWN, N. Y.

A Letter From Mrs. Amanda Coffman.

I have just returned from Watertown, N. Y., after a busy two months' session and a general good time. With the help of the good people there among whom I number so many friends, and who did so much to make my work light and my stay a happy one, I was more than moderately successful. Every courtesy and attention that could be shown, every kindness that could be made manifest, was heaped upon me until I literally felt myself fade into insignificance. I had but to make a suggestion, and a score or more were on the scene to aid me, while among themselves, the officers, members and friends were continually planning the pleasantest things and surprising me at every turn.

Almost every Sunday the Temple took on a dress of fresh flowers or plants. On two occasions (Easter and Memorial Day) it was transformed to a perfect bower of beauty with such a profusion of flowers that the rostrum and walls were scarcely visible, while on the pulpit I invariably found a bouquet of the choicest cut flowers for myself or guides or both.

But the greatest surprise of all was planned by four of the official board and occurred May 17, the birthday and in honor of Owenna, an Indian maiden who is a message bearer of my band. I was expected with sixteen others to be at the home of Ladies Butts and Baldwin to assist in surprising the secretary with a token of their appreciation of her work in behalf of the society. Upon my arrival I was hurried to lay aside my wraps, and then ushered into the presence of 57 people who had congregated to surprise me. Before I realized what this could possibly mean, I stood before an open door gazing upon a tableau I will never forget.

There, with a hall tree on either side and a table in the center, each laden with beautiful articles of red, just a little beyond, a large red chair with Ladies Butts and Baldwin standing at either side and gowned in red, the room carpeted and draped in red; Ladies Bundy and Rouble, also gowned in red, came to meet me and escorted me to my chair where Miss Bundy made me the recipient of 56 gifts, 54 of which were individual and 2 (a red silk robe and a pair of red satin slippers) presented by the society and Ladies' Aid.

My four hostesses later on showed us all to the dining-room, where red covers were laid for the party and served us with strawberry ice cream, fruit and a variety of red cake.

The color scheme was suggested throughout the entire house, every guest even wearing something consistent with the idea. This and many other things, was done for me and when I think of the kind thoughts that prompted such attention, I recall the 120 who rose as one to greet me, with all the gratitude I know, and in fancy live the future made forever brighter and happier for the love Watertown has borne me.

AMANDA COFFMAN.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

"Religious and Theological Works of Thomas Paine," contains his celebrated "Age of Reason," and a number of letters and discourses on religious and theological subjects. Cloth binding, 430 pages. Price $1.

"The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional." This book, by the well known Father Chiniquy, reveals the degrading, impure influences and results of the Romish confessional, as proved by the sad experience of many wrecked

The new song-book, "The Golden Echoes," by S. W. Tucker, has found its way into many homes, and its beautiful songs have cheered many sorrowing hearts, which they are sure to do when heard and sung. They should be heard in every home in the land. Price, 15 cents; $1.50 per dozen.

MY $1 CURE

for

PILES

FREE TO TRY

Don't neglect Piles—they lead to the deadly cancer—but try my New 3-fold Treatment which is curing thousands.

SEND YOUR NAME TODAY

Every reader of The Progressive Thinker who answers this advertisement will promptly receive—Free to try—my complete new 3-fold Absorption cure for Piles, Ulcer, Fissure, Prolapse, Tumors, Constipation, and other rectal troubles. If you are fully satisfied with the benefit received from my treatment, when you get it and try it, send me One Dollar. If not, it costs you nothing. You decide. My 3-fold treatment is curing some of the worst cases on record—cases of 30 and 40 years' standing, as well as all the earlier stages. It brings instant comfort to all and the cure is permanent because the treatment is constitutional as well as local, removing the causes of piles. My valuable new Pile Book (illustrated in colors) comes free with the approval treatment, all in plain package. Send no money, only your name—to Giles W. Van Vleck, M. D., LL. D., X017 Majestic Bldg., Jackson, Mich. Write to-day.

OUR TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

And lastly, our latest premium book, "Letters From the Spirit World," written through the mediumship of that remarkable medium, Carlyle Petersilea.

All these TWELVE PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.75 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family,—an achievement only accomplished by the Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

Longley's Choice Collection OF BEAUTIFUL SONGS.

Here is a book of songs for public meetings and the home that is full of music and poetry that reach the soul. The book is just the right size, neatly constructed, plainly printed on a splendid quality of paper, and contains 76 songs.

WORDS THAT ARE TRUE.

"These songs are adapted to the needs of societies and to the home; they are spiritual, and breathe a tender sentiment to the cultured soul. —Lyman C. Howe.

"This collection of songs breathes a pure spiritual harmony, and has an uplifting tendency."—Dawning Light.

"The songs and music are of a nature to inspire those who hear them with new and higher resolves." D. W. Hull.

"There are some things in our personal history that never fade from memory. One in mine has been fresh for fifty years. I went one night to hear the eloquent lecturer, Prof. S. B. Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

Longley's latest book of songs comprises the cream of all his former books and many new ones, and can be had in decorated covers for 60 cents; plain, 40 cents.

20th Century Guide TO PALMISTRY

This is the simplest, clearest and yet the most exhaustive presentation this interesting science has yet received. All of the discoveries, investigations and researches of centuries are summed up in this practical, fascinating treatise on Palmistry.

There is no trait, no characteristic, no inherited tendency, that is not marked on the palm of the hand and can be traced with unerring accuracy by following the principles enforced by the presented in this. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, $1.

STANDARD BOOKS, Cloth Binding, 50c. Each.

The following books by well known and popular writers, we have selected with the thought that they will be of interest to our readers. They are printed on fine paper; perfectly clear, readable type; cloth binding. Good home library edition:

Heroes and Hero Worship, and the Heroic in History. The Hero as Divinity. The Hero as Prophet. The Hero as Poet. The Hero as Priest. The Hero as King. By Thomas Carlyle. 350 pages.

Past and Present. By Thomas Carlyle.

Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer.

Fairyland of Science. By Arabella B. Buckley. This book is written in such a pleasing manner that young as well as old can understand it. Illustrated, gilt top.

Origin of Species. By Charles Darwin.

Descent of Man. By Charles Darwin. These two books by Mr. Darwin, should be in every home.

Karma. A Novel. By A. P. Sinnett.

A Romance of Two Worlds. By Marie Corelli. A most wonderful occult story.

Zanoni. By Bulwer Lytton. A romance by that most wonderful and mystic writer, after a long residence in the East and an exhaustive study of occult lore.

Any one of the above valuable books can be obtained for 50 cents, a miracle of cheapness.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.

Historical and critical review, with replies to an objection. By G. W. Brown, M. D. Price, 15c.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

E. D. Williams: Q. What evidence is there that Abraham Lincoln consulted mediums?

A. The book by Nettie Maynard, "Was Abraham Lincoln a Spiritualist?"

S. R.: Q. Does disturbing the body after death, interfere with the passing of the spirit?

A. A. J. Davis has beautifully told of the transition, and how a holy peace and undisturbed silence should reign, until this most wonderful process is completed and the spirit is free. The unseeming haste and interference of undertaker and embalmer, are reprehensible, and indications of grief should be suppressed. As for the time taken by this withdrawal, it varies so much that it cannot be more than approximately stated. Immediately after its completion, decomposition begins. Of course this must proceed for several hours before manifested. It would not be advisable to wait for this sign, and as a rule, two hours after the suspension of the bodily functions, the spirit has become free. Until then the body should remain undisturbed, and the silence sacred.

E. W. Swinburn, Bonner, Texas.: Q. Two years ago I wrote you asking the cause of the light clouds and forms floating before me which I thought was the beginning of clairvoyance. You replied that a cataract was forming and that I should be careful not to strain my eyes and possibly I might keep it off awhile. You were only too correct. The cataract came. I had an operation performed, and another, and now I can see dimly, in a shadowy way. What do you now advise?

A. When the eye has been operated on for cataract, glasses are necessary for clear vision. The kind required depends on the nature of the case. The only way to be recommended is the consultation of a well informed optician—and have glasses fitted to the eyes.

There are several operations for cataract. The most capital is that of entire removal of the crystalline lens. Especially formed glasses take the place of the lens, and the patient cannot see without this aid, beyond distinguishing light from darkness.

We do not understand that this correspondent has had the lens removed. It has been no more than lacerated, under the expectancy of absorption of the foreign matter, and clarification. The great danger in this is from inflammation which may totally destroy the sight, even long after the treatment.

It is not so stated in any medical work, but we would prescribe in such cases, glasses with a tint of green. The common blue glasses which are supposed to soothe the eye, are not correct in principle. The most soothing color in nature is green. It is most abundant, and the weary eye is relieved by it. It is strange opticians have not taken their instructions from the surrounding world.

The tint should not be dark, as in the green glasses now made, but of a delicate touch of light emerald.

C. B. Seely: Q. Who was the author of "The Vestiges of Creation?" Of what value is it?

A. Perhaps the appearance of no book ever created such a storm of criticism as the Vestiges of Creation, published in 1844. It was anonymously published and there was as much speculation as to its authorship as denunciation of its contents. The work is that of a literary man, whose attention is turned to science. Dr. Chambers has been given the credit of being its author. It contained little that was original, but gathered up the strands of investigations of Lamarck, St. Hilaire and others, and wove them into a startling cosmology. It broke the way for Darwin and Spencer and prepared for the reception of their demonstrations. At this time its value is mainly historic, and a person cannot claim full knowledge of this subject who has not read it. Yet its theories and conclusions have no value, being untenable or obsolete. Darwin's Origin of Species has taken its place.

Temperance: Q. How many distilleries and breweries are there in the United States, and of what denomination are the owners?

A. The religion of owners of distilleries and breweries is not given in the census reports, and the number of establishments is difficult to ascertain. Concentration of capital is nowhere better illustrated than in the immense concerns into which the smaller have been absorbed. The red-tape of government inspection has made small distilleries unprofitable, and thrown the business into the hands of a comparatively few. The magnitude of the combine, however, is shown by the fact, proven by the revenue tax, that the direct cost of beer and whisky to the people of the United States is more than that of the bread they eat, and the butter used with it. To this may be added twice as much for indirect cost, as neglect of duty, pauperism and crime.

Saloons are required for the sale of these liquors and they are established and owned by the breweries. As a rule the breweries are owned by Catholics, and the saloons are managed by Catholics. There are exceptions, for the business does not demand profession of that religion. Rather that religion offers no obstacle against its professors engaging in the liquor trafic. The Catholic church may be said to own the liquor production and sale in this country, and by this means has been and is, one of the strongest factors in politics. It throws this deciding influence with the party which will give it the most. Here is the most menacing feature of the anti-temperance party. The saloons have their own field of operation, they are contributors to a religious cause which is a sworn enemy to the liberty under which it flourishes.

C. J. Borgstrom: Q. At a circle in Kansas, as related in a book entitled "Rending the Vail," a spirit gives an oration, giving his name as Denton, and commencing with the last line in page 255 of said book and continuing to and including the 19th line in page 256, the same is exactly word for word the language used by E. D. Babbitt in his book "Religion," page 32, chapter 3, commencing with the third line and including the ninth line of page 33. All the differences I can see are two words—"immutability" and "and "immortality," and the other "we" for "you." Could it really happen that an idea could be brought out by two individuals one in the physical body and the other from a spirit using so many words exactly the same, or is it a copy one from the other?

A. It has often happened that two writers have given identically the same thought, without plagiarizing in the usual sense of that word, but in no instance has the language been perfectly reproduced.

There is nothing in the way of Denton as a spirit quoting from Dr. Babbitt, more than there would be if in this life. But it would be desirable when such quotations are made to give due credit. Yet earthly authors are guilty of this omission. As an instance no less a scientist than Dr. Buchner, quoting from my publication, The Arcana of Nature, in his great work, "Matter and Force," while giving credit to many passages, there are many others which he gives at length, with scarcely more change than is made by translation, without the least acknowledgment. It is more credible that a spirit neglected to give due credit, than the medium should copy for the purpose of deception, from a book well known, for he would well know that he could not escape detection.

POEMS.

They fall in many places—as the seed
Which men sow ever for the spirit's need;
I scatter mine right freely—let them lie
Along the stony ways to live or die.
And if perchance, one seed should take a root
I ask not that it bring forth any fruit;
I am content if one white bud will ope—
To whisper to the broken-hearted—Hope."

If only by sharp pain I may be led
To enter in and share another's woe,
If, through my dearth another can be fed
Then let me be content to have it so.
If from some trial borne I gain the strength
To lift my brother's burden for an hour,
Or my worn feet, marking the weary length
Of this life's journey, find thereby the power
To smoothe it for my sister, I shall hold
Such travail blest. If these, my songs, can show
One vanished face in glory aureoled
I have not vainly lived this life below.

If, only from a broken heart I feel
All the world's grief as mine—then let it break.
Such drops shall be a sovereign balm to heal
And soothe the anguish of all hearts that ache.
If my blind groping in the dark should tread
One shadow down, I will not mourn the gloom.
If this, the crown of thorns about my head
Shall make free space for one white rose to bloom
Along another's path, then let me bear
Most patiently, and disregard the pain.
If one word lives to lighten earth's despair
I am repaid. I have not lived in vain.

When tenderest arms that 'round thee twine
Shall loose their hold,
And in the shadow of Love's shrine
Fond hearts grow cold,
Then bid thy soul stand firm and true
And nothing rue.
If faith is found a shattered reed
Smile and pass on.
And let no shivering heartstring plead
For what is gone.
For every broken idol dead
Be comforted.

If dreams of life must fade and break
Then let them go;
And with unfaltering courage take
The hand of Woe,
When firmly clasped it soon shall prove
Kinder than Love.
Though every hope may mock thy heart
With empty lies,
Though every treasured dream depart,
Lift fearless eyes.
Make thy soul strong enough to stand
Without joy's hand.

Only to speak one word of comfort strong
To sing adown the ages, when I lie
With lips silent alike of sob and song,
One word that will not die.
Courage, my heart. Strive to attain thy best,
Nor at thy stumbling sit and weakly wail.
Some wandering song of thine may bear the test.
And if I fail—I fail.

BEATRICE ST. GEORGE.

Oak Park, Ill.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results," By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated. $1.25.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

The Cause Advancing.

Annual Report of the President of the New York State Association of Spiritualists, Illustrating the Good Work Accomplished.

In submitting this my annual report I do so with regrets and with a feeling that I owe to the Spiritualists of the State an apology for not having been more active in the work. During the year now closing there has been so many urgent demands upon my time that I could not devote the usual amount of time to state work, and much that would naturally devolve upon the president has fallen upon the shoulders of our second vice-president, Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, to whose untiring efforts as state missionary and lyceum superintendent, together with these added burdens of relieving the president, is very largely due whatever of successes in state association work we have to our credit.

Possibly if I could have devoted time in this direction, a somewhat larger work may have been accomplished; and yet I feel that Mrs. Reynolds is so well qualified and has worked so diligently and conscientiously that our cause has suffered little from my inability to do as I had expected to do, and would have done had conditions with me been more favorable.

I mention this matter in order that I may stand before you in a true light, and that I may not be accredited honors which legitimately belong to another.

Missionary Work.

In accordance with arrangements made at the last convention, Mrs. Reynolds has devoted such part of the year to missionary work as her prior engagements would permit. She has visited different localities and dispensed spiritual food to many people to whom a spiritual lecture is a rare thing. She has held aloft our banner and advocated our cause with dignity and with honor, and in several instances, to my knowledge, when the financial returns were disappointing, she has given to the state association either a part or else the whole of the compensation to which she was entitled under the terms of her engagement.

I believe that in some instances she has been so conscientious in her determination not to wrong the state association that she has gone to the other extreme and done actual injustice to herself. Since she is to report to the convention, giving details of her work I will not further trespass in that direction.

In my opinion, missionary work is one of the most important branches of state work and I recommend that it be continued to such extent as our finances will warrant.

Mass-Meetings.

Correspondence was had concerning the holding of a joint mass-meeting in the city of New York, the state and National associations to unite for that purpose, but owing to certain unfavorable conditions then existing the project was abandoned.

